3. An intervener against whom no relief is prayed can dismiss his complaint in intervention, and this right is not affected by the fact that one of the plaintiffs is dead and his successors in interest have not been brought in as parties. Sheldon v. Gunn, 56 Cal. 582.

4. Dalhoff v. Coffman, 37 Iowa 283. See also Woodward v. Jackson, 85 Iowa 432.

In Washburn v. Frank, 31 La. Ann. 427, it was held that an intervention which has neither been answered nor proved must be dismissed.

5. Ragland v. Wisrock, 61 Tex. 391. Petitioner Without Interest. — The petition will be dismissed on motion if it fails to show an interest in the subject of litigation. Noyes v. Brown, 75 Tex. 458.

6. Easton v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 44 Fed. Rep. 9.

7. Chase v. Evoy, 58 Cal. 348.

In Kentucky the practice under the statute does not require any answer to the claimant's petition; it is to be regarded as traversed by all parties. The issue raised is a separate and distinct issue, to be tried by different proceedings in a different manner. There is to be no summons, and the claimant is not a party to the original litigation. Taylor v. Taylor, 3 Bush (Ky.) 118.

Time to Answer. — As has been before stated, pleadings in intervention are governed by the same rules as obtain in other pleadings, but if such petition or complaint is filed during the term, the court shall direct the time in which answer thereto shall be filed. Consol. Stat. Neb. (1893), § 4586; Minn. Stat. (1894), § 573.

8. Pomeroy v. Gregory, 66 Cal. 572.

All of the averments of an answer to a complaint of intervention must be considered as denied by the intervener.¹

XII. RIGHTS, DUTIES, AND LIABILITIES OF INTERVENER — 1.

Right to Prosecute Original Suit. — An intervener has the right to claim the benefit of the original suit and to prosecute it to judgment. Such right cannot be defeated by the dismissal of the suit by the plaintiffs after the filing of the petition and notice thereof to such plaintiffs.²

2. Right to Plead Inconsistent Pleas. — In accordance with the rule that a defendant may plead as many inconsistent pleas as he may choose, provided they are pertinent and in due order of pleading, an intervener who is occupying an attitude of defendant is entitled to the same latitude in his pleadings.³

3. Right to Demur. — An intervener has the right to interpose a general demurrer or exceptions going to the merits of the action.⁴

4. Right to Jury Trial. — An intervener has the same right to a jury trial as the original parties, although such trial has not been demanded by either of them.⁵

5. Intervener Must Take Suit as He Finds It. — An intervener in a suit between other parties must accept such suit as he finds it,⁶ and is bound by the record of the case at the time of his intervention.⁷ He cannot raise an issue as to whether the proceedings

1. Pearson v. Creed, 78 Cal. 144.

2. Field v. Gantier, 8 Tex. 74. See also Elliott v. Ivers, 6 Nev. 287.

Effect of Nonsuit. — If there is an intervener who claims an interest in the matter in dispute adverse to both plaintiff and defendant, and they answer the intervention, raising material issues, and, on motion of the defendant, the court nonsuits the plaintiff, the action is still pending as to the issues raised on the intervention, and the court should proceed and try them. The intervention should not be dismissed on the ground that there is no action pending. Pochlmann v. Kennedy, 48 Cal. 201.

Judgment by Default for Intervener. — Where the allegations in the pleading of the intervener in an action traverse the complaint, such allegations have the same effect as denials in an answer and require affirmative proof by the plaintiff of his cause of action. In default of such proof judgment will be rendered in favor of the intervener. Speyer v. Ihmels, 21 Cal. 281.

3. Smith v. Sublett, 28 Tex. 163.

4. Hanchett v. Gray, 7 Tex. 552.

5. La Croix v. Menard, 3 Martin N. S. (La.) 339, where the court said: "It is true the statute, in prescribing the mode in which parties to a cause may have their case submitted to a jury, speaks only of the plaintiff and defendant; and an intervening party, technically speaking, is neither one nor the other. But it is not less true that he either opposes the pretensions of one or both of the parties litigating, and that, considered in this light, he stands in the situation of plaintiff; or at least he is an actor in the cause. But by whatever appellation he be designated, it appears to us a necessary consequence of admitting him as a party that he should have the same right in proving his case, in trying it, and in enforcing his judgment, as those who were originally plaintiffs and defendants. Were we doubtful on this point, the regard which we entertain for the trial by jury, and the high opinion we hold of its value in ascertaining facts, would induce us to support the citizen who claims its aid and the investigation of his rights."

6. Cahn v. Ford, 42 La. Ann. 965; Lacroix v. Menard, 3 Martin N. S. (La.) 339.

7. Hudson v. Morriss, 55 Tex. 595; Late v. Armorer, 14 La. Ann. 838.

While the statements of fact in the record are not binding on the intervener, yet where he adopts the allegations of the plaintiff and prays for the are regular,¹ nor can he plead exceptions having for their object the dismissal of the action.² He cannot raise new issues in the suit,³ nor insist upon a change in the form of the proceedings.⁴ An intervener cannot exercise any rights which are limited to the parties to the action.⁵

6. Must Not Retard Suit. — Intervention will not be permitted where it would retard the principal suit so as to work an injustice to the parties.⁶ An intervener cannot insist upon delay in the trial of the action, and it is error to allow an intervention which same relief, the judgment affects alike both plaintiff and intervener. Hudson v. Morriss, 55 Tex. 595.

A party to the record may admit any adverse allegation and thus dispense with proof of it, though if the admission be not of a conceded fact, any other party other than the one originally making the allegation may make proof in opposition. Dorn v. O'Neale, 6 Nev. 155.

Evidence Prior to Intervention. — An intervener cannot object to the admissibility of evidence regularly taken prior to his being made a party to the suit. Late v. Armorer, 14 La. Ann. 838.

1. Fleming v. Shields, 21 La. Ann. 118; Gasquet v. Johnson, 1 La. 425; Lee v. Bradlee, 8 Martin (La.) 55; Emerson v. Fox, 3 La. 178; Blair v. Puryear, 87 N. Car. 101; Bateman v. Ramsey, 74 Tex. 589; Nenney v. Schluter, 62 Tex. 327.

Defective Oath or Bond in Attachment. — An intervening party has no right to take advantage of the insufficiency of the oath or bond on which process of attachment issues. Valsain v. Cloutier, 3 La. 170. See also Emerson v. Fox, 3 La. 178.

2. West v. His Creditors, 8 Rob. (La.) 123. See also Lee v. Bradlee, 8 Martin (La.) 55; Yeatman v. Estill, 3 La. Ann. 222; Clamageran v. Bucks, 4 Martin N. S. (La.) 487.

May Not Plead Peremptory Exceptions. — In Clamageran v. Bucks, 4 Martin N. S. (La.) 487, the court said: "We are also of opinion that an intervening creditor cannot plead peremptory exceptions, the only object of which is to have the cause dismissed for irregularities in the proceedings. These were matters for the consideration of the defendants or those who represented them, and if they thought fit to waive a defense which should not be used in a just action, no other party can. It is exercising rights which do not belong to him and which no law that we are acquainted with confers."

3. Mayer v. Stahr, 35 La. Ann. 57; Van Gorden v. Ormsby, 55 Iowa 657; Teachout v. Des Moines Broad-Gauge St. R. Co., 75 Iowa 722; Carraby v. Morgan, 5 Martin N. S. (La.) 499.

When a case has been submitted to the court upon an agreed statement of facts, it is no error to deny a third party the privilege of intervening, when such intervention would raise new issues and would require a continuance of the main cause for the purpose of hearing the testimony. Teachout v. Des Moines Broad-Gauge St. R. Co., 75 Iowa 722.

4. Van Gorden v. Ormsby, 55 Iowa 657; Kassing v. Walter, (Iowa 1896) 65 N. W. Rep. 832; Carraby v. Morgan, 5 Martin N. S. (La.) 499.

Litigation of Greater Interest than Set Up by Original Parties. — Whether an intervener can litigate any greater interest than that set up by the original parties was mooted but not decided in Fleming v. Seeligson, 57 Tex. 524.

5. Clapp v. Phelps, 19 La. Ann. 461; Cahn v. Ford, 42 La. Ann. 965; Phillips v. Both, 58 Iowa 499.

Objection to Amount of Judgment. — In Phillips v. Both, 58 Iowa 499, it was held that an objection to the amount of the judgment in the main action, by the intervener, will not be considered on appeal if not made in the court below, and that it is doubtful whether an intervener is entitled to make such objection.

6. Eccles v. Hill, 13 Tex. 65; Smalley v. Taylor, 33 Tex. 668.

An intervention which in its consequences, if the intervener should prove successful, would result in postponing the determination of the cause as between the original parties will not be allowed. Ragland v. Wisrock, 61 Tex. 391.

produces this result, against the objection of the parties.¹ But although an intervener will not be allowed to retard the trial of a cause, yet he is entitled to the time necessary to have his intervention served and put at issue, before the cause can be tried.²

7. Liability for Costs. — If the intervener fails on the trial a judgment for costs is rendered against him.³

XIII. TIME FOR DETERMINATION OF INTERVENTION. — The court should determine upon the intervention at the same time when the action is decided.⁴

XIV. EFFECT OF JUDGMENT IN SUIT. — A judgment in an action where a third party has intervened as defendant is conclusive both upon the original defendant and the intervener.⁵ But where a party has announced his intention to intervene, but afterwards withdraws, having filed no petition for intervention, he does not become a party to the suit, and a judgment therein will not affect the rights of the intervener.⁶

XV. APPEAL. — If the intervener is dissatisfied with the final judgment in the action, he cannot avail himself of the appellate proceedings of the other parties to the action, but must prosecute a separate appeal, giving a notice and undertaking on his own

1. Van Gorden v. Ormsby, 55 Iowa 657; Teachout v. Des Moines Broad-Gauge St. R. Co., 75 Iowa 722; Perkins v. Perkins, 20 La. Ann. 257; Walker v. Dunbar, 6 Martin N. S. (La.) 627; Gaines v. Page, 15 La. Ann. 108; Taylor v. Boedicker, 22 La. Ann. 79; Lacroix v. Menard, 3 Martin N. S. (La.) 339.

"If the person intervening has rights which require protection, and which cannot be determined by intervention in the main action without delaying the trial, he ought not to intervene, but should commence an original action, and, if need be, and a proper case therefor can be made, protect his interests by injunction." Van Gorden v. Ormsby, 55 Iowa 657.

Must Be at All Times Ready to Exhibit Evidence. — An intervener must be at all times ready to exhibit his evidence and to proceed with the trial of the issue which he has brought into the action. Walker v. Dunbar, 6 Martin N. S. (La.) 627; Gaines v. Page, 15 La. Ann. 108; Taylor v. Boedicker, 22 La. Ann. 79.

Where an Intervention Has Not Been Brought to an Issue with the original parties, it is no error for the court to refuse to admit evidence offered by the intervener. Baker v. Texarkana Nat. Bank, 74 Fed. Rep. 598.

2. Silbernagel v. Silbernagel, 32 La.

Ann. 765. See also Perkins v. Perkins, 20 La. Ann. 257, holding that if one intervenes after issue joined, time must be allowed him to issue the proper citations and for the entry of the answers required by the code.

3. Sheldon v. Gunn, 56 Cal. 582.

Where an Intervener Makes a Joint Defense, he thereby renders himself liable for costs jointly with defendants. Spruill v. Arrington, 109 N. Car. 192; Davis v. Sharron, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 64; Kinnear v. Flanders, 17 Colo. 11.

Not Liable for Prior Costs. — An intervener is not liable, however, for costs which have accrued before he came into the suit. Railsback v. Patton, 34 Neb. 490.

4. Teachout v. Des Moines Broad-Gauge St. R. Co., 75 Iowa 722; Fischer v. Hanna, 8 Colo. App. 471.

Effect of Failure So to Determine. — In Aleix v. Derbigny, 22 La. Ann. 385, it was held that the intervention fails whenever the judgment does not pass thereon at the same time as on the main question.

5. Witter v. Fisher, 27 Iowa 9.

6. Wilson v. Trowbridge, 71 Iowa 345.

In Gradwohl v. Harris, 29 Cal. 150, it was held that an assignor retaining an interest may intervene in an action by an assignee, but if he does not intervene he is bound by the judgment.

behalf.¹ Where intervener and defendant take separate appeals from the judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the appellate court may affirm the judgment on the defendant's appeal, and reverse it and grant a new trial on the appeal of the intervener.²

In Equity. — An intervener has the right to appeal from the final decree of the court.³

1. State v. New Orleans, 27 La. Ann. 469; Beckwith v. Peirce, 22 La. Ann. 67.

2. Donner v. Palmer, 45 Cal. 180.

3. Ex p. Jordan, 94 U. S. 248.

In Williams v. Morgan, 111 U. S. 684, it was held that a holder of railroad bonds secured by a mortgage under foreclosure has an interest in the amount of the trustee's compensation which entitles him to intervene, and to contest it, and to appeal from an adverse decision.

I. INDICTMENTS, COMPLAINTS, AND INFORMATIONS. (See generally article INDICTMENTS, INFORMATIONS, AND COMPLAINTS, vol. 10, p. 344.)—1. Unlawful Sales, Barter, and Gifts, in General—a. CERTAINTY OF ALLEGATION—As a General Requisite.—The same degree of certainty is not required in indictments for misdemeanors as in indictments for graver offenses,¹ and certainty to a common intent is sufficient in charging violations of liquor laws.²

1. See article INDICTMENTS, INFORMATIONS, AND COMPLAINTS, vol. 10, p. 475, note.

2. State v. Wishorn, 15 Mo. 504; State v. Odam, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 220; Bilbor v. State, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 534; Martin v. State, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 204; McCool v. State, 23 Ind. 127.

An Inferential Averment of the facts is not sufficient. The facts constituting the offense should be alleged positively. State v. Higgins, 53 Vt. 191.

Omission of Word.—Where the word "to" was omitted before the word "keep" in an indictment for maintaining a building in which to keep intoxicating liquors for sale, it was held not to vitiate the indictment under section 4305 of the Iowa Code, which provides that indictments shall be sufficient if they are in ordinary and concise language, and intelligible to a person of common understanding, and such as to enable the court to pronounce judgment according to law. State v. Caffrey, 94 Iowa 65. See State v. Lane, 33 Me. 536.

Sufficient Averment of Sale.—Where the indictment charged that the defendant acted as agent in effecting the alleged sale, it was held to be a sufficient averment that the sale was made. State v. Caldwell, (Miss. 1895) 17 So. Rep. 372.

Description of Complainant.—Where a complaint described the complainant as "special constable appointed to make complaints for violation of the liquor laws under chapter 508 of Public Laws of Rhode Island," it was held that the

The indictment should describe the offense in such plain and intelligible language that the accused may have notice of the precise offense with which he is charged,¹ and that the court may know that the accused is being tried upon the identical charge passed upon by the grand jury,² and with sufficient certainty that the accused may be able to plead his acquittal or conviction in bar of a second indictment for the same offense.³

The Indictment Should State the Particular Facts constituting the alleged violation of law,⁴ but to avoid prolixity the law allows general description was sufficient, although lacking in accuracy. State v. Carver, 12 R. I. 285.

1. Cannady v. People, 17 Ill. 158; Mapes v. People, 69 Ill. 523; State v. Moran, 40 Me. 129; Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 138 Mass. 506; People v. Olmsted, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 323; State v. Burchard, 4 S. Dak. 548; State v. Boughner, 5 S. Dak. 461; Alexander v. State, 29 Tex. 495.

2. State v. Burchard, 4 S. Dak. 548.

Trivial Objections. — "When the charge against a party is stated so plainly that he may know how to make his defense, and the jury may readily understand the nature of the accusation, the trial ought to be conducted solely with a view to determine whether the accused is guilty or innocent. We are not inclined to regard with favor mere trivial objections interposed for no other purpose than to obstruct the administration of the law." Mapes v. People, 69 Ill. 523.

3. State v. Moran, 40 Me. 129; People v. Olmsted, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 323; State v. Burchard, 4 S. Dak. 548; Alexander v. State, 29 Tex. 495.

Offense Which Can be Committed Only in Certain Municipal Division. — "Where the offense is statutory, and can be committed only in a certain municipal division, which is less than the county within the jurisdiction of the court, the name or description of such division, and the fact that the offense was committed therein, must be set forth in the indictment." Seifried v. Com., 101 Pa. St. 200.

4. State v. Cox, 29 Mo. 475; People v. Olmsted, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 323; State v. Butcher, 1 S. Dak. 401.

"A crime is made up of acts and intent, and they must be set forth in the indictment with reasonable particularity of time, place, and circumstances; and the accused has the right to have the charge against him thus stated, in order that he may decide whether he should present his defense by motion to quash, demurrer, or plea, and that the court may determine whether the facts will sustain the indictment. The want of a direct allegation of anything material in the description of the substance, nature, or manner of the crime cannot be supplied by any intendment or implication whatsoever." State v. Benjamin, 49 Vt. 101.

Mere Belief of Complainant. — A complaint which does not set forth the facts and circumstances of which the offense consists, but merely states the complainant's belief that defendant sold intoxicating liquor in violation of a certain act of the legislature, between certain specified days, is insufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the justice before whom it is made to compel the attendance of witnesses to testify concerning supposed violations of law. Matter of Morton, 10 Mich. 208. See also Mowery v. Camden, 49 N. J. L. 106; Com. v. Phillips, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 211.

Verification of Complaint. — If the offense is charged in positive language, the addition of the words, "and this deponent says he verily believes" the defendant to be guilty of the facts charged, will not vitiate the complaint as not being sworn to positively. Brown v. State, 16 Neb. 658. See also People v. Schottery, 66 Mich. 708.

In New Jersey and Wisconsin a different rule seems to prevail. In Roberson v. Lambertville, 38 N. J. L. 69, the court said: "It would have been sufficient to state that the prosecutor had just cause to suspect, and did suspect, the party charged, provided the complaint, in all other respects, conformed to the requirements of the common law." In State v. Tall, 56 Wis. 577, the complaint for unlawfully selling without license stated the facts upon the complainant's information and belief, and it was held sufficient, as being

The Certainty Required in a Complaint for Violation of a Municipal Ordinance is the same as that required in indictments for similar offenses against the statute.²

Statutory Form. — The indictment or complaint in the form prescribed by statute is sufficient, unless the statute violates constitutional guaranties.³

in stronger language than the statute required, the words of the statute being "had good reason to believe."

Conclusions of Law. — A complaint charging that defendant sold intoxicating liquors "unlawfully" or "contrary to law," without stating in what manner he violated the law, is insufficient. The facts constituting the violation should be set forth. Cortland v. Howard, 1 N. Y. App. Div. 131. See also Com. v. White, 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 492.

Manner of Sale. — An information charging that the defendant, in violation of the prohibition law, sold intoxicating liquors, but failing to state that the defendant had no license to sell, or that, having a license, he sold in a manner prohibited by law, is insufficient when properly attacked by motion to quash. State v. Burkett, 51 Kan. 175.

Charge Not Necessarily Inconsistent with Innocence. — If, admitting the truth of the facts alleged in the indictment, still the defendant may not be guilty of the offense defined in the statute, the indictment is fatally defective. Com. v. Young, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 664.

The Rule Qualified. — "It is only where the act charged is not in itself unlawful, but becomes so by other facts connected with it, that the facts in which the illegality consists must be set out." Where the giving away of intoxicating liquor on election day is declared by the statute to be an offense, the act, being unlawful within itself, is sufficiently charged in the language of the statute without setting forth the particular facts and circumstances. Cearfoss v. State, 42 Md. 403.

1. Keeping Disorderly Tippling House. — "It is said that the indictment is defective because it does not set forth the particular acts which composed the disorderly manner in which the tippling house was kept. As a general rule the essential facts which constitute the offense should be specifically and certainly stated in the indictment; but there is a class of cases to which that rule does not apply. Whenever the charge consists of a series of acts they need not be specially described, because they are not the offense itself, but merely go to make up the evidence of the offense." Shilling v. State, 5 Ind. 443; State v. Stinson, 17 Me. 154; Com. v. Pray, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 359. See also Rex v. Higginson, 2 Burr. 1232. And see article INDICTMENTS, INFORMATIONS, AND COMPLAINTS, vol. 10, p. 474.

2. Cunningham v. Berry, 17 Oregon 622.

Where a warrant required the defendants to appear before the city court, "to answer to the city of Lexington why they should not be fined for presuming to sell by retail, without a proper and legal license so to do, any quantity of wine, brandy, whiskey," etc., it was held too indefinite to support a judgment by the city court under the city ordinance, which made it an offense to sell by retail less than a quart. Bridgeford v. Lexington, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 47.

3. State v. Comstock, 27 Vt. 553; State v. Hodgson, 66 Vt. 134. See State v. Spaulding, 61 Vt. 505.

Averments in excess of the prescribed form may be rejected as surplusage. State v. Woodward, 25 Vt. 616.

In Rhode Island. — Pub. L. 1886, c. 596, § 15, provides that the form of complaint prescribed therein, if substantially followed in prosecutions under section 9, shall be sufficient. A complaint for unlawfully keeping intoxicating liquors for sale, drawn in the statutory form, is sufficient, although the words "and delivery" after the words "for the purposes of sale," are omitted. "Keeping for sale" must be construed as meaning the same as "keeping for sale and delivery" State v. Murphy, 15 R. I. 543; State v. Kane, 15 R. I. 395.

b. DISJUNCTIVE OR CONJUNCTIVE ALLEGATIONS — Disjunctive Allegations. — The use of the disjunctive "or" will be fatal to the indictment if it renders the statement of the offense uncertain,¹ but it may be used in negative averments to exclude statutory exceptions.²

Charging Offenses in the Alternative. — A complaint which charges the commission of two or more offenses in the alternative is insufficient.³

Alternative Averment as to Kind of Liquor. — It is generally sufficient, in charging unlawful sales, barter, and gifts, and other dispositions of liquors, to charge the kind of liquor in the alternative.⁴

In Indiana the 18th section of the Act of February 27, 1873, provided that "in all prosecutions under this act, by indictment or otherwise, it shall not be necessary to state the kind of liquor sold, or to describe the place where sold, and it shall not be necessary to state the name of the person to whom sold." It was held that in so far as the section dispensed with the statement of the name of the person to whom the liquor was sold, it was invalid. McLaughlin v. State, 45 Ind. 338. But it was held not necessary to state the price for which the liquor was sold, nor to negative license authorizing the sale. O'Connor v. State, 45 Ind. 347.

Insufficient Statutory Form. — The statutory form will be insufficient if it does not describe any offense punishable under the statute to which it applies. State v. Learned, 47 Me. 426.

1. State v. Carver, 12 R. I. 285; Com. v. Grey, 2 Gray (Mass.) 501.

As to Authority to Sell. — An indictment charged the sale of liquor to be drunk on the defendant's premises, "without having obtained a license therefor as a tavern keeper, or without being in any way authorized to sell the same as aforesaid." It was held that the disjunctive "or" did not vitiate the indictment, for the reason that there was no way in which one could legally sell intoxicating liquor to be drunk on his premises except by a license as a tavern keeper, and the addition of the words "or without being in any way authorized," etc., might be rejected as surplusage. People v. Gilkinson, 4 Park. Cr. Rep. (Dutchess Oyer & T. Ct.) 26.

2. As to Negative Averments. — It is proper to use the disjunctive "or" in connecting "negative averments introduced to exclude the defendant from the classes of persons authorized to sell intoxicating liquors." State v. Carver, 12 R. I. 285.

3. Charging More than One Offense. — Where the indictment charged that the defendant "did sell or give away," or "sold, bartered, exchanged, or otherwise disposed of, or permitted to be taken," or "sold, gave away, or otherwise disposed of," it was held insufficient, as charging in the disjunctive the commission of two or more offenses. Thompson v. State, 37 Ark. 408; Raisler v. State, 55 Ala. 64; State v. Fairgrieve, 29 Mo. App. 641; State v. Froehlich, (N. J. 1887) 6 Cent. Rep. 537.

Charging Acts Not Unlawful. — An indictment charged that the defendant "sold, bartered, exchanged, or otherwise disposed of, or permitted to be taken, spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors," etc. The court said: "Several of these disjunctive averments charge no offense known to the law. The indictment thus charges that the defendant did one of several acts, many of which are not indictable under the statute. A disjunctive averment in pleading, to be sufficient, must, in each of its alternative phases, charge an indictable offense." Raisler v. State, 55 Ala. 64. Citing Andrews v. McCoy, 8 Ala. 929; Lucas v. Oliver, 34 Ala. 626; David v. Shepard, 40 Ala. 587.

4. Cost v. State, 96 Ala. 60; Boon v. State, 69 Ala. 226; Powell v. State, 69 Ala. 10; Cunningham v. State, 5 W. Va. 508; Thomas v. Com., 90 Va. 92; Morgan v. Com., 7 Gratt. (Va.) 592.

The Alabama Code of 1887, § 4385, provides that "when offenses are of the same character, and subject to the same punishment, the defendant may be charged with the commission of either in the same count in the alternative."

"Or" in the Sense of "To Wit." — The disjunctive "or" is permissible when

Disjunctive as to Place.—As a general rule place should not be laid in the disjunctive.¹

Conjunctive Allegations.—If the statute makes it an offense to do any one of several things mentioned disjunctively, the same punishment being prescribed for each, the whole may be charged conjunctively as a single offense.²

used in the sense of "to wit" in explanation of what precedes it and signifies the same thing, as a charge that the defendant did "deal or traffic in," etc., or that the defendant sold "intoxicating or malt liquor." Clifford v. State, 29 Wis. 327; State v. Boncher, 59 Wis. 477. In the latter case it was held that "the word 'or' is manifestly there used to explain the kind of intoxicating liquors sold, to wit, malt as distinguished from ardent or spirituous liquors," and that "it would have been error to allow testimony of a sale of any other than malt liquors."

"All spirituous liquor is intoxicating; yet all intoxicating liquor is not spirituous. * * * A complaint or indictment on the statute should charge the defendant either with selling spirituous liquor, or with selling intoxicating liquor, or with selling spirituous liquor and intoxicating liquor." Com. v. Grey, 2 Gray (Mass.) 501. See also Clifford v. State, 29 Wis. 327. Thompson v. State, 37 Ark. 408.

Alternative Averments Held Insufficient.—In Smith v. State, 19 Conn. 493, the information alleged that the defendant sold "wines, spirituous liquor, or other intoxicating beverage," and the court held that the information was insufficient because of the alternative charge as to the kind of liquor sold.

In Grantham v. State, 89 Ga. 121, the indictment charged that the accused sold a quantity of "spirituous, malt, or intoxicating liquor," and the court held that the indictment was bad on special demurrer, because of the alternative charge; and it was further held that Johnson v. State, 8 Ga. 453, and Hinton v. State, 68 Ga. 322, are no authority on this point, the precise question not having been made or determined in those cases.

In Com. v. Grey, 2 Gray (Mass.) 501, the complaint charged the defendant with selling "spirituous or intoxicating liquor," and the court said: "If spirituous liquor and intoxicating liquor were the same, and the word 'intoxicating' had been used in Stat. 1852, c. 322, as a mere explanation of the word 'spirituous,' the complaint in the present case would have been rightly drawn. But the two words are not synonymous."

1. Place Where Liquors Were to Be Drunk.—An indictment charged that the defendant, at a certain time and place, did sell intoxicating liquors to a certain person, "to be drunk in, upon, or about the building or premises where sold," and the court held that the indictment was fatally defective in charging in the disjunctive the place where the liquors were to be drunk. State v. Charlton, 11 W. Va. 332.

Keeping Place for Sale of Liquor.—An indictment charged that the defendant, etc., "did keep a certain store or shop, etc., for the purpose of selling wine or spirituous liquors to be drank thereat," and the court said: "Considering the mode of using the words 'store' and 'shop' in this country, and the meaning usually attached to them, especially when they are applied to a place where goods are bought and sold, in which sense they are obviously used in the act on which this information is founded, we think that they are to be considered in that statute, and also in this information, which is in the very words of it, as synonymous terms; and that therefore, although the words are connected by the disjunctive particle, and the allegation as to the place kept is in an alternative form, it is not in substance and sense an allegation that the accused kept one or other of two different places, but that he kept one place, called by the name of a store or shop." Barth v. State, 18 Conn. 439.

2. State v. Finan, 10 Iowa 19; State v. Schweiter, 27 Kan. 499; State v. McGinnis, 30 Minn. 52; Lea v. State, 64 Miss. 201; State v. Pittman, 76 Mo. 56; State v. Fairgrieve, 29 Mo. App. 641; State v. Nations, 75 Mo. 53; State v. Kerr, 3 N. Dak. 523; State v. Colwell, 3 R. I. 284; State v. Nolan, 15 R. I. 529; Boldt v. State, 72 Wis. 7.

c. FOLLOWING LANGUAGE OF STATUTE. — It is generally sufficient to charge a purely statutory offense in the language of the statute,¹ or in other words of similar or equivalent

Where the statute is in the disjunctive form it is generally sufficient to charge the offense in the conjunctive, unless the acts so charged are repugnant; and to "sell and give away," or "sell, give away, or otherwise dispose of," are not repugnant acts and they may be well charged in the conjunctive form. State v. Fairgrieve, 29 Mo. App. 641; State v. Pittman, 76 Mo. 56. See also State v. Fitzsimmons, 30 Mo. 236.

Conviction or Acquittal on Disjunctive Charge or Conjunctive Charge. — "If separately so charged, at the choice of the prosecution, the statute under consideration creates several distinct offenses, as the vending, dealing in, or giving away with unlawful intent, of any spirituous or ardent liquors or drinks, or the vending, dealing in, or giving away with like intent of any intoxicating liquors or drinks; and should the defendant in a case like the present be subsequently complained against for the commission of any one of these six several offenses, stated by itself, or of all of them, each being separately stated in different counts or complaints, or the whole alleged conjunctively, and any one or all of them should be the identical offense or offenses of which he was formerly convicted, it would, nevertheless, be impossible for him to protect himself by pleading and producing the first record. It is not so, however, where the several acts specified in the statute are charged conjunctively, or the word 'and' instead of 'or' is used; for in that case all are regarded as constituting but one offense, and the conviction or acquittal is a complete bar to any subsequent prosecution for all or either, whether separately or otherwise pleaded and alleged." Clifford v. State, 29 Wis. 330.

Tennessee. — State v. Odam, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 220.

West Virginia. — State v. Boggess, 36 W. Va. 713.

Statutory Ingredients. — It is a well-settled principle that in an indictment for a statutory offense the statute must be strictly pursued. The indictment should state all of the facts that constitute the definition of the offense, and it is desirable in every case "to attend with the greatest nicety to the words contained in the act, for no others can be so proper to describe the crime;" and if the definition and description contained in the statute be departed from in any material respect, and "any ingredient in the definition of the offense be omitted, the indictment will be bad." Bush v. Republic, 1 Tex. 455. See also Com. v. Young, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 664. See Whiting v. State, 14 Conn. 487.

Exception to Rule. — To the general rule that it is sufficient to charge the offense in the language of the statute, there are exceptions in which greater particularity is required by known principles of law, or from the obvious intention of the legislature, and in such case it is for the defendant to show that he comes within the exception. Whiting v. State, 14 Conn. 487; State v. Abbott, 31 N. H. 434.

Selling "as a Beverage." — Under a statute providing that any person "who shall within this state sell, etc., any of such intoxicating liquors as a beverage, shall, for the first offense, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor," an information charging that defendant did "sell intoxicating liquors maliciously and wilfully, and contrary to the import.¹ But where the statute does not create an offense, nor describe any, the purpose being to substitute a new form of indictment for selling contrary to law, it is not sufficient to follow the language of the statute.²

statutes," etc., is insufficient. The offense does not consist in selling the liquors "maliciously and wilfully," but in selling them "as a beverage." State v. Hafsoos, 1 S. Dak. 382.

Surplusage in Conclusion.—Where an indictment contains sufficient in other respects, mere surplusage matter in the conclusion of the indictment will not vitiate it. State v. Hall, 26 W. Va. 236.

1. Bryan v. State, 45 Ala. 86; Harris v. State, 50 Ala. 127; Rawson v. State, 19 Conn. 292; Roberts v. State, 26 Fla. 360; Howell v. State, 4 Ind. App. 148; Zumhoff v. State, 4 Greene (Iowa) 526; State v. Looker, 54 Kan. 227; Mankato v. Arnold, 36 Minn. 62; State v. Baskett, 52 Mo. App. 389; Com. v. Sellers, 130 Pa. St. 32.

Failure to Employ the Statutory Terms.—Where the indictment charging an offense does not employ all the statutory terms, but only a portion of them, yet sets forth the offense so plainly that its nature may be easily understood by the jury, it is sufficiently technical and correct under the law. Loeb v. State, 75 Ga. 258, citing section 4628 of the code.

Sale to Habitual Drunkard.—The use of the phrase "in the habit of becoming intoxicated" instead of "in the habit of being intoxicated," the terms of Rev. Stat. Indiana 1881, § 2093, will not vitiate an indictment for selling intoxicating liquor to an habitual drunkard. Dolan v. State, 122 Ind. 141. See also Connell v. State, 46 Ind. 446.

Sufficiency of General Description.—"It is well settled that the indictment must, by express words, bring the offense within the substantial description made in the statute; and those circumstances mentioned in the statute to make up the offense shall not be supplied by the general conclusion contra formam statuti. * * * But where the offense is prohibited in general terms in one section [or clause] of the statute, and a penalty prescribed, and in another section [or clause] entirely distinct there is a particular description of the elements which shall constitute the offense, we perceive no reason, upon principle or authority, why the indictment should contain anything more than the general description." State v. Casey, 45 Me. 435; State v. Collins, 48 Me. 217.

Not Aided by the Videlicet.—Where the statutory offense consists in the selling of intoxicating liquors of any kind in any quantity less than four gallons, etc., the charge of selling intoxicating liquors in less quantity than one gallon is insufficient, and such allegation is not aided by a statement under the videlicet that the quantity sold was one pint. State v. Baskett, 52 Mo. App. 389. See also State v. Greenhagen, 36 Mo. App. 24; State v. Fanning, 38 Mo. 409.

"Whiskey" Instead of "Distilled Liquor."—If the indictment uses the word "whiskey" instead of the statutory term "distilled liquor," it will be sufficient. State v. Dengolensky, 82 Mo. 44, adhering to State v. Williamson, 21 Mo. 496, and disregarding State v. Lisle, 58 Mo. 359, because the question here raised was not considered in that case.

Words Necessarily Importing Guilt.—"It is sufficient to use in the indictment such terms of description as that, if true, the accused must of necessity be guilty of the offense described in the statute." Com. v. Young, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 664.

2. In New Jersey.—Pub. L. 1893, p. 193, "does not * * * create an offense, nor does it purport to describe any. The expressed intention of the enactment was to substitute a form of indictment for selling contrary to law for the more sweeping charge of keeping a disorderly house in all cases where the elements of unlawfulness were confined to the sale of intoxicating liquors. In effect it simply prohibits the use of the indictment for keeping a disorderly house in those cases in which that offense consists wholly in the unlawful sale of intoxicants. * * * The act under consideration does not attempt to prescribe the language in which the pleader shall aver the facts that constitute the offense, which, consequently, is left to the established canons of criminal pleading." State v. Schmid, 57 N. J. L. 625.

*d. DUPLICITY*¹ — (1) Joint and Several Sales. — An indictment may properly charge a joint sale as having been made to several persons, known or unknown,² or distinct unlawful sales to different persons.³

Several Sales at Same Time. — An indictment charging several sales at the same time charges but one offense,⁴ and an indictment charging a number of sales of intoxicating liquors to divers persons at divers times charges but one offense where it is of a continuous character.⁵

(2) Dual Character of Purchaser. — The fact that the indictment describes the purchaser in the dual character of being an intoxicated person and one who is in the habit of getting intoxicated will not render the indictment double.⁶

(3) As to Time. — If the indictment charges the offense to have been committed on a day named "and on divers other days and times," it will not be insufficient on objection for duplicity,⁷ but the indictment will be double if it charges unlaw-

1. As to what constitutes duplicity generally, see article INDICTMENTS, INFORMATIONS, AND COMPLAINTS, vol. 10, p. 532 et seq.

2. People v. Schmidt, 19 N. Y. Misc. Rep. (Oneida County Ct.) 458. See also Peer's Case, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 674.

3. Com. v. Broker, 151 Mass. 355.

Two Distinct Sales. — Where a complaint in a municipal court alleging unlawful sales of liquor on a named day to a certain person proceeded as follows: "And said F. * * * on oath complains that said " defendant on the same day unlawfully sold such liquors to other persons named, it was held that the complaint set out two distinct sales, and that the motion to quash was rightly overruled. Com. v. Broker, 151 Mass. 355.

Physician Unlawfully Prescribing. — A charge against a physician for unlawfully prescribing liquor is not rendered double because the person to whom the prescription was given is charged differently in different counts. State v. Atkinson, 33 S. Car. 100.

4. Storrs v. State, 3 Mo. 9; State v. Atkins, 40 Mo. App. 344.

5. Where an indictment charged the retailing of twenty glasses or drams of intoxicating liquor to divers persons at divers times, the court said: "The offense charged is of a continuous character, carried on from day to day, and although the unlawful traffic is alleged to have been continued for several days or weeks prior to the commencement of the prosecution, it must still be regarded as but the one offense, made the more enormous by its long continuance, and requiring the more exemplary punishment." Zumhoff v. State, 4 Greene (Iowa) 526. See also People v. Adams, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 475.

6. "It appears to have been claimed in the court below that selling liquor to a person intoxicated was one offense, and that the same sale to that person, he being a person in the habit of getting intoxicated, was another, and that by joining the two in a single count two separate and distinct crimes were charged. We cannot so regard it. The offense is but a single one. There is but one sale of liquor, and but one person to whom it is sold. The fact that such person represents two characters under the statute does not make the offense double." State v. Conner, 30 Ohio St. 405.

7. Continuando — Surplusage. — Where the indictment charges the defendant with unlawfully selling on a day certain "and on divers other days and times," etc., the continuando may be rejected as surplusage, and the indictment cannot be objected to as being duplicitous. People v. Adams, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 475; Osgood v. People, 39 N. Y. 449; State v. Kobe, 26 Minn. 148.

But where an information charged that "on the first day of March, 1893, and on divers days and times between that day and the seventh day of May, 1893, respondent did sell and furnish," the court said: "The objection that ful sales to have been made at different times to different persons.¹

(4) As to Place.—An indictment is not bad for duplicity in describing a place by the conjunctive use of several synonymous terms,² nor where the only effect of conjunctive descriptions is that more is charged than is necessary to constitute the offense.³

(5) As to Liquors Sold.—If the statute, in defining the offense, mentions several kinds of liquor, the sale of either of which will constitute the offense, the indictment may allege a sale of them conjunctively, and will not be bad for duplicity.⁴

the information is bad for duplicity is well taken. Each sale to a person in the habit of becoming intoxicated is, under our statute, a separate offense, and as the offense is not of a continuing character, we do not think that the continuando can be rejected as surplusage." People v. Hamilton, 101 Mich. 87. See also State v. Temple, 38 Vt. 37; State v. Pischel, 16 Neb. 490, 608.

1. An indictment charged that on March 1, 1885, at a named place, the defendant sold, to several persons named, intoxicating liquors; also that at the same place, on the 26th of August, 1885, he sold liquor to other persons named; also that on the 12th day of September and the 28th of July, at the same place, he sold liquor to still other persons named. It was held that the indictment charged more than one offense and on demurrer was insufficient for duplicity. People v. O'Donnell, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 358.

2. House, Store, and Shop.—Thus an indictment was held not to be double where it alleged that the defendant kept a certain house, store, and shop for the purpose of selling wines, etc., to be drunk thereat. Rawson v. State, 19 Conn. 292, where the court said: "The objection supposes the defendant to be charged with keeping a house, and also a store, and also a shop, as three distinct and separate places, for the purpose of selling wine and spirituous liquors, the keeping of each of which constitutes a distinct offense. We do not think that the language of the complaint, understood in its ordinary import, warrants this inference. The grand juror evidently used the words 'house,' 'store,' and 'shop' as synonymous, and as defining but one place. 'A certain house, store, and shop,' [is] equivalent to saying 'one certain house, etc., to be drunk thereat,' viz., at that certain place. This language is in the singular throughout, with no allusion to more buildings than one. And he was well warranted in so understanding and using these words, which, in common parlance, and especially in reference to their being houses used for buying and selling, are generally understood to mean the same thing." See also Barth v. State, 18 Conn. 432.

3. Where the indictment alleged that the liquor was sold to be drunk in the defendant's "house, out-house, yard, garden, and the appurtenances thereto belonging," it was not bad as being duplicitous. Stout v. State, 93 Ind. 150. And in an almost identical case the court said: "Being thus conjunctively connected, the only effect was that more was charged in the indictment than was necessary to make out the offense under the statute. * * * If these phrases and words had been disjunctively connected a different question would have been presented." Stockwell v. State, 85 Ind. 522.

4. Charging Sales of Various Kinds of Liquor.—Where the indictment alleges that the defendant sold "intoxicating, spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors," or "vinous and spirituous liquors," or "wine, brandy, rum, and other strong liquors," or "beer, a fermented or malt liquor," and but one penalty is prescribed, the indictment charges but one offense and is not open to objection for duplicity. Kreamer v. State, 106 Ind. 192; State v. Cottle, 15 Me. 473; State v. Nerbovig, 33 Minn. 480; Murphy v. State, 28 Miss. 637; Lea v. State, 64 Miss. 201.

(6) Acts Constituting Distinct Offenses. — Acts Constituting Different Stages of the Same Offense, although each act when taken alone will constitute an offense, may be joined in one count.¹

1. Keeping, Exposing, Offering, and Selling. — An indictment charging that the defendant "did * * * sell and exchange, and offer and expose for sale and exchange, and did own and keep, with intent to sell and exchange, spirituous and intoxicating liquors," etc., or that the defendant "did sell and did offer to sell," is not bad for duplicity. State v. Burns, 44 Conn. 149; Barnes v. State, 20 Conn. 232.

Exposing and Keeping for Sale constitute but one offense, and an indictment so charging will be supported by proof of either. Com. v. Dolan, 121 Mass. 374. See Com. v. Byrnes, 126 Mass. 248; Com. v. Curran, 119 Mass. 206.

Sold and Suffered to be Sold. — If the indictment charges that the defendant sold and suffered to be sold, or "did offer to sell, sell, and suffer to be sold," certain intoxicating liquors, such allegation will not render the indictment bad for duplicity. State v. Nolan, 15 R. I. 529; State v. Colwell, 3 R. I. 284.

"Did Sell and Was Unlawfully Interested in the Sale," is not a charge which makes an indictment bad for duplicity. Davis v. State, 50 Ark. 17.

Unlawfully Sold and Caused to be Sold. — An allegation that the defendant sold and caused to be sold certain liquors does not render the indictment double. State v. Cottle, 15 Me. 473; State v. Stinson, 17 Me. 154; State v. Fant, 2 La. Ann. 837.

In Com. v. Schoenhutt, 3 Phila. (Pa.) 20, the indictment charged that the defendant "did sell and cause to be sold," and the court said: "This form of expression has always been held as charging the same offense. It is the common form of words used in such indictments in Pennsylvania from the early period, and no objection on the ground of duplicity has ever been sustained." See also Com. v. Baird, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 141; Whart. Prec. 475; 6 Pa. L. J. 283; Com. v. Eaton, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 273.

Selling on Sunday at Retail or Without License. — An affidavit charged that the defendant, at a certain time and place, and to a named person, sold "a less quantity than a quart of intoxicating liquor, to wit, four gills of beer, for the sum of ten cents, to be drunk as a beverage, said 10th day of July, 1887, being the first day of the week, and commonly called Sunday." It was held that the affidavit contained more words than were necessary to charge the offense of selling on Sunday, but that they constituted only one charge, that of selling intoxicating liquor on Sunday. Henry v. State, 113 Ind. 304.

Where the indictment charged a sale on Sunday, to wit "one gill of intoxicating liquor * * * to be drank on the premises where sold," the averment that the defendant did not have a license authorizing him so to sell will not render the indictment double, and such averment may be rejected as surplusage. State v. Hutzell, 53 Ind. 160.

Selling at Retail to Be Drunk on Premises. — "In an indictment against a person for selling a less quantity than a quart, the charge of the offense is complete when the sale is charged; and whether it was sold to be drank on the premises, or otherwise, * * * is immaterial, and if stated in the indictment is mere surplusage and may be disregarded." State v. Wickey, 54 Ind. 438; State v. Wickey, 57 Ind. 596.

Contra. — Under a section of a Mississippi statute declaring that "it shall not be lawful for any person to sell or retail any vinous or spirituous liquors in less quantities than one gallon, nor suffer the same or any part thereof to be drank or used in or about his or her house," a count in an indictment charging that the defendant sold in less quantity than one gallon, and suffered the same to be drank in his house, was held duplicitous on the ground that it was impossible for the defendant to determine with what offense he was charged, whether with selling less than a gallon, or allowing liquor to be drunk or used in or about his house. Miller v. State, 5 How. (Miss.) 250.

Presuming to Be a Common Seller and Causing to Be Sold. — An indictment charging that the defendant did "presume to be a common seller * * * and did * * * cause to be sold," etc., is not duplicitous. State v. Stinson, 17 Me. 154.

Presuming to be Retailer and Selling. — An indictment charging that the de-

Cognate Acts. — Where the statute, in defining the offense, mentions several acts disjunctively, the doing of either of which will constitute an offense, the indictment may charge all of such acts without being bad for duplicity.¹

defendant "did presume to be a retailer * * * and did * * * sell," etc., is not bad for duplicity. Com. v. Wilcox, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 503; State v. Churchill, 25 Me. 306.

A Charge of Selling Without Filing Bond, Paying Tax, or Posting Receipt will not render the indictment double. People v. Wade, 101 Mich. 89.

Where an information charged the defendant with having sold intoxicating liquors in less quantities than a quart, "said occupation being taxable by law, without first obtaining a license therefor, and the taxes then and there due by him to the said state upon said occupation amounted to three hundred dollars, and the taxes then and there due by him to said county amounted to one hundred and fifty dollars," the taxes having been duly levied, it was held sufficient, and charged but one offense. Allen v. State, (Tex. App. 1890) 13 S. W. Rep. 998.

Druggist Selling at Retail as a Beverage Without Payment of Tax. — An information, after charging that the defendant was engaged in the business of a druggist, at a certain time and place, alleged that he did at said time and place sell and furnish, etc., spirituous and intoxicating liquors, to wit, whiskey, to named persons, at a named place, and that said liquor was not sold and furnished, to said named persons for medical, chemical, scientific, mechanical, or sacramental purposes, but was sold and delivered to said named parties, as aforesaid, as a beverage, without license, etc., and without paying any tax for selling and keeping for sale at retail, it was held that the information was not bad for duplicity, and that it charged only one offense, to wit, the sale by a druggist who had not paid a special retail tax of whiskey to be used as a beverage, and not for any of the purposes permitted to druggists. Luton v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 69 Mich. 610.

That Defendant Sold Liquor Without Paying the Tax, and Engaged in the Business without having the receipt and notice posted up, is not such an allegation as will render the charge double. People v. Aldrich, 104 Mich. 455. To the same point see People v. Paquin, 74 Mich. 34.

Keeping Place and Selling. — An information charged that the defendant, in a certain described local option precinct, "did then and there unlawfully and wilfully keep and run, and was then and there interested in keeping and running, a 'blind tiger,' for the purpose of selling intoxicating liquors; that he did then and there sell to" a named person "intoxicating liquors." It was held that the allegation that the defendant kept a "blind tiger" was sufficient without further description, and the allegation that he sold intoxicating liquors to a named person did not make the information duplicitous. Segars v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 45.

Contra — Specific Sales and Keeping Saloon. — Where the information in one count charged the defendant with specific sales of liquor to a named person, and also with keeping a saloon where intoxicating liquors are sold as a beverage, the court held that the count was bad for duplicity. People v. Keefer, 97 Mich. 15.

Keeping Open on Sunday and Selling is a charge of but one offense, and it will be sufficient to prove either of such acts. Morganstern v. Com., (Va. 1896) 26 S. E. Rep. 402.

1. Selling and Giving Away. — If the statute mentions several things disjunctively as constituting an offense, all of which are punishable alike, the whole may be charged conjunctively in the same count as constituting but one offense. Thompson v. State, 37 Ark. 408; State v. Finan, 10 Iowa 19; State v. Kerr, 3 N. Dak. 523. Contra, State v. Pischel, 16 Neb. 490; Smith v. State, 32 Neb. 105.

Under the New York Code Crim. Pro., "the indictment must charge but one crime, and in one form," but "the crime may be charged in separate counts to have been committed in a different manner or by different means, and where the acts complained of may constitute different crimes, such crimes may be charged in separate counts." Where the defendant was charged in one count with selling intoxicating liquor on Sunday the 26th of February,

c. CHARGING OFFENSE DIFFERENTLY IN DIFFERENT COUNTS.

—The same offense may be described differently in different counts of the same indictment, and, in the absence of statutory requirements, it is not necessary to allege that the counts are different descriptions of the same offense, nor that the offenses described in the several counts are distinct offenses.¹

1888, to a named person, and in a second count with the giving away on Sunday the 18th of March, 1888, intoxicating liquor to a named person, the indictment was held bad for duplicity. People v. Harmon, 49 Hun (N. Y.) 558.

Sell, Barter, and Give Away — Surplusage. — An indictment charged that the defendant "did then and there unlawfully sell, barter, and give away to one Richard Fisher, at and for the price of ten cents, certain intoxicating liquors," etc. The court said: "A sale, a barter, and a gift cannot all be included in one act. There is a radical difference between a sale and a barter, and between a sale and a gift, and between a barter and a gift. * * * We have the distinct charge that the appellant did 'sell * * * one pint of beer.' This makes a good charge of a sale. There is no sufficient charge of a barter, for it is not alleged that any property was exchanged for the beer. * * * The giving away is coupled with 'at and for the price of ten cents.' This expression destroys the idea of a gift, for there can be no gift upon a consideration. * * * All that part of the indictment which relates to bartering and giving away may be treated as surplusage." Hatfield v. State, 9 Ind. App. 296.

An affidavit and information charged that the defendant, at a named time and place, did "sell, barter, and give away intoxicating liquor to," etc., and it was held that "it does not charge a selling, because it does not allege what, if anything, was paid for the liquor; nor a bartering, because it does not allege what, if anything, was exchanged for it. These words may be held as surplusage, and still leave the charge of giving well alleged. The affidavit is good." Eagan v. State, 53 Ind. 162. See also Divine v. State, 4 Ind. 240; Shafer v. State, 26 Ind. 191.

Sell, Give, Vend, and Retail. — "In misdemeanors, when two offenses of the same character are created by the same statute, and are punishable in the same manner, they may be joined in the same count of an indictment or presentment." State v. Irvine, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 155, holding that a charge that the defendant did "sell, give, vend, and retail," etc., was not double.

Sale and Exchange. — The first count of an information alleged that the defendant did unlawfully "sell and exchange, and offer and expose for sale and exchange, to, etc., certain intoxicating liquors, without a license therefor," etc. The court said: "The intention of the pleader is * * * plain — to charge one transaction, and one only. There is but one time and one place, and we think it was intended to charge but one act; but whether that act was a sale for cash or a sale in a broader sense by way of exchange, the pleader, not knowing, alleged that it was both, so that proof of either would sustain the charge." State v. Teahan, 50 Conn. 92.

Sell and Traffic in. — A complaint charged that the defendant did at a named time "unlawfully sell, deal and traffic in, and, for the purpose of evading the law, did give away certain spirituous, malt, and intoxicating liquors," etc., and it was held that the indictment being in the language of the statute, and conjunctive, alleged but one offense. Boldt v. State, 72 Wis. 7.

1. State v. Rust, 35 N. H. 438, where the court said: "Although indictments for misdemeanors may contain several offenses, provided the judgment on each will be the same, * * * yet when only a single offense is described in different counts, it is manifestly unnecessary and improper to allege and charge the offense described in each count as distinct and different from that described in all the others."

"In this commonwealth several different substantive offenses may be included in different counts of the same indictment, when they are of the same general nature, and when the mode of trial and the nature of the punishment are the same. * * * It is equally well settled that the same offense may

f. SURPLUSAGE. (See, generally, article INDICTMENTS, INFORMATIONS, AND COMPLAINTS, vol. 10, p. 530.)—In General, surplusage matter will not vitiate an indictment if, after striking out such matter, enough remains to constitute a good charge of the offense,¹ and a defect in the manner of stating surplus matter is immaterial.²

As to Sales, Barters, and Gifts.—Where a sale is well charged, surplusage matter as to barter or gift will not render the indictment invalid.³

As to Place Where Liquor Was to Be Drunk.—Where a sale at retail is sufficiently charged, an addition that the liquor was sold to be drunk on the premises where sold,⁴ or was drunk⁵ or was suffered be alleged in different counts of an indictment to have been committed in different modes, and by different means, so as to meet different possible phases of the evidence." Com. v. Jacobs, 152 Mass. 276. See State v. Atkinson, 33 S. Car. 100.

1. State v. Nations, 75 Mo. 53; Feigel v. State, 85 Ind. 580.

Useless and Insensible Words may be rejected as surplusage where enough still remains to charge an offense. Com. v. Penniman, 8 Met. (Mass.) 519.

Second Glass.—An indictment charging an unlawful sale added "and being a second glass of intoxicating liquor" sold by the defendant to, etc. The allegation as to the second glass was regarded as surplusage and not deemed descriptive. State v. Staples, 45 Me. 320.

As to Time.—Where an indictment alleged a retailing of liquor at a named time, and that the defendant "on divers other days and times [between certain named days] did presume to be and was a retailer and seller," etc., the words quoted were rejected as surplusage. Com. v. Bryden, 9 Met. (Mass.) 137. See also Com. v. Pray, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 359; People v. Adams, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 475.

2. Misrecital of Statute.—"It is not every misrecital that is fatal. The mistake must be in something material to the plaintiff's case. In Shaftsbury v. Digby, 2 Mod. 99, it was said: 'If a party undertakes to recite a statute, and mistakes in a material point, it is incurable; but if he recites so much as will serve to maintain his own action truly, and mistakes the rest, this will not vitiate the declaration.' It is sufficient if enough be stated to bring the case within the statute, or to charge the defendant." Rawlings v. State, 2 Md. 201.

Reference to Statute.—"It is not necessary that an indictment for violating the provisions of a local prohibitory act should refer to the statute, as that is a matter of law, not of fact. * * * For the same reason, if the indictment should refer to the wrong act it is immaterial, and mere surplusage, when the act charged is in fact a violation of any statute." State v. Snow, 117 N. Car. 778.

3. Unlawful Sales.—Where it is alleged that the liquor was sold, bartered, and given away at and for a certain price, the transaction is a sale, as the mentioning of the price destroys the idea of a barter or gift, and the allegations as to barter and gift may be rejected as surplusage. Hatfield v. State, 9 Ind. App. 296; Steel v. State, 26 Ind. 92; Leary v. State, 39 Ind. 360; Massey v. State, 74 Ind. 368.

Sale and Gift.—Under a statute enacting that "all persons who shall sell or give away, upon any pretext," etc., an indictment charging that the defendant did "unlawfully sell and give away to," etc., is not bad for duplicity; a giving away on pretext not being charged, the allegation as to gift may be treated as surplusage. State v. Ball, 27 Neb. 601.

4. An indictment, after charging an unlawful sale in less quantity than a quart at a time, proceeded to allege that the sale was made "to be then and there drank and suffered to be drank in the house, out-house, garden, and yard," etc. It was held that the sale of less than one quart of whiskey, without a license, is a complete offense within itself without an allegation as to the place where it was drunk, and that the allegation as to the place where it was to be drunk is mere surplusage. State v. Wickey, 54 Ind. 438.

5. Com. v. Luddy, 143 Mass. 563; Com. v. Coe, 9 Leigh (Va.) 620.

As to License. — The negation as to license in a case where no license could have been granted authorizing the sale may be treated as surplusage.²

As to Purchaser. — Words describing the race or nationality of the purchaser may be rejected as surplusage where a description of the purchaser is immaterial.³

As to Knowledge. — An allegation as to knowledge, where knowledge is not an ingredient of the offense, is surplusage.⁴

g. NEGATIVE AVERMENTS — (1) Of License or Authority to Sell — (a) When Necessary. — Where the act complained of is one which may be authorized, and is unlawful unless authorized by the constituted authorities, the indictment for such offense should negative the existence of license or authority to do such act.⁵

(b) When Not Necessary — In General. — But where the act is made unlawful without regard to whether the person committing it had

1. State v. Hornbeak, 15 Mo. 478, in which case an indictment charged that the defendant did "unlawfully sell one half pint of brandy, of the value of ten cents, to," etc., "and suffered the same to be drunk at the place of sale, without then and there having a grocery license, dram-shop keeper's license, an innkeeper's license, or any legal authority," etc., and it was held that the indictment was sufficient for selling liquor without license, and that the part which averred that the liquor was suffered to be drunk at the place of sale might be rejected as surplusage.

2. An indictment charged a sale of liquor on Sunday to a named person, to be drunk on the premises where sold, and alleged further that the defendant did not have a license or permit authorizing such sale, and the court held that the indictment charged a sale on Sunday, a sale which a license will not protect, and that the allegations as to a license were surplusage. State v. Hutzell, 53 Ind. 160.

Licensed as an Innholder. — Where a complaint alleged that the defendant, "not being then and there first duly licensed, according to law, as an innholder or common victualler, and without any authority or license therefor duly had and obtained, according to law, to sell intoxicating liquor," sold intoxicating liquor to, etc., and it appeared in evidence that the defendant was duly licensed as a common innholder, but had no authority to sell intoxicating liquor, it was held that the allegation that the defendant was not licensed as a common innholder should be rejected as surplusage, and that he was rightly convicted on the other allegations in the complaint. Com. v. Baker, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 405.

3. Under the laws regulating the sale of intoxicating liquor in the district of Alaska, where the vendee is a white man or Indian, or belongs to some other nationality, the statement in an indictment that the purchasers named were Indian women was regarded as descriptive, or, if not, then surplusage. U. S. v. Warwick, 51 Fed. Rep. 280.

4. Sale to Minor. — Where a statute makes it an offense to sell intoxicating liquor to a minor, without regard to whether the vendor had knowledge of the minority of the purchaser, allegation as to knowledge should be treated as surplusage. State v. Cain, 9 W. Va. 559.

5. Koopman v. State, 61 Ala. 70; Howe v. State, 10 Ind. 423; State v. Carpenter, 20 Ind. 219; Stevenson v. State, 65 Ind. 409; Com. v. Tuttle, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 502; Com. v. Thurlow, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 374; State v. McBride, 64 Mo. 364; State v. Savage, 48 N. H. 484; Cunningham v. Berry, 17 Oregon 622; State v. Horan, 25 Tex. Supp. 271.

That the Liquor Was Not Defendant's Own Manufacture. — An indictment based upon North Carolina Act 1888, c. 175, § 34, subd. 2 and 3, should allege that the liquor was not of defendant's own manufacture and sold at the place of manufacture, and was not the product of his farm. State v. Hazell, 100 N. Car. 471.

or had not a license, and none could be granted authorizing such act, the indictment need not negative license.¹

An Allegation that the Owner Had No License is not necessary, as the seller will be presumed to be the owner if nothing to the contrary appears.²

(c) Form of Averment — In General. — The negation of license must be broad enough to cover all the sources from which license might have been obtained.³

1. Sale on Sunday. — Where a permit could not have authorized defendant to make a sale of intoxicating liquor on Sunday, it was held not necessary that the indictment for that offense should allege that defendant had no permit. Lehritter v. State, 42 Ind. 383; Hulsman v. State, 42 Ind. 500; Stein v. State, 50 Ind. 21; Lambert v. State, 8 Mo. 492.

In a prosecution under Maryland Code, art. 27, § 248, prohibiting the selling of intoxicating liquor on Sunday, the indictment need not allege that the defendant was a licensed trader. State v. Edlavitch, 77 Md. 144, distinguishing Bode v. State, 7 Gill (Md.) 326, where it was held that the act then in force only intended to embrace licensed tavern-keepers and licensed retailers of liquors and cordials therein designated, while in the case in hand the prohibition extends to all persons, licensed or unlicensed.

A Sale to a Minor being one which a license would not authorize, license need not be negated in an indictment for such offense. Meyer v. State, 50 Ind. 18; Johnson v. State, 74 Ind. 197; State v. Hamilton, 75 Ind. 238.

Local Option Law. — Where, by the terms of a local option law, no license can be granted in the local option district, an indictment for a violation of such law need not negative license. South v. Com., 79 Ky. 493; State v. Hanley, 25 Minn. 429; Hargrave v. Com., (Va. 1895) 22 S. E. Rep. 314.

Keeping Tippling House. — If the indictment is for keeping a tippling house, it is sufficient to aver that the defendant kept a tippling house, without alleging that he had no license to retail spirituous liquors. Com. v. Harvey, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 1, where the court said: "If, however, he was guilty of keeping a tippling house, as charged in the presentment, the necessary conclusion is that he had no license which authorized him to sell spirituous liquors to be drunk in his house, for it is the act of selling and allowing it to be drunk in his house without a license therefor that constitutes him the keeper of a tippling house. If he have a license to do it he cannot be guilty, under the statute, of keeping a tippling house, and therefore the averment that he kept a tippling house negatives the idea that he had a license, and no additional averment is necessary." See also Com. v. Allen, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 1.

In Webster v. Com., 7 Dana (Ky.) 215, decided in 1838, the indictment charged that the defendant kept a tippling house "not under pretense of keeping a tavern," and it was held good after verdict, though the court said that the phrase "without having obtained license to keep a tavern" would have been more appropriate.

Sale by Druggist. — In Michigan an information charging an unlawful sale of liquor by a druggist, as a beverage which was drunk on the premises, need not allege that the defendant was not licensed to keep a saloon. People v. Curtis, 95 Mich. 212.

In Missouri an indictment under the drug-shop law need not negative defenses which might exist under an indictment framed under another law. State v. Gibson, 61 Mo. App. 368.

Negating Importation. — Under the New Hampshire statute of 1849 it was not necessary to allege that the liquors sold were not imported from a foreign country, and sold in the original package. State v. Fuller, 33 N. H. 259; State v. Blaisdell, 33 N. H. 388.

2. State v. Devers, 38 Ark. 517, holding that an indictment alleging that the defendant sold intoxicating liquors without having a license to sell the same sufficiently negatives authority to sell, and that if the sale has been made by the defendant as agent or servant of the owner, who had a license, it is matter of defense. See also State v. Keith, 37 Ark. 96; Johnson v. State, 37 Ark. 98.

3. Hardison v. State, 95 Ga. 338;

Following Language of Statute.—In negating license it is not necessary to use the exact words of the statute, but it is sufficient to use other words conveying the same meaning.¹

Meier v. State, 57 Ind. 386; O'Brien v. State, 63 Ind. 242; Henderson v. State, 60 Ind. 296; State v. Pitzer, 23 Kan. 250; Trost v. State, 64 Miss. 188; State v. Souvniere, 3 Vt. 156; State v. Munger, 15 Vt. 290.

Time of Holding License.—Where the words of negation were "not having a license to sell said liquors as aforesaid," etc., it was held that the negation had reference to the time of the sale, and not to the time of finding the bill. State v. Munger, 15 Vt. 290.

As to Quantity of Liquor.—The negation of license was "not having a license to sell rum, brandy, or gin by the half-gill, gill, or half-pint," and it was held that the words of negation relative to the quantity of liquor alleged to have been sold without license were co-extensive with the quantity which the defendant was charged to have sold, viz., "by the gill, half-gill, and half-pint." State v. Munger, 15 Vt. 290. See State v. Ashcraft, 11 Ind. App. 406.

Averment Too Narrow.—In State v. Sommers, 3 Vt. 156, license was negated by an averment of "not having a license from the County Court within and for said county of Caledonia, nor from any judge of the same, nor from the civil authority and selectmen of said Barnet, to keep an inn or house of public entertainment in said Barnet." The court said: "It is evident that the negation in this case is too narrow to cover the eighth section in the first act, when restricted or limited by the words 'to keep an inn or house of public entertainment.' Had those words been omitted in the indictment, the sale of the spirituous liquors complained of would have been without license from any legitimate source; but taken as a part of the negation, it follows that the defendant might have had a license and lawful authority to sell spirits at the time and place he did, but not to keep an inn or house of public entertainment. For these reasons the judgment must be arrested."

Negating Various Forms of License.—If a pleader attempts to negative the various forms of license by name, he should include all the forms and sources of license by which authority to sell the liquor may have been granted. State v. Pitzer, 23 Kan. 250 [explaining State v. Pittman, 10 Kan. 593]; Trost v. State, 64 Miss. 188.

As to Druggists.—Where a complaint charges an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors by one who was not "then and there a druggist, and said liquor not being then and there sold for chemical, scientific, mechanical, medicinal, or sacramental purposes," and "not being proprietary patent medicines," it is sufficiently broad to show that the accused was not selling lawfully as a druggist. People v. Aldrich, 104 Mich. 455.

1. State v. Buckner, 52 Ind. 278; Burke v. State, 52 Ind. 522.

It is sufficient in negating license to follow substantially the language of the statute where the statute defines the offense which it creates. Howell v. State, 4 Ind. App. 148.

The averment, "without having a license therefor according to law," is not equivalent to the averment, "without paying such tax and obtaining such certificate as is prescribed by the fourteenth section," which were the words of the statute, and an indictment was held defective for that reason. Com. v. Young, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 664.

Unnecessary Averments.—If one is charged with being a common seller of intoxicating liquors, it is not necessary to set forth the manner in which he was not appointed the agent of the town or city. "An averment that he was not 'duly' or was not 'legally' appointed, or that he 'was not appointed' such agent, or 'was not such agent' at the time of the sales complained of, is fully sufficient." State v. Barker, 3 R. I. 280.

And where the sale is alleged to have been made in a certain town or city it need not negative the fact that the defendant was agent for any other city or town than that in which the sale is alleged to have been made. State v. Shaw, 35 N. H. 217, where the court said: "The offense created by the act is the selling in a city or town without being agent for the city or town where the sale is made. Having this local character, in order to describe the offense the indictment must set out truly the city or town in which the sale was made, and negative the agency for that place. And the proof must sustain the allegation as to the place of the sale. Whether or not the respondent was agent for any other town is immaterial, and consequently unnecessary to be negated.

Negative Pregnant. — Where there are two or more authorities from which a license may in certain contingencies be obtained, the averment should be broad enough to negative the existence of a license from either authority. Alleging specifically the want of a license from one, only of such authorities makes the averment a negative pregnant.¹

Neither is it necessary, in an indictment for being a common seller of intoxicating liquors without license, to allege that the defendant was not appointed as the "agent of any city or town to sell liquors for medicinal and mechanical purposes." State v. Keen, 34 Me. 500, where the indictment charged that the defendant, "without any lawful authority, license, or permission, did presume to be and was a common seller of spirituous and intoxicating liquors," but did not contain the words "without being duly appointed." The court held that the negation of license or authority as found in the indictment sufficiently negated the fact that the defendant was duly appointed agent to sell liquors in the town or city where the sale was alleged to have been made.

If the complaint negatives "license," it need not also negative a "permit." Neuman v. State, 76 Wis. 112.

1. From Board of Commissioners. — Where an indictment alleged an unlawful sale at retail, "not having then and there procured a license therefor from the board of commissioners" of the county wherein the sale was made, it was held that the averment was too narrow, as the defendant might have procured a license, on appeal, from the Circuit Court. Meier v. State, 57 Ind. 386; Henderson v. State, 60 Ind. 296; O'Brien v. State, 63 Ind. 242. See also State v. Pittman, 10 Kan. 593; State v. Pitzer, 23 Kan. 250.

Where a complaint charged an unlawful sale "without having first obtained a license therefor from the county commissioners," the court held that it sufficiently negated license from the board of county commissioners and was broad enough. State v. Nerbovig, 33 Minn. 480.

Exception as to Town Agent. — Where the enacting clause of a statute contains an exception as to town agents who are licensed to sell under the statute, the indictment must allege that the defendant is not such an agent or it will be insufficient. State v. Savage, 48 N. H. 484.

City License. — A complaint for the violation of a municipal ordinance by unlawfully selling liquor without a license from the municipal authorities is not defective for omitting to aver that the defendant had or had not been licensed under the laws of the state. Frankfort v. Aughe, 114 Ind. 77.

As to Kind of Liquor. — If the statute specifies the kind of liquor for which a license may be granted, the averment negating license will be sufficient if it embraces only such liquors. State v. Blaisdell, 33 N. H. 388.

Unnecessary Allegation. — In Georgia where an indictment for an unlawful sale charges that it was made without a license from the ordinary it is sufficient, without alleging that the defendant had no license from an incorporated town or city authorized by law to grant the same. Johnson v. State, 60 Ga. 634.

Sale at Retail — Quantity. — Where the indictment charges a sale at retail it should negative the fact that the defendant had a license to retail in a less quantity than a quart at a time, and not that he had no license to sell liquor to be drunk on the premises where sold. Burke v. State, 52 Ind. 522.

Variance. — One licensed as a taverner to sell fermented liquor only, cannot be convicted of selling spirituous liquor "without being duly licensed as an innholder." The court held that the indictment should have alleged that the defendant, being an innholder with authority to sell fermented liquor only, sold spirituous liquor. Com. v. Thayer, 5 Met. (Mass.) 246.

Approved Forms of Averment. — The General Averment. — Many authorities hold that an averment negating a license in general terms is sufficient, without specifying any particular kind of license.¹

References from One Count to Another. — Where there are several counts in a complaint, each count should contain an averment negating license, and a negation as to license following the last count, and intended to apply to that and the preceding count, will not be sufficient as to either count.²

Sale by Two or More Jointly. — In an indictment charging a sale by two or more jointly, the negative averment as to license must apply to them severally as well as jointly.³

averments in the following cases were sustained:

An allegation, in a prosecution for unlawfully retailing, that the defendant, "not then and there having a license to sell intoxicating liquors in a less quantity than a quart at a time," etc. Josephdaffer v. State, 32 Ind. 402.

"Not being then and there licensed to sell distilled spirituous liquors, as is required by the statute laws of this state." State v. Clark, 23 Vt. 293.

"Not having then and there any license, authority, or appointment according to law to make such sale of said intoxicating liquors, sold as aforesaid, to be drunk on the said premises as aforesaid." Com. v. Luddy, 143 Mass. 563.

"Without being duly appointed, by the town council of Coventry, an agent of said town of Coventry for the sale of ale, wine, rum, and other strong and malt liquors, to be used for medicinal and mechanical purposes only." State v. Johnson, 3 R. I. 94.

2. A complaint was in three counts, and the second and third charged unlawful sales, but did not contain an averment negating license, but the words following the third count were: "And the complainant further says that all of said sales were made by said Crossley without any lawful right or authority." The court said: "The words that follow the third count are manifestly intended to apply to all the counts, and not to the third count alone, and cannot fairly be considered to be a part of that count unless they can be considered to be a part of the other counts. This method of pleading is slovenly, and is not to be encouraged. There is no precedent for it, so far as we are aware, in any adjudicated case or in any approved book of forms, and it violates the rule that each count must be complete in itself. The motion to quash the second and third counts should, therefore, have been granted." Com. v. Crossley, 162 Mass. 515.

3. Forms of Averment. — The following negative forms have been held sufficient:

An indictment charging the defendants with presuming to be common sellers of intoxicating liquors "without being first duly licensed therefor according to law." See also State v. Gregory, 27 Mo. 231; Com. v. Tower, 8 Met. (Mass.) 527.

An indictment against two persons for presuming to be common retailers of intoxicating liquors "without being first licensed as a retailer of wine and spirits, according to law." Com. v. Sloan, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 52.

(d) Presumption of License. — If a complaint does not allege that the defendant was not licensed to make the sale complained of, it will be presumed that he had a license to sell generally.¹

(2) Exceptions and Defenses — Necessity of Negative Averment. — An exception contained in the enacting clause of the statute,² or made a part thereof by reference,³ should be negated in the indictment; otherwise, however, where the exception is not a part of the enacting clause by incorporation or reference,⁴ but is

An indictment alleging the defendants to be copartners in business, "not being then and there a licensed taverner or retailer." State v. Burns, 20 N. H. 550.

An indictment charging A and B generally with selling one quart of brandy, "not being agents for the town" to sell spirituous liquors. State v. Wadsworth, 30 Conn. 55, where it was held that the negation as to authority to sell as agent of the town applied to each of the defendants.

Selling by Quart Without License. — Where the defendant was indicted for a violation of that part of section 4565 of the Georgia Code prohibiting the selling of spirituous liquors by the quart without having a license and taking the oath described by the code, the court held that "it is only when the defendant is indicted for retailing spirituous liquors in quantities less than one quart that the indictment should contain the negative averment that it was not sold within the limits of any incorporated town or city authorized by law to grant licenses." Johnson v. State, 60 Ga. 636.

3. Exception Incorporated by Reference.

— One section of a statute prohibited the manufacture and sale of ale, wine, rum, and other strong and malt liquors and mixed liquors, etc., except for the purposes of exportation, "unless as is hereinafter provided." A subsequent section of the same chapter made it lawful for the town agents to sell the liquors enumerated in the first-mentioned section, and for any person to keep and sell imported liquors contained in original packages in which they were imported. It was held that the exceptions found in the subsequent section were by reference made a part of the enacting clause and of the description of the offense, and should be negated in the indictment based upon the first section. State v. O'Donnell, 10 R. I. 472. See also State v. Rush, 13 R. I. 198.

Contra. — Where a statute enacted that "any person other than such as are hereinafter excepted who shall, otherwise than is hereinafter expressly provided, sell by retail any of such liquors as aforesaid, not to be drank in or at the place where it shall be sold," etc., the court held that the exceptions referred to were not so incorporated into the enacting clause as to require them to be negated in the indictment based upon such section. Com. v. Hill, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 682.

4. Matter of Defense. — If the exception is not a part of the enacting clause contained in a subsequent clause,¹ proviso,² section,³ or statute.⁴

Form of Negative Averment. — In negating statutory exceptions it is not necessary to use the exact words of the statute, but other words which set forth the exception with equal certainty may be used.⁵

it need not be negated in the indictment or complaint, but is matter of defense, and the accused must show that he comes within the exception. State v. Bailey, 43 Ark. 150; Williams v. State, 89 Ga. 483; Metzker v. People, 14 Ill. 101; Com. v. Burding, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 506; Com. v. Gagne, 153 Mass. 205; State v. Taylor, 73 Mo. 52; State v. Buford, 10 Mo. 703; State v. Wade, 34 N. H. 495. See also Nelson v. U. S., 30 Fed. Rep. 112.

Where a statute (How. Annot. Stat. Michigan, § 2283e) provided that "all saloons, restaurants, bars, in taverns or elsewhere, and all other places except drug stores where any of the liquors mentioned in this act are sold or kept for sale, either at wholesale or retail, shall be closed on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday," it was held that the words "except drug stores," were used to apply to "other places" immediately preceding, and that an information alleging that a saloon where liquors mentioned in the act were sold was kept open on Sunday was good. People v. Taylor, (Mich. 1896) 68 N. W. Rep. 303.

2. Carson v. State, 69 Ala. 236; State v. Stapp, 29 Iowa 551; Rawlings v. State, 2 Md. 201; State v. Fuller, 33 N. H. 259; State v. Tamlar, 19 Oregon 528; Com. v. Hill, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 682.

3. Wilson v. State, 35 Ark. 414; Blackwell v. State, 36 Ark. 178; State v. Wadsworth, 30 Conn. 55; State v. Miller, 24 Conn. 522; Com. v. Tuttle, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 502; *People v. Car. 1064; Becker v. State, 8 Ohio St. 392; State v. Duggan, 15 R. I. 403; Williams v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1897) 39 S. W. Rep. 664.

Matter of Defense. — "As a rule, an exception in a statute by which certain particulars are withdrawn from or excepted out of the operation of the enacting clause thereof, defining a crime concerning a class or species, constitutes no part of the definition of such crime, whether placed close to or remote from such enacting clause. And whenever a person accused of the commission of such a crime claims to be within such exception, it is more logical and convenient that he should aver and prove the fact than that the prosecutor should anticipate such defense and deny it." Nelson v. U. S., 30 Fed. Rep. 112.

4. Bogan v. State, 84 Ala. 449; Baume v. State, 26 Fla. 71; Metzker v. People, 14 Ill. 101; State v. Beneke, 9 Iowa 203; Com. v. Shaw, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 522; State v. Moore, 107 Mo. 78; State v. Jaques, 68 Mo. 260; State v. Elam, 21 Mo. App. 290; Jefferson v. People, 101 N. Y. 19; State v. Freeman, 27 Vt. 523.

Negating Treaties. — An indictment in a state court regards only the law of the state against which the offense was committed, and defenses arising from treaties with, or under the statutes of, another government need not be negated in the indictment. State v. Gurney, 37 Me. 149.

5. State v. Keen, 34 Me. 500.

General Allegation. — In Missouri it was held that the general allegation is sufficient, and that "the usual allegation in indictments for selling liquor without license is that defendant had not a dram-shop license, or any other authority to sell intoxicating liquors," etc." State v. McBride, 64 Mo. 367.

As to Druggists. — In Michigan, under Laws 1887, § 3, which provide that the penal provision of the code shall not apply "to druggists who sell liquors for chemical, scientific, medicinal, mechanical, or sacramental purposes only, and in strict compliance with law," an information alleging that the accused unlawfully sold liquor to a named person, "not being then and there a drug-

h. SCIENTER. — If the knowledge with which an act is done is made an element of the offense it must be alleged in the indictment, but if the statute creating the offense is silent as to knowledge it need not be alleged.¹ This general rule has been applied in prosecutions for selling to intoxicated persons,² and to minors.³

i. AVERMENTS AS TO DEFENDANT — (1) Character or Occupation. — Where the prohibition of the statute is directed against a gist," does not sufficiently negative the exception. People v. Haas, 79 Mich. 449. See also People v. Decarie, 80 Mich. 578; People v. Telford, 56 Mich. 542; Luton v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 69 Mich. 610.

Forms Approved. — The following negative averments have been held sufficient:

"Not having then and there any license, authority, or appointment according to law to make such sale." Com. v. Davis, 121 Mass. 352; Com. v. Burke, 121 Mass. 39.

"Said sale and delivery aforesaid not there and then being as provided in section sixty of chapter eighty-seven of the Public Statutes of said state, 'Of the suppression of intemperance,'" under a statute forbidding the sale of intoxicating liquors "except as provided in section 60 of said chapter 87." State v. Walsh, 14 R. I. 507.

"Not being wine sold for sacramental purposes," under a town charter making it unlawful to sell vinous, spirituous, or malt liquor except for sacramental purposes. Stone v. State, (Miss. 1890) 7 So. Rep. 500.

That the defendant sold one pint of whiskey, sufficiently negatives the exceptions of the statute allowing wine to be sold for sacramental purposes and intoxicating liquors to be sold by distilleries or their agents in quantities not less than five gallons, not to be drunk on the premises where sold, but does not negative the exception allowing a practising physician, as such, to prescribe intoxicating liquor to his patient. Throckmorton v. Com., (Ky. 1896) 35 S. W. Rep. 635.

1. McCutcheon v. People, 69 Ill. 601.

2. Selling to Intoxicated Person. — In charging an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor to an intoxicated person, it must be alleged that the defendant knew that the person to whom the sale was made was at the time intoxicated. Com. v. Bell, 14 Bush (Ky.) 433; Miller

v. State, 3 Ohio St. 477; Parker v. State, 4 Ohio St. 565; Com. v. Liebtreu, 1 Pearson (Pa.) 107. Contra, Mapes v. People, 69 Ill. 523; Werneke v. State, 50 Ind. 23; Com. v. Sellers, 130 Pa. St. 32.

Variance Between Affidavit and Information. — Where, in a prosecution on affidavit and information for selling liquor to a person in the habit of getting intoxicated, the information alleged the defendant's knowledge of the purchaser's habit of getting intoxicated, but the affidavit upon which the defendant was arrested did not allege that the defendant knew of such habit, the court held that the affidavit was sufficient for the purpose of arresting and recognizing the defendant to appear, and that the affidavit did not require the same strictness as an information or indictment, and was sufficient to support the information. Parker v. State, 4 Ohio St. 565.

3. Selling to Minor. — In a prosecution for selling intoxicating liquors to a minor, it is not necessary to allege that the defendant sold the liquor to the minor knowing him to be such. McCutcheon v. People, 69 Ill. 601; Ward v. State, 48 Ind. 289; Miller v. State, 3 Ohio St. 476; Birney v. State, 8 Ohio 237; Com. v. Sellers, 130 Pa. St. 32; State v. Baer, 37 W. Va. 1. Contra Aultfather v. State, 4 Ohio St. 467; Com. v. Liebtreu, 1 Pearson (Pa.) 107; Woods v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1893) 20 S. W. Rep. 915; Williams v. State, 23 Tex. App. 70.

Sufficient Averment of Knowledge. — An indictment alleging that the defendant "did unlawfully and knowingly sell and give, and cause to be sold and given, spirituous, vinous, and intoxicating liquors to, etc., a person under the age of twenty-one years," is sufficient as to its allegation that the defendant knew that the vendee was a minor. Woods v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1893) 20 S. W. Rep. 915.

certain class of persons, with a special penalty distinct from that attached to other offenders, the indictment should indicate on its face that the party charged is the one defined by the statute.¹

(2) Residence. — Where the residence of the accused is material, it must be properly alleged.²

j. ALLEGING SHAM GIFT. — Where a gift is not unlawful unless made under certain circumstances mentioned in the statute, the existence of these facts must be alleged or the indictment will charge no offense.³

1. State v. Heitsch, 29 Minn. 134; State v. Ryan, 30 Mo. App. 159; State v. Runyan, 26 Mo. 167; State v. Andrews, 26 Mo. 169; Bode v. State, 7 Gill (Md.) 326. See also State v. Lises, 58 Mo. 359, a case of selling on Sunday by a dramshop keeper; State v. Heitsch, 29 Minn. 134, where the defendant was charged with selling after notice forbidding him.

Judgment Declaring Future Incapacity of Defendant. — In Brown v. State, 2 Head (Tenn.) 180, it was held not necessary to allege in the indictment or presentment that the accused was a licensed grocery keeper before the court could pronounce judgment of incapacity to obtain a license in the future, as authorized by statute in such cases.

Different Penalties for Different Classes. — If the statute fixes a certain penalty, and adds an additional penalty where the defendant is a licensed vendor of spirits, the additional penalty cannot be inflicted if the indictment fails to show that the accused was a licensed vendor of spirits. Baer v. Com., 10 Bush (Ky.) 8.

When Character or Occupation Need Not Be Alleged. — If a sale without a license is prohibited, no matter what the occupation of the seller may be, it is not necessary to describe his occupation. State v. Butcher, 40 Ark. 362. See also Com. v. Luddy, 143 Mass. 563; State v. Farmer, 104 N. Car. 887.

Allegation of Partnership, and Ownership and Control. — The defendants were jointly indicted for keeping open a barroom or saloon where intoxicating liquors were sold during an election day, and the indictment was objected to because it did not allege a partnership between the defendants, or that they or either of them owned or controlled the saloon. The court said: "It was not necessary that the indictment should allege a partnership between defendants, nor that they or either of them owned or controlled said saloon. In this offense parties may be joint principal and joint offenders without being partners, and parties may violate the statute by opening and keeping open a saloon without being the owners of the same." Janks v. State, 29 Tex. App. 233.

2. An indictment charged that the defendant, "of Somersworth, in the county of Strafford, * * * without a license from the selectmen of the town of Somersworth aforesaid, the same being the town where the said "defendant resided, etc. The defendant lived with his family in Berwick, Maine, but kept a store in Somersworth, and did business there in business hours. The court held that the defendant was properly described as of Somersworth, and further said: "The domicile, inhabitancy, or residence of the respondent may be in Berwick for the purposes of taxation, liability to military duty, and election to office, or for any purpose whatever; and yet it does not follow that his residence may not properly be described as being in Somersworth, in this case." State v. Moore, 14 N. H. 451.

3. Stallworth v. State, 16 Tex. App. 345, holding that an indictment charging the defendant with a gift of liquor must allege that it was "with the purpose of evading the law," to meet the language of the statute.

Gift for a Consideration. — In State v. Finan, 10 Iowa 19, the court said: "It is not an offense under the statute to give to any other persons intoxicating liquors, unless, as expressed in section 6, Acts of 1854-55, c. 45, p. 58, 'they be given in consideration of the purchase of any other property.' In which case, upon an averment that the liquors were given to a person, the fact that they were given in consideration of the purchase of other property should be

k. USE TO BE MADE OF THE ARTICLE SOLD. — Where the statute merely forbids a sale for a particular use or purpose, the use to be made of the article must be alleged, or no violation of the statute is shown.¹

l. AVERMENTS AS TO TIME — (1) In General. See article INDICTMENTS, INFORMATIONS, AND COMPLAINTS, vol. 10, p. 511.

(2) Sale on Sunday. — If an unlawful sale is charged to have been made on Sunday, and the day of the month is also alleged, the allegation is sufficient,² and the prosecution will be sustained by proof of a sale on any Sunday within the period of limitations;³ and if the day of the month stated falls on some day of the week other than Sunday, it will nevertheless be sufficient, the allegation as to the day of the month being mere surplusage.⁴ averred in order to constitute the offense."

1. Sold as a Beverage. — Where the statute makes it an offense to sell unadulterated cider, when sold "to be used as a beverage or for tippling purposes," the indictment will be insufficient if it does not charge such use. State v. Dunlap, 81 Me. 389.

In charging an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor by a druggist, the indictment will be insufficient unless it charges that the accused sold liquor as a beverage, where he might have sold the same for other purposes. State v. Buckner, 20 Mo. App. 420.

But in a prosecution against a druggist for unlawfully selling liquor to a person in the habit of getting intoxicated, it need not be alleged that it was sold as a beverage. People v. Hamilton, 101 Mich. 87.

Sufficiency of Averment. — The allegation that the liquor was sold "as a beverage" is equivalent to alleging that it was sold "to be used as a beverage." People v. Hinchman, 75 Mich. 587. See, further, as to the sufficiency of allegations, State v. Shackle, 29 Kan. 341.

2. Roy v. State, 91 Ind. 417.

Particular Sunday Not Material. — The offense should be charged to have been committed on some Sunday prior to the finding of the indictment, but the particular Sunday is not material. Robinson v. State, 38 Ark. 548.

Judicial Notice. — And if the offense be charged to have been committed on a day of the month, the court will take judicial notice of the day of the week on which the day of the month falls. Robinson v. State, 38 Ark. 548.

Failure to State Day of Month. — Where the indictment charged that the liquor was sold "on the ——— day of June, A. D. 1886, that day being then and there the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday," the fact that no day of the month on which the offense was committed was alleged did not vitiate the indictment. State v. Effinger, 44 Mo. App. 81.

3. Roy v. State, 91 Ind. 417; Frasier v. State, 5 Mo. 536. See Robinson v. State, 38 Ark. 548.

Proof and Variance. — Where the proof was that the offense was committed on the 4th day of May, and on Sunday, but failed to disclose the year, it was held insufficient to authorize a conviction, although the 4th day of May, 1873, the year charged in the indictment, was on Sunday. Lehrtritter v. State, 42 Ind. 383.

The defendant was indicted for selling spirituous liquor on Sunday, May 18, 1884, and was convicted of selling the same on Sunday, April 20, 1884. The court held that time was a material ingredient of the offense, that the variance between the indictment and the proof was fatal, and that the offense was not charged with sufficient certainty as to time so that defendant might be able to prepare his defense against the offense of April 20. People v. Lavin, 4 N. Y. Crim. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 547.

4. Marquardt v. State, 52 Ark. 269; Megowan v. Com., 2 Metc. (Ky.) 3; Hoover v. State, 56 Md. 584; State v. Eskridge, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 413; People v. Ball, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 324, where the court said: "It was not an essential element in the offense charged that it should have been committed on the 13th day of the month mentioned, or on any other day of that month. The time was not material, provided the day when the sale was made, which was the subject of the complaint, was Sunday. The statement of the day of the month, in an indictment for committing an offense on Sunday, though the doing of the act on that day is the gist of the offense, is not more material than in other cases."

On or About. — An allegation that the offense was committed on or about a certain day commonly called Sunday is not sufficient.¹

(3) Continuando. — Where the offense charged is a continuous prohibited traffic carried on from day to day, it may be laid with a continuando.² This form of averment is not proper, however,

Word Sunday as Surplusage. — A complaint charged that the offense was committed on "Sunday, the third day of July," and it was held that the word "Sunday" was surplusage, and at most limited the evidence to that day, and did not vitiate the charge. State v. Fletcher, 13 R. I. 522.

Contra. — An indictment charged that the defendant kept a tippling house open on the 4th day of April, 1873, "being the Sabbath day," when in fact the 4th day of April, 1873, fell on Friday. The court held the indictment insufficient, and said further: "An indictment cannot be sustained which, charging an act to have been done on Friday, thereby showing it an innocent act, seeks to convert it into a criminal one by calling Friday the Sabbath day." Werner v. State, 51 Ga. 426.

1, Effinger v. State, 47 Ind. 235.

An indictment alleged that the defendant committed the offense "on or about the ——— day of July, 1869, which was the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday," and it was held that the indictment was insufficient, on motion to quash, for failure sufficiently to designate the time of the offense. Clark v. State, 34 Ind. 436.

In Nebraska a contrary rule appears. A complaint charged an unlawful sale "on or about the 17th day of February, 1884, * * * that being the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday," and the court held the charge sufficient as to time, and said that the day of the transaction was not a material ingredient of the offense, under section 14 of the liquor law of that state. Brown v. State, 16 Neb. 658.

INDICTMENTS, INFORMATIONS, AND COMPLAINTS, vol. 10, p. 517.

Being a Common Seller of intoxicating liquors may be charged with a continuando. Com. v. Tower, 8 Met. (Mass.) 527; Com. v. Wood, 4 Gray (Mass.) 11; Com. v. Snow, 14 Gray (Mass.) 20; State v. Cottle, 15 Me. 473.

Keeping for Sale may be charged with a continuando. Com. v. Chisholm, 103 Mass. 213; Com. v. Hersey, (Mass. 1887) 9 N. E. Rep. 837.

Averment of Guilt Prior to First Date Stated. — An indictment charged the defendant with being a common retailer of intoxicating liquors from the first day of November, 1835, until the finding of the indictment. The court held that the period was sufficiently fixed and definite to support a conviction, and that the averment of such period was not impaired by the averment that the defendant had also been guilty before the first period. State v. Cottle, 15 Me. 473, where the court said that the latter averment "might have the effect to protect the defendant from any other prosecution for a similar offense at any time prior to the indictment. The averment that the defendant did presume to be a common retailer is expressive of the fact that such was his habit. This, coupled with the averment that he did sell to divers persons within the period stated, is a sufficient description of the offense. * * * It is one of that class of offenses which, to avoid unnecessary prolixity, may be described in general terms."

Sufficiency of Averment. — Where a complaint charged the defendant with being a common seller of intoxicating liquor on a named day "and from that day to the day of the date of receiving this complaint," or "to the day of exhibiting this complaint," the last-named date being certified by the magistrate at the foot of the complaint, the time of the commission of the offense was alleged with sufficient certainty. Com. v. Kingman, 14 Gray (Mass.) 85. See also Com. v. Hagarman, 10 Allen (Mass.) 401.

in offenses which are not of a continuous nature, but if so charged the continuando may be rejected as surplusage, and the indictment will be good where the time is otherwise sufficiently alleged.¹

If an indictment charges the defendant with being a common seller of intoxicating liquor from a day named to "the day of the finding, presentment, and filing of this indictment," it is insufficient in its averment of time. Com. v. Adams, 4 Gray (Mass.) 27, where the court said: "It fixes no time by which the proof of the offense can be limited with precision. The day of the finding and presentment is not necessarily, nor by any reasonable intentment, identical with the day of the filing of the indictment. They are separate and distinct acts, performed by two distinct and separate agencies. The former is the act of the grand jury; the latter is the duty of the clerk. They cannot be simultaneous, nor is it necessary that the one should take place within any fixed or certain time after the other. Indeed, in ordinary practice, they often occur on different days."

An indictment charged the defendant with selling "wine, beer, ale, cider, brandy, and rum, and other strong liquors," by retail, at a named time and on divers days and times until the finding of the indictment, and the defendant was found guilty of the whole charge. It was held that he was rightly convicted, although the sale of beer, ale, and cider by retail, during a portion of the time alleged, was not unlawful. Butman's Case, 8 Me. 113.

An indictment in a prosecution against a person who had a license to sell intoxicating liquors charged that "on the 1st day of June, A. D. 1875," and thereafter, until the finding of the indictment, the defendant kept a place where he sold intoxicating liquor in a disorderly manner. The court held that under the proviso of the Indiana Act of March 17, 1875, § 17, regulating the sale of intoxicating liquor, the offense charged was not punishable until after the close of the regular sessions of the Board of Commissioners next after the taking effect of such act, and that the offense charged could not have been committed on June 1, 1875; and, as no other time was sufficiently laid in the indictment, it was insufficient on motion to quash. Collins v. State, 58 Ind. 5.

Proof — Common Seller of Intoxicating Liquor. — Time is material in the offense of being a common seller of intoxicating liquor, and the evidence must be confined to the time alleged in the indictment. State v. Small, 80 Me. 452.

An indictment charging the accused with being a common seller of intoxicating liquor during a named period will be supported by proof of the commission of the offense during any part of such period. Com. v. Wood, 4 Gray (Mass.) 11. That the allegation need not be proved as laid, see Com. v. Maloney, 16 Gray (Mass.) 20.

Where the offense is charged to have been committed on a named day and on divers other days and times between such days and the finding of the indictment, the defendant cannot be convicted of a substantial offense committed prior to the time alleged. Dansey v. State, 23 Fla. 316.

A complaint charged that the defendant was a common seller of intoxicating liquors "on the third day of April in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and sixty-five * * * within six months last past," and it was held that the complaint could only be supported by proof that the defendant was a common seller on the third day of April. Com. v. Traverse, 11 Allen (Mass.) 260.

Walton*, 11 Allen (Mass.) 238; Com. v. Kendall, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 414; Com. v. Rhodes, 148 Mass. 123; People v. Gilkinson, 4 Park Cr. Rep. (Dutchess Oyer & T. Ct.) 26; State v. Boughner, 5 S. Time Laid Partly Under One Statute and Partly Under Another. — An indictment charged that the defendant was a common seller of intoxicating liquors on the 1st day of July, 1858, and on divers days and times between that day and the day of finding the indictment, in the following October; and the court held the indictment sufficient in its averment of time, although offenses alleged to have been committed during a portion of such time

m. LAYING VENUE.—In an indictment for an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor, the venue should be laid in the county where the sale was made.¹

n. AVERMENTS AS TO PLACE—(1) When Need Not Be Made.—Where place is not of the essence of the offense, and does not affect the degree of punishment or the disposition of the fine, it need not be particularly alleged in the indictment.²

(2) When Must Be Made.—But where the place is of the essence of the offense, or affects the degree of punishment or the disposition of the fine, it must be alleged with particularity.³

were punishable under an Act of 1856, and the remaining portion under an Act of 1858. State v. Pillsbury, 47 Me. 449.

1. State v. Hughes, 22 W. Va. 743.

Crime Committed on Ohio River.—If the crime of unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor is committed on the Ohio river between the states of Indiana and Kentucky, south of low-water mark, on the Indiana side, the venue may be laid in a county in Indiana opposite the place where the offense was committed. Welsh v. State, 126 Ind. 71.

Proof.—The venue should be proved as laid, and it should not be left to inference that the sale took place within the county and magisterial district laid in the venue. Savage v. Com., 84 Va. 619, where the only evidence touching the place was that the offense was committed at the defendant's hotel, and this was held insufficient.

Illegal Transportation.—An indictment charged an illegal transportation of liquors from a place in Waldo county to Clinton and Waterville in Kennebec county, and it was held, there being no other averment of venue in the indictment, that it did not charge a commission of one part of the offense within Kennebec county, for the latter places are towns in Kennebec county, on the line between the two counties. State v. Bushey, 84 Me. 459.

2. Dansey v. State, 23 Fla. 316; Megowan v. Com., 2 Metc. (Ky.) 3; People v. Aldrich, 104 Mich. 455; People v. Ringsted, 90 Mich. 371; State v. Kurtz, 64 Mo. App. 123; State v. Jaques, 68 Mo. 260; State v. Cottrill, 31 W. Va. 162; State v. Bogges, 36 W. Va. 713.

In the County.—A complaint for selling intoxicating liquors without a license is sufficient in its averment as to place where it charges that the sale has been made in a certain county, without a more particular allegation as to place. State v. Hickok, 90 Wis. 161.

Public Place.—Where the words "public place" in a statute have reference only to giving away, and not to selling, it is not necessary, in charging the offense of unlawfully selling under such statute, to allege that it was committed in a public place. King v. State, 66 Miss. 502.

Keeping with Intent to Sell.—The offense of keeping liquors with intent to sell the same unlawfully involves no fixed or certain place as a part of its identity. They may be kept on the person or in a movable vehicle, the allegation as to place not being material, and it will be sufficient to show that the illegal keeping was within the county. Com. v. Kern, 147 Mass. 595.

It is sufficient to charge that the liquors were kept "with intent unlawfully to sell the same in this commonwealth." Com. v. Gillon, 148 Mass. 15.

But in Maine the court held that the complaint or judgment should show that the liquor was intended for sale in the city, town, or place where the liquors were kept or deposited. Barnett v. State, 36 Me. 198.

In Dwelling House.—Where the complaint averred that the liquors were kept and deposited by A. "in a certain dwelling house building [describing the situation] occupied by the said A. as a dwelling," it sufficiently averred that the liquors were kept by A. in his dwelling house. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 116 Mass. 27.

3. Legori v. State, 8 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 697; State v. O'Keefe, 41 Vt. 691; Arrington v. Com., 87 Va. 96.

An indictment against a licensed retailer for violating certain provisions touching the conduct of his business on Presumption After Verdict.—Where nothing to the contrary appears, it will be presumed, after verdict, that the liquor was the licensed premises was held fatally defective for omitting to allege that the unlawful act was committed at the place where the liquors were to be sold under his license. State v. Church, 4 W. Va. 745.

Violation of Three-mile Law.—Under an act making it a crime to sell intoxicating liquors "at or within three miles of Providence College," in the county of Lee, it was held not sufficient simply to allege in the indictment that the sale was "at Nettleton," in violation of said act, and the defect was not cured by proof that Nettleton was within three miles of the college. Ragan v. State, 67 Miss. 332.

Local Option Law.—In a prosecution for violation of the local option law, the indictment must show that the offense was committed within the local option district. Young v. Com., 14 Bush (Ky.) 161; Savage v. Com., 84 Va. 619.

Sale Without License.—An indictment for selling intoxicating liquor without license must distinctly state the place where the liquor was sold in a named town. Arrington v. Com., 87 Va. 96.

So, under a statute providing that where a nuisance consists wholly of unlawful sales of intoxicating liquor the offense shall be punished as for unlawful selling, and not for a nuisance, the indictment must show with particularity the place where the sales were made, so that at common law the seller would be deemed a keeper of a disorderly house. Rogers v. State, 58 N. J. L. 220.

Selling at Retail.—If a statute fixes the amount to be paid for a license for retailing and varies the price according to the place where the business is to be carried on, place is a material ingredient of the offense, and must be alleged, for the offense consists in selling at a place without having a license to sell there. Harris v. State, 50 Ala. 129; Com. v. Head, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 819.

And if the penalty varies with reference to the place where the offense is committed, the place must be particularly stated. Grimme v. Com., 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 263.

Contra.—In Iowa it was held that in a prosecution for unlawfully retailing place need not be stated with more particularity than that the offense was committed in the county where the indictment was found. Zumhoff v. State, 4 Greene (Iowa) 526. And in Texas it was also held not necessary to describe the house where the liquor was sold. State v. Heldt, 41 Tex. 220.

Unlawfully Selling to Be Drunk on Premises Where Sold.—In a prosecution for unlawfully selling liquors to be drunk on the premises where sold, it is sufficient to follow the language of the statute in charging the place. Woode v. State, 9 Ind. App. 42. And it should be alleged that the place where the liquors were sold was owned by the defendant at the time, and was in his possession, or under his control. State v. Woolsey, 92 Ind. 131; Blough v. State, 121 Ind. 355. And an allegation that the accused "did then and there sell to one C. one half gill of spirituous liquor, to be used in and about his dwelling house," was construed to mean the dwelling house of the accused. Com. v. Stowell, 9 Met. (Mass.) 569; Com. v. Moulton, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 404.

Selling on Election Day.—An indictment for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor on election day should allege the township in which the liquor was sold and in which the election was held, notwithstanding the time laid in the indictment is that on which the law requires a general election to be held. State v. Weaver, 83 Ind. 542, where the court said: "If we should place in equal rank the presumption of innocence and the presumption that the public officers did their duty and held an election on the day fixed by law, then the scale would be equally balanced, and of course no offense would be made out. It is for the state to destroy this equilibrium, and allege all facts essential to the existence of the offense sought to be charged." See also Smith v. State, 18 Tex. App. 454.

And where a statute makes it an offense to keep open a liquor shop, or to keep an open bar, within a certain distance of an election district or election grounds, the indictment must charge that the shop or bar was kept open within such distance, or it will be insufficient. State v. Powell, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 164; Patton v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 20. See Janks v. State, 29 Tex. App. 233.

Keeping Open on Election Day.—Where

in the commonwealth at the time of the sale.¹

(3) Form of Averment. — If place is an essential element of the offense, it must be charged with such certainty as to enable an officer executing process to identify it.²

o. AVERMENT AS TO MODE OF SALE OR GIFT. — Where the mode of sale or gift is made an element of the offense by statute, it must be so charged in the indictment.³ Where the statute the law makes it an offense to keep open on election day a place where on other days intoxicating liquors are habitually sold and drunk, it is not sufficient to describe the place as one "where intoxicating liquors were on other days habitually sold and drunk." Weisbrodt v. State, 50 Ohio St. 192.

1. Com. v. Jones, 7 Gray (Mass.) 415, where the charge was that the defendant was a common seller of intoxicating liquors at a named town in the commonwealth of Massachusetts.

2. Hagen v. State, 4 Kan. 90.

Sufficient Allegations of Place. — Place was held to be sufficiently alleged where the indictment charged that the liquor was sold in a certain one-story building within the limits of a named city, known as Worcester's Drug Store, West v. Columbus, 20 Kan. 633; and where the sale was charged to have been made at a certain place without designating the part of the lot on which the sale was made, Hintermeister v. State, 1 Iowa 101; and where the place described was "in the south portion of a certain connected row of frame buildings fronting east on Spruce street, between North Second street and North Third street, in the city of Abilene," where objection was made to the information only by objecting to the introduction of evidence, and the court limited the evidence to the extreme south building of the connected row mentioned, State v. Rohrer, 34 Kan. 427; and that the offense was committed "at Ogden, in the county of Riley, * * * in a certain stone building then and there used and occupied by the said A B as a grocery and dwelling house." State v. Muntz, 3 Kan. 384.

House, Store, and Shop. — Where a complaint charged that the defendant kept a certain house, store, and shop for the purpose of, etc., it was held that such allegation was used to designate but one place, and was sufficient. Conley v. State, 5 W. Va. 522; Rawson v. State, 19 Conn. 292.

In a Certain State, County, and Town. —

In some jurisdictions it is held a sufficient description of the place of sale to name the state, county, and town in which the sale is alleged to have been made. People v. Polhamus, 8 N. Y. App. Div. 133.

Judicial Notice. — An indictment charged that "John Cottle of Windsor, in the county of Kennebec," etc., and it was held that by the word "Windsor" must be understood the town of Windsor, and that the court would take judicial notice that there is such a town in the county of Kennebec. State v. Cottle, 15 Me. 473.

Selling to Be Drunk on Premises Where Sold. — The place or places alleged in the indictment should be those mentioned in the statute, as "house, out-house, yard, garden," etc., and where the statute mentions several places it will be sufficient to charge them conjunctively, Burke v. State, 52 Ind. 461; State v. Freeman, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 248; Stockwell v. State, 85 Ind. 522; Stout v. State, 93 Ind. 150; Stout v. State, 96 Ind. 407; and it is not necessary to state the name of the street or the number of the house, Schwab v. People, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 520; neither is it necessary that the place should be a public resort. Picket v. State, 22 Ohio St. 405.

3. In People v. Norton, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 7, the defendant was charged before a justice of the peace with violating the excise laws of the state of New York "by selling or giving away intoxicating liquors without having a license therefor," and the court held that the complaint charged no offense, because it did not state that the act was committed in the manner described by the statute, and specified no mode of sale or gift within the prohibition of the statute, it not being an offense to sell or give away strong or spirituous liquors unless it be done in the manner prohibited by the statute.

In State v. Devine, 4 Iowa 443, in passing upon the question of the necessity of alleging the method of sale, the makes it an offense to give away liquor only when given upon pretext, to avoid the law, such pretext must be alleged and proved.¹

p. AVERMENT OF QUANTITY OF LIQUOR SOLD — (1) Necessity of Averment. — If the statute makes it an offense to sell, give away, or otherwise dispose of intoxicating liquors under certain conditions, without reference to the quantity of liquor thus sold, given away, or disposed of, the indictment need not allege the quantity of liquor.² But where the quantity sold is an element of the offense, the quantity must be particularly alleged in the indictment.³

(2) Form of Averment. — If the sale of a specific quantity is averred, it should be further alleged that the quantity sold was less than the minimum fixed by the statute.⁴ It will be sufficient, court said, in substance, that the information charging an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors need not state in what manner the sale was made. Where the law speaks of selling "directly or indirectly, or on any pretense, or by any device," it is only meant to describe different methods of committing the same offense, and the particular method of making the sale need not be specified.

1. In Wendt v. State, 32 Neb. 182, an indictment charged the defendant with unlawfully giving away intoxicating liquor without being licensed as a retailer or having a permit as a druggist, but failed to allege that the gift was a pretext to avoid the law, a gift not being otherwise unlawful under the statutory provisions, and the court held that no offense was charged.

Selling to be Drunk on Premises Where Sold. — "In a case * * * for selling liquor without a license, to be drank or suffered to be drank on the premises, * * * it is not necessary to state the quantity sold. The selling of intoxicating liquor without a license, to be drank or suffered to be drank on the premises, constitutes an indictable offense, without reference to the quantity which may be sold at any one time." Plunkett v. State, 69 Ind. 68.

Pursuing Business of Retailing. — "It is the pursuing of the particular kind of business without a license that is made an offense, and not the selling of a particular quantity of spirituous liquors on a particular day to a particular person. The accused is notified of the charge that on a certain day he did retail spirituous liquors without first procuring the license required by law." State v. Kuhn, 24 La. Ann. 474.

however, to allege that the quantity sold was less than the minimum fixed by the statute, without alleging any specific quantity.¹ But "one drink,"² "two glasses,"³ or "by the small measure"⁴ are insufficient averments of the quantity sold.

67 Ind. 327; Arbintrode v. State, 67 Ind. 267; Walter v. State, 105 Ind. 589; Quinn v. State, 123 Ind. 59 [contra, Wood v. State, 21 Ind. 276; Reams v. State, 23 Ind. 111; McCool v. State, 23 Ind. 127]; Com. v. Odlin, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 275. distinguished in Goodhue v. Com., 5 Met. (Mass.) 553, where the averment was that the defendant sold and retailed two quarts of spirituous liquor, and the court held it to be an averment that the defendant sold liquor in a less quantity than twenty gallons, whereas in the earlier Massachusetts case the averment was simply that the defendant sold "one pint of spirituous liquors" without using the word "retail," or any other word indicating that it was one pint only, or that it was not a part of a larger quantity.

In Missouri the courts seem to follow the rule as above stated. State v. Fanning, 38 Mo. 409. However, in State v. Arbogast, 24 Mo. 363, the allegation was that the defendant sold "intoxicating liquors in a quantity than one quart, to wit, one-half pint of whisky," etc., and the court held that the word "less" having been omitted from the averment as to quantity, the averment under the videlicet became material and must be proved as laid.

In Illinois, where the indictment charged a sale of "one gill of spirituous liquor, the same being a less quantity than one quart," it was held that the allegation as to quantity was sufficiently certain under the laws of that state. Zarresseller v. People, 17 Ill. 101.

In Minnesota, where the indictment charged a sale of "one pint" of intoxicating liquor, it was held that a quantity less than five gallons was sufficiently charged, and that such allegation meant a sale in that quantity, and no more. State v. Lavake, 26 Minn. 526; State v. Bach, 36 Minn. 234; State v. Wyman, 42 Minn. 182.

1. State v. Jacks, 54 Ind. 412; State v. Mondy, 24 Ind. 268; Brutton v. State, 4 Ind. 601; Com. v. Roberts, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 505; State v. Baldwin, 56 Mo. App. 423.

Materiality of Specific Averment.—In Klein v. State, 76 Ind. 333, it was held that in a prosecution for retailing intoxicating liquors without a license therefor the gist of the offense is the sale of liquor in a less quantity than a quart at a time, and an allegation that the quantity sold was "one gill and no more" is immaterial, and does not limit proof to one gill.

2. Cool v. State, 16 Ind. 355, holding that in a prosecution for unlawful selling at retail the indictment should charge a sale of a given quantity, according to established measures, as a pint, half-pint, or gill; Hubbard v. State, 11 Ind. 554.

3. An indictment charged that the defendant "did unlawfully sell intoxicating liquors, * * * to wit, two glasses." The court said: "The addition of the words 'to wit, two glasses' does not make the quantity sold any more certain. Two glasses are not necessarily less than a quart. Indeed, a glass of liquor is no definite quantity, any more, as is remarked by counsel for the appellant, than a tub, or a pail, or a kettle full. A glass is no definite quantity known to the law, nor, as far as we are aware, to the commercial or drinking world." Haver v. State, 17 Ind. 455.

Contra.—In State v. Reed, 35 Me. 489, it was held that the allegation of "one glass" of spirituous liquor was a sufficient designation of the quantity sold.

Where the allegation was that the defendant "did purchase as a beverage one bottle of port wine, * * * and did then and there drink the same, and paid therefor," etc., without averring that the quantity sold was less than five gallons, the court held that the averment as to quantity was insufficient in a prosecution for violation of the law prohibiting a sale of liquor in a quantity less than five gallons without a license therefor. People v. Bradt, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 445.

4. Where the averment was that the defendant retailed intoxicating liquor "by the small measure," the court held it insufficient, and said that it should have been averred in addition that the quantity was "less than a quart." State v. Shaw, 2 Dev. L. (N. Car.) 198.

q. AVERMENT OF KIND OF LIQUOR SOLD.—As a general rule it is not necessary to state the particular kind of liquor alleged to have been sold, but it will be sufficient to charge that the liquor sold was "intoxicating" or "spirituous" liquor.¹

r. AVERMENT THAT LIQUOR SOLD WAS INTOXICATING.—If the indictment is specific to the degree of mentioning therein the particular kind of liquor, wine, or beer sold, the intoxicating quality thereof should be alleged unless it is one of whose intoxicating character the courts take judicial notice.² Where, how-

It will be sufficient if the indictment, in charging the kind of liquor sold, follows the language of the statute. State v. Blaisdell, 33 N. H. 388. And where the statute makes it an offense to retail ardent spirits without license, the indictment will be sufficient if it alleges a sale of whiskey, brandy, and other liquors, to the grand jurors unknown. Tefft v. Com., 8 Leigh (Va.) 721. So where the liquor mentioned in the statute was "fermented or distilled liquor," an indictment based on such statute may properly charge that the liquor sold was an "intoxicating liquor, to wit, one quart of whiskey." State v. Williamson, 21 Mo. 496.

Retailing Without License.—In a prosecution for retailing without license it is sufficient to charge that the defendant sold "intoxicating liquor," without specifying the particular kind of liquor. Downey v. State, 20 Ind. 82; State v. Carpenter, 20 Ind. 219; State v. Mondy, 24 Ind. 268; Callahan v. State, 2 Ind. App. 417.

In Local Option District.—In a prosecution for selling in a local option district, it is not necessary to allege that the liquor was such as was the subject of license before local option was adopted. Savage v. Com., 84 Va. 619.

In Vermont.—In a prosecution for owning, keeping, and exposing intoxicating liquor for sale unlawfully, the particular kinds of liquor should be alleged in the complaint. State v. Reynolds, 47 Vt. 297.

2. Butler v. State, 25 Fla. 347; State v. Munger, 15 Vt. 290. See also State v. Houts, 36 Mo. App. 265; State v. Brown, 51 Conn. 1. In the case last cited the complaint alleged that the defendant did sell "spirituous liquor, to wit, one half gallon of beer," etc. By statute beer manufactured from hops and malt or barley was included within the term "spirituous and intoxicating liquors." The court held that the beer mentioned in the videlicet was to be taken to mean ever, the statute expressly prohibits the sale, etc., of a particular kind of liquor, naming it, a description in the language of the statute is sufficient.¹ And if the statute declares that a liquor which is not in fact intoxicating shall be considered intoxicating within the meaning of the act, the indictment may describe it as intoxicating.²

beer of the kind described in the statute, and that the complaint was therefore sufficient. The court said: "If, as the defendant virtually claimed in the course of his argument, the videlicet is so restrictive in its operation as to make the complaint charge the sale of a liquor not intoxicating, it is repugnant to the allegations that precede it, and if so, instead of having the effect to nullify the previous words of description, as claimed, it would itself be rejected as surplusage, leaving the general description in full force. The doctrine that the videlicet must be wholly rejected as surplusage, if what comes under it is contrary or repugnant to the preceding matter, is supported by a great number of authorities. * * * But in the case at bar there is no repugnancy, because that which is particularized belongs to the class indicated by the general description, and giving to the videlicet its true office, as before explained, the complaint may be construed as charging a sale, contrary to the statute, of that kind of beer which comes within the description of intoxicating liquor."

Whiskey is judicially known to be intoxicating. Carmon v. State, 18 Ind. 450; State v. Jones, 3 Ind. App. 121; Schlicht v. State, 56 Ind. 173; State v. Jones, 3 Ind. App. 121.

Beer or Malt Liquor. — Under a statute enacting that the words "intoxicating liquor" shall be applied to all "spirituous, vinous, or malt liquor," an affidavit which charges an unlawful sale of "beer" sufficiently charges a sale of malt or intoxicating liquor. Welsh v. State, 126 Ind. 71. And if the indictment charges an unlawful sale of malt liquor, intoxicating liquor is sufficiently charged, as the courts will take judicial notice that malt liquor is intoxicating. Shaw v. State, 56 Ind. 188. And under a similar statute in Massachusetts, beer may be described as intoxicating liquor, and evidence will not be admitted to prove it not to be intoxicating. Com. v. Anthes, 12 Gray (Mass.) 29.

Sufficient Allegation that the Liquor

Was Intoxicating. — Where an indictment charged a sale without license of "intoxicating liquor, * * * to wit, one pint of ale," Garst v. State, 68 Ind. 101; or of "intoxicating liquors to be drunk," etc., Higgins v. People, 69 Ill. 11; it was held a sufficient averment that the liquor sold was intoxicating. See also Simpson v. State, 17 Ind. 444; Downey v. State, 20 Ind. 37.

Gen. Laws New Hampshire 1878, c. 109, §§ 13, 15, prohibit the sale and keeping for sale of malt liquors, but the prohibition in section 13 is against such as are intoxicating; and an indictment under section 15 must not allege that the liquor is intoxicating, but this must be alleged in an indictment under section 13. State v. Jenkins, 64 N. H. 375.

Insufficient Averments. — It was held in State v. Witt, 39 Ark. 216, that the court did not judicially know that alcohol is an intoxicating beverage, and that "a bare charge of selling alcohol discloses no criminal offense."

Where a statute enacted that it should be unlawful for any one to sell intoxicating liquor, and the title of the act was "an act to prohibit the sale of spirituous liquors," an indictment which charged in general terms a sale of intoxicating liquor, without alleging that they were spirituous liquors, was held not to charge an offense with the requisite certainty. McDuffie v. State, 87 Ga. 687.

Where the allegation was "one pint of liquor," with no further description of the kind of liquor or its qualities, the indictment did not sufficiently charge a sale of intoxicating liquor, Ward v. State, 48 Ind. 293.

1. State v. Jenkins, 64 N. H. 375; State v. Thornton, 63 N. H. 114, upon the principle that "it is sufficient in an indictment to follow the language of the statute when the words of the statute are descriptive of the offense."

2. Com. v. Timothy, 8 Gray (Mass.) 480, where the court said: "If the liquor sold was not in fact intoxicating, still if it was within the liquors enumerated in the first section of the statute

s. AVERMENT AS TO PRICE.—It may be laid down as an almost universal rule, that price need not be stated in an indictment for an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors.¹

t. ALLEGING NAME OF PURCHASER—(1) Necessity of Alleging.—The authorities are nearly equally divided on the question whether the name of the purchaser need be alleged. In many jurisdictions it is held that it is necessary to allege the name of ute, the keeping of it with intent to sell was, by the terms of the statute, to be punished in the same manner as if it was intoxicating. And such an enactment is within the discretion of the legislature to pass."

1. Williams v. State, 89 Ga. 483; State v. Clare, 5 Iowa 509; State v. King, 37 Iowa 462; State v. Muntz, 3 Kan. 384; State v. Ladd, 15 Mo. 430; State v. Fanning, 38 Mo. 359; State v. Rogers, 39 Mo. 432; State v. Pischel, 16 Neb. 608; State v. Hines, 13 R. I. 10; State v. Downer, 21 Wis. 277.

In Indiana the rule that the price must be stated prevailed until lately. See Divine v. State, 4 Ind. 240; State v. Lockstand, 4 Ind. 572; State v. Miles, 4 Ind. 577; Brutton v. State, 4 Ind. 601; Miles v. State, 5 Ind. 215, 239; Snyder v. State, 5 Ind. 194; Segur v. State, 6 Ind. 451; State v. Downs, 7 Ind. 237; Hubbard v. State, 11 Ind. 554; Cool v. State, 16 Ind. 355; State v. Jacks, 54 Ind. 412; Schlicht v. State, 56 Ind. 173. In view of Rev. Stat. 1894, § 1825, which provides that an indictment or information shall not be deemed invalid or be quashed for failing to state the value or price of any matter or thing in any case where the value or price is not of the essence of the offense, the appellate court, in passing on the question in State v. Allen, 12 Ind. App. 528, said: "A sale implies the transfer of the title and possession of property for a money consideration, although time may be given for the payment. * * * Stating the price does not make the idea of a sale more complete and definite. When the defendant is charged with having made a sale, he is bound to know that the transaction was upon a money consideration and for a price. If it should appear on the trial that the transaction was a barter or gift, this would constitute a fatal variance. The time to determine the nature of the transaction is upon the evidence." And in view of the authorities above cited, and of the statute enacted since those decisions were rendered, the court held that the indictment was sufficient on motion to quash for failure to allege the price.

Massachusetts.—In Com. v. O'Leary, 143 Mass. 95, the court said: "It never has been held here that the price at which the liquor was sold * * * must be alleged. There is clearly some limit to the necessity of allegations for the purpose of identifying the offense. It has been said that the offense ought to be so far identified that the defendant may know what charge he has to meet, and may be able afterwards to plead a former conviction or acquittal. * * * The act of the defendant is defined with sufficient certainty by charging him, at a time and place named, with selling, unlawfully, intoxicating liquor to one Jane O'Connell, who was then and there a minor."

Missouri.—In State v. Ladd, 15 Mo. 430, the court said: "The sale of intoxicating liquor, ex vi termini, includes a person to whom it was made, and a price, and I cannot see any reason or necessity for the pleader to insert either in the indictment;" overruling the dictum in Neales v. State, 10 Mo. 498.

Bartering Liquor.—Where an affidavit charged that the defendant unlawfully bartered liquor to a minor for a pool check, it was held on motion to quash that the affidavit was not defective for failure to aver the value of the pool check, or that it was an article of value. Forkner v. State, 95 Ind. 406.

Charging Sale, Barter, and Gift.—An affidavit and information charged that the defendant "did sell, barter, and give away intoxicating liquor," but failed to state what price, if anything, was paid for the liquor, and the court held, on motion to quash the affidavit, that the words charging the sale should be treated as surplusage, and that a gift was sufficiently charged. Eagan v. State, 53 Ind. 162.

As a Means of Identification. — In Nelson v. U. S., 30 Fed. Rep. 113, it was held, in a prosecution for unlawful sales of intoxicating liquors in the district of Alaska, that the name of the purchaser, if known, should be alleged as a means of identifying the transaction, but that an omission to do so was not cause for reversing the judgment.

In Com. v. Lattinville, 120 Mass. 385, it was held that the name of the purchaser should be alleged for the purpose of identifying the transaction, so that the defendant might know what charge he is to meet, and, if necessary, to enable him to plead a judgment therein, as former conviction or acquittal.

Exposing for Sale. — In a prosecution for unlawfully exposing liquors for sale, the complaint and warrant must allege the name of the person to whom the exposure was made, or if his name is unknown, must describe him. State v. Schmail, 25 Minn. 368.

In Missouri it was held that the name of the purchaser need not be alleged in a prosecution for failure to take oath and give bond before selling liquors. State v. Rogers, 39 Mo. 432.

Sufficiency of Allegation.—Where the name of the purchaser is unknown and it is necessary that the indictment should so allege, it is not sufficient to allege that the liquor was sold "to each of various and divers persons." Roberson v. Lambertville, 38 N. J. L. 69.

An objection to a complaint because it charged a sale of intoxicating liquor "to ———" was held to be merely formal and not available after judgment. Green v. Com., 111 Mass. 417; holding that the fact of selling implies that there was a purchaser, and the allegation is equivalent to one that the defendant did sell to a person whose name is unknown.

Where Name of Purchaser Could Have Been Ascertained.—If the name of the purchaser is unknown to the complainant it will be sufficient so to allege, although he might easily have ascertained the name. Com. v. Sherman, 13 Allen (Mass.) 248.

Name Actually Known—Objection Waived.—Where the name of the purchaser was known to the grand jury, but the indictment alleged his name to be unknown, and the case proceeded to trial without preliminary objection, the variance was regarded as of no importance. People v. Bradley, (Supreme Ct.) 11 N. Y. Supp. 594.

Complaint Based on Information from Others.—Where a complaint alleges that the liquor was sold "to a person whose name is to your complainant unknown," it is no defense that, at the time of making the complaint, the complainant's only knowledge of the offense was by information from others. *Com. v. Alleging Sale to Divers Persons.—An indictment charged that the defendant, at a named time and place, "did sell to divers persons a large quantity of ardent spirits, to wit," without setting out the names of the persons to whom the liquors were sold, or that the persons were unknown to the grand jury,

(2) Sufficiency of Allegation. — If the purchaser is known by two or more names he may be described by either or all of them,² and it is no objection to a complaint that the Christian name of the purchaser is represented by initials.³

(3) Sale to Agent. — If the sale be to an agent of an undisclosed principal, it may be alleged in the complaint as a sale to the agent⁴ or to the subsequently disclosed principal;⁵ but if the sale be made to an agent of a principal disclosed at the time of the sale, it must be alleged to have been made to the principal.⁶

u. REPUGNANCY. — Repugnancy between the counts of an indictment will vitiate it.⁷

and the court held the indictment sufficient. State v. Parnell, 16 Ark. 506.

Unnecessary Description — Proof. — While it is not necessary that the name of the purchaser should be alleged, yet if alleged it becomes a part of the description of the offense, and cannot be stricken out and proof made of a sale to another person. Hudson v. State, 73 Miss. 784.

Name of Person Receiving or Carrying Away. — Where a complaint charged the defendant with presuming to be a retailer, etc., and that he sold intoxicating liquor to a named person, it need not allege to whom the liquor was delivered or by whom it was carried away. Com. v. Wilcox 1 Cush. (Mass.) 503.

In State v. Wingfield, 115 Mo. 428, the court said: "There has been much confusion in the appellate courts of this state. But the law is now quite well settled that in an indictment for the unlawful sale of liquor it is sufficient to charge a sale, simply, without stating to whom sold, or that such person was to the grand jurors unknown."

To charge that the persons to whom the liquors were sold were "to the grand jury unknown," would add nothing to the definiteness of the charge, nor enable the defendant more readily to prepare his defense. Com. v. Schoenhut, 3 Phila. (Pa.) 20.

3. State v. Cameron, 86 Me. 196, where the indictment charged an unlawful sale by the defendant "to one S. A. Willets." The defendant demurred generally and assigned the ground that the indictment did not allege sufficiently the name of the person to whom the sale was made. The court said: "It does not appear, and cannot be assumed, that he has any other or any more of a name. Letters of the alphabet, consonants as well as vowels, may be names sufficient to distinguish different persons of the same surname."

Reference to Name by the Word "Said." — In a complaint wherein "Alice Langley, of New Bedford," charged the defendant with an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors "to said Alice," the court held that the person to whom the sale was made was sufficiently alleged. Com. v. Melling, 14 Gray (Mass.) 388.

Sale to Either Agent or Principal. — Where it appeared that the liquor was sold to one who was acting as the agent of another, but whose agency was not disclosed, nor was the principal disclosed at the time of the sale, the court said: "We think the government may, in an indictment describing such sale, allege it in either form; as a sale to the agent, or to the afterwards disclosed principal." Com. v. McGuire, 11 Gray (Mass.) 460; and to the same effect see State v. Wentworth, 35 N. H. 442.

v. VARIANCE — (1) Proof of Different Offense, Generally. — If the proof shows a different offense from that alleged in the indictment, the variance will be fatal.¹

(2) As to Act of Selling. — An allegation of a sale will not be supported by proof of a gift² or barter,³ but is sustained by proof of a sale on credit.⁴ A charge of selling without a license is not proved by showing a selling in violation of a license.⁵ Nor will a charge of selling at retail authorize a conviction for keeping a tippling house⁶ or for selling at wholesale in violation of a different statute.⁷

(3) As to Kind of Liquor Sold. — An allegation of a sale of intoxicating liquor will be sustained by proof of a sale of gin,⁸ whiskey,⁹ brandy,¹⁰ or of any other kind of intoxicating liquor;¹¹

a violation of a system of law which authorized a sale of intoxicating liquors if the proper license had been obtained therefor, but the third count charged the violation of a system of law which prohibited any sale of intoxicating liquors in a part of the territory covered by the allegations in the first two counts. It was held that as the two sets of counts were irreconcilably repugnant the indictment was insufficient, because it could not be known upon which system the state relied as being in force in the territory covered by the third count. Butler v. State, 25 Fla. 347.

5. People v. Buffum, 27 Hun (N. Y.) 216, holding that an allegation of an unlawful sale without license is not sustained by proof of selling to be drunk on the premises where sold, in violation of a dram-shop license.

In State v. Quinn, 25 Mo. App. 102, it was held that an indictment charging a sale without license is not supported by proof merely that such liquors were drunk on the premises at the defendant's invitation.

Where an indictment charges a person with selling spirituous liquor in less quantities than five gallons at a time without license, he cannot be convicted by proof showing a sale in violation of a storekeeper's license. Huffstater v. People, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 23.

Contra. — In Alabama it was held that on an indictment charging a sale without license, and contrary to law, the accused might be convicted of selling to a person of known intemperate habits, by virtue of a section of the code which provided that the accused might be called on to answer any violation of the law for unlawfully retailing, the indictment being in conformity with the provisions of that section. Elam v. State, 25 Ala. 53.

6. Robinson v. Com., 6 Dana (Ky.) 287.

7. McPherson v. State, 54 Ala. 221.

8. Com. v. Peckham, 2 Gray (Mass.) 514, and without proof that gin is intoxicating.

9. Com. v. Morgan, 149 Mass. 314.

10. Com. v. Odlin, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 275.

Proof of Sale of Beer will support an indictment charging a sale of intoxicating liquor. Pancake v. State, 81 Ind. 93.

But in Josephdaffer v. State, 32 Ind. 402; Weis v. State, 33 Ind. 204, it was held that such proof will not be suffi-and proof of a sale of mixed liquor, part of which is spirituous, will sustain a charge of selling spirituous liquor.¹ But an indictment charging an unlawful sale of a particular kind of intoxicating liquor cannot be supported by proof of a sale of a different kind.²

(4) As to Quantity of Liquor Sold. — In a prosecution for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors without a license, the quantity of liquor sold need not be proved precisely as charged in the indictment.³

cient without proof that the beer was intoxicating.

Where the indictment charges a sale of "lager beer," and the proof is of a sale of "beer," it will be inferred that the liquor proven is of the quality which the statute declares to be intoxicating, and it will not be deemed a variance. Dant v. State, 106 Ind. 79. See also State v. Heinze, 45 Mo. App. 403.

Where an indictment charges the carrying on of a business of dealing in spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors without a license, evidence of a sale of beer will not be sufficient unless it is shown that the beer sold was malt beer. Netso v. State, 24 Fla. 363.

Medicated Bitters. — So if an indictment charges a sale of intoxicating liquors, it is supported by proof of the sale of medicated bitters capable of producing intoxication. Prinzel v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 274.

1. Com. v. White, 10 Met. (Mass.) 14, where the liquor sold was brandy or gin mixed with sugar and water.

Common Cordial. — If an indictment charges a sale of spirituous liquor, it will be sustained by proof of a sale of common cordial. State v. Bennet, 3 Harr. (Del.) 565.

Intoxicating But Not Spirituous. — But an indictment charging a sale of "spirituous and intoxicating liquors" is not supported by proof of a sale of intoxicating liquors only which are not shown to be spirituous liquors. Com. v. Livermore, 4 Gray (Mass.) 18.

2. State v. Hesner, 55 Iowa 494, where a sale of whiskey was charged. See also Lincoln Center v. Linker, 5 Kan. App. 242; State v. Brown, 51 Conn. 1; Com. v. Morgan, 149 Mass. 314, where the court said: "It may be assumed that if the complaint had charged the defendant with selling intoxicating liquor, to wit, gin, it could not be supported by proof of a sale of whiskey, because the two are different kinds of intoxicating liquor, and a specification intended to restrict the meaning of general words in the description of a criminal act cannot be rejected as surplusage." But compare Bruguier v. U. S., 1 Dakota 5, holding that where an indictment charges a selling "of spirituous and intoxicating liquors, to wit, one pint of whiskey," the word "whiskey" not being used in the statute, proof of selling spirituous liquor will sustain the charge in the indictment; Frisbie v. State, 1 Oregon 248, where the court said: "We think the proof of any kind, and any quantity less than one quart, of spirituous liquors would have supported this indictment. * * * The allegation of the kind of liquor is placed under a videlicet. This would have excused the state from strict proof, unless such matter became essentially descriptive of the offense."

3. Com. v. Dillane, 11 Gray (Mass.) 67; State v. Tisdale, 54 Minn. 105; State v. Cooper, 16 Mo. 551; Brock v. Com., 6 Leigh (Va.) 634.

Series of Sales to One for Others. — In a prosecution for retailing without a license the indictment charged that the defendant unlawfully sold "one gill and no more" of intoxicating liquor, etc., and that the liquor sold was a quantity less than a quart. The court held that the indictment was sustained by proof that the defendant sold the liquor mentioned to one person for several persons, who drank it in glasses holding a pint each, where several gallons were thus drunk and paid for by the purchaser, and that it sufficiently showed a series of sales in quantities less than a quart at a time. Klein v. State, 76 Ind. 333.

When Quantity Is Material. — An indictment as drawn under the Missouri Groceries and Dram-shops Act of 1845 charged the defendant with selling one quart of liquor, to be drunk at the place of sale, without a license, and it

(5) As to Place. — Where place is a material allegation it must be proved as alleged, or the variance will be fatal.¹

(6) As to Name of Purchaser — In General. — An allegation of the sale of liquors to one is not supported by proof of sale to another;² nor a charge of a sale to an unknown person, by proof of a sale to one known to complainant at the time he made the complaint.³ But proof of a sale to either of two named pur-was held that the charge was against the defendant as a grocer. The court further held that such indictment could not be sustained by proof of selling a half pint of liquor without license, as the offense proved was an entirely different one from that charged. Under the act above mentioned a grocer could not lawfully sell in a quantity less than a quart, nor suffer the same to be drunk at the place of sale, while a dram-shop keeper with a license therefor might sell any quantity less than ten gallons and suffer it to be drunk at the place of sale. State v. Weiss, 21 Mo. 493.

1. Bryant v. State, 62 Ark. 459.

An indictment charging the defendant with the offense of selling intoxicating liquors without a license, to be drunk in or about his house, etc., was not supported by proof of a sale from an open wagon, in a public highway, in a county different from that in which the defendant lived and carried on the business. Schilling v. State, 116 Ind. 200.

And an allegation that the defendant unlawfully retailed spirituous liquor without a license, in the county of W., will not be supported by proof that the selling was on a wharfbat in the city of V. Botto v. State, 26 Miss. 108.

Place as Affecting Disposition of Fine. — In Mississippi a defendant was indicted for selling intoxicating liquor in less quantities than one gallon within the city of Vicksburg, without a license therefor, and it was proved that he sold the liquor at a place four miles from the city. The court held that under the statute of 1842, which appropriated all money accruing from the granting of licenses to retail, and from fines for a violation of the statute committed within the city of Vicksburg, to such city, the particular place where the offense was alleged to have been committed became a fact and circumstance constituting the offense, and it was incumbent on the state to prove it as charged in the indictment. Legori v. State, 8 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 697.

Local Description. — An indictment alleged that an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor was made at the grocery of M., in the township of A., and the only proof was of a sale in the township of G., and it was held that the variance between the allegation and the proof was fatal. The name of the place having been mentioned, not as a matter of venue, but of local description, it became necessary to prove it as laid, although it was not necessary to state it. Moore v. State, 12 Ohio St. 387.

2. Com. v. Blood, 4 Gray (Mass.) 31; State v. Hays, 36 Mo. 80.

Name Acquired by Reputation. — Where the indictment charged the sale of liquor to "John Brown," and the evidence showed that such was not his true name, but that he was formerly a slave of a man named Brown, and had since been known by that name, it was held to be no variance. Henry v. State, 113 Ind. 304.

Undisclosed Agency. — An allegation of a sale to a certain person is supported by proof that such person, when he made the purchase, was acting for another, if the agency was not disclosed. Com. v. Gormley, 133 Mass. 580.

New Surname Acquired by Marriage. — An indictment charged an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor to "a certain person whose name is Mary Garland." Upon this indictment the defendant was convicted. The proof showed that, since the alleged sale the said Mary Garland had been married, and that, at the time of finding the indictment, her name was Mary Morrison. The court held that the indictment described the person to whom the sale was made by her name at the time when the indictment was found, and that the conviction could not be supported. Com. v. Brown, 2 Gray (Mass.) 358.

3. Moore v. State, 79 Ga. 498. See also Blodget v. State, 3 Ind. 403. Contra, Hulstead v. Com., 5 Leigh (Va.) 724, holding that where the indictment alleges the name of the purchaser to be unknown, proof that the name was chasers,¹ or proof of a middle name where none is charged, will not constitute a fatal variance.²

Idem Sonans — Where an allegation and the proof as to the name of the purchaser do not come within the rule of idem sonans, it will be a fatal variance.³

(7) As to Sale to or by Agent — Sale to Agent of Undisclosed Principal. — A charge of an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor to a named known to the grand jury is not a material variance, for the reason that it was not necessary to make any allegation as to the purchaser, and the allegation may be rejected as surplusage. State v. Ladd, 15 Mo. 430, to the same point. See also Com. v. Luddy, 143 Mass. 563, where a complaint charged the sale to a person whose name was unknown to the complainant, and the court held that it was not necessary for the state to prove that the name of the alleged purchaser was in fact unknown to the complainant.

An allegation that the liquor was sold "to a certain person whose name is unknown to the complainant," is supported by evidence of a sale to a person whose name was known to the complainant, if the complainant, at the time of making the complaint, did not know that the sale was to that person. Com. v. Hendrie, 2 Gray (Mass.) 503, holding that it was "a question of tense, grammatically speaking."

An indictment charging the name of the purchaser to be unknown to the grand jury is supported by testimony of a person who swears that the defendant sold liquor to him, unless it appears from the evidence that the grand jury knew that the witness was the unknown purchaser referred to in the indictment. Hays v. State, 13 Mo. 246; State v. Bryant, 14 Mo. 340.

1. Hall v. State, 87 Ga. 233. Contra, Tyler v. State, 69 Miss. 395, where an indictment charged an unlawful sale of intoxicating liquor to R. and B. The proof was that the sale was to B. only. It was held that the variance was fatal, and that although the allegation of a sale to any particular person was unnecessary, yet having been made, it was descriptive of the offense charged, and must be proved as laid.

An information charging a sale of intoxicating liquor to A and to "divers other persons whose names were to the affiant unknown," is sustained by proof showing a sale to other parties, but none to A. State v. Wolff, 46 Mo. 584.

So a charge that the liquor was sold "to certain persons whose names are unknown," if not objected to on the trial for multiplicity, will be supported by proof of a sale to one unknown person. Com. v. Early, 161 Mass. 186.

Diminutive Name. — An indictment charged a sale of liquor to "Jack Murphy," and the proof showed that his true name was "John Murphy." The court held the variance not material, and said: "The rule fairly deducible from the authorities is that if two names are taken promiscuously to be the same name in common use, though they differ in sound, there is no variance between them. Where two names are derived from the same source, or where one is an abbreviation or corruption of the other, but both are taken by common use to be the same, though differing in sound, the use of the one for the other is not a misnomer. * * * Jack and Jock are ordinarily only diminutive names for John, and Jack, prima facie at least, stands for John." Walter v. State, 105 Ind. 589.

2. State v. Feney, 13 R. I. 623.

In Com. v. Gormley, 133 Mass. 580, where the purchaser was charged as Thomas Casey, it was held that he might be convicted by proof of a sale to Thomas F. Casey, provided he was as well known by the one name as by the other.

Where Middle Initial is Alleged. — A complaint charged a sale of intoxicating liquor to George E. Allen, and the proof disclosed a sale to George Allen. The court held that the variance was fatal, where there was no evidence that the names were applied to the same person. Com. v. Shearman, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 546.

3. An indictment charged an unlawful sale to have been made to one "Hairholtser," and the court held that it was not supported by proof of a sale to one "Hairholts." Mitchell v. State, 63 Ind. 276, 574.

person is supported by proof that such person was acting as an agent of an undisclosed principal in making the purchase.¹

Sale by Agent.—An indictment charging the defendant with unlawfully selling intoxicating liquor will be supported by proof that it was sold by the defendant's agent,² or that the defendant was an agent.³

(8) As to Local Option District.—An allegation that the offense was committed in a local option district is not supported by proof that the defendant sold the liquors in the county without proof identifying the district.⁴

(9) As to Purpose of Sale.—An indictment charging a sale for other than scientific, medical, or mechanical purposes is not supported by proof of selling intoxicating liquor for medical, scientific, or mechanical purposes in an irregular manner.⁵

(10) As to Joint and Separate Sales.—If an indictment charges a joint sale by two or more persons, it will not be supported by proof of a separate sale by each.⁶ So a charge of a sale to a named person is not supported by proof of a joint sale to two persons.⁷

(11) As to Sale to Minor.—An indictment for unlawfully selling to a minor will not be supported by proof which does not show that the sale was made with the knowledge and consent of the defendant;⁸ and to support the indictment, where a gift to a minor is charged, the proof must show that the alleged gift was to the person named, and that he was a minor.⁹

1. Com. v. Kimball, 7 Met. (Mass.) 308; Com. v. Fowler, 145 Mass. 398.

Where an indictment charges a sale to have been to a named person, it will be supported by proof that the sale was made to him through his servant or messenger, and the indictment need not mention such servants by name or otherwise. Hall v. State, 87 Ga. 233.

2. State v. Curtiss, (Conn. 1897) 36 Atl. Rep. 1014; Com. v. Park, 1 Gray (Mass.) 553; Parker v. State, 4 Ohio St. 565.

A Charge of a Sale to a Minor will be supported by proof that the sale was made by the defendant's agent. State v. McCance, 110 Mo. 398.

Sale by Agent Against Orders.—But the principal cannot be convicted by proof of a sale by agent where the sale was made against the express orders, and in the absence, of the principal. Wadsworth v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 584.

3. A complaint charging the defendant with unlawfully selling liquor on the Lord's day, without license, will be supported by proof that the defendant was an agent or barkeeper of the licensee of the premises where the sale was made, and was authorized to make the sale. Com. v. Hoyer, 125 Mass. 209.

4. Morgan v. Com., 90 Va. 80.

6. Farrell v. State, 3 Ind. 573.

7. Brown v. State, 48 Ind. 38.

8. Ihrig v. State, 40 Ind. 422.

Proof of Sale to Minor for Use of Adult.—A complaint charging a sale of liquor to a minor is supported by proof that the sale was made to a minor for the use of an adult, even where the fact that it was for such adult was disclosed at the time of the sale. Com. v. O'Leary, 143 Mass. 95.

9. An indictment charged an unlawful giving of intoxicating liquor to "Edward Gresh," a minor, and it was shown by the evidence that the liquor was given to "Gresh," and that "Gresh" was nineteen years old. The court held that the evidence did not show that the liquor was given to the person named in the indictment and did not sufficiently show that such person was a minor. Meyer v. State, 50 Ind. 18. See Dolke v. State, 99 Ind. 229.

2. Averments Peculiar to Particular Offenses — a. RETAILING WITHOUT LICENSE. — An indictment for unlawfully retailing need not allege that the liquor was sold to be drunk on the defendant's premises,¹ nor that the liquor sold might have been used as a beverage,² nor that it was delivered and carried away all at one time,³ but should charge that the accused did engage in and carry on the business for which a license was required, where that fact is essential to constitute the offense.⁴ An indictment charging a retailing of liquor without license in a county where no license could be granted is insufficient,⁵ and an indictment against a retailer for selling without obtaining a license from the parish, need not affirmatively show that the parish had a right to issue a license.⁶

b. UNLAWFULLY SELLING AT PROHIBITED TIME — (1) On Prohibited Day — Sale on Sunday. — In charging an unlawful sale on Sunday the facts necessary to constitute the offense under the particular statute should be averred; as, for instance, that the defendant was a liquor dealer,⁷ or dram-shop keeper,⁸ or that the liquor was sold to be drunk on the premises where sold,⁹ or that it was to be drunk as a beverage,¹⁰ or that it was sold

1. Clark v. State, 34 Ind. 436.

If an indictment contains an allegation that the liquor was to be drunk in the house, out-house, stable, yard, and garden, where sold, it will not invalidate the indictment, but may have the effect of enlarging the proof to be made by the state. Leary v. State, 39 Ind. 360.

Not to Be Drunk Where Sold. — If the words "not to be drunk where sold" are not in the statute, such allegation need not be made in the indictment. Com. v. Young, 15 Gratt. (Va.) 664.

2. State v. Carpenter, 20 Ind. 219.

3. Com. v. Leonard, 8 Met. (Mass.) 530.

In Indiana, in a prosecution for retailing without license, charging a sale of a less quantity than a quart at a time, the indictment need not allege that the sale was made at one time. Mullen v. State, 96 Ind. 304.

4. Ulmer v. State, 61 Ala. 208.

5. Cost v. State, 96 Ala. 60.

6. State v. Kuhn, 24 La. Ann. 474.

7. Under Texas Penal Code, art. 186, providing that if any "dealer in merchandise" shall barter or sell the same on Sunday, he shall be punished, etc., the defendant may be convicted of unlawfully selling "on Sunday * * * to certain persons to affiant unknown, certain drinks of whiskey, said A. being then and there a liquor dealer," on the theory that liquor is an article of merchandise within the meaning of the statute. Day v. State, 21 Tex. App. 213. See Archer v. State, 10 Tex. App. 482.

8. In Missouri it is held that an indictment charging an unlawful sale on Sunday is insufficient if it does not allege that the defendant was a dram-shop keeper. State v. Lisles, 58 Mo. 359. See also Archer v. State, 10 Tex. App. 482.

9. Morris v. State, 47 Ind. 503.

10. Morel v. State, 89 Ind. 275; Allman v. State, 69 Ind. 387; Dowdell v. State, 58 Ind. 333.

Where a sale of liquor which is ordinarily drunk as a beverage is shown to have been made on Sunday, if the defendant claims that it was not sold to be drunk as a beverage, that is matter of defense. Morel v. State, 89 Ind. 275.

Judicial Notice. — So where liquor is sold in a saloon on Sunday in the ordinary manner, and nothing is said at the time of the sale as to what the liquor is to be used for, it will be a prima facie case of a sale of liquor to be used as a beverage, for the courts take judicial notice that liquor is sold in saloons to be drunk as a beverage. Zapf v. State, 11 Ind. App. 360.

without a prescription from a regular practicing physician,¹ as the case may be. In charging a sale on Sunday, it is not necessary to aver that the liquor was sold in a house kept for retailing.²

Sale on Legal Holiday. — An indictment for unlawfully selling on a legal holiday must charge that the sale was made on some one of the days mentioned in the statute,³ but it is not necessary to charge that the liquor was sold to be drunk as a beverage.⁴

Sale or Gift on Election Day. — In charging an unlawful sale or gift on election day it has been held that the indictment must show the purpose for which the election was held,⁵ and that the election was held,⁶ but it is not necessary to state the facts constituting the person to whom the unlawful sale or gift is alleged to have been made, a qualified voter,⁷ nor to allege any special criminal intent.⁸

(2) At Prohibited Hour. — In charging a sale at a prohibited hour, it was held necessary under an Indiana statute to charge that the liquors were sold to be drunk on the premises where sold,⁹ but that it need not be alleged that the defendant had a permit or license.¹⁰

c. UNLAWFUL SALE TO MINOR — Necessary Allegations. — In a prosecution for unlawfully selling liquor to a minor, the fact of minority must be averred,¹¹ and the consent of the parent,

1. Clerical Error. — Under the statute forbidding a sale on Sunday, "unless the person to whom the same is sold * * * shall have first procured a written prescription therefor from some regular practicing physician of the county where the same is so sold," it is not a fatal error to omit the word "therefor" in negating a prescription from a physician. Shepler v. State, 114 Ind. 194.

2. Burchard v. State, 2 Oregon 78, construing the Oregon statute.

3. Shepler v. State, 114 Ind. 194.

4. Herron v. State, (Ind. App. 1897) 46 N. E. Rep. 540.

5. Borches v. State, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 96, holding an indictment sufficient which alleged the gift of liquor on a certain day, such day "being an election day in which an election was then and there being held, under and by lawful authority, for the purpose of voting for presidential electors, congressmen, state, district, county, and precinct officers, the same being a general election."

6. State v. Irvine, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 155, holding, however, that an indictment which charges that the unlawful sale was made on election day sufficiently charges that the election was held on the day alleged, without any further averment.

7. State v. Pearis, 35 W. Va. 320.

8. State v. Pearis, 35 W. Va. 320, holding that it is sufficient to charge generally a criminal intent, or scienter, that the defendants knowingly and wilfully did the unlawful act.

9. Layton v. State, 49 Ind. 229.

10. Crone v. State, 49 Ind. 538.

11. Com. v. Fowler, 145 Mass. 398.

Sufficient Allegation of Minority. —

Where an indictment charging a sale of liquor to a minor alleged that the sale was unlawfully made to A B, "a minor," it sufficiently alleged the minority of the person to whom the sale was made. Waller v. State, 38 Ark. 656, holding that it is sufficient in an indictment for such an offense if the charge be that the person to whom the liquor was sold was a "minor," without further allegation as to age. See also State v. Boncher, 59 Wis. 477.

Selling to White Minor. — Under a statute which provided against the selling of liquor "to any white person under the age of twenty-one years," it was held necessary to allege that the minor to whom the liquor was sold was guardian, or person having the management and control of the minor, where such consent is required by statute, must be negated.¹ An indictment charging the defendant with furnishing liquor to a minor, without alleging a sale of the same, or that it was to be drunk by the minor, is insufficient.²

Unnecessary Allegations.—In charging a sale of liquor to a minor it is not necessary to allege that the accused had or had not a license to sell liquors,³ nor that the defendant's occupation was one of those named in the statute, to wit, saloon keeper, etc.;⁴ nor is it necessary to allege a delivery of the liquor to the minor, or aver for whose use the liquor was purchased.⁵ And in charga white person. Com. v. Ewing, 7 Bush (Ky.) 105, on the ground that the indictment did not contain a sufficient "statement of the facts constituting the offense" as required by the Criminal Code.

"Father" Not Equivalent to "Parent."—Where an indictment in negating consent uses the word "father" instead of "parent," it is not sufficient, for the word "father" or "mother" is not equivalent to the word "parent." In negating consent it is the better practice to follow the form of the statute defining the offense, or if other words are used, the words substituted should be equivalent to the statutory term, or be of a more comprehensive signification. Lantzner v. State, 19 Tex. App. 320; Newman v. State, 63 Ga. 533.

Failure to Negative Consent of Guardian.—Where an indictment charging an unlawful sale of liquor to a minor alleged that it was made without his parent's consent in writing, but failed to negative the consent of his guardian, it was held that consent was not sufficiently negated, where it was not alleged that the minor had a parent and not a guardian. State v. Emerick, 35 Ark. 324; State v. Shoemaker, 4 Ind. 100.

Omission of Word "Master."—An indictment charging a sale of liquor to a minor was held sufficient on demurrer though it omitted the word "master," as used in the statute, after the word "guardian," in charging the want of consent. Weed v. State, 55 Ala. 13, overruling Bryan v. State, 45 Ala. 86.

Written "Request" in Addition to "Consent."—In Kentucky, under the Act of March 2, 1860, which prohibited the sale of liquors to white minors "without the written consent or request" of the father, mother, etc., an indictment was held insufficient which charged the defendant with selling without "the written consent and request" of the father, mother, or guardian. Com. v. Hadcraft, 6 Bush (Ky.) 91.

1. Freiberg v. State, 94 Ala. 91; Page v. State, 84 Ala. 446.

Written Order of Parent or Guardian.—Where the statute makes it unlawful for any person, licensed or unlicensed, to sell, barter, or give away within certain limits spirituous or fermented liquors in any quantity, to any person under the age of twenty-one years, without the written order of the parent or guardian of such minor, consent is sufficiently negated if the indictment charged the defendant with giving liquor to a minor "without the written order of the parents and guardian" of such minor. Parkinson v. State, 14 Md. 184.

Written Prescription of Physician.—Where the statute makes it an offense to sell liquor to a minor without the written prescription of a physician, it will not invalidate the indictment if it charges that the sale was made without the written prescription of a "licensed physician." Dean v. State, 100 Ala. 102.

That Minor Had Parents or Guardian.—In charging a sale of liquor to a minor it is not necessary to allege that the minor had parents or a guardian, for if he had neither parents nor guardian no consent could be procured, and a legal sale could not be made to such minor. Waller v. State, 38 Ark. 656.

3. Meyer v. State, 50 Ind. 18; State v. Hamilton, 75 Ind. 238; Johnson v. State, 74 Ind. 197; Com. v. O'Brien, 134 Mass. 198.

ing a barter of liquor to a minor it is not necessary to allege the value of the thing bartered, nor that it had any value.¹

d. SELLING LIQUOR TO BE DRUNK ON THE PREMISES. — In charging a sale of liquor to be drunk on the premises where sold it must be alleged that the sale was by retail,² and that it was the intention of the seller that the liquor should be drunk on the premises where sold.³

e. SALE WITHOUT HAVING PAID SPECIAL TAX OR POSTED RECEIPT. — In charging a sale of liquor without having paid the special tax, the indictment must allege that the defendant was a liquor dealer, and specify the particular taxes which were not paid.⁴

f. SALE TO HABITUAL DRUNKARD — Averment as to Habit. — In charging a sale to an habitual drunkard it must be averred that the person to whom the liquor was sold was, at the time of the alleged sale, in the habit of getting intoxicated.⁵

1. Forkner v. State, 95 Ind. 406.

2. Boyle v. Com., 14 Gratt. (Va.) 674, where, however, the statute made it an offense so to sell "by retail."

Suffering and Permitting to Be Drunk, etc. — The Place. — It is not sufficient to allege that the sale was made and that the defendant suffered and permitted the liquor to be drunk in and about the house where sold, under a statute providing against the selling of liquor to be drunk in and about the premises of the seller. Blough v. State, 121 Ind. 355.

The Act. — Under a statute making it an offense to sell "to be drunk" in and about certain premises, an indictment is insufficient which alleges only that the defendant did "suffer and permit" the liquor so to be drunk, the gist of the offense being the selling. Vanderwood v. State, 50 Ind. 26, 295.

4. State v. Martin, 34 Ark. 340.

The indictment need not allege specific sales or gifts, but it will be sufficient to charge that the accused was engaged in the business of selling and offering for sale intoxicating liquor. People v. Breidenstein, 65 Mich. 65. See People v. Wade, 101 Mich. 89.

Where an information charged, in the language of the statute, that the defendant engaged in the business, "not being then and there a druggist who sells," etc., it was held sufficient although it omitted the words "in strict compliance with law" after the clause first quoted. People v. Gault, 104 Mich. 575. See also People v. Telford, 56 Mich. 541, which was a prosecution for failing to post receipt.

Selling Without Paying Tax and Posting Receipt. — If an information charges the accused, in the language of the statute, with being engaged in the business of selling intoxicating liquors without having first paid the county treasurer the annual tax, and without posting the notice of the tax receipt in the place where the liquors were sold, he not being a druggist, it is sufficient. People v. Paquin, 74 Mich. 34.

Rate of Taxation. — Where the indictment alleged that the occupation of selling liquor was one taxed by law, that the defendant was indebted to the state in the sum of three hundred dollars occupation tax for pursuing such business, and that he was pursuing such occupation at a named time, it sufficiently alleged that that rate of taxation was in existence at the time named. Monford v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 237.

5. Zeiger v. State, 47 Ind. 129.

It Is Not Enough to Aver Generally that the person to whom the liquor was sold was in the habit of getting intoxicated. Wiedemann v. People, 92 Ill. 314.

Gift. — An indictment charged that the defendant gave away to a named person a certain quantity of liquor, the donee being a person in the habit of becoming intoxicated, and it was held that it was sufficiently averred that the gift was to a person in the habit of be-

Averment as to Notice. — The indictment must also aver that the defendant was notified or warned as provided by statute.¹

Occupation of Defendant. — The indictment should also allege that the defendant was a tavern keeper, merchant, distiller, etc., as the case may be.²

§. VIOLATION OF LOCAL OPTION LAW. — In some jurisdictions the statute provides a general form of indictment which it declares shall be sufficient for an offense of retailing without license, and also for violation of any special local laws;³ and in coming intoxicated at the time of the alleged gift. Dolan v. State, 122 Ind. 147.

1. Thus in Indiana it must be averred that the defendant was notified by a citizen of the township of the habit of the person to whom the liquor was given or sold. Werneke v. State, 50 Ind. 22; Miller v. State, 107 Ind. 152; Dolan v. State, 122 Ind. 147. And if the indictment simply charges a sale to a person who was in the habit of becoming intoxicated, without any averment as to notice, it is insufficient. Geraghty v. State, 110 Ind. 103.

If an information simply charges that the wife of a citizen of the township gave the defendant notice of the habit of the person to whom the alleged sale was made, it is not a sufficient averment as to notice. To be sufficient the indictment should also aver that the wife was a citizen of the township. Engle v. State, 97 Ind. 122. An affidavit on information, charging that the employee of a saloon keeper sold intoxicating liquor to a person in the habit of getting intoxicated, after notice in writing had been served upon the proprietor by a citizen of the township that the person to whom the liquor was sold was in the habit of becoming intoxicated, and that the notice was left in and at the saloon, is not a sufficient averment as to notice. It should be averred that the notice was served on the defendant, and it would then become a question of proof whether serving the notice on the proprietor and leaving a copy thereof in the saloon was sufficient notice to the employee. State v. Smith, 122 Ind. 178.

Averment as to Residence. — And it must appear from the indictment that the residence of the person giving the notice and the residence of the person to whom the liquor was sold were in the same township at the time the notice was given. Geraghty v. State, 110 Ind. 103.

2. State v. Heitsch, 29 Minn. 134.

3. Cost v. State, 96 Ala. 60; Olmstead v. State, 89 Ala. 16; Bogan v. State, 84 Ala. 449; Sills v. State, 76 Ala. 92.

Indictment Based on General Law. — Where it is apparent that the indictment is adapted to the general law, and not to the local option law in the county in which the indictment is found, and the grand jury finds the bill to be true, and that the offense was committed "contrary to the laws of said state," the indictment must be deemed to be for a violation of the general law and not of the local option law of such county. Patton v. State, 80 Ga. 714.

Giving Away Liquor. — In Alabama the general form of indictment prescribed by statute is sufficient to cover a sale in violation of any special or local law regulating or prohibiting the sale of spirituous and vinous liquor, yet it is not sufficient for the offense of giving away such liquors, although the gift is provided against in the special statute. Williams v. State, 91 Ala. 14.

Particular Part of County. — In Alabama the general statute provides against sales of spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, while the local law which applies to certain parts of the county only prohibits the sale, gift, or other disposition of such liquors or "intoxicating bitters." An indictment charging that the defendant "did sell, give away, or otherwise dispose of spirituous, vinous, or malt liquors, intoxicating bitters, or intoxicating drinks, without a license, and contrary to law," mentioning no particular part of the county, was held insufficient as charging no offense. Roberson v. State, 100 Ala. 123.

Charge of Selling Without License in a Local Option District. — In Minnesota, where a town had voted against licensing in pursuance of Gen. Stat. 1878, c. 16, § 1, it was held that a person might some states the adoption of the special law suspends the operation of the general law in the local option district, and an indictment will lie only for a violation of the special law.¹

Allegation as to Adoption of Local Option Law.—In most jurisdictions the indictment must show that the local option law has been adopted in the district where the sale is alleged to have been made, and a general allegation to that effect is usually sufficient,² be prosecuted for violation of section 4 for selling in the town without license, the vote of the town not affecting the offense described by the latter section. State v. Funk, 27 Minn. 318.

Sale After Vote Against License.—If the sale was in a territory where no license could under any circumstances be obtained, the indictment should charge the offense as selling after a vote against license, and not as selling without license. State v. Hanley, 25 Minn. 429. Compare Hodgman v. People, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 235.

In Michigan a written complaint for a violation of the local option law is not necessary, but if it is reduced to writing it will be sufficient, unless it precludes the inference that a valid oral complaint was made; and generally, where no form of written complaint is taken, the complaint amounts to little if any more than an information to the justice that, in the opinion of the party complaining, an offense has been committed; and taken in conjunction with his subsequent statements made upon oath in relation to the details thereof, it may be presumed that such complaint is rarely so complete as to contain all the statements necessary to prove the offense, but it must be supplemented by others. People v. Bennett, (Mich. 1895) 65 N. W. Rep. 280; People v. Berry, (Mich. 1895) 65 N. W. Rep. 98.

1. Norton v. State, 65 Miss. 297.

In Virginia it was held that one may be prosecuted under the general law for selling without license, notwithstanding the adoption of the special law. Webster v. Com., 89 Va. 154.

2. In Florida the facts and circumstances sufficient to show that such election was held in pursuance of the provisions of the statute are necessary, and if the indictment fails so to charge, it is fatally defective. Cook v. State, 25 Fla. 698, holding also that where an indictment charged that an election held in a named county was held "in the manner prescribed by law," the allegation meant that the election was conducted under the general election law, but that it did not show or tend to show that the election was held pursuant to the provisions of the local option law. Compare Butler v. State, 25 Fla. 347.

In Michigan, where an information charged selling of fermented cider contrary to the provisions of a resolution adopted by the board of supervisors of the county, pursuant to the provisions of the local option law, it was held that it sufficiently charged that the law had been made and was in operation in such county at the time of the sale. People v. Adams, 95 Mich. 541.

In Missouri the indictment need not recite in detail the manner in which the law was adopted, but it will be sufficiently pleaded if it states that the local option law had been duly adopted, and was in force at the time and place of the sale. State v. Searcy, 46 Mo. App. 421; State v. Watts, 39 Mo. App. 409; State v. Searcy, 111 Mo. 236; State v. Dugan, 110 Mo. 138.

In Mississippi, under Acts 1886, p. 35, which is known as the local option law, the verified report of the election commissioners is the sole evidence of the result of the election, and under such act an indictment for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors which avers that the report of a result "against the sale," verified by affidavit, was returned and spread on the minutes of the board of supervisors, but does not allege that the commissioners of election had determined and reported to the board that a majority of the votes cast were against the sale of liquor, is fatally defective. McDonald v. State, 68 Miss. 728. And under the foregoing statute the indictment must allege that an election was held in such county, and the result thereof and such fact must be proven on the trial before there can be a conviction. Norton v. State, 65 Miss. 297.

In North Carolina the indictment under the local option law must allege while in others such allegation is dispensed with, the court taking judicial notice of the adoption of the law.¹ The indictment should charge that the act was contrary to law.²

Division of District.—If a part of the local option district be cut off and formed into another district, without changing the name of the old district, it is not necessary, in a prosecution for an offense committed in the old district, for the indictment to state that the offense was not committed in that part of the district cut off.³

that the election adopting such law had been held. State v. Chambers, 93 N. Car. 600.

In Texas an indictment for violation of the local option law need not allege that the petition for election was signed by the statutory number of qualified voters. Gaines v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1897) 38 S. W. Rep. 774. But it should allege that the election adopting the provisions of such law was held in accordance with the laws of the state within the district where the offense is charged to have been committed, and that the result of such election was declared by the commissioners' court. Stewart v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 392; Hall v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1897) 39 S. W. Rep. 117; Williams v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1897) 39 S. W. Rep. 664; McMillan v. State, 18 Tex. App. 375. And also, that publication was made as required by law. Hall v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1897) 39 S. W. Rep. 117; Williams v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1897) 39 S. W. Rep. 664; Stewart v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 392; McMillan v. State, 18 Tex. App. 375. Contra, Key v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1897) 38 S. W. Rep. 773. It is also held that the information need not allege that the election was ordered by the commissioners' court. Brown v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1897) 39 S. W. Rep. 578; Willis v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1897) 38 S. W. Rep. 776.

In Kentucky an indictment for a violation of the local option law must allege that the petition for election was signed by the required number of legal voters in such district, and an allegation that the petition was signed by a number of legal voters equal to twenty-five per cent. of the votes cast is not sufficient. Com. v. Shelton, (Ky. 1896) 35 S. W. Rep. 128. Neither is an allegation that the election was ordered upon "proper" petition, without stating the facts sufficient to show that the law was in force. Com. v. Pippin, (Ky.

1897) 40 S. W. Rep. 252; Com. v. Green, 98 Ky. 21. It is necessary to allege that the local option law was submitted to the voters of the county and adopted. Com. v. Throckmorton, (Ky. 1895) 32 S. W. Rep. 130; Com. v. Boyd, (Ky. 1895) 32 S. W. Rep. 132; Com. v. Howe, (Ky. 1895) 32 S. W. Rep. 133; Com. v. Shelton, (Ky. 1896) 35 S. W. Rep. 128. And if the indictment fails to state that the certificate of the board of county commissioners was received and recorded by the clerk, it is fatally defective. Throckmorton v. Com., (Ky. 1896) 35 S. W. Rep. 635. It is not sufficient to allege that the election was ordered at "a regular term," for the statute requires the order for election to be made at "the next regular term" of the court after receiving a petition. Com. v. Green, 98 Ky. 21. But see Young v. Com., 14 Bush (Ky.) 161.

2. "General as are the words of the local prohibition statute, there are sales or gifts which do not contravene them, and such sales or gifts the indictment, when in the alternative, must negative by the averment that each was contrary to law; otherwise it does not disclose an indictable offense." Hubbard v. State, 109 Ala. 1; Tarkins v. State, 108 Ala. 17; Williams v. State, 91 Ala. 14.

Where a local law applies to a whole county, it is sufficient to charge that the liquor was sold or given away "contrary to the form of the Act of Assembly in such case made and provided." Slymer v. State, 62 Md. 237.

3. Jones v. State, 67 Md. 256.

Gift or Exchange.—If the indictment charges a gift or exchange of liquors as well as a sale, it will be fatally defective where the law does not prohibit a gift or exchange of liquor.¹

1/2. VIOLATION OF THREE-MILE LAW.—In charging a violation of a three-mile law, so-called, the indictment must be framed with reference to the special act,² which, however, need not be specially pleaded, as the court will take notice of it,³ and the charge must be that the sale was made within three miles of the institution named.⁴

Centre of District.—The indictment will be insufficient if it designates more than one point as the centre of the district.⁵

Order of Court.—In Arkansas the offense must be alleged and proved to have been committed after the order of court forbidvided and a new number applied to a division thereof, an indictment which charged that the offense was committed in the sixth, formerly the third, election district of the county, in violation of the prior act known as the local option law, was held sufficient and not inconsistent on its face. Higgins v. State, 64 Md. 419.

2. Camp v. State, 27 Ala. 53.

Sale by Manufacturer.—An indictment charged a sale by a manufacturer "within four miles of an incorporated institution of learning," and that the defendant sold the liquor "in quantities not less nor under a quart, and not to be drunk upon the premises of the place of sale." The court held that the allegation did not negative the idea of a lawful sale, as the facts alleged might be true and yet liquor have been sold to a dealer by the barrel and carried to another state, and that the indictment in this respect was insufficient; the act not being unlawful within itself, and becoming so only under peculiar circumstances which must be set forth. State v. Tarver, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 658.

3. State v. Wallace, 94 N. Car. 827, holding that the statute prohibiting the sale of liquor within a certain district of a named institution is a public local statute, and need not be pleaded in an indictment for a violation of its provisions.

4. In Mississippi an indictment for violation of an act of the legislature approved February 1, 1889, entitled "An Act to incorporate Providence College," etc., charged a sale of liquors "at Nettleton," and did not allege that the sale was made within three miles of Providence College, and it was held defective for not alleging that the sale was made within three miles of Providence College. Regan v. State, 67 Miss. 332.

5. In Gazola v. State, 45 Ark. 458, the indictment charged the defendant with selling intoxicating liquor "within three miles of the church-house and schools in the town of Brinkley," and alleged that the county court had prohibited the sale of such liquor "within said limits." The court held that more than one point was designated as the centre of the district, as it could not be inferred that the locality of the church and that of the schools were the same.

In Arkansas it was originally held that the adoption of the special law displaced the general law which prohibited a sale without license in such district, and that the indictment for selling within the prohibited district must be framed with reference to the special law, and not under the general law for selling without license. State v. Cathey, 41 Ark. 308; State v. Orton, 41 Ark. 305; De Bois v. State, 34 Ark. 381. "But the third section of the Act of March 26, 1883, amendatory of the license law, contains a drag-net proviso that the penalties imposed by any special act forbidding the sale of liquors in particular localities shall be merely cumulative of the penalties imposed by the License Act, and that the License Act shall apply to the territory embraced in the three-mile law and all ding the sale,¹ and it will be sufficient to allege that the order was made in compliance with the statute,² and it must be charged that the sale was not for medical purposes.³

Description of College, etc.—An indictment for selling within three miles of an institution of learning may describe it as an academy, college, university, or institution of learning, giving the name, if any, by which it is known in the community where it is situated.⁴

i. VIOLATION OF PROHIBITION LAW.—An information for violation of the prohibition law should charge a sale without a permit, or that, having a permit, the defendant sold in a manner prohibited by law.⁵ Where the offense consists in being the owner or keeper of a place in which liquor is sold, the place must be distinctly charged and described.⁶

j. COMMON SELLER OF LIQUOR.—The offense of being a common seller of liquor, or presuming to be a common seller, may be charged in general terms in order to avoid unnecessary prolixity.⁷

special acts, and that a party may be proceeded against under either act." Chew v. State, 43 Ark. 361.

1. State v. Witt, 39 Ark. 216.

2. Wilson v. State, 35 Ark. 414, holding that it is not necessary to allege that the order was made on the petition of the majority of the adult residents of the township, nor that the college or academy is within the county where the indictment was found.

3. State v. Scarlett, 38 Ark. 563.

4. Blackwell v. State, 36 Ark. 178, holding also that it is not necessary to allege that the institution was incorporated. But see State v. Odam, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 220.

Name of Institution.—If the name of the institution be changed by the trustees, though illegally, a description by the new name will be sufficient. Blackwell v. State, 36 Ark. 178.

Defunct College—Objection, How Taken.—If a college referred to and named in the indictment has ceased to exist, advantage of such fact can only be taken by proof on plea of not guilty. State v. Heldt, 41 Tex. 220.

Description of Church.—Where a special statute prohibited the sale of liquor "within three miles and a half of a Methodist church situated in Macon county, * * * known by the name of the White church," and an indictment thereunder charged the sale "within three miles and a half of White church in Macon county," it was held that the description of the church was sufficient. Block v. State, 66 Ala. 493.

So where an indictment charged a sale of liquor within "three miles of the old site of Rutherfordton Baptist church," it was held not to be such a description as would vitiate the indictment, the words "old site" being surplusage, and that the defect was cured by verdict. State v. Eaves, 106 N. Car. 752.

5. State v. Burkett, 51 Kan. 175; State v. Conley, 1 Kan. App. 124.

General Averment.—In charging the offense of being a common seller of liquor it is sufficient to charge generally that at a named time and place the defendant was a common seller of intoxicating liquors, not having first been duly licensed, without setting forth the special acts. Com. v. Wood, 4 Gray (Mass.) 11; Com. v. Pray, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 359; Com. v. Hart, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 130.

And if specific sales are alleged defectively they may be rejected as surplusage. Com. v. Hart, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 130.

Defective Charge Good for Single Sale.—An indictment charged that on Sunday the defendant "did presume to be a seller of wine, brandy, rum, and other spirituous liquors, to be used in and about his dwelling house, then and there

Unnecessary Allegations. — In charging such offense it is not necessary to aver that the liquors were not imported and sold in the original package,¹ nor that they were sold in the defendant's dwelling house or other building,² and it need not be alleged that the defendant was a common innholder or common victualer,³ nor that the indictment was found at the instance or upon the application of any city or town officer, nor that it is prosecuted for the revenue of a town.⁴

Joinder of Defendants. — Two or more persons may be jointly guilty of being common sellers of intoxicating liquors, and may be jointly indicted therefor.⁵

situate, without being first licensed, according to law, as an innholder or common victualer, with authority to sell spirituous liquors; and did then and there sell to one C. one half gill of spirituous liquor, to be used in and about his dwelling house." It was held that the charge was not sufficient for being a common seller, but that the words which charged that the defendant presumed to be such seller could be rejected as surplusage, and the charge would then be sufficient for a single sale. Com. v. Stowell, 9 Met. (Mass.) 569. See also Com. v. Pray, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 359.

Omission of Word "Common." — It is not necessary to allege that the defendant was a "common seller" of liquor, but it will be sufficient to charge that the defendant on a certain day, and during all the time between that day and the day of finding the indictment, was a seller of rum, etc., without being licensed therefor. Com. v. Leonard, 8 Met. (Mass.) 529.

1. State v. Gurney, 37 Me. 149; Com. v. Hart, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 130.

Surplus Averment. — Surplus averments in an indictment need not be proved. So an averment, in an indictment for being a common seller of liquor, that the liquor was sold "by retail and in less quantities than the revenue laws of the United States prescribe for the importation thereof," need not be proved. State v. Robinson, 39 Me. 150.

2. In Com. v. Stowell, 9 Met. (Mass.) 569, it was objected that the indictment was defective in that it did not charge that the liquor was sold in the defendant's dwelling house. The court held that the objection was not tenable, as the offense consisted in selling to be used in the house of the defendant, and that such sale may be made at a place other than the defendant's house. See also Com. v. Clapp, 5 Gray (Mass.) 97.

3. Com. v. Pearson, 3 Met. (Mass.) 449.

4. Com. v. Baker, 2 Gray (Mass.) 78.

5. Com. v. Tower, 8 Met. (Mass.) 527.

Where an indictment averred that two persons at a certain time and place "was then and there a common seller of intoxicating liquors," it was held sufficient to sustain a conviction of one after a nolle prosequi as to the other. Com. v. Colton, 11 Gray (Mass.) 1.

Nolle Prosequi After Verdict. — In Com. v. Jenks, 1 Gray (Mass.) 490, the indictment contained a count charging the defendant with being a common seller of intoxicating liquor during a certain period, and also counts for single sales within the time covered by the first count. The court held that a nolle prosequi might be entered on all the counts except the first, after a general verdict of guilty, and that judgment might then be rendered thereon for the commonwealth.

Removal to United States Court. — A prosecution for being a common seller of intoxicating liquors, or one for keeping and maintaining a tenement used for illegal sales and illegal keeping of intoxicating liquors by one holding a license to sell liquors under the internal revenue laws of the United States, cannot be removed to the United States court, under the United States Circuit Court Act of 1883, c. 57, § 3. *State v. Dak. 1896) 66 N. W. Rep. 923.

Negating License. — In Com. v. Allen, 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 1, the court said: "The indictment in this case charges the defendant with having kept a tippling house, but it does not allege that she had no license which authorized her to sell spirituous liquors. * * * This question is made under the revised statutes. They declare that 'any person, unless he shall have a license therefor, who shall sell, in any quantity, wine or spirituous liquors, etc., shall be deemed guilty of keeping a tippling house.' The averment that the defendant has kept a tippling house necessarily implies that she has no license, for it is the fact of selling to be drank in the house, or on the adjacent premises, without a license, that constitutes her the keeper of a tippling house. * * * It is not necessary, therefore, to allege in an indictment or presentment for keeping a tippling house that it was done without a license, for the selling must have been so done or the charge of keeping a tippling house is not true."

In Pennsylvania the indictment should negative license in charging the offense of keeping a tippling house. Com. v. Baird, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 141. See also State v. Hadlock, 43 Me. 282.

In Texas the statutory ingredients of keeping a tippling house were held to be: (1) one of the description of establishments named in the statute; (2) that the defendant sold, delivered, or otherwise disposed of, wine, rum, brandy, whiskey, or other spirituous liquors, in quantities less than a quart; (3) that the establishment must have been kept and the liquors sold without first having obtained a license therefor. Bush v. Republic, 1 Tex. 455.

Charge of Retailing Only. — Where an indictment charged that the defendant kept "a tippling house in the town of P., by then and there selling ardent spirits by the retail," etc., it was held to charge only the retailing in that town, and not that it was in a house kept by the defendant for that purpose. Our v. Com., 9 Dana (Ky.) 30.

A charge that B "did * * * in the county, etc., then and there presume to keep a tippling house, by then and there selling ardent spirits by the retail (viz., whiskey, brandy, and gin), without first having obtained a license to keep a tavern," is not a charge of keeping a tippling house, but only amounts to a charge of retailing without license. Woods v. Com., 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 75.

Under a charge of retailing merely, a defendant cannot be convicted of keeping a tippling house. Roninson v. Com., 6 Dana (Ky.) 288.

indictment should allege that the liquor was sold to be drunk or permitted to be drunk in the house or on adjoining premises.¹

m. UNLAWFUL SALE BY DRUGGIST OR PHARMACIST.—If the unlawful sale charged to have been made was by a druggist or pharmacist, the indictment must so characterize the defendant.²

Sold as a Beverage.—In some jurisdictions it is necessary to charge that the liquor was sold as a beverage.³

Unnecessary Averments.—The indictment need not allege that the defendant did or did not keep a record of the sale, nor state whether it was at wholesale or retail,⁴ nor whether the defendant was a registered pharmacist;⁵ nor need the indictment allege that the defendant did not sell the liquor to some other druggist.⁶

n. KEEPING AND EXPOSING WITH INTENT TO SELL — Certainty.—The facts should be alleged with such certainty that the defendant may know with what offense he is charged.⁷

1. State v. Hadlock, 43 Me. 282; Com. v. Dean, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 334.

In Herine v. Com., 13 Bush (Ky.) 295, which was an indictment against a distiller charging him with selling intoxicating liquors at his residence in less quantities than a quart at a time, the court held the indictment insufficient for failure to charge that the liquor was sold to be drunk in a house or premises adjacent thereto.

2. State v. Rafter, 62 Mo. App. 101.

Sufficiency of Allegation.—An allegation that the defendant was a druggist must be proved, and the defendant is insufficiently characterized by the allegation "being then and there a dealer in drugs and medicines." State v. Baskett, 52 Mo. App. 389.

Prescription of Physician.—In Mississippi an indictment for selling without the prescription of a physician must allege that the quantity sold was less than a gallon. Blakely v. State, 57 Miss. 680.

Sold as a Beverage.—An allegation that a druggist sold liquor to be used as a beverage sufficiently charges that he was engaged in a business that required the payment of a special tax as a retail liquor dealer. Luton v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 69 Mich. 610.

3. State v. Buckner, 20 Mo. App. 420; State v. McAdoo, 80 Mo. 216; People v. Quinn, 74 Mich. 632; People v. Curtis, 95 Mich. 212.

Sufficient Charge of Sale as a Beverage.—If an indictment charged that the defendant sold the liquor "as a beverage," it is equivalent to a charge that the liquor was sold "to be used as a beverage," and is sufficient. People v. Hinchman, 75 Mich. 587. See also People v. Curtis, 95 Mich. 212.

Multifariousness.—An indictment in one count charged that the defendant unlawfully sold intoxicating liquors in less quantities than one gallon, to wit, one gill of whiskey for five cents, one gill of brandy for five cents, one gill of gin for five cents, and allowed the same to be drunk on the premises where sold, and the court held that it was not objectionable for multifariousness. State v. McAdoo, 80 Mo. 216.

4. Luton v. Newaygo Circuit Judge, 69 Mich. 610.

5. State v. Carnahan, 63 Mo. App. 244, holding, however, that the proof to establish the fact that he was a druggist must show that he was a registered druggist or pharmacist, as none but a registered pharmacist is recognized by statute.

6. State v. Hunt, 29 Kan. 762.

7. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 138 Mass. 506.

Under the Rhode Island statutes in force in 1877 it was held that a complaint should allege that the liquor was not kept for sale for exportation, and a complaint alleging that the liquor was kept for sale, "and not for the purpose of exportation," was quashed for insufficiency. State v. Campbell, 12 R. I. 147.

Either of Two Distinct Offenses.—An indictment which charged that certain intoxicating liquors intended for sale were kept and deposited in a certain place by the defendant, or by some other person with his consent, was held insufficient and void for uncertainty, in that it did not appear whether the defendant was charged with keeping or with selling the liquors. State v. Moran, 40 Me. 129.

Intent. — The unlawful intent with which the liquors are kept should be charged,¹ but it need not be averred that the liquor was intended for sale elsewhere than in the state where kept.²

But it was held that an allegation that the defendant unlawfully exposed and kept for sale intoxicating liquors with intent to sell them in the state where they were kept was supported by proof that he kept the liquors with the alleged intent. Com. v. Atkins, 136 Mass. 160; Com. v. Welch, 140 Mass. 372.

Time, Place, and Purchaser. — If the information states the time, the place, and the name of the person charged with keeping the liquor for sale as a beverage, it contains all the essential elements of the offense. State v. Brennan, 2 S. Dak. 384. See also State v. Hartwick, 49 Conn. 101; Com. v. Keefe, 143 Mass. 467; Com. v. Sprague, 128 Mass. 75; Com. v. Hanley, 121 Mass. 377; Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 116 Mass. 27; Com. v. Gilland, 9 Gray (Mass.) 3; Hornberger v. State, 47 Neb. 40; State v. Jenkins, 64 N. H. 375.

Liquors Intoxicating in Fact, or Intoxicating by Statute. — Where a complaint charged that the defendant did unlawfully "keep and suffer to be kept on his premises, in his possession and under his charge, ale, wine, rum, and other strong and malt and intoxicating liquors, and mixed liquors, a part of which was ale, wine, rum, and other strong and malt and intoxicating liquors, with intent," etc., the court held that it should be quashed for uncertainty because it did not appear that the liquors charged to have been so kept were intoxicating in fact, or were intoxicating by statute. State v. McKenna, 16 R. I. 398.

Proof. — If a complaint charges that the defendant did keep "ale, wine, rum, and other strong and malt liquors and mixed liquors," it will be supported by proof of keeping "lager beer." State v. Campbell, 12 R. I. 147.

Place of Intended Sale. — Where a complaint alleged that the liquors were kept in a dwelling house, with intent to sell the same unlawfully, it was held not necessary to prove that the sales were intended to be made in the dwelling house, but it was sufficient to show that the place was a magazine or warehouse where liquor was being stored, and from which it was intended to be sold in a saloon in the neighborhood. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 116 Mass. 27.

Liquor in Wagon — Selling from House to House. — An allegation of keeping with intent to sell will be supported by proof that the defendant had the liquor in a wagon attached to a horse, under circumstances tending to show that he was selling it from house to house, although it would not have supported an indictment for illegal transportation from place to place. Com. v. McConnell, 11 Gray (Mass.) 204.

1. State v. Learned, 47 Me. 426, where the court said: "The person charged as thus keeping liquors cannot be convicted simply from the fact that the liquors are found in his possession, or that they were intended for unlawful sale by somebody. He may be an innocent depository. He can only be a guilty one, under this statute, by having this possession with an intent on his part to sell the same in this state in violation of law, or with the intent that the same should be so sold by any person, or with intent to aid or assist any person in such unlawful sale; the intent being * * * an essential element, in either case, in the offense charged against the individual."

Sufficient Averment of Intent. — An allegation that the liquor was kept "for the purpose of sale" is equivalent to an allegation that the defendants kept it "with intent to sell," and is sufficient. State v. Mohr, 53 Iowa 261. See also State v. Prescott, (N. H. 1892) 30 Atl. Rep. 342.

A complaint charging the defendants with keeping certain intoxicating liquors, "which liquors are intended by the said A and B for sale in this commonwealth, said A and B not being authorized to sell the same in this commonwealth," sufficiently charges the intent to sell in violation of the law. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 4 Allen (Mass.) 593.

2. State v. Perkins, 63 N. H. 368.

Negating Authority. — The indictment should contain an averment denying the defendant's right to make the contemplated sales.¹

Unnecessary Allegations. — The various modes and contingencies in which it would be lawful to sell such liquors or expose them for sale need not be negated.²

o. UNLAWFULLY MANUFACTURING AND DISTILLING. — An indictment for unlawfully manufacturing or distilling must describe with reasonable certainty the offense created by the statute,³ and it is not sufficient to follow the language of the

1. Sufficient Averment. — An allegation that the defendant kept intoxicating liquors with intent unlawfully to sell the same in the commonwealth, he "not being authorized to sell the same in this commonwealth for any purpose * * * or by any legal authority whatever," sufficiently negatives the defendant's authority to make the sale without specifying the kind of intoxicating liquor. Com. v. Grady, 108 Mass. 412. See also Com. v. Lynn, 107 Mass. 214; Com. v. Chisholm, 103 Mass. 213; Com. v. Dunn, 14 Gray (Mass.) 401.

Reference to Repealed Statute. — A complaint alleged that the defendant kept the liquors for sale without any legal authority whatever, and further alleged that he was not authorized to sell the same under the provisions of a certain statute, but such statute had in fact been repealed. It was held that the allegation as to the statute might be rejected as surplusage and the complaint remain sufficient. Com. v. Peto, 136 Mass. 155.

2. Com. v. Gagne, 153 Mass. 205.

Thus it need not be alleged that the liquors were not cider kept for special purposes other than a beverage, nor "fruit of the vine for the Lord's Supper." Com. v. Edwards, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 187. Nor that the liquors were not imported in the original packages, or were within the commonwealth where the accused intended to sell them. Com. v. Purtle, 11 Gray (Mass.) 78; Com. v. Edwards, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 187.

The complaint need not aver that the licensing board had required the defendant to remove the blinds and curtains from the licensed premises. Com. v. Brothers, 158 Mass. 200.

3. Under the United States Statutes, Rev. Stat., § 3281, which provides against the violation of the internal revenue laws, an indictment was held sufficient which charged that the defendant "did knowingly and unlawfully engage in and carry on the business of a distiller, within the intent and meaning of the internal revenue laws of the United States, with the intent to defraud the United States of the tax on the spirits distilled by him, against the peace," etc., and the court held that the indictment need not state the particular means by which the United States was to be defrauded. U. S. v. Simmons, 96 U. S. 360.

Negating Authority to Manufacture.

— Under the Massachusetts Stat. of 1855, c. 215, § 15, which related to the manufacture of intoxicating liquor for sale, an indictment sufficiently negated authority so to manufacture which alleged that the defendant, "without any license, appointment, or authority therefor, was a manufacturer of intoxicating liquor for sale." Com. v. Clark, 14 Gray (Mass.) 367.

Police Official — Interest in Manufacture of Liquor. — Under New York Laws 1890, c. 163, § 1, providing that it shall be unlawful for any "police commissioner, police inspector, captain, sergeant, roundsman, patrolman, or other police officials, or subordinate of any police department * * * to be either directly or indirectly interested in the manufacture or sale of spirituous or malt liquors," etc., an indictment charging that the defendant did "engage in the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors and malt liquors * * * while holding the office of mayor, * * * and acting as such, and as head of police under the provisions of said charter," etc., without any statement of the time, place, or manner, is insufficient. The indictment was also insufficient in failing to charge that the defendant was directly interested in either the manufacture or

p. UNLAWFUL PRESCRIPTION BY PHYSICIAN. — In charging a physician with unlawfully prescribing liquor, the indictment or information must meet all the requisites of the statute under which it is drawn; as, that the person for whom the prescription was made was not actually sick,² that the local option law had been adopted,³ that the prescription was false and fraudulent,⁴ sale of spirituous or malt liquors, etc.; and the fact that he was mayor of a city, and, as such, head of the police, does not bring him within the statute as being a police official. People v. Gregg, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 107. See also People v. Burns, 53 Hun (N. Y.) 278.

1. Procuring Other Person to Use Still. — In a prosecution under U. S. Rev. Stat., § 3266, making it an offense to cause or procure to be used a still, boiler, or other vessel for the purpose of distilling, it is not sufficient to charge the offense in the language of the statute. The name of the person so procured to use the still should be stated, or if his name is unknown to the grand jury, such fact should be averred. And it should appear from an indictment based on such section (which makes it an offense to cause or procure to be used a still and boiler for the purpose of distilling on premises where vinegar is manufactured) that the vinegar was manufactured or produced on such premises at the time the still and other vessels were used for the purpose of distilling; but it is not necessary to aver that the liquor distilled was alcoholic. U. S. v. Simmons, 96 U. S. 360, where the court said: "The averment that the defendant caused and procured them to be used implies with sufficient certainty that they were in fact used." On which point, see also U. S. v. Mills, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 138.

It is not necessary to state the means used to effect the alleged unlawful procurement. U. S. v. Simmons, 96 U. S. 360. See also U. S. v. Gooding, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 460.

Statutory Form of Complaint. — Under the Vermont Gen. Stat., c. 94, § 18, an indictment for being a manufacturer of intoxicating liquor contrary to such statute is sufficient when in the form prescribed by such section although it omits to state that the liquor was intended for sale contrary to law. State v. Lovell, 47 Vt. 493.

2. Frank v. Com., (Ky. 1891) 15 S. W. Rep. 877, decided under the Kentucky local option law, which provided that no physician shall make or sign any such prescription unless the person for whom it is made is actually sick and such liquor is absolutely required as a medicine.

In Texas the statute enacts that "if any physician should give a prescription to be used in obtaining any intoxicating liquor in such county * * * to any one who is not actually sick, and without a personal examination of such person, he shall be punished," etc., and the court held that "under the peculiar phraseology of this statute, * * * the indictment, in order to be good, should charge that the prescription was given to one who was not actually sick, and without a personal examination of such person." Stovall v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1897) 39 S. W. Rep. 934.

3. Alford v. State, (Tex. Crim. App. 1896) 35 S. W. Rep. 657, where the court said: "It will be observed that the indictment * * * undertakes to charge an offense by a physician in giving a prescription in violation of the statute in a territory in which local option prevails. In order to charge this offense, it must be shown by proper averments that local option was in force within the given territory; that is, that a special election was held within said territory, etc."

4. In North Carolina the indictment should not only set out that the prescription was false or fraudulent, but should state in what the falsity or fraud consisted. State v. Farmer, 104 N. Car. 887, where the prosecution was based on North Carolina Stat. 1887, c. 215, § 4. The court said: "The law does not impose upon the state the burden of charging in the indictment and proving on the trial that the defendant was a 'reputable physician,' as well as that he gave a false and fraudulent prescription."

or that it was given for the purpose of enabling the party to obtain the liquor to be used as a beverage.¹

g. KEEPING OPEN AT PROHIBITED TIME — (1) On Prohibited Days — Sunday. — An indictment charging that the defendant, at a certain time and place, did unlawfully keep open a tippling house on the Sabbath day is sufficient;³ but it should appear from the indictment that the place kept open was not a drug store, where such a store is excepted from the operation of the Sunday law.⁴ It is not necessary, however, to allege that the defendant owned the saloon or had charge or control of it, or of the matter of opening and closing it,⁵ nor that it was kept open with criminal intent.⁶

Election Day. — An indictment for keeping open on election day should allege the purpose for which the election was held,⁷ and that it was held by lawful authority.⁸

1. State v. Umphrey, 40 Mo. App. 327, where the statute forbade the issuing of a prescription for liquor "to be used otherwise than for medicinal purposes," etc., and the court held that it was not sufficient to charge that the liquors "were then and there used" as a beverage and not for medicinal purposes.

2. State v. Anthony, 52 Mo. App. 507, where it was held sufficient to state the date of the prescription, the name of the person to whom issued, and that it was to enable the party to procure the liquor "to be used otherwise than for medical purposes."

3. Hall v. State, 3 Ga. 18; Kroer v. People, 78 Ill. 204; Fant v. People, 45 Ill. 259.

Licensed Place. — It should appear that the place kept open at the prohibited time is one wherein a license has been granted to sell liquor. State v. Peterson, 38 Minn. 143. See also People v. Wheeler, 96 Mich. 1; People v. Sullivan, 83 Mich. 355.

Statement of Place. — The prosecutor is not bound to state the particular location of the saloon before testimony is introduced. It is sufficient to charge in the information that the saloon was located in a certain city and county within the jurisdiction of the court. People v. Ringsted, 90 Mich. 371.

Keeping Open on a Legal Holiday. — In People v. Hobson, 48 Mich. 27, it was held that an indictment for keeping a saloon open on a legal holiday is sufficient if it alleges that the defendant kept a saloon, that he kept it open on a legal holiday named, and that he then and there sold spirituous and intoxicating liquors.

4. People v. Wheeler, 96 Mich. 1.

Saloon Not a Drug Store. — Section 2283e, 3 Howell's Michigan Stat., provides that saloons and other places except drug stores where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale, either at wholesale or retail, shall be closed on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday. It is not necessary to aver in an indictment for keeping a saloon open on Sunday that the saloon was not a drug store; for the words "except drug stores" are used only in connection with "other places." People v. Taylor, (Mich. 1896) 68 N. W. Rep. 303.

5. State v. Gluck, 41 Minn. 553.

6. Warwick v. State, 48 Ark. 27, where the court said: "The keeping it open on that day is the gist of the offense. When the fact of keeping the dramshop open on Sunday is established, the law presumes a criminal intent, and proof of justification or excuse must come from the defendant."

7. Hoskey v. State, 9 Tex. App. 202, where the court said: "It is a necessary part of the description and certainty of the offense that the character of the election, or the object and purpose for which the election was held, should be distinctly stated and averred, in order that it may be made to appear what, if any, offense has in fact been committed."

8. Geib v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 514.

In Janks v. State, 29 Tex. App. 233,

(2) At Prohibited Hours. — The averment as to time is sufficient if it appears that the keeping open was at a prohibited hour on a named day.¹ The indictment should allege that the place kept open was not a hotel, where the statute excepts hotels,² but need not allege that a saloon kept open was not a drug store,³ nor that the common council had not extended the time for closing, as permitted by a proviso to the statute.⁴

r. UNLAWFUL TRANSPORTATION OF LIQUORS. — A complaint for an unlawful transportation of liquors must allege an intent to sell the same within the state,⁵ and that the defendant knew that the liquors he was transporting were intoxicating.⁶ It need not be alleged that the liquors were in the original imported packages,⁷ nor need authority to sell be negatived.⁸

Place. — The complaint should state the place from which and the place to which the liquors were transported.⁹

it was held not necessary that the indictment should allege that the election was a special one, nor that it had been ordered by the city council at a regular or called session for the particular day or time named; nor that ten days' notice had been given previous to the election. All such matters were embraced in the allegation "held by lawful authority."

Joinder of Defendants. — The indictment may join two or more defendants without alleging a partnership between them, and without alleging that they or either of them owned or controlled the saloon. Janks v. State, 29 Tex. App. 233.

Collateral Attack on Validity of Election. If an election is held under the forms of law, its validity cannot be collaterally attacked by motion to quash on the ground of its invalidity. Wear v. State, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 30.

1. In People v. Husted, 52 Mich. 624, the complaint charged that the defendant did not close his saloon "at the hour of nine o'clock" on a certain day, and kept it open "until twenty minutes past eleven o'clock in the afternoon of said day," and the court held that it was not insufficient for failing to show that nine o'clock at night was meant, nor for using the word "afternoon" in connection with "eleven o'clock."

2. State v. Jarvis, (Minn. 1896) 69 N. W. Rep. 474.

3. People v. Sullivan, 83 Mich. 355; People v. Robbins, 70 Mich. 130.

4. People v. Richmond, 59 Mich. 570.

5. State v. Murch, (Me. 1886) 7 Atl. Rep. 115.

But, in Massachusetts, under the Act of 1869, c. 415, § 37, making it an offense to receive for transportation to another person liquors intended for sale contrary to such statute, the gist of the offense was the receiving for transportation to another, and thus completing the intended sale. The purchaser's intention with regard to the liquors was immaterial, and it was not necessary that his name should be alleged, or that his authority to sell should be negatived. Com. v. Locke, 114 Mass. 288. See also Com. v. Blanchard, 105 Mass. 173.

6. State v. McDonough, 84 Me. 488.

7. Com. v. Waters, 11 Gray (Mass.) 81.

8. Com. v. Locke, 114 Mass. 288, where the court said: "The illegality underlying this offense is that of the sale which has been or is intended to be made, and to be thereby carried into effect. It is immaterial whether the purchaser intends to sell again or not; and, of course, immaterial whether the purchaser has a license, or would be authorized to sell."

9. State v. Lashus, 79 Me. 541, holding that it is not sufficient to aver that the defendant, at a named town and county in the state, conveyed the liquors from place to place with the intention that the same should be sold in violation of law, although such allegation is in the language of the statute. And in Com. v. Reily, 9 Gray (Mass.) 1, it was held that an allegation that the defendant "at Blackstone, in the county of Worcester, did convey from place to place within said commonwealth intoxicating liquor," was not a

s. VIOLATION OF SCREEN LAW.—A complaint for violation of the screen law should allege that the defendant, at a certain time and place, was duly licensed to sell intoxicating liquors in certain described premises, in which he carried on the business of liquor selling, and that he maintained screens and blinds in such a manner as to interfere with the view of the business conducted on the premises and of the interior of the premises.¹

3. Joinder of Offenses—a. IN SEPARATE COUNTS.—In charging misdemeanors, several distinct offenses of the same general character may be joined in the same indictment in separate counts,² and a separate sentence may be imposed for each offense sufficient statement of place. The case last cited was distinguished in Com. v. Hutchinson, 6 Allen (Mass.) 595, where it was held that an allegation that the liquor was carried from one place to another within the city of Worcester described the places with a reasonable degree of certainty and was therefore sufficient.

Venue.—In State v. Bushey, 84 Me. 459, an indictment charged an illegal transportation of liquors from a place in Waldo county to Clinton and Waterville in Kennebec county, and it was held that it did not charge a commission of any part of the offense in Kennebec county, for the latter places were towns in Kennebec county, on the line between the two counties, there being no averment of venue in the indictment.

Defect Cured by Verdict.—Where a complaint averred that the defendant, at a certain place within the commonwealth, unlawfully conveyed intoxicating liquors in a wagon to another person, who intended to sell them in violation of law, and that the defendant had reasonable cause to believe that the liquors were so intended for illegal sale, the defect of failing to allege that the liquor was transported "from place to place within the commonwealth" was merely a formal one, and objection came too late after verdict. Com. v. Doherty, 116 Mass. 13.

1. Com. v. Gibbons, 134 Mass. 197; Com. v. Auberton, 133 Mass. 404.

Unnecessary Allegations.—In a complaint for violation of the Massachusetts screen law it is not necessary to allege that the licensing board required the defendant to remove the blinds, Com. v. Brothers, 158 Mass. 200; nor that the defendant has violated the conditions of his license, nor that he has sold intoxicating liquor in violation of law. Com. v. Costello, 133 Mass. 192.

Failure to Remove Screen.—Where the statute provides that on days when saloons are prohibited from selling liquor the screens, curtains, etc., which obstruct the view of the bar from the sidewalk, street, or alley must be removed, an information which alleged that the defendant obstructed "the view from said sidewalk, street, and alley * * * by not removing said curtains * * * that then and there obstructed the view so as aforesaid," is sufficient. People v. Kennedy, 105 Mich. 75.

Proof.—Where a complaint for violation of the screen law describes the place as one room in a certain building, the fact that the license produced in evidence covers such room and also a cellar under the same does not constitute a fatal variance. Com. v. Keefe, 140 Mass. 301.

2. Separate Misdemeanors May Be Joined.—Jones v. State, 67 Miss. 111; People v. Polhamus, 8 N. Y. App. Div. 133; Com. v. Liebtreu, 1 Pearson (Pa.) 107; Mitchell v. Com., 93 Va. 775; Peer's Case, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 674.

Offenses of the same nature may be joined. Lord v. State, 37 Me. 177; Martin v. State, 30 Neb. 507; Tillery v. State, 10 Lea (Tenn.) 35; Lewis v. Com., 90 Va. 843.

Distinct Violations of the Local Option Law may be joined in separate counts. South v. Com., 79 Ky. 493.

Miscellaneous Instances of Proper Joinder.—A count for being a common seller may be joined with a count for distinct sales. Com. v. Moorhouse, 1 Gray (Mass.) 470; Com. v. Mead, 10 Allen (Mass.) 396; Com. v. Gillon, 2 Allen (Mass.) 505; Com. v. Clark, 14 Gray (Mass.) 367.

of which the defendant may be found guilty.¹

b. IN THE SAME COUNT. — If the statute makes either of two or more different offenses, connected with the same general offense and subject to the same penalty, indictable separately as distinct crimes when committed by different persons at different times, they may, when committed by the same person, at the same time, be joined in the same count as constituting one offense.²

4. Amendments. — The general principles governing the amendment of indictments, informations, and complaints have been so fully discussed in a preceding article³ that it will here suffice to

A count for illegal sales may be joined with a count for unlawfully keeping for sale, Hans v. State, 50 Neb. 150; or with a count for maintaining a nuisance, Gitchell v. People, 146 Ill. 175; State v. McLaughlin, 47 Kan. 143; or with a count for giving away, Bruguier v. U. S., 1 Dakota 5.

A count for violation of the dram-shop law may be joined with a count for a violation of the wine and beer house license. State v. Klein, 78 Mo. 627.

A count for selling to be drunk on the premises may be joined with a count for selling less than five gallons. People v. Charbineau, 115 N. Y. 433.

A count charging the defendant with assisting in maintaining a place for the purpose of selling intoxicating liquors to members of a club may be joined with a count charging him with maintaining a place for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, or the illegal keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors. Com. v. Jacobs, 152 Mass. 276.

One Indictment with Separate Counts — The Better Practice. — If a person is indicted at the same term of court for successive violations of the statute prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors without license, it is the better practice to draw the indictment in several counts, stating each violation separately. State v. Wilson, 39 Mo. App. 184.

Joinder in Informations. — If several misdemeanors be joined in the same information it will not, in general, vitiate it, at any stage of the proceedings. The practice of quashing an information on account of misjoinder of offenses, or calling on the prosecution to elect on which charge it will proceed, does not prevail in prosecutions for misdemeanors. State v. Schweiter, 27 Kan. 499. See State v. Crimmins, 31 Kan. 376.

Justice of the Peace. — A justice may permit several counts for the same or distinct offenses to be joined in the same information or complaint, and may impose the fine prescribed by statute for each offense. Barnes v. State, 19 Conn. 398; Deveny v. State, 47 Ind. 208.

Separate Trials of Separate Complaints. — A complaint for maintaining a tenement for the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors and a separate complaint for unlawfully selling such liquors cannot be tried together over the defendant's objection, although both charges might have been joined in one complaint. Com. v. Bickum, 153 Mass. 386.

Misjoinder of Offenses. — Offenses of a different character or degree of punishment, and upon which different judgments must be imposed, should not be joined. Storrs v. State, 3 Mo. 9.

Where an indictment charged illegal sales of liquor on four different occasions, and to as many different persons, it was held demurrable on that account. People v. O'Donnell, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 358.

1. Nichols v. State, 49 Neb. 777; State v. Leis, 11 Iowa 416; State v. Walters, 5 Iowa 507.

2. State v. Schweiter, 27 Kan. 499; State v. Brown, 36 Vt. 560; State v. Woodward, 25 Vt. 616; State v. Smith, 61 Me. 386.

Motion to Compel Separate Charges. — If two distinct offenses are joined in the same count, the court, on motion, should require the state to charge the offenses in separate counts. State v. Lund, 49 Kan. 209, where the defendant was charged in one count of the information with the offenses of selling and of maintaining a liquor nuisance.

3. Article AMENDMENTS, vol. 1, pp. 688, 696, 699.

set forth in the notes particular instances in which questions relating to amendments have arisen in prosecutions for violation of liquor laws.¹

5. Election as to Counts or Offenses — a. AS TO COUNTS. — If an indictment charges several misdemeanors of the same general character in separate counts, the state will not usually be compelled to elect between them.² But whether the state will be

1. The Caption of an Indictment may be amended so as to show the correct time of its finding and return. Allen v. State, 5 Wis. 329. See also State v. Jenkins, 64 N. H. 375; State v. Blaisdell, 49 N. H. 81. And article AMENDMENTS, vol. I, p. 690.

Name of Purchaser. — If a person is charged in an affidavit or indictment with unlawfully selling liquor to certain persons, the names of the persons to whom the liquor was sold, although unnecessary, become a part of the description of the offense, and the state will not be permitted to strike out the names and prove sales to different persons. Hudson v. State, 73 Miss. 784; Blumenberg v. State, 55 Miss. 528.

Occupation of Defendant — Description of Place. — In People v. Sullivan, 83 Mich. 355, it was held that an information may be amended by inserting words negating that the defendant was a druggist, and that the place kept open was a drug store, where such words were in the complaint and warrant, although it was considered doubtful whether such amendment was necessary at all.

Averment of Former Conviction. — An information may be amended by inserting the word "liquor" in an allegation of former conviction, where such allegation would be sufficient without the clause so amended, which was mere surplusage. State v. Nulty, 57 Vt. 543.

Price of Liquor Sold. — An information may be amended by inserting the price. Miles v. State, 5 Ind. 215.

Name of Accused. — An information may be amended as to the name of the accused, but, if not amended in the trial court, it will not be considered on appeal as having been made. Keiser v. State, 78 Ind. 430.

Charging Different Offense. — In State v. Emberton, 45 Mo. App. 56, it was held that where the information as originally drawn charged the defendant with a violation of the local option law, but was amended so as to charge a violation of the dram-shop law, it was insufficient, and should be quashed for charging a different offense.

In Appellate Court. — In State v. Kennedy, 36 Vt. 563, the Supreme Court, in the exercise of its discretion, refused to allow the amendment of a complaint by alleging with certainty the date of the alleged offense and the date of an alleged former conviction.

2. Mitchell v. Com., 93 Va. 775.

Selling at Different Times. — An indictment contained two counts, the first charging the defendant with selling intoxicating liquors without license, and the second a sale without license at a different time, and the court held that the state should not be compelled to elect on which count it would rely for conviction. Taylor v. State, 100 Ala. 68.

Sufficiency of Election. — On the trial of a complaint charging the defendant, in separate counts, with unlawful sales of intoxicating liquor, the state was required to elect upon which sale it would rely for conviction. It elected to rely upon one count, charging the sale of two glasses of whiskey made by the defendant to one W., for which W. paid twenty cents; and on another count, upon the sale of one glass of whiskey and one bottle of beer, made by the defendant to C., for which C. paid twenty-five cents; and the evidence showed that but one sale of the kind indicated was made to said W. and C., and fixed definitely the date of each of such sales. It was held that the election was sufficiently definite and certain under each count. State v. Saxton, 2 Kan. App. 13.

Defect Cured by Election. — If a count of an indictment charges two offenses precisely alike, the defect will be cured by the election of the prosecutor to proceed upon one charge only, and entering a nolle prosequi as to the other. Com. v. Holmes, 119 Mass. 195.

Modifying Election Once Made. — If the state, at the close of its evidence, elects, in writing, on which count it will rely for conviction, it should not required to elect as to counts is a matter largely in the discretion of the court.¹

b. AS TO OFFENSES. — Where the evidence for the prosecution shows that several offenses of the nature of the one charged have been committed by the accused within the time covered by the indictment, the defendant may require the state to elect on which offense it will rely for a conviction, before introducing his evidence.²

Sufficiency of Election. — In making his election the prosecutor should point out with reasonable certainty the particular offense or offenses upon which he relies for conviction.³

be permitted to modify such election after the evidence is all admitted. State v. Falk, 46 Kan. 498.

Failure to Require Election. — A defendant who fails to require the prosecutor to elect on which count he will rely for conviction cannot, on appeal, object to a finding on the whole indictment. Wreidt v. State, 48 Ind. 579.

1. State v. Smith, 22 Vt. 74. See also State v. Farmer, 104 N. Car. 887; Osgood v. People, 39 N. Y. 449; State v. Mueller, 38 Minn. 497.

Several Counts in the Same Language. — An indictment contained several counts charging illegal sale of intoxicating liquor in the same language, and the court held that the prosecution should have been ordered to elect upon which count it would rely for conviction, or a demurrer should have been sustained to all the counts but one. State v. Von Haltschuherr, 72 Iowa 541.

Keeping Place and Selling. — In People v. Keefer, 97 Mich. 15, certain counts of the information charged the keeping of a saloon where liquors were stored for sale, sold, and furnished, and others charged a sale to a person named. It was held, on the authority of Tiedke v. Saginaw, 43 Mich. 64, that the court erred in refusing to order the people to elect on which count or counts of the information they would proceed.

2. Long v. State, 13 Ind. 566; Lebkovitz v. State, 113 Ind. 26; Com. v. O'Hanlon, 155 Mass. 108.

In Kansas, Ohio, South Dakota, and Tennessee it is held that where the evidence discloses several sales within the time covered by the indictment, and only one is charged, the state should be required to elect upon which offense it will rely for a conviction. State v. Lund, 49 Kan. 663; State v. Schweiter, 27 Kan. 499; Stockwell v. State, 27

Ohio St. 563; State v. Valentine, 7 S. Dak. 98; State v. Boughner, 5 S. Dak. 461; Murphy v. State, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 373.

In Missouri it is held that in prosecutions for misdemeanor where the evidence develops several offenses, the state will not be compelled to elect upon which offense it will rely for conviction. State v. Heinze, 45 Mo. App. 403.

Difficulty in Fixing Date. — If the evidence shows more than one sale within the time covered by the indictment, but no particular date can be fixed as to any of them, it is not error for the court to refuse to compel the state to elect as between the offenses. Sanders v. State, 88 Ga. 254; State v. Kerr, 3 N. Dak. 523.

When Discretionary with the Court. — In State v. Mueller, 38 Minn. 497, the court said, in substance, that assuming that the furnishing of each glass of liquor might have been treated as a separate offense, all were so connected together as to form one transaction, which it would be inconvenient to separate, and each part of which would tend to show the nature of the others; that under such circumstances evidence might be given of the whole transaction; that even if it constituted several offenses of the same kind, it was in the discretion of the court whether the state should be required to elect, and that if no election was made, a verdict would be a bar to any further prosecution for any offense of the same kind included in it.

3. State v. Guettler, 34 Kan. 582.

Insufficient Election. — Where a witness for the state testified, in a prosecution under an indictment in a single count, that at different times during the year preceding the finding of the indictment the defendant sold to him both beer and whiskey, and the county

Effect of Election. — Where the state has made its election it will be held to such election throughout all subsequent proceedings and on a second trial.¹

6. Defects Cured by Verdict — Indefiniteness or Informality. — Mere indefiniteness in an information, where it contains enough to inform the defendant of the nature of the offense with which he is charged,² or formal defects which might have been cured by amendment, will not sustain objections first made after verdict.³

attorney, when called on to elect what particular sale he would rely upon, said that he would stand upon the sale made to the witness as testified to by him, but failed to designate the time of the sale or the kind of liquor sold, the election was held too indefinite. State v. Guetler, 34 Kan. 582. See State v. O'Connell, 31 Kan. 383.

What Does Not Amount to an Election.

— The first witness for the state in a prosecution for retailing spirituous liquors was asked by the prosecuting attorney whether, in the period covered by the indictment, he had ever obtained liquor from the defendant's store in less quantities than a quart, and he answered that he had never bought any liquor there, but that on one occasion, while in such store with others, the defendant's wife gave them a drink of liquor, for which he paid no money, nor was any money paid. The court held that this did not amount to an election on the part of the prosecution to proceed only for a violation of the statute for selling in less quantities than a quart. Seibert v. State, 40 Ala. 60.

Offering evidence as to particular sales, in a prosecution for unlawfully keeping liquors for sale, will not amount to an election to rely on the sales for conviction. State v. Hartwick, 49 Conn. 101.

An information charged the offense of keeping a place where liquors were sold, and also of selling on a specific day. The people were required to elect before submission to the jury, and a subsequent objection for multifariousness was overruled. People v. Rice, 103 Mich. 350.

1. Elam v. State, 26 Ala. 48. Contra, State v. Dow, 74 Iowa 141, holding that where the state has made its election to rely upon a particular sale, it may, upon a subsequent trial of the case, elect to rely for conviction upon a different sale than that upon which the first trial was had, the Iowa Code, § 4488, providing that "the granting of a new trial places the parties in the same position as if no trial had been had."

2. State v. Marshall, 2 Kan. App. 792.

An information charged that at a certain time and place the defendant "did then and there unlawfully sell and barter spirituous, malt, vinous, fermented, and other intoxicating liquors, contrary to the statutes in such cases made and provided," and the court held that the information was sufficient where objection for indefiniteness was first made after verdict, on a motion in arrest of judgment. State v. Ratner, 44 Kan. 429.

3. Com. v. O'Keefe, 123 Mass. 253.

Where it will be presumed from the issue that the verdict would not have been given without proof of certain facts, defective allegations or omission of such facts in the information will be cured by verdict. State v. Hodgson, 66 Vt. 134.

Omission of Word "Liquors." — Where the preliminary proceedings on an information for keeping a saloon open on Sunday were formally correct, but the information omitted the word "liquors," the court held that since it was in the power of the trial court, under the statute, to amend such formal defect, it must be held, after verdict, that the defendant was not prejudiced by the omission. People v. Case, 105 Mich. 92.

Failure to Allege Price. — Where an indictment failed to allege the price for which the liquor was sold, an objection after the defendant had been convicted was held too late where no objection was made at the trial. Hare v. State, 4 Ind. 241; Miles v. State, 5 Ind. 239.

Omitting Day and Month. — Where an indictment for selling intoxicating liquors without a license does not allege the day or month on which the alleged sale was made, an objection

II. ACTIONS FOR RECOVERY OF PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES —

1. Certainty in Declaration or Complaint. — More particularity is required in a declaration for recovery of the statutory penalty than in some other common-law actions where general counts are allowed,¹ and the declaration must not be more general than is allowed by statute.²

2. Complaint by Overseer of the Poor. — In New York a complaint by overseers of the poor for a statutory penalty for violation of the liquor law should state the names of the persons to whom the sales were made, or allege an excuse for not doing so.³

III. VERDICT — 1. General Verdict. — Where there is a general verdict of guilty it will be presumed that all the facts charged as constituting the offense have been found to be true.⁴

comes too late after verdict, no objection having been made at the trial. Phillips v. State, 86 Ga. 427.

1. A complaint to recover a penalty fixed by an ordinance for violation of the liquor law is sufficient if it recites the number of the section violated without setting it out; and if the defendant rests his defense on the invalidity of the ordinance it is his duty to bring it forward. Frankfort v. Aughe, 114 Ind. 77.

See Benalleck v. People, 31 Mich. 200, holding that in an action to recover the statutory penalty, the declaration must, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, set out with substantial certainty the facts which bring the defendant within the terms of the statute, so that there may be no liability of mistaking them; and it must aver the obligation to have arisen under the statute, and that a declaration which only refers generally to the whole statute, and not specifically to the section for a violation of which the action is brought, is insufficient on demurrer, and also, apparently, where objection is taken to the admission of evidence under it. But compare Kee v. McSweeney, 15 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 229, where it was held that a complaint will be sufficient, on motion to make it more definite and certain, if it refers to the act giving the penalty, although the particular section thereof is not pointed out. See generally article PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES.

Reference to Statute Relating to Party Plaintiff. — Where the complaint referred to the statute and section imposing the penalty, an omission to refer to an amendatory statute giving the officer who was the plaintiff the right to sue was held not to vitiate the complaint. Prussia v. Guenther, 16 Abb. N. Cas. (Orleans County Ct.) 230.

To Whom Penalty Would Go. — A complaint for the recovery of a penalty for violation of the liquor law need not aver to whom the penalty, if recovered, would go. Com. v. Burding, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 506; Com. v. Tuttle, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 502.

Other Pending Action. — The complaint need not aver that an action for the same penalty has not been brought in the name of the city or town where the offense is alleged to have been committed. Com. v. Murphy, 2 Gray (Mass.) 510.

2. Benalleck v. People, 31 Mich. 200.

3. Where the names of the persons are not alleged, but an excuse is averred therefor, such circumstances should be stated as will, to some extent, identify the transaction complained of, or the complainant will be compelled to make the complaint more definite or to furnish a bill of particulars. Kee v. McSweeney, 15 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 229.

Action in Name of Overseer. — Before a person can bring an action in the name of the overseer of the poor to recover such penalty, he must make complaint to the overseer of the poor with reasonable proof thereof. The complaint made to the overseer should be so definite, and should be accompanied with such proof, as to satisfy the overseer that a penalty has been incurred, or to enable him to investigate and decide whether or not the penalty has been incurred. Jobbitt v. Giles, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 274; Hess v. Appell, 62 How. Pr. (N. Y. Marine Ct.) 313.

Several Counts of Same Nature. — If the indictment contains several counts of the same nature, based upon the same section of the statute, upon which the same judgment can be rendered, a general verdict will be sufficient if the evidence sustains any of the counts.¹

One Good Count. — A general verdict under an indictment containing several counts will be sufficient if there is one good count sustained by evidence.²

Irreconcilable Counts. — A general verdict on an indictment containing irreconcilable counts is erroneous.³

2. Special Verdict. — A special verdict must contain all the facts essential to support the charge.⁴

tions for keeping intoxicating liquor for illegal sale a general verdict is usually sufficient. State v. Nowlan, 64 Me. 531; State v. McCann, 61 Me. 116.

On a Count Joining Several Offenses, if the jury find a general verdict of guilty under an indictment properly joining several offenses in one count, and in fixing the punishment impose a penalty appropriate to only one of the offenses charged, it will be equivalent to an expressed finding of guilty of that particular offense. Sampson v. State, 107 Ala. 76.

Effect as Res Judicata. — If there is a general verdict of guilty upon an information containing several counts, but there is no specification as to count, the verdict will protect the defendant against any further prosecution on any of the counts contained in the information. Powers v. People, 42 Ill. App. 30.

1. Frasier v. State, 5 Mo. 536.

Failure to Designate Count. — If the indictment contains two counts and there is a general verdict of guilty under one of them, the penalty which may be imposed being greater on one than on the other, and the fine assessed is the lowest one that can be assessed under the indictment, the defendant cannot complain if the verdict fails to show under which count he was found guilty. Taylor v. State, 49 Ind. 555.

Charging Sale to Minor, and Also Retailing. — Where an indictment charged a selling of liquor to a minor in one count and unlawfully retailing in the other, and there was a general verdict of guilty as charged, a motion in arrest of judgment was overruled, for the verdict was a finding of guilty of both offenses, and if, in considering the whole case on motion for a new trial, the court should discover that the evidence was sufficient to uphold a conviction on one count, but insufficient as to the other, it would be proper to impose sentence accordingly. Jones v. State, 67 Miss. 111.

Failure to Request Separate Verdicts. — If a general verdict be rendered on several counts, the defendant cannot complain of it in the absence of a request that the court order separate verdicts. State v. Basserman, 54 Conn. 88.

2. People v. Davis, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 494; Miller v. State, 5 How. (Miss.) 250; Jordan v. State, 22 Fla. 528.

Judgment on Count Not Sustained. — An indictment contained four counts and the defendant was found guilty as charged in the indictment, and judgment and sentence were upon each count, but there was no evidence whatever to sustain one of such counts. The court held that the judgment was not proper. Wleckie v. People, 14 Ill. App. 447.

3. If some of the counts of an indictment are based on one system of law, and another count is based on another system of law, and the two systems cannot be in operation at the same time, in the same territory, and there is a general verdict of guilty, and the sentence imposed is of a character authorized in case of a conviction under either system, the verdict and sentence should be set aside, as it cannot be known on what law the verdict and sentence are based. Butler v. State, 25 Fla. 347.

4. Failure to Show That Sale Was Authorized. — In a prosecution for selling liquor without a license or other authority, a special verdict that "the sale was made, as set forth in the complaint," or that "the defendant made the sale, as set forth in the complaint," is not sufficient to authorize a judgment

3. Alternative Verdict. — A verdict rendered in the alternative is insufficient.

4. Specifying Count. — Where there is a verdict of guilty on a specified count and the verdict is silent as to the other counts, it will amount to an acquittal on the counts not referred to.¹

5. Separate Verdicts on Separate Counts. — There need not be separate verdicts upon each count of an information.²

6. Conviction of Included Offense. — In charging a second or subsequent offense, the first offense is necessarily included in the charge, and the accused may be properly convicted thereof upon the trial of an indictment charging the accused with a third offense,³ and a defendant may be convicted of selling on Sunday under an indictment charging him with selling in a dram-shop on Sunday.⁴

7. Variance. — An immaterial variance in the verdict will not vitiate it.⁵

IV. PROCEEDINGS FOR SEARCH, SEIZURE, AND FORFEITURE — 1. Nature of the Proceeding. — A proceeding solely for the search of premises and the seizure and condemnation of liquors is in rem, and is to be considered and tried as civil causes are tried,⁶ unless the statute makes it a proceeding in the nature of a criminal prosecution;⁷ and in some jurisdictions the possession of liquors with intent to sell them in violation of law constitutes a criminal against the defendant, for the reason that it does not show that the sale was unauthorized. Com. v. Dooly, 6 Gray (Mass.) 360; Rhoads v. Com., (Pa. 1886) 4 Cent. Rep. 725, holding that where the defendant was indicted specifically as a druggist for selling, without license, liquor to be used as a beverage, a verdict of "guilty of selling liquor without license" would not support a judgment, because it did not find the facts necessary to make a sale by a druggist unlawful.

Where an indictment charges that intoxicating liquors are kept in a specified place, it will not be supported by a verdict which finds that the liquors were owned or kept in such place, as the finding is in the alternative, and does not establish the fact of keeping as averred in the complaint. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 4 Allen (Mass.) 601.

1. State v. Severson, 79 Iowa 750; Harvey v. State, 80 Ind. 142.

Guilty on One Count, Acquittal on Others. — If, in a prosecution before a justice of the peace, the defendant is found guilty on one of several counts and is acquitted as to the others, he cannot, on appeal to the District Court, be tried on a count of which he was acquitted. State v. Malling, 11 Iowa 239.

2. "It is necessary for a verdict definitely and clearly to show the finding of the jury upon each count, but such findings, separately stated, may be included in one verdict." State v. Nield, 4 Kan. App. 626.

3. State v. Gaffeny, 66 Iowa 262.

4. State v. Heckler, 81 Mo. 417.

5. An indictment charged a sale of spirituous liquor within two miles of Bethel Methodist Church, in Macon county, and the verdict described the church simply as "Bethel Church in Macon county," and it was held an immaterial variance, as the word "Methodist" in the indictment was harmless surplusage. State v. Downs, 116 N. Car. 1064.

6. State v. Barrels of Liquor, 47 N. H. 369, holding that all the issues were to be decided upon a preponderance of the evidence.

7. In Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 115 Mass. 142, and Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 105 Mass. 598, it was held that a proceeding under the statute of 1869, c. 415, for the forfeiture of liquors illegally kept, etc., was of a criminal nature, necessitating offense for which the party may be arrested and tried on the same complaint which authorizes the seizure.¹

2. Requisites of Complaint or Information Generally. — The proceeding is ordinarily begun by filing a verified complaint with a magistrate,² which describes the premises to be searched and the proof beyond a reasonable doubt of the allegations in the complaint.

1. See State v. Connelly, 63 Me. 212; State v. Erskine, 66 Me. 358; State v. Learned, 47 Me. 426, holding that in such a case the complaint may be sufficient as against the liquors and at the same time not contain sufficient averments as a criminal process against the person: State v. Miller, 48 Me. 576, pointing out that when the officer has arrested the person and seized the liquors the proceedings thenceforth become two entirely separate cases.

But in State v. Robinson, 49 Me. 285, followed in State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 80 Me. 91, it was held on construction of the statutes that the trial upon a libel against the liquors seized is a criminal proceeding, and that the rules applicable to criminal cases apply.

2. Designation of Person Keeping. — In a proceeding solely for condemnation of the liquor, the necessity of stating in the complaint the name of the person by whom they are intended for sale depends upon the statute. In State v. Learned, 47 Me. 426, it was held sufficient to aver that the liquor was kept and intended for sale. See also State v. Kaler, 56 Me. 88.

Under different statutory provisions in Massachusetts, the person by whom the liquors are owned or kept and intended for sale must be particularly designated. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 115 Mass. 142.

In Iowa the complaint must charge some specific person as owner or keeper with an illegal intent; otherwise the liquor cannot be forfeited. State v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 64 Iowa 300. See also State v. Harris, 36 Iowa 136. But actual unlawful sales need not be alleged. State v. Blair, 72 Iowa 591.

Averment that Complainant Is a "Credible Resident," etc. — Where a statute provided for a complaint by any "credible resident of the county," it was held that the failure of the complaint so to describe the complainant was not a jurisdictional defect. Weir v. Allen, 47 Iowa 482; State v. Thompson, 44 Iowa 399; State v. Blair, 72 Iowa 591.

Residence of Complainant. — The complainant's residence is sufficiently designated by setting forth the county in which he lives. Com. v. Intoxicating Liquors, 113 Mass. 13, holding further that his place of residence was immaterial.

Complaint for Search of Dwelling House. — Where a statute authorized a warrant to search a dwelling house only when a place of common resort was kept therein, a complaint and warrant describing it as "being a place of common resort" was held insufficient. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 97 Mass. 332. But it was held sufficient to describe it as a house occupied by the defendant "as a place of common resort kept therein." Com. v. Leddy, 105 Mass. 381.

Signature to Complaint. — In Vermont, under the Act of 1855, it was held not essential that the complaint should be signed by the complainant. Gill v. Parker, 31 Vt. 610.

As to the sufficiency of a signature under the Massachusetts statute, see Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 142 Mass. 470.

Oath or Affirmation. — In Maine a complaint may be made on affirmation instead of oath, if the plaintiff is conscientiously opposed to taking an oath. State v. Devine, (Me. 1888) 13 Atl. Rep. 128; State v. Welch, 79 Me. 99.

In Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 13 Allen (Mass.) 52, a complaint for search and seizure of liquor alleged to have been illegally kept in a dwelling house was held sufficient when supported by an oath of one of the complainants in the alternative form, to wit, that intoxicating liquor "has been sold in the house above mentioned by the occupant of said house, or with the consent and permission of the occupant of said house, contrary to law, within one month."

Amendment of Jurat. — In State v. Smith, 54 Me. 33, it was held that the jurat to a complaint for search and seizure might properly be amended after service by inserting the names of other witnesses which were inadvertently omitted.

property to be seized, and alleges the complainant's belief that the liquors kept or deposited are intended to be sold in violation of law, and prays that a warrant for search and seizure be issued.¹

3. Description of Place in Complaint and Warrant — In General. — Description of the place to be searched is sufficiently certain if it is such as would be necessary in a deed to convey the premises.²

Complaint, Libel, or Information after Seizure. — The statutes frequently provide for the filing of a complaint or libel or information against the liquors after they are seized. See State v. Le Clair, 86 Me. 522; State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 58 Vt. 594.

The complaint thus made relates back to the time of seizure. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 107 Mass. 386, holding that the complaint is not vitiated by describing the liquors as still in the possession of the person in whose custody they were seized. But this false recital was held unnecessary in State v. Le Clair, 86 Me. 522. See also State v. McCann, 59 Me. 383; State v. Dumphy, 79 Me. 104; State v. Erskine, 66 Me. 358.

In Maine the proceedings on the libel are separate from the search and seizure process. State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 80 Me. 91, holding that the libel need not recite the original proceedings more fully than the statutory form requires. See also Guptill v. Richardson, 62 Me. 257.

In Rhode Island an information for forfeiture of liquors kept within the state for sale in violation of law is sufficient without the addition of the words "with force and arms," "against the statute," or "with intent to sell." In re Hoxsie's Liquors, 15 R. I. 241, holding also that under Pub. Laws 1882, c. 87, § 29, now Gen. Laws 1896, c. 102, § 23, no negative allegations of any kind need be averred. And an information alleging that the liquors "were kept for the purpose of sale, without authority, within this state, against the statute," was held sufficient in In re Young's Liquors, 15 R. I. 243.

An information under the United States statutes for the forfeiture of distilled spirits because of the omission of the date on the warehouse stamp and inspection mark need not allege that the dates were not removed through accidental causes, such fact being matter of defense. U. S. v. 9 Casks, etc., of Distilled Spirits, 51 Fed. Rep. 191. An information for forfeiture of distilled spirits imported by means of entry which was alleged to be false in that it stated that the spirits were "American whiskey, reimported in the same condition as when exported," was held sufficient as to the specific charge. U. S. v. Fifteen Barrels of Distilled Spirits, 51 Fed. Rep. 416.

1. Probable Cause for Relief. — In Maine, under the statute in force in 1874, it was held that the complaint need not contain an averment that the complainant "has probable cause to believe" that the defendant keeps liquors with intent to sell them in violation of law, and that it was enough to state that he does in fact believe that intoxicating liquors are thus kept by the defendant, without adding that his belief is a reasonable one. State v. Nowlan, 64 Me. 531; State v. Devine, (Me. 1888) 13 Atl. Rep. 128; State v. Welch, 79 Me. 99.

Grounds for Relief. — Under Massachusetts Stat. 1869, c. 415, § 45, the facts and circumstances constituting the grounds for the complainant's belief were required to be set forth. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 105 Mass. 595; Com. v. Leddy, 105 Mass. 381, holding that an averment that the facts and circumstances consisted of common report was sufficient. See also Com. v. Intoxicating Liquors, 110 Mass. 182; Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 105 Mass. 181.

In Connecticut a warrant for the seizure of liquors was issued upon the oath of the complainants "that they have reason to believe, and do believe, to be substantially true the allegations in said complaint," and the court held that the oath was sufficient, it not being necessary to state the facts on which the belief was founded. Lowrey v. Gridley, 30 Conn. 450.

2. State v. Bartlett, 47 Me. 388; State v. Robinson, 33 Me. 564.

Where the complaint described the place to be searched as "a certain wagon on the fair ground on the easterly side of Union Hall, in Searsport," the place was sufficiently described. State v. Knowlton, 70 Me. 200.

If the officer is commanded to search

But the description should leave no discretion to the officer as to what place he will search.¹ It is sufficient to describe the premises as situated on a certain corner of two designated streets, alleging the character of the building or premises.²

a dwelling house for liquors, he is not authorized to search a barn for the same. Jones v. Fletcher, 41 Me. 254.

Insufficient Description. — A warrant for the search and seizure of certain liquors which averred that in W. certain liquors "are kept and deposited by R., of H., in a certain distillery there situate, about one and one-half miles northeasterly from H. Furnace," was held to be a sufficient description of the place to be searched. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 97 Mass. 334.

Extent of Constitutional Requirement. — "The constitutional requirement as to the description to be given of the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized, relates to the warrant and not to the complaint." In re Horgan's Liquors, 16 R. I. 552.

1. State v. Intoxicating Liquors, 44 Vt. 208.

Ownership and Place of Residence. — Where the place described was "the dwelling house of R. H., of Shrewsbury," it was held sufficiently certain, and imported that the house to be searched was in the town of Shrewsbury. Lincoln v. Smith, 27 Vt. 328.

Sufficient Descriptions. — Where the complaint described the premises to be searched as "a certain building situated in the rear of the tenement situate on the southerly side of Front street, and under the store of Alexander Pettigrew on said street," it was held sufficient. Com. v. Intoxicating Liquors, 113 Mass. 455.

Likewise, a complaint describing the premises to be searched as "a certain small wooden shed in rear of another shed or storehouse, in rear of Washington Hotel, so called, occupied by said White on north side of Westminster street, in said Taunton, and occupied by said White as a storehouse." Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 113 Mass. 208.

A description in a complaint and warrant of the premises to be searched as "a certain grocery store, the cellar under the same, and the premises there situate, to wit, on the easterly side of Main street, and numbered three hundred and seventy-five on said street, in the city of Worcester, in said county, and occupied by said A.," was held a sufficient designation of the place, although the grocery store and cellar only were occupied by A., and were in a block of four stories, and two other rooms in the first story bearing other numbers were occupied by other persons as stores. Com. v. Intoxicating Liquors, 113 Mass. 13.

Where the complaint and warrant described the place to be searched as "situate in Federal street, numbered two hundred and ninety-one and two hundred and ninety-three in said street, in said Boston, in the basement and first story of said building," the court held that the premises were sufficiently described. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 122 Mass. 36.

Misnomer of Street. — If a search warrant for intoxicating liquors so misnames one street in the description of the place where the liquors are kept as to make the application of the whole impossible, it will not invalidate the warrant if in other respects the place is truly described, so as to identify it with the place described in the complaint. Downing v. Porter, 8 Gray (Mass.) 539.

2. Com. v. Intoxicating Liquors, 110 Mass. 182.

At Corner of Designated Streets. — Where the complaint described the premises as "near the corner of E. street, in the borough of D., within said town of D., in a wooden building, occupied by J. H., of said D., consisting of a one-story building and a garden thereto attached and occupied as a saloon and place of public resort; also in another wooden building situated between the D. N. office and the said one-story building used as a saloon, and the cellar of the said wooden building described above, and used by the said J. H. as a dwelling house; all of said buildings being within the town and borough of D., and which said liquors are so owned and kept at said place," it is sufficient description of the premises, and the fact that the complaint used the word "place," while the warrant employed the word "places," did not vitiate the warrant for uncertainty. Hornig v. Bailey, 50 Conn. 40. And where the complaint

By Ownership. — The place to be searched may be sufficiently described by giving the ownership of the same.¹

By Name. — The premises may also be sufficiently described by name.²

Building Occupied by Defendant and Another. — Where the complaint and warrant described the building as occupied by the defendant and another person, and the whole building was directed to be searched, the description was held too general.³

By Occupancy, Street, and Number. — The premises may be sufficiently described by naming the occupant and the location as to street,⁴ or street and number.⁵

Repugnant Words of Description in the complaint and in the warrant may be rejected, if without them the description would still be sufficient.⁶

Description of Vehicle. — A complaint for search of a vehicle for liquors need not specify the kind of vehicle, if it be otherwise identified.⁷

Place a Traversable Allegation. — The allegation as to the place or described the premises as "a certain tenement situated on the northeasterly junction of D street and C street, and known as the Portsmouth Ale Depot," in G., and occupied by A as a place of common resort, where liquors were intended to be sold by A in the commonwealth, contrary to law, it was held a sufficient description of the premises to be searched. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 122 Mass. 8.

1. State v. Thompson, 44 Iowa 399.

2. In State v. Twenty-five Packages of Liquor, 38 Vt. 387, the complaint described the premises to be searched for liquor as "the American Hotel and barns, sheds, and other outbuildings adjacent thereto and forming a portion of the premises of said hotel in Burlington," and the court held the description sufficiently specific, it being regarded as a designation of a single establishment. "The word 'place,'" in the statute, said the court, "must receive a reasonable interpretation, not so broad as to encourage a looseness of procedure, nor so narrow as to prevent the search of the entire premises occupied and used by a person in the ordinary course of his business as an innkeeper." See also Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 146 Mass. 509.

In Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 122 Mass. 8, a complaint described the place to be searched as a "certain tenement," known as the Portsmouth Ale Depot, occupied by A.

as a place of common resort, and at the trial there was evidence that the first floor of the building was occupied as a liquor store, but the three upper stories, having an independent stairway from the street, were used as a dwelling house, and the court held that the place directed to be searched was not a dwelling house within the meaning of the statute, and the fact that the upper floors of the building were used as a dwelling house was immaterial.

3. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 110 Mass. 499.

4. State v. Minnehan, 83 Me. 310.

5. Com. v. Intoxicating Liquors, 150 Mass. 164.

Building Bearing Two Numbers. — If a building is known by two numbers, and is as well known by one as by the other, it may be described by either in the complaint and warrant. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 6 Allen (Mass.) 596.

6. Where the complaint described the premises to be searched as formerly owned by A, and the warrant described them as formerly owned by B, the court held that such repugnant words of description might be rejected, there being a further and sufficient description. State v. Bartlett, 47 Me. 388.

7. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 107 Mass. 386, holding that if an unintelligible description of the kind of vehicle be added, such description may be rejected as surplusage.

premises where the liquors to be searched for are kept is a material and traversable allegation, and must be proved.¹

Proof and Variance. — The proof of the premises described to be searched must correspond with reasonable certainty to the description given in the complaint and warrant.²

4. Description of Liquors to Be Seized — Generic Name. — Liquors to be searched for and seized may be described by their generic name.³

Kinds of Liquor. — If the complaint and warrant designate for seizure "certain intoxicating liquors," and describe the particular species under a videlicet, the officer will not be authorized in taking any except those designated by their specific names.⁴

Quantity of Liquor. — If the quantities of liquor to be seized be stated under a videlicet, the officer's authority in seizing the

1. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 117 Mass. 427.

2. Where the premises to be searched were described as occupied as a place of common resort, the description was supported by proof that the place was a shop for the sale of intoxicating liquors, and that persons went there without restraint for the purpose of procuring liquors, although the sales were conducted in an orderly manner. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 107 Mass. 216.

Where the premises were described as a certain building in Boston, "situate in Washington street, and numbered one hundred and ninety-five and one-half on said street in said Boston, and the basement of said building," the description was held to be supported by proof that the basement was under a shop numbered 197 Washington street. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 117 Mass. 427.

Where the liquors were described as kept "in the cellar of a certain one and a half story wooden house," kept by the claimant as a "storehouse," proof that the liquors were kept in the cellar of his dwelling house was held sufficient. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 122 Mass. 14.

Fatal Variance. — Where the complaint and warrant were for keeping and depositing liquors in his shop and the appurtenances thereto, they were not supported by proof that the defendant unlawfully had such liquors upon his person. State v. Therrien, 86 Me. 425.

Where the place described to be searched was a dwelling house and its appurtenances, it was held that the defendant could not be convicted on proof of keeping liquors in a stable which was not used in connection with the dwelling house, the stable being used exclusively by the defendant, while the dwelling house was in the exclusive use of another person. State v. Kelleher, 81 Me. 346.

A complaint describing the liquor as kept and deposited, by some unknown person, in a certain building, kept by such unknown person as a storeroom, was not supported by evidence that the liquors were deposited in a freight depot belonging to a railroad company, and that they were received and deposited there in the regular course of business like other freight, and were not otherwise kept or deposited. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 116 Mass. 26.

3. If the liquor be described as spirituous or intoxicating, it will be sufficient. State v. Robinson, 33 Me. 564.

A complaint and warrant for search and seizure of "intoxicating liquors, to wit, * * * a certain quantity of mixed liquors," sufficiently shows that the mixed liquors are intoxicating, for the word "intoxicating" must be taken as qualifying not only the word "liquors" before the videlicet, but the specific descriptions of different liquors which follow it. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 110 Mass. 416.

4. Mallett v. Stevenson, 26 Conn. 428. It is sufficient to describe the liquors in the search warrant as "certain spirituous and intoxicating liquors, to wit, rum, gin, brandy, whiskey, wine, alcohol, and ale." State v. Whiskey, 54 N. H. 164.

liquor will not be limited to the quantities thus specified.¹ And in alleging the quantity of the liquor to be seized, it is proper to state that it is a certain quantity of intoxicating liquor, being about, but not exceeding, a named quantity.²

5. Requisites of Warrant Generally.—The warrant must contain all of the material allegations expressly required by the statute,³ as, for instance, that probable cause has been shown,⁴ or a recital of the names of the complainants.⁵

Adopting Complaint as Part of Warrant.—The complaint may be adopted as part of the search warrant, and both may be issued together as one instrument.⁶

1. In State v. Brennan's Liquors, 25 Conn. 278, the complaint alleged that certain quantities of spirituous liquors, to wit, ten gallons of brandy, ten gallons of rum, etc., were kept at a certain place by B., and intended by him to be sold in violation of the statute; and by virtue of a warrant which recited the complaint, the officer seized a hogshead containing thirty gallons of rum, and a barrel containing eighteen gallons. The court held that the specification of the kinds and quantities of the liquors under the videlicet was intended as a description of them, and not to limit their quantities, and that the officer in making the seizure was not limited to the quantity specified in the complaint.

2. In re Liquors of Fitzpatrick, 16 R. I. 60; Downing v. Porter, 8 Gray (Mass.) 539, where the description was "a certain quantity of gin, being about and not exceeding one hundred gallons."

Where the liquor was described as "a certain quantity of whiskey, being about and not exceeding fifty gallons," and there was a like description of other kinds of intoxicating liquors, the description was held sufficient, although the quantity of whiskey actually found and seized was only two gallons, and although some of the kinds of liquors described were not found at all. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 13 Allen (Mass.) 52.

3. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 105 Mass. 178. See also Jones v. Fletcher, 41 Me. 254; State v. Spencer, 38 Me. 30.

Direction to Summon Complainant.—In Massachusetts the warrant need not direct that the complainant be summoned as a witness. Downing v. Porter, 8 Gray (Mass.) 539.

4. Com. v. Intoxicating Liquors, 110 Mass. 182; Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 105 Mass. 178, holding that the omission of that averment required by statute deprived the officer of protection in serving the warrant, and distinguishing Holland v. Seagrave, 11 Gray (Mass.) 207, which was decided under a different collocation of statutes, afterwards revised, and held the averment to be unnecessary.

Where the clause "probable cause having been shown for the issuing of this warrant" is inserted at the close of the sentence which directs the officer to enter and search the premises described, it sufficiently shows that the court made an adjudication that there was probable cause, and believed that the complaint on which the warrant issued was true, and it supplies the place of an allegation to that effect in the jurat of the complaint. Com. v. Intoxicating Liquors, 113 Mass. 13.

5. Guenther v. Day, 6 Gray (Mass.) 490, decided under Massachusetts Stat. 1855, c. 215, § 25.

In Hornig v. Bailey, 50 Conn. 40, it was held that a warrant was not rendered invalid for omitting to allege that complaint had been made and by whom made where all this appeared in the complaint and certificate of the justice attached to it, both of which were on the same paper with the warrant and a part of the process.

6. State v. Erskine, 66 Me. 358, holding that in adopting the complaint as part of the warrant and issuing both together the complaint does not lose its identity, but the place and property described in the warrant are described in both.

Authority of Clerk to Issue Warrant.—In Maine, where the complaint stated that the judge was absent from the Direction as to Time of Service. — The warrant need not direct that it be served in the daytime.¹

Directing Search of Several Places. — A search warrant for liquors may direct the search of several different places.²

Direction for Return of Writ. — A direction in the warrant for the officer to "make due return of this warrant" is sufficient.³

Liquors Seized Without Warrant. — Where liquors have been seized without a warrant it is not necessary, in a warrant subsequently issued, to command the officer to search for the liquors already seized.⁴

Amendment. — The warrant may be amended in matter of form in the discretion of the court until final judgment.⁵

6. Officer's Return. — The officer's return of seizure should indicate with sufficient certainty that the liquors seized are those against which the warrant is directed,⁶ and it should appear that they were seized in the place referred to in the complaint and warrant.⁷

Return of Warrant Issued After Seizure. — Where a warrant has been issued after seizure, the officer may make his return thereon that the liquors were seized by virtue of the warrant.⁸

7. Claim to Seized Liquors. — The statutes provide for the appearance of parties claiming an interest in the liquors seized⁹ who are afforded an opportunity to contest the alleged grounds

1. State v. Brennan's Liquors, 25 Conn. 284, where the court said: "The presumption is that the officer will execute his precept at a proper time, and in a proper manner, although it contain no special direction to that effect."

3. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 97 Mass. 62.

4. State v. LeClair, 86 Me. 522.

5. Where the warrant was served by an officer legally authorized to serve it had it been directed to him, the omission of such direction was held to be mere matter of form and amendable until final judgment, especially in view of the Maine statute of amendments. State v. Hall, 78 Me. 37.

6. In State v. Hall, 81 Me. 34, the return was: "By virtue of the within warrant I have seized the following described liquors," and proceeded to describe them the same as in the warrant, but did not allege that they were the same. The court held that "the return clearly imports, if it does not expressly declare, identity." See also State v. Robinson, 33 Me. 564; State v. Twenty-Five Packages of Liquor, 38 Vt. 387.

7. Com. v. Certain Intoxicating Liquors, 6 Allen (Mass.) 596.

The following return was held sufficient: "By virtue of this warrant I have searched the within described premises, and have seized therein * * * the liquors described in this warrant, with the vessels in which they are contained, to wit," describing the liquors. Com. v. Intoxicating Liquors, 113 Mass. 13.

Reference to Warrant. — The premises searched may be sufficiently described in the return of the officer by reference to the warrant. State v. Twenty-Five Packages of Liquor, 38 Vt. 387.

8. State v. Dunphy, 79 Me. 104. See also State v. McCafferty, 63 Me. 223.

Objection Waived. — Filing a claim to liquors which have been libeled is a waiver of defects in the motion and notice. State v. Miller, 48 Me. 576.

of forfeiture.¹ The claimant should state in writing the nature and extent of his claim, and traverse the allegations of the complaint or libel against the liquors.² The state may join issue on the allegation of property in the claimant,³ and the case proceeds to verdict on the issues and judgment for the forfeiture of the liquors or their return to the claimant.

I. IRRIGATION DISTRICTS.—In nearly if not quite all of the states in which irrigation prevails, there are irrigation districts, so called. The proceedings for the organization of these districts should be liberally construed,¹ and such districts being public corporations cannot be collaterally attacked.²

1. Central Irrigation Dist. v. De Lappe, 79 Cal. 351, where it was contended that the proceedings for the organization of irrigation districts should be strictly construed, but the court said: "So far as proceedings for the organization are concerned, we think that a reasonably liberal rule of construction should be adopted to carry out the wise purposes of the law."

2. In Quint v. Hoffman, 103 Cal. 506, the organization of the Central Irrigation District was assailed, it being contended that the supervisors acted

Sufficiency of Bond. — A determination by the board of supervisors as to the sufficiency of the bond presented with the petition for the organization of an irrigation district is conclusive.¹

II. CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS — In General. — Condemnation of lands, waters, water rights, and other property necessary for the purposes of irrigation, is provided for by statute in the various states.

Proper Route. — In condemnation proceedings the fact need not be shown that there is no route except the one adopted, by which the water might be brought on the land.²

Public Use. — The question of public use is one of fact and must be decided by the court before which the action is brought, and its decision is final.³

without their jurisdiction in effecting its organization. The court, however, said: "An irrigation district of this character is a public corporation, formed under a general law, and its object is the promotion of the general welfare. People v. Selma Irrigation Dist., 98 Cal. 206, and cases there cited. Corporations organized under the act of the legislature popularly known as the 'Wright Act' being public corporations, it is immaterial whether they be corporations de jure or de facto." Such corporations cannot be attacked collaterally.

1. In re Madera Irrigation Dist., 92 Cal. 296, where the court said: "One of the objections to the sufficiency of the proceedings taken by the supervisors in authorizing a vote by the electors for the purpose of determining whether the district should be organized is that the bond which accompanied the petition was so defective as to deprive the board of jurisdiction to authorize such election. If it be conceded that the presentation to the board of a bond with the petition is a jurisdictional prerequisite to their consideration of the petition, we do not think that such element of jurisdiction was wanting in the present case. The bond which was presented, although informal, was not invalid, and was of binding obligation upon those who had signed it. In such a case the determination of its sufficiency by the board of supervisors was as conclusive as their determination respecting the pecuniary responsibility of its signers, or the amount for which the bond should be given."

2. Rialto Irrigating Dist. v. Brandon, 103 Cal. 384, holding that the fact that it was possible, as shown by the evidence, to accomplish the purpose sought, by going a long way around and condemning other lands, at a much greater expense, was immaterial.

Sufficiency of Complaint. — In Rialto Irrigating Dist. v. Brandon, 103 Cal. 384, it is said: "The complaint, after alleging plaintiff's organization into an irrigation district and the purpose of its organization, shows that the object sought by the use is to provide water for irrigating lands within the district, particularly describing such lands; that the defendants own the land over which the right of way is sought, particularly describing it, and that such land adjoins plaintiff's district, and constitutes its boundaries on two sides, the north and west; that in order to properly irrigate the lands in the district it is necessary to construct the pipe line, which is particularly described, across the defendants' land at the point designated; and that the right of way is sought for the purposes of establishing and maintaining such pipe line. * * * This was sufficient to show that the use is a public one, and that the taking is necessary to such use." See also Cummings v. Peters, 56 Cal. 596.

Aliso Water Co. v. Baker, 95 Cal. 268, is an action wherein it was determined that the complaint in an action to condemn water rights, lands, etc., must show that the use for which the condemnation is sought is a public one. The complaint in this case was further held defective as not describing with certainty the property sought to be condemned, where it asked for the condemnation of all the water of a creek except that which was used by the riparian owners for domestic purposes and the irrigation of the riparian lands.

3. Lindsay Irrigation Co. v. Mehrrens, 97 Cal. 676.

III. PARTIES TO ACTIONS — 1. In General. — Any person may be a party to a suit involving water rights who is to be affected by the decree, and every person against whom relief is sought is a necessary party.¹

2. Proper Parties. — Any person whose rights are affected by an adjudication of priorities is entitled to be made a party.²

The Company May Appear for Absent Shareholders as well as for those who are present.³

An Assignee may maintain an action for the recovery of water rights; such suit is founded on the legal title.⁴

The Owner in Fee, but Not in Possession, may maintain an action for the wrongful diversion of water.⁵

A Tenant for Years has sufficient possession to enable him to maintain an action for an injunction.⁶

Tenants in Common may maintain a joint action to restrain the diversion of the waters of a stream, as such diversion is in the nature of a nuisance.⁷

2. Nichols v. McIntosh, 19 Colo. 22.

In Charnock v. Higuerra, 111 Cal. 473, it is said "that a final and satisfactory adjustment can never be had without the presence of every person having any right in the stream, and that all the facts which can possibly bear on the question should be laid before the court."

Parties in Equity. — Persons who merely use the waters of a stream, but against whom no relief is sought, and who do not claim adversely to the plaintiff, are proper but not necessary parties. Union Mill, etc., Co. v. Dangberg, 81 Fed. Rep. 75.

3. Riverside Water Co. v. Sargent, 112 Cal. 230, wherein it is said: "It should be said, however, that appellant mistakes in assuming, as it apparently does, that the ditch company can defend only for the interests of those of its shareholders who appear and make proof of their several claims; its right, as trustee for all the shareholders, is to establish its claim to all the water owned and controlled by it for their benefit, whether the individuals to whom the water is apportionable are before the court or not." See also Montrose Canal Co. v. Loutsenhizer Ditch Co., 23 Colo. 233.

4. Smith v. Logan, 18 Nev. 149, where the court said: "Defendants conceded upon the trial that plaintiff was the owner, in his own right, of a portion of the land described in the complaint. Other tracts of land were conveyed to him immediately prior to the commencement of this suit by grantors, claiming to have acquired rights by appropriation to the waters of the creek, in connection with their ownership of the land. There was an oral agreement between grantors and grantee that upon the termination of the litigation the lands should be reconveyed to the grantors, respectively. Upon these facts appellant contends that plaintiff, as to the lands so conveyed, and the water rights appurtenant thereto, is not the real party in interest." The court held that the pleadings did not tender the issue whether the plaintiff held the property in his own right or that of another, and that the suit was founded on the legal title.

5. Heilbron v. Last Chance Water Ditch Co., 75 Cal. 117, holding that an owner in fee of land, having leased it, may, while it is in the possession of the tenant for years, or life, maintain an action against a third party for the diversion of water from a natural stream running through the land, on the ground that it is an injury done to the inheritance.

6. Heilbron v. Fowler Switch Canal Co., 75 Cal. 426, where the plaintiffs had a lease for certain lands bordering upon a stream. This was held to be sufficient possession to enable them to maintain a suit for a perpetual injunction, the injunction of course ceasing to operate on the termination of the estate.

7. Parke v. Kilham, 8 Cal. 78, where

Irrigation District as a Party.— Under the various statutes an irrigation district, though a quasi-public corporation, is a proper party in an action relating to water rights.²

In Action to Enjoin Collection of Assessments.— In such an action for the purpose of paying interest on bonds of a district which are alleged to be invalid, it is unnecessary to make the irrigation district, the agent for the sale of bonds, or the holder of illegal bonds, a party to the suit.³

3. Joinder of Parties—a. PLAINTIFFS. — In equity it is unnecessary for one tenant to join his co-tenant in order to maintain an action to restrain the infringement of his rights in the waters of a stream.⁴

b. DEFENDANTS. — In Colorado if a person actually has "the best right" to the waters of a stream he may join in an action all persons who interfere with his right.⁵

Persons Not Joint Owners.— Where persons divert water from a stream in their several capacity, in such a manner as to injure the plaintiff, they can be united as defendants in a suit in equity, although they make no joint claim to the water,⁶ but this is true in equitable actions only, and does not apply to actions for damages where no equitable relief is asked.⁷

the plaintiffs sued to recover possession of certain water rights. "The injury complained of in this case," says the court, "is in the nature of a nuisance. It is very similar to the obstruction of ancient lights. To turn aside a useful element from the premises is as much a nuisance as to turn upon them a destructive element. In both cases the injury may be equally material. A ditch to carry off water rightfully flowing to a mining claim is as much a nuisance as a dam to flood the premises." See Tuolumne Water Co. v. Chapman, 8 Cal. 392; Lytle Creek Water Co. v. Perdew, 65 Cal. 447.

1. Foreman v. Boyle, 88 Cal. 290, Foreman and Rodgers brought a joint action for an injunction and for damages. The former claimed fifteen inches of water from a certain creek, and had a ditch to carry it off. The latter claimed thirty-five inches of water from the same creek, and also had a separate ditch to carry it off. The defendant diverted the water from the creek at a point above the heads of the plaintiffs' ditches. The court held that Foreman and Rodgers were not tenants in common, as they had no common interest in the damages, one being injured much more than the other, and therefore they could not maintain a joint action for damages.

3. Hughson v. Crane, 115 Cal. 404, holding that the collector was the only necessary party defendant.

If it is the duty of the executive officers of the state and the water division and irrigation district to enforce the plaintiff's rights, they may be properly joined as defendants. Farmers' Independent Ditch Co. v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 22 Colo. 514.

6. Union Mill, etc., Co. v. Dangberg, 81 Fed. Rep. 75.

7. Miles v. Du Bey, 15 Mont. 340, which was an action against several defendants, the plaintiff demanding damages for the wrongful diversion of water to the injury of plaintiff's crops of hay, grain, vegetables, etc. The defendants filed separate answers, and after the plaintiff's testimony was in moved the court to grant a nonsuit, on the ground that the defendants were sued jointly, while the evidence did not

IV. JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION.—Under the code practice an action to recover damages for injury to water rights may be properly joined with a cause of action to obtain an injunction,¹ but causes of action for damages, which are several, cannot be joined with causes of action for an injunction, which are common.²

V. PETITION OR COMPLAINT — 1. Sufficient Averments.—A complaint which avers the plaintiff's ownership of land, diversion of water to and upon it, the need of such water for agricultural purposes, and actual application of the water to the land for such purposes, sufficiently shows a right in the plaintiff.³ Other cases in which the sufficiency of allegations under particular circumstances was determined are cited in the notes.⁴

show that the defendants acted jointly in diverting the waters. The court granted the nonsuit, and the decision on appeal was affirmed.

1. Watterson v. Saldunbehere, 101 Cal. 107.

2. Foreman v. Boyle, 88 Cal. 290, where two persons were injured by the diversion of water from a stream, and the court held that it was proper for them to join in an application for the purpose of obtaining an injunction, as such diversion was in the nature of a nuisance, but that they could not properly unite in an action for damages, nor join an action for damages with an action for an injunction; there was no community of interest. See Barham v. Hostetter, 67 Cal. 272; Blaisdell v. Stephens, 14 Nev. 17.

Miller v. Highland Ditch Co., 87 Cal. 430, is a case where the plaintiff was the owner of a tract of land located a short distance below the mouth of a canon. The natural flow of water down the canon was dissipated before it reached his land. The defendants, by means of three different ditches, turned foreign water into this canon, causing the plaintiff's land to be overflowed, the sand and débris thus brought down doing great damage. Each ditch was owned and operated by part only of the defendants, who had no interest in the other ditches, and there was no concert of action. This action was brought for an injunction and for damages against all of the defendants jointly. The court held that such an action could not be maintained as there was an improper joinder.

Uniting Two or More Causes of Action in the Same Complaint.—In Nevada County, etc., Canal Co. v. Kidd, 37 Cal. 282, it was determined that where parties entered upon a dam site and ousted the owners, and likewise wrongfully diverted the water which was claimed by the owners of the dam and canal, there were two separate causes of action, and consequently they must be separately stated in the complaint.

3. Salazar v. Smart, 12 Mont. 395, where the complaint alleged that the plaintiff was "the owner of and in the actual occupancy, possession, and enjoyment" of certain lands, which lands "and each and all thereof require water for the purpose of raising and growing thereon agricultural crops;" that plaintiff diverted water onto said lands, "and used and employed the same upon the said lands for agricultural purposes ever since, from year to year, uninterruptedly," and that the defendants wrongfully diverted said water. The court held these allegations sufficient.

4. Action to Quiet Title.—In Hulsmann v. Todd, 96 Cal. 228, the allegations in the complaint were: that there was a wrongful diversion by the defendants and a threatened continuation thereof, and "that the plaintiff is informed and believes that the defendants, and each of them, claim some interest in and to the waters of said stream adverse to plaintiff's title thereto." The court held that this complaint was not open to a general demurrer and entitled the plaintiff to some relief.

A complaint in an action to quiet title, which alleges ownership of the land, appropriation for beneficial uses, and that the defendants "entered upon said stream above said land, and above the head of the ditch of plaintiff, and made some claim to the whole of the water flowing in said stream, and are making preparations to divert and use said water," is not open to a general demurrer. Perego v. Sellick, 79 Cal. 568; Standart v. Round Valley Water Co., 77 Cal. 399. In Perego v. Sellick, 79 Cal. 568, it is also held that it is not necessary, in an action to quiet title to a water right, that there should be an actual interference with the plaintiff's right. The assertion of an adverse claim is all that is required.

In Harris v. Harrison, 93 Cal. 676, the allegations in the petition were substantially that the plaintiffs were owners of land; that a stream of water flowed naturally to and on the said land; that by reason of the plaintiff's riparian ownership they had the right to use said water, "also the right to divert from its natural channel, and to use for irrigating and domestic purposes, all the waters of that certain stream, etc." The court held this complaint good in the absence of a special demurrer.

In Action for Damages. — Jerrett v. Mahan, 20 Nev. 89, was an action to recover damages for the wrongful diversion of the waters of a certain creek, and for an injunction to restrain the further diversion. The defendant did not claim to be the riparian proprietor of the stream, but did claim the waters by prior appropriation and prescription. Each party asked for affirmative relief. The defendant objected that the plaintiff's petition did not state a cause of action, not alleging riparian ownership in the plaintiff. But the court held that "plaintiff's prior appropriation and defendant's diversion" were sufficient averments.

Mere Users of Water. — In an action by one irrigation company against another, it is unnecessary to set out in the complaint the names of the users of water from plaintiff's ditch, or any other facts relating to their individual appropriation. Farmers' Independent Ditch Co. v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 22 Colo. 514.

Title by Land Patent. — Conkling v. Pacific Imp. Co., 87 Cal. 296, was an action by one riparian owner to enjoin another from a wrongful diversion of the waters of a stream. The plaintiff claimed the land under a pre-emption right from the government, and held a receiver's certificate therefor. The court held that it was unnecessary to allege that the lands were subject to pre-emption, and that he was a qualified pre-emptor; that "it was enough to allege that he was the holder of the receiver's receipt and in possession thereunder."

In a Suit for an Injunction the complaint must allege that the injury to the plaintiff is continuing and threatening to be continued. Ball v. Kehl, 87 Cal. 505; Coker v. Simpson, 7 Cal. 340; Tuolumne Water Co. v. Chapman, 8 Cal. 392.

Mandamus. — It was held in Merrill v. Southside Irrigation Co., 112 Cal. 426, that the averments in a petition for mandamus were sufficient if they declared, 1st, the object of the organization, whether or not it holds itself out as furnishing water for irrigation purposes; 2d, the duty and the legal liability of the defendant to furnish such water to the complainants; and, 3d, a prayer for relief.

In Price v. Riverside Land, etc., Co., 56 Cal. 431, it was held that the prayer and the judgment alike should be for specific and certain relief.

Action to Recover Assessment. — In Tregea v. Owens, 94 Cal. 317, it was held that in an action to recover an assessment paid under duress it was proper for the plaintiff to allege that such an assessment was made without a special election of the board of directors, in order to establish the illegality of the assessment.

1. Farmers' High Line Canal, etc., Co. v. Southworth, 13 Colo. 111, wherein the court said: "It is well established that no mere diversion of water from a stream will constitute the constitutional appropriation. To make it such it must be applied to some beneficial use, and in case of irrigation it must be actually applied to the land before the appropriation is complete." See also Schilling v. Rominger, 4 Colo. 100; Sieber v. Frink, 7 Colo. 149.

In Thomas v. Guiraud, 6 Colo. 533, it is said: "The true test of appropriation of water is the successful application thereof to the beneficial use

Action by Stockholders. — It is not sufficient to allege merely the organization of a company for irrigation purposes, in an action by the stockholders against the directors; that the company is organized to sell water for profit, must be alleged as well.¹

VI. ANSWER — Estoppel. — It has been held that, under the code practice, estoppel by reason of the plaintiff's consent to an alleged injurious diversion of water may be proved under a general denial.²

Adverse Possession — Prescription. — If a defendant claims the right to the use of water by adverse possession, he must plead the designed, and the method of diverting or carrying the same * * * is immaterial." See also Wheeler v. Northern Colorado Irrigation Co., 10 Colo. 582.

In Crawford v. Minnesota, etc., Land, etc., Co., 15 Mont. 153, the complaint alleged that the defendant sold the plaintiff certain land on which the defendant was constructing an irrigating ditch. The defendant had represented that the right to the use of water from the irrigation ditch inured to the purchasers. The plaintiff entered into possession before the canal was completed. It was not alleged in the petition that the defendant had agreed to sell or grant any interest in the irrigating canal, nor was there any such grant in the deed of transfer. The court held that the complaint failed to show that the canal or any interest therein ever became or was appurtenant to the land sold by the defendant, and that the complaint did not state a cause of action sufficient to prevent the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff's use of the water.

In Durkee v. Cota, 74 Cal. 313, the complaint was held open to demurrer because the purpose of the water right was not stated.

Variance. — In Greer v. Heiser, 16 Colo. 306, a complainant claimed priority for a certain ditch. The allegations were that the ditch was constructed in April, 1875; that it had a width of one and one-quarter feet on the bottom, and two feet on the top, and was eighteen inches deep, with a fall of thirty inches to the half mile, and was eighty-nine rods in length, irrigating thirty or thirty-five acres; that the work was continued from the start with due diligence and without intermission. The proof was that the ditch, the dimensions of which did not correspond to those of the one set out in the petition, was not constructed until 1887, and that a smaller ditch, with a capacity for irrigating fifteen or twenty acres, was built in 1874 or 1875. The court held that this variance between the allegations and the proof was fatal, setting aside a decree which fixed the date of priority at April 30, 1874.

Injunction. — The Farmers' Independent Ditch Co. v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 3 Colo. App. 255, was an action for an injunction in which the complaint was held demurrable because the names and number of the shareholders, the amount of the land owned by them, and the necessity for water were not shown.

In Heintzen v. Binnering, 79 Cal. 5, it was held that an allegation that "immediately prior to the diversion of said water" the plaintiff "had the undisputed usufructuary right to the use of all the waters," does not establish a right to the water by adverse possession. It does not show sufficient possession to stand for the basis of an injunction.

1. Applegarth v. McQuiddy, 77 Cal. 408, where the court said: "Because the complaint alleged that the corporation was organized for the purpose of irrigation, would not of itself compel the presumption that the corporation was organized for the purpose of selling the water in its canal or ditch for irrigation purposes. It would be entirely legal for an irrigating canal and ditch company to be incorporated to distribute water gratuitously."

2. Churchill v. Baumann, 95 Cal. 541, 104 Cal. 369. But see, on this point, and also as to the rule at common law, article ESTOPPEL, vol. 8, pp. 6, 7.

In Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, it is held that a riparian proprietor is not estopped from objecting to the unlawful diversion of the waters of a stream, by reason of his laches.

same in his answer, or evidence introduced to support it will be excluded.¹ And if a right by prescription to divert water is pleaded, it is not a bar to pleading a greater right of a similar nature.²

Answer as an Admission.—An answer that defendants "wrongfully and illegally" diverted certain water is an admission of the fact of diversion.³

VII. AMENDMENTS.—The court may, in its discretion, permit amendments to the petition in cases involving irrigation as in other cases,⁴ and a defendant may generally set up as many defenses as he has. Hence it is proper for the defendant to amend by omitting the averments set out in the original answer and make entirely new averments.⁵

VIII. DECREES AND JUDGMENTS.—The language of a decree in cases involving water rights, as elsewhere, must be exact or it will be fatally defective.⁶

Modification of Decree.—A decree by a referee under the statute, as to priority of water rights, may be modified for error in his judgment upon the weight of the testimony.⁷

IX. MANDAMUS AND INJUNCTION.—Mandamus is an appropriate remedy to compel the delivery of water for the purposes of irrigation.⁸

1. American Co. v. Bradford, 27 Cal. 361.

2. Lillis v. Emigrant Ditch Co., 95 Cal. 553.

In California.—A prescriptive right is sufficiently pleaded if the section of the Code under which such right was acquired is set up. Alhambra Addition Water Co. v. Richardson, 72 Cal. 598.

3. Harris v. Shontz, 1 Mont. 212.

4. Bean v. Stoneman, 104 Cal. 49. See generally article AMENDMENTS, vol. 1, p. 458.

5. Gould v. Stafford, 101 Cal. 32.

6. Smith v. Phillips, 6 Utah 376, wherein it was held that where it is agreed between the parties that the defendant has an interest in the waters, but there is a question as to how great an interest he has, a decree that the defendant have the use of "one good irrigation stream of water" for a specified length of time is void for uncertainty.

In Riverside Water Co. v. Sargent, 112 Cal. 230, the court said: "The decisions of this court establish that in cases like the present the findings and judgment must fix the extent of the superior right, viz., the quantity of water to be allowed to the party whose claim is paramount; otherwise the judgment fails to attain the certainty necessary to an estoppel upon the main subject of the litigation." See also Dougherty v. Haggin, 56 Cal. 522; Alhambra Addition Water Co. v. Richardson, 72 Cal. 604; Lakeside Ditch Co. v. Crane, 80 Cal. 182; Blanc v. Paymaster Min. Co., 95 Cal. 533.

In Barrows v. Fox, 98 Cal. 63, it was decreed that an appropriator could not divert from a stream any more water than would pass through a pipe of a certain size, being the amount required to irrigate his land; but since he used an open ditch the amount of water that actually reached his land was less than the amount diverted at the head of the ditch. In view of this fact, the court held the decree erroneous as not having sufficient foundation.

Amendment of Decree.—In Colorado the court cannot amend a decree after the expiration of the time set within which a re-argument or review of an adjudication under the irrigation act may be had. Child v. Whitman, 7 Colo. App. 117.

7. Dorr v. Hammond, 7 Colo. 79.

8. Combs v. Agricultural Ditch Co., 17 Colo. 146; Price v. Riverside Land, etc., Co., 56 Cal. 431.

If an owner of land grant a right of way to an irrigation company in consideration of the privilege of purchas-

Injunction. — The equitable remedy of injunction is the appropriate remedy in actions in which both parties claim the prior right to the use of waters. It is unnecessary to aver or prove actual damages if it appears that the diversion is wrongful.¹ In order to secure an injunction the plaintiff must show more than the mere deprivation of water;² he must be in a position to use the water,³ and a legal injury must be caused by the irrigation or diversion.⁴ Before a perpetual injunction will ing water from it, mandamus will lie to enforce such agreement. Merrill v. Southside Irrigation Co., 112 Cal. 426.

In Wheeler v. Northern Colorado Irrigation Co., 10 Colo. 582, it was held that where a customer tenders the rate which is established and complies with other reasonable regulations, and the company has water undisposed of, mandamus will lie to enforce his demand.

In Wilterding v. Green, (Idaho, 1896) 45 Pac. Rep. 134, it is held that mandamus will not lie to force an irrigation company to furnish water to a party who tenders an apparently reasonable amount for its use, where the sufficiency of such amount is denied, and the company proposes other terms which are not accepted, and the courts have not passed upon what are "reasonable terms."

1. Conkling v. Pacific Imp. Co., 87 Cal. 296.

In Moore v. Clear Lake Water Works, 68 Cal. 146, the court said: "Here the plaintiff complains of a continuous wrongful act, and consequent infringement of his rights, and therefore prays for an injunction to stay such continuous injury, and it is only in a court of equity, and by means of an injunction, that an adequate remedy can be had. And it was not necessary for the plaintiff to aver or prove actual damages. The interposition of a court of equity was required to prevent defendants' wrongful acts from ripening into a right, and on that ground alone the interference of a court of equity was properly asked and granted."

Other Instances of Use of Injunctions. — In Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, one of the leading cases on irrigation, the court holds that a riparian proprietor is entitled to an injunction, for a threatened wrongful diversion of water, without recovering a judgment in damages. See also Harris v. Shontz, 1 Mont. 212; Brown v. Ashley, 16 Nev. 311; Blaisdell v. Stephens, 14 Nev. 17.

A riparian proprietor may restrain the diversion of any water from a stream by one who has brought water into it from a foreign source, unless the defendant shows that he has not taken from the stream more water than he turned in. Wilcox v. Hausch, 64 Cal. 461.

When one person abandons a ditch and the land is owned by another, the former can be enjoined from opening up the ditch at a later time. Smith v. Phillips, 6 Utah 376.

2. Ball v. Kehl, 87 Cal. 505, holding that in addition to the finding that there was a deprivation of water, it must be found how long the deprivation continued, or whether the defendant threatened to continue it.

3. In Nevada County, etc., Canal Co. v. Kidd, 37 Cal. 282, when other parties used the water while the dam and ditch of the plaintiff were in process of construction, but were not yet in a condition to appropriate the water, the court held that such use of the water was no injury, and not a ground for legal or equitable relief.

4. Heilbron v. 76 Land, etc., Co., 80 Cal. 189.

The complainant who has rights in the water of a stream cannot enjoin interference with such waters, when the continuous flow would not be sufficient to afford him any beneficial use. Union Mill, etc., Co. v. Dangberg, 81 Fed. Rep. 75.

One having a junior water right cannot maintain an injunction to prevent the storage of water, if he does not at the same time show that such storage prevents him from having more water when needed. Larimer, etc., Reservoir Co. v. Cache La Poudre Irrigating Co., 8 Colo. App. 237.

In Modoc Land, etc., Co. v. Booth, 102 Cal. 151, it is said: "A riparian owner ought not to be permitted to invoke the power of a court of equity to restrain the diversion of water above him by a non-riparian owner, when the amount diverted would not be granted, the rights of the parties and the injury to be redressed must be conclusively established, as fully as if a jury had passed upon them.¹

be used by him, and would cause no loss or injury to him or his land, present or prospective, but would greatly benefit the party diverting it."

1. Larimer, etc., Reservoir Co. v. Cache La Poudre Irrigating Co., 8 Colo. App. 237, wherein the court said: "In this case no facts were established by actual test or experiments. The evidence was theoretical, — based upon hypothetical questions. No facts were demonstrated to show any diminution by reason of the diversion and use. No rule of equity is more conclusive and better established than that, to warrant a perpetual injunction, the right of the party, and the injury to be redressed, must clearly and conclusively be established, as fully as if found by the special verdict of a jury. An indispensable constitutional requirement is 'that the water must be applied to a beneficial use.' There is no violation shown of this fundamental requirement in this case."

In Ophir Silver Min. Co. v. Carpenter, 4 Nev. 534, an injunction was asked merely as ancillary to a claim of legal right. In such a case the parties have the right to have the legal issues determined by a jury before a final injunction can issue.

I. INTRODUCTION AND SCOPE OF ARTICLE. — This article is designed to deal with questions of practice relating to the submission to a jury of special issues of fact in actions, suits or proceedings in which the main trial is by the court, either by the consent of the parties or in pursuance of the law applicable to the case. Matters relating to issues in actions at law generally, in which there is regularly a jury trial, are not here treated.¹ Issues in equity cases have been taken as the basis, from which standpoint the variances in other cases are pointed out.

II. DEFINITION, NATURE, AND OBJECT — 1. Definition. — An issue to a jury, as the term is used in this article, is a question of fact upon which the parties are at issue in an action or suit properly triable by the court, which has been submitted to the jury for determination either because the court is incompetent or unwilling or is prohibited by practice or statute to decide it.²

2. Nature — a. FEIGNED ISSUES. — Formerly in England and in this country, and still in some of the states, the practice was to use what are called feigned issues.³ For this purpose a series of pleadings is arranged between the parties, as if an action at law had been brought. Usually, in this action, the plaintiff by a fiction declares that he has laid a wager with the defendant in a certain sum, that a certain fact is so; then avers that it is so, and demands the sum. The defendant admits the feigned wager, but

2. See 1 Bouv. Law Dict., titles Feigned Issue and Issue.

3. This is still the practice in most of the states retaining the distinction between procedure in law and in equity. 1 Bouv. Law. Dict., tit. Feigned Issue.

It Is Called a Feigned Issue for the reason that its object is not the establishment of a legal right on which judgment should regularly follow, but the ascertainment by a formal trial of some issue of fact arising in another cause and material to the decision of the latter. American Dock, etc., Co. v. Public Schools, 37 N. J. Eq. 266.

The Name Is a Misnomer, inasmuch as the issue itself is upon a real and material point in question between the parties, and the circumstances only are fictitious. 1 Bouv. Law Dict., tit. Issue.

Origin. — These feigned issues seem borrowed from the sponsio judicialis of the Romans. 3 Black. Com. 452. It is a mode of procedure adopted by the civil law and by courts of law as well as courts of equity as a means of having some questions of fact arising incidentally and to be made the foundation of some order or decree determined by the verdict of a jury. American Dock, etc., Co. v. Public Schools, 37 N. J. Eq. 266.

avers the fact alleged by the plaintiff to be untrue. Issue thereupon being joined, the court directs it to be tried by a jury.¹

The Fiction of a Wager Not Absolutely Necessary. — If practicable, formal pleadings in an ordinary action at law may be resorted to, and the issue be in such form as to present the real subject matter in controversy, without losing its character as a feigned issue.²

b. ABOLITION OF FEIGNED AND SUBSTITUTION OF DIRECT ISSUES. — At the present time, in England and in a number of the United States, feigned issues are abolished or disused under statutes and reformed codes of procedure, and there has been substituted therefor a simple order for the trial by jury of the controverted facts so to be tried.³

Feigned Issue by Direction of Court — Contempt to Proceed Without Such Direction. — The feigned issue is proceeded with by direction of the court before which the main question is being litigated, and it is contempt of the court in which the action is brought to bring such an action except under the direction of the same court. 1 Bouv. Law Dict., titles Feigned Issue and Issue; Hoskins v. Berkeley, 4 T. R. 402.

3. In Indiana, under Rev. Stat. 1843, § 62, p. 841, feigned issues were dispensed with, but it was provided that whenever a question arises which, according to the usage, practice, and discretion of courts of chancery, ought to be referred to a jury for trial, the court may cause a comprehensive note and entry of the matter so to be tried to be made and the verdict of a jury to be taken for the information of the court. Lapreese v. Falls, 7 Ind. 695.

In New York, by the Code of Procedure, § 72, substantially re-enacted in Code Civ. Pro., § 971, it was provided that "feigned issues are abolished; and instead thereof, in cases where the power now exists to order a feigned issue, * * * an order for the trial may be made, stating distinctly and plainly the question of fact to be tried, and such order shall be the only authority necessary for a trial." See O'Brien v. Bowes, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 106; Hatch v. Peugnet,

The order for trial by jury of specific questions of fact authorized by section 72 of the Code of Procedure, was borrowed from chancery practice, and in terms introduced as a substitute for the proceeding by feigned issue. The language of this section confined it by implication to actions of an equitable nature, but section 254 authorized the same proceeding in all actions not required to be tried by a jury, irrespective of their character. Vermilyea v. Palmer, 52 N. Y. 474.

Issue of Adultery in Divorce Cases. — By the Code of Civ. Pro., § 970, the trial in an action for divorce upon the ground of adultery is by a jury as matter of right. The method before the Code was to send feigned issues to a jury for trial, for which the present statute has provided as a substitute that in such cases the party may upon notice apply to the court for an order directing the questions of fact raised upon the face of the issues to be distinctly and plainly stated for trial by jury, and upon the hearing of the application the court must cause the issues to be distinctly and plainly stated. Conderman v. Conderman, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 181.

The Practice under the Foregoing Code Provisions substituting for the feigned issue a simple order for trial is in the main the same as prevailed under the former system. See Hatch v. Peugnet, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 189; Brinkley v. Brinkley, 56 N. Y. 192; Carroll v. Deimel, 95 N. Y. 255; Randall v. Randall, 114 N. Y. 499; Vermilyea v. Palmer, 52 N. Y. 471; Acker v. Leland, 109 N. Y. 5.

In South Carolina the Code Civ. Pro., § 92, provides that "feigned issues shall not be allowed, and instead

3. Object. — Except in cases where the parties have a right to a trial by jury, the object of issues is to satisfy and inform the conscience of the chancellor or court upon matters of fact, and therefore, if a satisfactory decision can be arrived at without the aid of a jury, a decree may in general be rendered without sending an issue to them.¹

III. IN EQUITY CASES — 1. Generally. — It will be seen that issues to the jury are submitted in other than equitable cases and proceedings.² But from their frequency they have been taken as the basis upon which this subject has been analyzed. This section is intended to cover only the general power and discretion of the court and the rights of parties in the submission of issues, and for other matters relating to the subject the various divisions of this article are to be consulted.³

2. In England. — Formerly, where there arose a considerable controversy upon a question of fact it was usual for the court of chancery to direct an issue to be tried before a jury at common law, but if a mixed question of law and fact was involved it directed an action, or retained the bill in order that an action might be brought.⁴ Under both the former and present practice, except in case of an heir-at-law or a rector or vicar, in which cases the submission of issues was practically a matter of right,⁵ it is entirely a matter of discretion whether an issue shall be submitted or a jury called. If the court thinks it best that a question should be tried before a jury, a jury can be had; but if, in thereof, or when a question of fact not put in issue by the pleadings is to be tried by a jury, an order for the trial may be made, stating distinctly and plainly the question of fact to be tried; and such order shall be the only authority necessary for a trial." 4. Fernie v. Young, L. R. 1 H. L. 78. In Pomfret v. Smith, 4 Bro. P. C. 700, it was said that courts of equity have for many years past adopted a practice which has been extremely beneficial to the suitors, for where they see the dispute between the parties is a mere question at law, and must be ultimately determined there, instead of putting the parties to a diffuse examination of witnesses in equity they have by interlocutory orders either directed an issue or given the party the liberty to bring an action within a limited time, and reserve the consideration of all further questions till after the verdict; and after a verdict has been found, it has been the uniform practice of the court for the party in whose favor the verdict has been obtained, to set down the cause for the further directions reserved by such interlocutory order.

the opinion of the court, a trial without a jury is preferable, neither party can claim a jury as a matter of right.¹

3. In the United States. — a. IN GENERAL. — It will be observed by the two following subsections that in the vast majority of equity cases in this country, all issues of fact may be decided by the court or in its discretion submitted to a jury. In some states and cases, however, the parties have been given a right to a jury trial.²

b. IN THE FEDERAL COURTS. — In the federal courts the submission of issues in an equity case is discretionary with the court.³

c. IN THE VARIOUS STATES. — In Alabama, Arizona, and Arkansas, in the absence of statutes to the contrary, an issue to a jury, in an equity case, to try disputed questions of fact, has been held to be a matter within the discretion of the chancellor or judge.⁴

In Davis v. Oliver, 1 Ridgw. P. C. 9, it is said that courts of equity should send matters of fact to be tried by a jury. And in St. Paul v. Morris, 9 Ves. Jr. 155, the court said that it is the right of the court of chancery, to be very tenderly exercised, to decide upon facts without an issue.

2. The right of a party in certain states to a jury trial in equity cases generally is discussed infra, III. 3. c. In the Various States; and the right of a party to a jury trial of the issues in certain equitable cases and proceedings will be found cross-referred from the various states and treated infra, IX. In Particular Proceedings or for Determination of Particular Facts.

Under the statutory provisions of Alabama, relating to issues out of chancery, declaring that the court "must direct an issue to be made up whenever it is necessary for any fact to be tried by a jury" (Code, § 3890), although there may be cases in which, the evidence being plain and clear, it might be a reversible error for the chancellor to order the issue to be submitted to the jury, the question must necessarily be submitted to his discretion when the evidence is indeterminate or conflicting; and where the record shows that "the plaintiff's right of recovery depended largely on in-

In California and Colorado the court may or may not, in its discretion, refer issues to a jury in an equitable action.¹

In Delaware, except as controlled by statute,² the submission to the jury of issues of fact is discretionary.³

In Georgia all equity cases are tried by a special jury, under the direction of the court as to the law, and the judge cannot decide the facts and cannot give his opinion to the jury upon the preponderance of evidence.⁴

Under the California Code Civ. Pro., it becomes the duty of the court to try and determine the issues raised by the pleadings in an equity case, subject to its power to order any or all of such issues to be tried by a jury. Warring v. Freear, 64 Cal. 54.

Colorado. — Abbott v. Monti, 3 Colo. 561. See Rice v. Goodwin, 2 Colo. App. 267.

The Colorado Code, § 154, provides as follows: "An issue of law shall be tried by the court, unless it be referred as provided in the title in regard to reference. In actions for the recovery of specific real or personal property, with or without damages, or for money claimed as due on contract, or as damages for breach of contract, or for injuries, an issue of fact must be tried by a jury, unless a jury trial is waived or a reference is ordered as provided in the code. In other cases issues of fact must be tried by the court, subject to its power to order any such issue to be tried by a jury, or to be referred to a referee, as provided in this code." The question whether an issue of fact must be tried by a jury or by the court is not to be determined from the nature of the issue, but from the character of the action in which such issue is joined. The code abolished forms of actions, but did not undertake to do away with the distinction between legal and equitable causes of action. The code provision recognizes the distinction which formerly existed between actions at law and bills in equity, and it has been held that the practice of trying chancery cases to the court without a jury is clearly established by the provisions of the section above quoted. Danielson v. Gude, 11 Colo. 87.

2. Construction of Statute. — But the statute which directs issues of fact in a chancery cause to be tried at the bar of the superior court must be understood as referring only to issues of fact which involve the merits of the case and are material to the decision of the cause, and the chancellor is not bound to order issues to be tried by a jury unless they are thus material. Waters v. Comly, 3 Harr. (Del.) 117, affirming 2 Del. Ch. 72. See infra, VIII. 4. Materiality of Issues.

Union of Judge and Jury. — "This assumption, that there is a union in the judge and jury of all the powers of a court of chancery, involves also this other and further consequence, to wit, that the judge may and indeed ought to unite with the jury, in determining upon the facts; and that they can no more decree as to them without his concurrence, than he can decree on the law without their concurrence. That there [have] prevailed in Georgia opinions thus extreme, we are not ignorant. To these opinions we can give no countenance. We hold that in equity, as at law, the province of the jury is to try the facts; and that the judge has no more right in equity to pass upon the facts, than he has at law; and that it is the province of the judge, in equity as

In Illinois, in cases properly cognizable in equity, under any of the original heads of chancery jurisdiction, it is entirely discretionary with the court whether it will or will not submit issues of fact to a jury.¹ But it seems that where chancery jurisdiction has been conferred by statute, in a case cognizable at law before the adoption of the constitution, to which trial by jury attached, the court should, if asked, allow the issues in the chancery case to be tried by jury and thus give effect to the constitutional provision.²

In Indiana, prior to the Revised Statutes of 1881, a court of chancery might take the opinion of a jury as to any of the facts in controversy between the parties whenever it thought proper to do so.³ But, by the statutes just mentioned,⁴ it was provided that issues of law and issues of fact in causes which, prior to the 18th day of June, 1852, were of exclusive equitable jurisdiction, shall be tried by the court;⁵ and that issues of fact in at law, to adjudge the law; and that the jury have no more power to pass upon the law of the case in equity than they have at law." Mounce v. Byars, 11 Ga. 185.

Right Not Constitutional but Statutory. — The interposition of juries in the trial of chancery cases in Georgia is purely a matter of legislative regulation, and originated in the Judiciary Act of 1799. It is not a constitutional right or one guaranteed by Magna Charta. Mahan v. Cavender, 77 Ga. 118.

Evidence Voluminous and Conflicting — Insanity. — In cases where the evidence is voluminous and conflicting, it is eminently proper that an issue should be framed and submitted to a jury, and such practice should be adopted by the courts in all cases involving the question of insanity. Guild v. Hull, 127 Ill. 523. See infra, VIII. 2. Questions Relating to Doubt, Evidence, Disputed Facts, etc.; and infra, IX. 16. Insanity.

Constitution and Burnt Records Act. — But the constitution, preserving the right of trial by jury in all cases where that right had existed before its adoption, does not extend the right to cases in equity, but confines it to cases at law. Therefore, the act known as the Burnt Records Act is not unconstitutional in depriving a party of a trial by jury. See Heacock v. Hosmer, 109 Ill. 245; Heacock v. Lubuke, 107 Ill. 396; Harding v. Fuller, 141 Ill. 308; Bertrand v. Taylor, 87 Ill. 235; Mulvey v. Gibbons, 87 Ill. 367; *Gage v. Rev. Stat. Indiana 1843, p. 841, § 62, did not change this rule. It dispensed with feigned issues, and provided that whenever a question arose which according to the usage, practice, and discretion of courts of chancery, ought to be referred to a jury for trial, the court might cause a comprehensive note and entry of the matter so to be tried to be made; and the verdict of the jury should be taken for the information of the court. Lapreese v. Falls, 7 Ind. 695.

A Jury Is Not a Matter of Right in an equity case, but a circuit court sitting as a court of chancery may take the opinion of a jury upon a single question of fact. Evansville, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 30 Ind. 209. See also Lapreese v. Falls, 7 Ind. 695.

all other cases shall be triable as the same were triable at the date of the enactment.¹ The same statute further provides that in case of the joinder of causes of action or defenses which, prior to June 18, 1852, were of exclusive equitable jurisdiction, with causes of action or defenses which, prior to said date, were designated as actions at law and triable by jury, the former shall be triable by the court, and the latter by a jury unless waived;² provided, that in all cases triable by the court as directed by the statute, the court, in its discretion, for its information, may cause any question of fact to be tried by a jury, or the court may refer any such cause to a master commissioner for hearing and report.³

In Iowa the chancellor might formerly refer a doubtful question of fact to a jury or decide it himself, in his discretion.⁴ But it seems that the Code of 1873 changed the practice, and that issues of fact in equitable actions should now be tried by the

An Action to Foreclose a Mechanic's Lien is likewise equitable, in which it is proper to deny a jury trial of the issues. Albrecht v. C. C. Foster Lumber Co., 126 Ind. 318.

A Suit on Notes, and to Set Aside a Conveyance as Fraudulent, is triable by the court without a jury, though the court has power to submit issues to them. Hornbrook v. Powell, 146 Ind. 39.

1. Only in Suits That Were Formerly of Exclusive Equitable Jurisdiction is a jury not demandable by either party for the trial of issues of fact. Robertson v. McPherson, 4 Ind. App. 595.

The Statutory Action to Quiet Title to Land was not an action of exclusive equitable jurisdiction, prior to 18th June, 1852, and in such case the issues are properly triable by jury. Puterbaugh v. Puterbaugh, 131 Ind. 288. See Trittip v. Morgan, 99 Ind. 269; Spencer v. Robbins, 106 Ind. 581; Kitts v. Willson, 106 Ind. 147; Johnson v. Taylor, 106 Ind. 89; Martin v. Martin, 118 Ind. 227. See also infra, IX. 5. Quieting Title, and Partition.

An Action by a Surety Against a Co-surety for Contribution is not such a cause of action as would have been, prior to the 18th of June, 1852, of exclusive equitable jurisdiction, and allegations in the complaint that some of the sureties were insolvent would not convert the cause of action into one of that character. In such a case the action is properly triable by a jury, and the court does not err in awarding a jury trial. Michael v. Allbright, 126 Ind. 172.

It is discretionary with the court whether any question shall be submitted to a jury, and it should only submit questions calling for information which may be more certainly gained through a jury. The object of such trial, like that of a feigned issue, is to satisfy the conscience of the court. The trial is by the court, and therefore the trial of questions of fact by a jury is not an incident. The difference between courts of law and courts of equity, in the mode of production of evidence, which once furnished one reason for sending questions of fact to a jury, no longer exists in Indiana. On the trial of questions of fact before the court, whether in actions at law or suits in equity, the witnesses may be examined and cross-examined orally within the presence of the court. Pence v. Garrison, 93 Ind. 345.

court and not submitted to a jury.¹

In Kansas, Kentucky, and Maryland the general rule before stated prevails.²

In Massachusetts, though a question has been made as to the constitutional right of trial by jury in an equity case, yet it seems

1. Frank v. Hollands, 81 Iowa 164. And of course, under the code it is not error to refuse to submit to the jury certain issues in an equity case. Shontz v. Evans, 40 Iowa 139.

In Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44 Iowa 192, and Howe Mach. Co. v. Woolly, 50 Iowa 552, there are dicta to the effect that it would have been competent for the court to submit certain equitable issues to a jury. These, however, are disapproved in Hobart v. Hobart, 51 Iowa 514, holding to the contrary.

For Issues in Divorce Cases, see infra, IX. 7. Divorce.

2. Kansas. — Under the Code of Kansas, parties are not entitled of right to a jury trial, in ordinary equitable proceedings, but the court may in its discretion send any or all of the issues in such actions to a jury. Kimball v. Connor, 3 Kan. 432; Carlin v. Donegan, 15 Kan. 495; Emporia v. Soden, 25 Kan. 602; Carpenter v. Carpenter, 30 Kan. 712; Woodman v. Davis, 32 Kan. 344; McCardell v. George, 18 Kan. 253; Smith v. Wise, 44 Kan. 742.

Kentucky. — The Civil Code of Kentucky, § 343, provides that issues of fact arising in equitable proceedings shall be tried by the court subject to its power to order any issue or issues to be tried by a jury. In this state the question has always been deemed a discretionary one. Greer v. Powell, 1 Bush (Ky.) 499; Blakey v. Johnson, 13 Bush (Ky.) 197; Ayers v. Scott, 1 Sneed (Ky.) 162; Head v. Head, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 112; Baltzell v. Hall, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 97; Kennedy v. Ten Broeck, 11 Bush (Ky.) 254; Lee v. Beatty, 8 Dana (Ky.) 212; Bentley v. Clark, 3 Dana (Ky.) 564.

"The power of courts of chancery to order a matter of fact, strongly controverted, to be tried by a jury, has long been exercised. Formerly, in England, where no jury could be summoned to attend a court of chancery, controverted facts were often ordered to be tried at the bar of one of the courts of common law or at the assizes, which was effected by a feigned issue. But with us, where the same judge has both chancery and common-law jurisdiction, where he, sitting as chancellor, in the exercise of a proper discretion, conceives that justice will be best obtained by submitting the controverted fact as to which the evidence is conflicting, to a jury, he has the power to do so." Per Peters, J., in Crabb v. Larkin, 9 Bush (Ky.) 163.

Submission of Cause to Chancellor. — If a complainant in chancery introduces proof, and instead of having an issue made up for a jury, submits his cause to the chancellor, he must abide the consequences. Patrick v. Langston, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 654.

Maryland. — In Hilleary v. Crow, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 542, it was said that there is no doubt of the power of a court of chancery in Maryland to decide all points of law and all questions of fact which arise in the case, although it has always been the practice to refer important questions of law and fact to the decision of a court of law and a jury; that inasmuch as a point of law, if decided by the court of chancery, might afterwards come before the court of law, it appeared proper to refer it to the court of law in the first instance; and inasmuch as the trial by jury is justly considered far superior to a trial by any one person whatever on written depositions, it has always appeared proper, and therefore has been the practice, to direct issues in important questions of fact.

Circuit Court of Baltimore City. — In the execution of the special power vested in the Circuit Court of Baltimore City, by the 58th section of article 29 of the Code, is included as means necessary to the end the right of framing the issues and directing the position of the parties litigant; as plaintiffs or defendants; and the court would have the right to instruct the jury, and to admit or exclude the evidence offered. Barth v. Rosenfeld, 36 Md. 604.

that the best doctrine is that the ordering of an issue to a jury in a suit in equity is within the discretion of the court.¹

Option to Proceed by Bill in Equity or Action at Law. — By a statute of Massachusetts an option was given the plaintiff to proceed by bill in equity, or by action at law. The court held that when the plaintiff elects to proceed by bill in equity, he has the full benefit of that remedy with all its incidents, and that an election to proceed by bill in equity is not a waiver of his right to ask for a trial by jury, where, in other respects, he would be entitled to it; but that it remained for the judge, at the hearing, to decide on the motion of the plaintiff for an issue, and such interlocutory order was not open to exceptions. Ward v. Hill, 4 Gray (Mass.) 595.

Statutory Equitable Jurisdiction for Relief Not Otherwise Obtainable. — In a suit in equity the plaintiff at least has no absolute right to a trial by jury; but when he avails himself of the jurisdiction in equity, conferred by the legislature upon the court of equity, to obtain a remedy which he could not otherwise have, he must take it subject to the rules which govern courts of chancery, and can have a trial by jury only at the discretion of the court. Ross v. New England Mut. Ins. Co., 120 Mass. 117. Citing Ward v. Hill, 4 Gray (Mass.) 593; Crittenden v. Field, 8 Gray (Mass.) 621; Elliott v. Balcom, 11 Gray (Mass.) 286; Stockbridge Iron Co. v. Hudson Iron Co., 102 Mass. 45.

Constitutional Right to Submission of Issues. — A question has been made in Massachusetts as to whether parties to a suit in equity have not a constitutional right to have issues of fact submitted to a jury. See Harris v. Mackintosh, 133 Mass. 228. Powers v. Raymond, 137 Mass. 483, Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Moulton, 143 Mass. 543; Dole v. Wooldredge, 142 Mass. 161. In Franklin v. Greene, 2 Allen (Mass.) 519, it was held that the right of trial by jury is secured by the constitution, and in suits in equity the issues do not grow out of the pleadings, as in suits at law, but are framed by the court; yet in framing the issues the court will have regard to the constitutional provision and will allow parties to submit to a jury all such material facts as are proper to be decided by them; and when a verdict is rendered and not set aside for good cause shown, it will be regarded as settling the facts in issue conclusively. And in Shaw v. Norfolk County R. Co., 16 Gray (Mass.) 407, it was held that under the constitution and statutes of Massachusetts the parties in cases in equity were entitled to trial by jury for the determination of all controverted questions of fact, and the court is authorized to frame issues and order a trial thereon; but that such trial can be had only when controverted questions of fact are shown to be pending in the case or when the final decision of it is to be made upon facts respecting which the parties are at variance; and there being no such facts, and the application not being seasonably made, the motion for a jury trial was refused.

In Stockbridge Iron Co. v. Hudson Iron Co., 102 Mass. 47, the case of Shaw v. Norfolk County R. Co., 16 Gray (Mass.) 409, cited in the foregoing paragraph, was commented on, and it was said that the dictum therein that there is no doubt that parties in equity are entitled to trial by jury, for the determination of all controverted questions of fact, was an unguarded concession not required by the case, for a trial by jury was there refused. Franklin v. Greene, 2 Allen (Mass.) 519, was also noticed and disapproved, and the conclusion was arrived at that there was no absolute constitutional right to trial by jury in an equity case.

In Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 344, the point was queried as to whether a party to a suit in chancery has the constitutional right, in Massachusetts, to a trial by jury, but it was held that if such right existed the most that could be made of the provision was that all of the controverted facts deemed essential to the trial of the whole case shall be passed upon by the jury, if the parties, or either of them, require it. And whether the facts proposed to be so tried are essential or not, must of necessity be determined by the court. There

In Michigan, Minnesota, and Mississippi the submission of issues in an equity case is regulated by the court's discretion.¹

In Missouri and Montana the right of trial by jury in equity cases does not exist, though the court may, but is not bound to, submit issues.²

In New Hampshire a party to a bill in equity has a constitutional right to have matters of fact, alleged in the bill and denied by may be many facts stated in the bill and denied by the answer, and also facts alleged in the answer which are wholly immaterial to the merits of the case, and such facts the court may refuse to put to the jury. If, however, upon inspecting the pleadings, it appears that important facts are asserted and denied, the court, in its discretion, may direct issues before a hearing.

Enforcement of Common-law Right by Equitable Proceeding. — It has been declared that the practice in Massachusetts has been generally to order issues to be framed upon the application of the defendant, where the right sought to be enforced by a proceeding in equity was essentially a common-law right, where the facts in dispute were such as were tried by a jury according to the use and practice at the time of and before the adoption of the constitution. It is deemed that this course best observes the spirit of the fifteenth article of the Bill of Rights. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Moulton, 143 Mass. 543. Referring to Franklin v. Greene, 2 Allen (Mass.) 520; Stockbridge Iron Co. v. Hudson Iron Co., 107 Mass. 290; Harris v. Mackintosh, 133 Mass. 228; Powers v. Raymond, 137 Mass. 483.

By Burns's Annot. Mo. Pr. Code, §§ 505, 506, an issue of fact in an action for the recovery of money only, or of specific real or personal property, must be tried by a jury unless a jury trial be waived or a reference ordered. Every other issue must be tried by the court, which, however, may take the opinion of a jury upon any specific question of fact involved therein by an issue made up therein for that purpose, or may refer it. A case, therefore, which was formerly cognizable in equity is triable by the court, and there is no error in refusing to have the issues submitted to a jury. *Ellis v. In New Jersey questions of fact in a chancery cause may be determined by the court, or, in its discretion, by a jury on issues submitted.²

In New York the awarding of issues to a jury by the Court of Chancery was a matter of sound discretion; the chancellor could award an issue or determine the facts himself, as he deemed best.³ The adoption of the Codes of Procedure did not materi-

In Tappan v. Evans, 11 N. H. 334, it was held that in a controversy about a matter of fact in an equity case, it was discretionary with the court whether or not it should send an issue to a jury. This case was commented on and distinguished in Tibbetts v. Perkins, 20 N. H. 275, in which it was said: "The case of Tappan v. Evans, 11 N. The language of the court, therefore, is to be understood and interpreted by the case; and the propositions contained in the authorities cited should be taken with a like restriction, rather than in the unqualified extent of their terms."

Trial under Code of Suit Commenced in Court of Chancery. — In Palmer v. Lawrence, 5 N. Y. 392, the suit was commenced in the late Court of Chancery, and it was held that the court was right in overruling appellant's motion to impanel a jury for the trial of issues made by the pleading; the suit was triable by the court, unless, in its discretion, it saw fit to refer the issues to a jury or referee. Code of 1849, §§ 253, 254, in force when the cause was tried, required every issue of fact, in an action for the recovery of money or of specific real or personal property, to be tried by a jury, and every other issue by the court. These sections were not made applicable to existing suits, and it was held that the cause was, therefore, properly heard by the court.

Summary of Statutes Prior to Code Civ. Pro. — "Before the Act of April, 1838 (Laws of 1838, p. 244, c. 258), regulating trial by jury and the taking of testimony in chancery, the Court of Chancery was not authorized to grant an issue, except in a few specified cases, until after the testimony was taken before examiners or commissioners in the cause. And it was not the practice of the court to grant an issue in ordinary cases unless there was conflicting evidence, so as to create a doubt in the mind of the chancellor upon some matter of fact. The Act of 1838 made it the duty of the court to award an issue upon the application of either party, in every case in which an issue of fact suitable for trial by a jury could be found; and there was no discretion given to the court to refuse the order. * * * The Act was repealed by the Act of May 2, 1839 (Laws of 1839, p. 292, c. 317), which, at the same time, allowed the chancellor to prescribe the manner of proceeding, both as to awarding and trying such issue as he might deem proper to have submitted to a jury. * * * Under this Act Rule 69 of the Court of Chancery was changed, prescribing the manner of settling and trying issues, but leaving the awarding of them discretionary in the court. * * * Where no order had been made before the hearing, it was still competent for the court, upon the trial, to award an issue for the determination of any question arising upon the evidence." In Nevada it is held, where there is no strict constitutional right, that the calling of a jury is purely a matter of discretion with the

New York Code of Procedure, § 253, provides that actions for the recovery of money only, or for specific real or personal property, or for divorce on the ground of adultery, must be tried by a jury unless waived, as provided in section 266, or unless a reference is ordered. Section 254 provides that every other issue is triable by the court, which, however, may order the whole issue, or any specific question of fact therein, to be tried by a jury, or may waive it, etc. Under these provisions the submission of issues in equity cases is made discretionary with the court. Parker v. Laney, 58 N. Y. 469; Paul v. Parshall, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (Buffalo Super. Ct.) 138; O'Brien v. Bowes, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 106; Church v. Freeman, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 298.

Under these provisions an order of the court that all issues be tried by a jury, in an action brought to recover damages for alleged wrongful acts and to restrain the continuance thereof, is valid, irrespective of the question whether the issues might have been tried by the court or not. Parker v. Laney, 58 N. Y. 469.

General Construction of Code Provisions. — Construing these provisions, it was stated that if the nature of the issue is such that a trial by jury would be likely to subserve the ends of justice and facilitate determination of the action, that mode of trial should be adopted. If not, the case should be tried without a jury, and it does not lie with the parties to determine whether the issue, or a specific question of fact, shall be tried by a jury. It is true that either party, if he desires a trial by jury, may, within ten days after the cause is in readiness for trial, give notice of application for that purpose, upon the hearing of which the court may or may not direct issues. This will depend very much upon the probable course of the trial and the nature of the question to be decided. But if the application for a trial by jury be denied, or if no application be made, the court still has the power, at the trial, to order the whole issue, or any specific question of fact involved therein, to be tried by a jury. Issues of fact in common-law actions must be tried by a jury, unless the parties choose to waive this right. But it is for the court to say in either case whether an issue of fact shall be tried by a jury or by the court without a jury, and it is the right of the court, in every case embraced in the 254th section of the Code, to have the aid of a jury upon the trial, and to submit to its determination as many or as few of the facts and questions presented by the pleading as it may deem expedient. Church v. Freeman, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 298.

Discretion Not Enlarged by Rule of Court. — A rule of court providing that "if either party shall desire a trial by jury, such party shall, within ten days after issue joined, give notice of a special motion to be made upon the pleadings, that the whole issue, or any specific question of facts involved therein, be tried by jury," was held not to enlarge the discretionary power of the court in the submission of issues to a jury, under the Code of Procedure, but only to prescribe the mode of proceeding by which the application may be made to the court, before the hearing, that an issue may be awarded. Paul judge and not a matter of right in the parties, and a jury trial cannot be claimed in an equity case unless such issues be specially framed for a jury under direction of the court.¹

In North Carolina, formerly, if upon the hearing of a cause in equity a question of fact was rendered doubtful by conflicting testimony, the court had the power to direct an issue to a jury, and for this purpose might either cause a jury to be summoned before it or direct the issue to be sent to a court of law for trial.² And under the code issues of fact in equity cases may, in the discretion of the court, be submitted to a jury.³

In Ohio and Oregon the general rule obtains that the court may or may not, in its discretion, send issues of fact to a jury.⁴

In Pennsylvania and South Carolina the submission of issues to the jury in an equitable action rests in the discretion of the court.⁵

In Jones v. Zollicoffer, Term (N. Car.) 212, it was held that under the law in force in 1817 all disputed questions of fact in an equity case were triable by jury. So in Taylor v. Person, 2 Hawks. (N. Car.) 298, decided in 1832, it was held that issues of fact must be decided by a jury in equity as well as at law, and it must appear on the face of a decree that they were so decided, or it will be error, for which the decree will be rendered.

By the Code of 1883, § 398 (Code Civ. Pro., § 224), it is provided that an issue of law must be tried by the judge or court, unless it be referred. An issue of fact must be tried by a jury, unless a trial by jury be waived or a reference be ordered. By section 399 (Code Civ. Pro., § 225), every other issue is triable by the court, or the judge thereof, who, however, may order the whole issue or any specific question of fact involved therein to be tried by a jury, or may refer it. And when a compulsory reference is ordered, either party has the right to have the issues of fact tried by a jury.

Under the Code of Oregon the general rule is that issues both of law and of fact in an equity case should be tried by the court, but whenever it becomes necessary or proper to inquire of any fact by the verdict of a jury, a statement of the question may be made and submitted to them, and their verdict read in evidence at the trial. *Swegle v. The question whether an issue shall or shall not be awarded is purely personal to the judge presiding. If he deems an issue necessary for his own convenience, it is awarded; if not, the order for an issue is withheld. There is but one qualification to the wide discretion thus vested in the court — it must not be exercised so as to work injustice. Flory v. Bangor Water Co., 4 Pa. Dist. Rep. 643.

By the Rules of Equity Practice promulgated by the Supreme Court of

In Tennessee, formerly, the granting of a jury, or ordering the submission of facts to a jury in an equity case, was largely a matter of discretion with the chancellor.¹ But under the code² either party to a suit in chancery may demand a jury to try and Pennsylvania, July 1st, 1865, it was provided that the awarding of issues in chancery proceedings shall be substantially in accordance with the practice of the High Court of Chancery in England. Under that practice an issue is not of right as respects the parties to a bill; on the contrary, it is rather of grace or discretion on the part of the chancellor. Genet v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 13 Phila. (Pa.) 534.

Extent of Constitutional Right to Jury Trial. — It is not competent for the legislature of Pennsylvania to confer on the Chancery Court, acting without a jury, jurisdiction over the legal rights of parties, unless there is some equitable ground for relief involved in the cause. "The only remaining question is whether it was error to refer the case to the master against the protest of the defendants, who claimed the right to have certain issues of fact referred to a jury. The issues in the case, certainly as to Steedly and Walker, are on the equity side of the court, which has no machinery for jury trials, and as a rule, all questions, whether of law or of fact, are decided by the judge sitting as chancellor. If he desires the aid of a jury upon a question of fact, he may order an issue for that purpose merely to enlighten his conscience. This court has decided that § 274 (276) of the code specifies the classes of cases in which a jury trial may be demanded as a legal right. In all other cases it is discretionary with the circuit judge, and from his determination no appeal lies. Rollin v. Whipper, 17 S. Car. 32. The section referred to is as follows: 'An issue of law must be tried by the court, as also cases in chancery,' unless they be referred as provided in chapter 5 of this title. An issue of fact in an action for the recovery of money only, or of specific real or personal property, must be tried by a jury, unless a jury trial is waived,' etc. We do not regard this an action either for the recovery of money only, or of specific real or personal property." Pelzer v. Hughes, 27 S. Car. 408.

Interchange of Circuit Judges. — A circuit judge hearing a chancery cause submitted certain issues of fact to a jury. According to the laws of South Carolina providing for the regular interchange of circuit judges, the cause afterwards came on to be heard before the judge who had been assigned to that circuit. The latter judge submitted to a jury the issues which had been ordered by the preceding judge. On the coming in of the verdict upon the issues the judge made his decree and an appeal was taken. It was held that not only did the judge commit no error in submitting the issues to the jury, but since the order in the case was the order of the judge who preceded him; he could not disregard or reverse it. Asbill v. Asbill, 24 S. Car. 355. It is difficult to reconcile this decision with the provisions of Gen. Stat. S. Car. (1882), § 2116, incorporated in Rev. Stat. S. Car. (1893), § 2248, providing that "every judge, while holding the Circuit Court for any circuit pursuant to the provisions of the law of this state, shall be invested with powers equal to those of the judge of such circuit, and may hear and determine all causes and motions, and grant all orders in open court or at chambers, which it is competent for the judge residing in such circuit to hear, determine, or grant; any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding." The decision would likewise appear to take away from the judge hearing the cause his discretion in the submission of the issue.

determine any material fact in dispute, and the finding of a jury in the premises has the same force and effect as at law. And it is still competent for the chancellor to direct issues of fact ex mero motu, where the parties do not claim their right to a jury trial.¹

In Virginia and West Virginia, except in a few particular cases where by statute or practice a jury trial is a matter of right, though the discretion is less free from control by an appellate court than in many of the other states,² it is yet a matter largely within the sound discretion of the court whether or not an issue shall be submitted to the jury or the whole case be decided by the court.³

In Washington and Wisconsin the usual rule prevails, that the court may determine all the issues in an equity case, or may submit questions of fact to a jury if it sees fit so to do.⁴

A Proper Issue, however, must be submitted by the party. Gass v. Mason, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 508.

Even in the Absence of All Statutory Provisions on the subject, the Circuit Courts of Wisconsin have the power to award a feigned issue in a proper case, and when the application therefor is properly made. Such a power is necessarily incident to the general jurisdiction of the courts of equity of this state. Although the granting of feigned issues is said to be a matter resting in the sound discretion of the court, yet this discretion is exercised almost as a matter of course in a certain class of cases, by the English Court of Chancery and by the equity courts in this country. Waterman v. Dutton, 5 Wis. 413.

Equity Jurisdiction Fixed by Constitution.—The power of the Circuit Courts of Wisconsin sitting as courts of equity to award feigned issues, and the mode of exercising that power in the sound discretion of the judge, are the same now as anterior to the Code of Wisconsin. Indeed, so far as legislative action may go, the powers and jurisdiction of

IV. IN ACTIONS AND PROCEEDINGS AT LAW. — In actions and proceedings at law generally the parties have a constitutional right to a trial by jury of questions of fact, but there are many cases where, either because of the nature of the proceeding or by consent of the parties, the trial is by the court. In these cases special issues are frequently submitted to a jury.¹

Issue as to Ownership of Land in Action at Law. — In Robertson v. Sharpton, 17 S. Car. 592, an action at law was brought to recover a tract of land described by metes and bounds, and alleged to have been purchased by the defendants from a third person. The defendant asserted title to the land described by the same metes and bounds. An issue was submitted by consent as to the ownership of the land.

Refusal to Submit Particular Question of Fact. — In a case where no questions of equitable cognizance are made, and which is triable by a jury generally, it is not error to refuse to submit a particular question of fact to a jury. The request to submit a particular question, as whether a deed was executed, is a waiver of the right to a jury to try the case generally. Spencer v. Robbins, Edinger*, 10 Cal. 160; Weber v. Marshall, 19 Cal. 447; Lestrade v. Barth, 19 Cal. 661.

Same Jury for Legal and Equitable Issues. — In Nevada, while it is proper to keep the two defenses separate, yet it is not proper practice to impanel one jury to try the equitable defense and another the legal defense. If special issues are submitted on the equitable side of the case, they should be given to the jury which is to try the law side of the case. Low v. Crown Point Min. Co., 2 Nev. 75.

Kentucky.—Frazer v. Naylor, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 593.

The Civil Code of Kentucky, § 12, provides: "In an equitable action, properly commenced as such, either party may by motion have the case transferred to the ordinary docket for trial of any issue concerning which he is entitled to a jury trial; but either party may require every equitable issue to be disposed of before such transfer." See Hill v. Phillips, 87 Ky. 169; Meek v. McCall, 80 Ky. 371; Baxter v. Knox, (Ky. 1895) 31 S. W. Rep. 284.

Equitable Issues No Deprivation of Jury Trial on Legal Issues.—The fact that there are both legal and equitable issues involved in a case cannot deprive a party of his usual constitutional right to a jury trial of the legal issues. Smith v. Bryce, 17 S. Car. 544; Chapman v. Lee, 45 Ohio St. 356; Sommer v. New York El. R. Co., 60 Hun (N. Y.) 148.

And the court does not acquire the right to pass upon the legal defense without a jury trial by virtue of being first called upon to dispose of an equitable defense; but if the trial of the equitable defense does not obviate the necessity of a trial of the issues of law, these must be tried in the same manner as if no equitable defense had been interposed. Swasey v. Adair, 88 Cal. 179.

Difference Between Plaintiff and Defendant in Respect to Legal and Equitable Issues.—In New York it was held that as by the common law an action for damages and for the abatement of a nuisance was triable by a jury, the defendant could not be deprived of the right to a jury trial upon these issues, although the plaintiff, in his complaint, also demanded equitable relief. Hudson v. Caryl, 44 N. Y. 554.

But where the plaintiff elects to bring an action for both legal and equitable relief in respect to the same cause of action, the case is not one of right triable by a jury; by such election he submits to have issues tried by the court alone, or with the aid of a jury, as the court in its discretion may determine, according to the practice in equity cases. Cogswell v. New York, etc., R. Co., 105 N. Y. 319, reversing 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. 92.

Necessity of Claim for Jury Trial.—A suit was in one aspect an action to recover the value of property, but the complainant asked as relief that the amount recovered should be declared an equitable lien against certain property. It was therefore triable as an equity case, but the court held that whether it was or not, the appellant did not ask for the case to be tried by a jury, nor was there any objection to the trial by the court; that a jury is advisory merely, and this being so it was too late, after verdict and finding, to question the correctness of the mode of the trial which was pursued by the court with the assent of the parties. United States.—Basey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 680.

The Iowa Code of 1897, § 3435, provides that "where the action has been properly commenced by ordinary proceedings, either party shall have the right, by motion, to have any issue heretofore exclusively cognizable in equity tried in the manner hereinafter prescribed in cases of equitable proceedings; and, if all the issues were such [as were heretofore cognizable in equity], though none were exclusively so, the defendant shall be entitled to have them all tried as in cases of equitable proceedings." Section 3650 provides that "issues of fact in an ordinary action must be tried by jury, unless the same is waived. All other issues shall be tried by the court, unless a reference thereof is made." Under these sections it was held that in actions properly commenced by equitable proceedings, though a legal issue is tendered, the court may try the issue without the intervention of a jury. Ryman v. Lynch, 76 Iowa 587.

VI. CROSS-COMPLAINT AND COUNTERCLAIM — Cross-complaint. —

The doctrine appears to be that where the issues raised by a cross-complaint are of equitable cognizance, they are triable by the court in its discretion as in ordinary equity cases, but if they are legal, trial by jury is ordinarily a matter of right.¹

The Interposition of a Legal Defense in an equitable action does not carry with it all rights incident to such legal defense, so as to make it triable by jury. Installment Bldg., etc., Co. v. Wentworth, 1 Wash. 467.

Intimate Blending of Legal and Equitable Issues. — Where issues of both legal and equitable cognizance are so blended as to make the entire action properly an equitable one, it is not error to refuse a trial by jury. Kortjohn v. Seimers, 29 Mo. App. 271.

Demand for Jury Trial of All Issues. — Where some of the issues are legal, and triable by a jury, and some are equitable, and triable by the court, a demand for the submission of all the issues in the case to a jury is properly denied. Greenleaf v. Egan, 30 Minn. 316; Lace v. Fixen, 39 Minn. 46.

Necessity of Special Issues — South Carolina. — In a case assuming an attitude of a case in chancery, for partition, by the plaintiffs, met by a legal defense on the part of the defendants, the equitable issue is subject to a trial by the court and the other to a trial by jury. "In such a case," said the court, "under the old practice, an issue at law would no doubt have been ordered, but under the principles in the code, and the decided cases in our state since the adoption of the code, a special issue would be unnecessary, and the court, upon the pleadings, could proceed with the trial of both the issues—that raised in the answer before a jury, and that in the complaint by the court, unless the jury trial rendered the court trial unnecessary." It was therefore held reversible error on the part of the circuit judge to dismiss the complaint as to the defendant. The proper practice would have been to transfer the issues of title raised in the answer to the proper calendar, so as to be tried by a jury, unless a jury trial was waived by the parties, leaving the equity question of partition to be determined by the court, dependent upon the result of the jury trial. McGee v. Hall, 23 S. Car. 388. See infra, X. 6. Necessity of Framing Special and Distinct Issues.

1. See generally article CROSS-COMPLAINTS, vol. 5, p. 685.

In Actions of Ejectment. — Where, in an action of ejectment, the cross-complaint states facts which constitute an equitable cause of action, and the relief is such as can be obtained in a court of equity and not elsewhere, the legal issues are the only ones for the trial of which a jury can be demanded, and the equitable issues may be decided by the court without complying with the request to submit such issues to a jury. Fish v. Benson, 71 Cal. 428.

Thus, in action of ejectment, where the defendant files a cross-complaint for the specific performance of a parol contract for a lease of land in controversy, the issues so raised constitute a case in equity, and a verdict of the jury thereon is merely advisory and may be disregarded by the court. Haggin v. Raymond, 67 Cal. 302.

In Proceedings to Quiet Title to Land — Indiana. — As to whether trial by jury is a matter of right in Indiana where there is a cross-complaint in proceedings to quiet title to land, see Trittip v. Morgan, 99 Ind. 269; Johnson v. Taylor, 106 Ind. 89; Kitts v. Willson, 106 Ind. 147; Spencer v. Robbins, 106 Ind. 580; Martin v. Martin, 118 Ind. 227. Whatever may be the rule in relation to the right to trial by jury in partition where there is involved the simple question of the right to partition and the quieting of title, yet where the cross-complaint and issues joined thereon involve matters of exclusive equitable jurisdiction, such as an application for an accounting between the tenants, such issues are triable by the court, and a trial of them by a jury is properly refused. Peden v. Cavins, Counterclaim. — The practice governing the trial of issues arising on a counterclaim seems to be the same generally as that which is applicable to cross-complaints.¹

134 Ind. 494. But where, by a cross-complaint, the defendant seeks to recover possession of and quiet his title to land in an action to rescind the sale thereof, the issues are properly triable by a jury, and a demand that they shall be tried by the court should not be granted. Ross v. Hobson, 131 Ind. 166.

Rules Governing Making and Trial of Issues on Cross-complaint. — In making up the issues, and in the trial of questions of fact, the court is governed by the same principles of law and rules of practice as pertain to the original complaint. Ewing v. Patterson, 35 Ind. 326; Tippecanoe County v. Lafayette, etc., R. Co., 50 Ind. 85.

Demand for Trial of All Issues by Jury or Court. — Where the issues in a cross-complaint are of exclusive equitable jurisdiction, and a demand is made that all the issues, as well those as the legal ones in the original complaint, be tried by a jury, the demand is properly refused. A demand for a jury should include only a demand for the trial of such issues as are triable by a jury. Peden v. Cavins, 134 Ind. 494.

Vice versa, where the issues in the cross-complaint are legal, and the demand is that all the issues, including these and the equitable ones in the original complaint, be tried by the court, the demand is properly refused. Ross v. Hobson, 131 Ind. 166.

1. See generally article SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

Equitable Issue on Counterclaim. — In an action upon a note and mortgage in which a cross-complaint or counterclaim is filed, wherein it is alleged that the note and mortgage were executed by the party as surety for her husband and that she had acquired the land mortgaged by gift from her father, the counterclaim praying cancellation of the mortgage, the issue joined on the counterclaim is of equitable cognizance, and the court does not err in denying the request for trial by jury. Johnson v. Johnson, 115 Ind. 112.

In New York it is provided by the Code of Civ. Pro., § 974, that where the defendant interposes a counterclaim and thereupon demands an affirmative judgment against the plaintiff, the mode of trial of the issue of fact arising thereupon is the same as if it arose in an action brought by the defendant against the plaintiff for the cause of action stated in the counterclaim, and demanding the same judgment.

Where One of the Defendant's Counterclaims Is a Common-law Claim, he has, by the foregoing code provision, a right to jury trial if application is made as prescribed by section 970 of the Code of Civ. Pro.; i. e., by moving to frame issues. Roslyn Heights Land, etc., Co. v. Burrowes, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 62.

Failure to Move for Issues — Jury Trial Waived. — The right to a jury trial is a purely statutory right, however, not mandatory on the defendant, and in order to exercise his option he must proceed under the Code Civ. Pro., § 970, which provides that where a party is entitled by the constitution, or express provision of law in an action not specified in section 968, he may apply, upon notice to the court, for an order directing all the questions arising upon those issues to be distinctly and plainly stated. Under Rule 31 of the General Rules of Practice, such motion should be made within ten days after joinder of issue. By failure to move for the framing of issues, and by noticing the cause for trial at a court at which a jury forms no part, the defendant waives any right he may have to a jury and consents to a trial by the court, and therefore the granting or refusing of a request to frame issues is a matter of discretion and is not reviewable on appeal. Mackellar v. Rogers, 109 N. Y. 468.

Counterclaim Involving Account. — In Rutty v. Person, 49 N. Y. Super. Ct. 55, it was held that though the granting of a motion to frame issues for a jury on a prayer for an accounting, where the answer contains a counterclaim, is in the discretion of the court, yet where it appears that the issues as framed are so minute and numerous, and so grouped, that confusion and mistake by the jury may be expected, the appellate court will reverse the order directing them.

In Brooklyn, etc., R. Co. v. Reid, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 273, the court considered that section 974 of the Code Civ. Pro. was not designed to send a counter-

VII. FROM PROBATE COURTS AND OTHER COURTS OF LIKE NATURE — Probate Courts. — Since Probate Courts exercise their powers by virtue of statutory provisions, the practice of submitting issues therefrom should, in general, accord with those provisions. By some of these authority is given the court to send issues to a jury whenever in its discretion it deems proper so to do,¹ while by others this power can only be exercised when a proper request therefor is made.² In still other cases the matter is not dependent on the discretion of the court, but the parties are entitled to an issue as of right, when properly applied for.³ The statutory provisions of some of the states, however, contain no authorization for sending issues to a jury from Probate Courts.⁴

claim made by a defendant to a jury, in an action which is referable for the reason that the trial will contain a long account.

In Roslyn Heights Land, etc., Co. v. Burrowes, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 62, the court held that if the defendant moves to have issues framed on the ground that the counterclaim involves a long account, the motion should be granted as of course, unless resisted by a counter application showing the necessity of a reference.

Counterclaim Presenting Issue for Damages. — The provisions of the Code Civ. Pro., § 974, are applicable where a counterclaim is set up as a defense in the answer which presents an issue for which a separate action might be maintained to recover damages against the plaintiff. If the allegations of the answer are not sufficiently distinct to make up a cause of action per se, the defendant will not be entitled to have the issue framed thereon for a trial by jury. Cock v. Jenkins, 79 N. Y. 575.

Under the Code Civ. Pro., § 970, as amended by the Act of 1891, where, in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, the defendants set up a counterclaim in which they asked for judgment against the plaintiff, not only for the money which they claimed they had to expend to complete certain work left undone by the plaintiff, but also for damages caused by his delay, the plaintiff was held entitled to have the question of damages for delay submitted to a jury unless the defendants, before the settlement of an order in the case, which must be done on three days' notice, stipulated to abandon their claim for damages by reason of delay; in which event the motion should be altogether denied. Riggs v. Shannon, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 456.

1. See Keller v. De Franklin, 5 Cal. 433; Pond v. Pond, 10 Cal. 495; Leach v. Pierce, 93 Cal. 614.

On Appeal from Decree of Probate Judge. — Under the laws of New Hampshire, on appeal from the decree of a judge of probate, allowing a guardian's account, the appellate court may in its discretion send any questions of fact to a jury that it may deem proper, but neither party can claim as a matter of right that any such question of fact shall be submitted to a jury. Patrick v. Cowles, 45 N. H. 553.

2. In Alabama the judges of probate have authority to cause jurors to be impaneled and sworn in any matter of fact pending before them in which the right to a jury trial is given by law. This, however, cannot be done ex mero motu, and if no requisition for a jury be made, there is no error in trying the cause without a jury. Blankenship v. Nimmo, 50 Ala. 508.

3. In Indiana. — Under Rev. Stat. (1843), §§ 15, 16, either party could demand a trial by jury of issues of fact involved in the chancery proceedings in the Probate Court, and the court was bound by the verdict, unless it was set aside. The language of the statute though in form merely permissive, was held to be in fact peremptory. Clem v. Durham, 14 Ind. 263.

4. In Missouri. — The statutes have made no provision for a trial by jury in the Probate Courts, and Rev. Stat. (1889), § 2131, providing for the trial of certain issues of fact by jury, has no application to proceedings in the Probate Court. Bradley v. Woerner, 46 Mo. App. 371.

Orphans' Courts. — The awarding of issues in matters arising in Orphans' Courts is likewise for the most part governed by statutes.¹

Surrogates' Courts. — Issues from these courts are in general gov-

1. Pennsylvania. — Under Act of March 15, 1832 (Purdon 1256, pl. 22), it is provided that whenever a dispute upon a matter of fact arises before any Register's Court, now superseded by the Orphans' Court, the said court "shall, at the request of either party, direct a precept for an issue to the Court of Common Pleas of the county, for the trial thereof." The demand for such an issue is a matter of right, and not dependent on the discretion of the court, as are other issues of fact under Act of March 29, 1832, Purdon 1108, pl. 45. But the issue demanded must be relevant, material, and sustained by competent proof, else it will be refused. In re Boyer, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 255.

Under Act of March 29, 1832, § 55 (Purdon 768, pl. 44), it is declared that the "Orphans' Court shall have power to send an issue to the Court of Common Pleas of the same county, for the trial of facts by a jury, whenever they shall deem it expedient to do so." The allowance of it is entirely within the discretion of the court. Baker's Appeal, 59 Pa. St. 317; Kates's Estate, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 569; Cobb v. Burns, 61 Pa. St. 281; Thompson's Appeal, 103 Pa. St. 606.

Under Act of April 20, 1846 (P. L. 411), which treats of returns made by a sheriff, executor, administrator, or other person who has made a sale of real estate whereby it appears that the purchaser is a lien creditor and has given his receipt to the officer for the amount of his lien, an issue is a matter of right on a proper and sufficient affidavit. The discretion to be exercised is in determining the sufficiency of this affidavit. If it be sufficient it is error to refuse it; aliter if it be insufficient. Gordon's Estate, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 350, referring to Lippincott v. Lippincott, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 396; Baker's Appeal, 59 Pa. St. 313; Russel v. Reed, 27 Pa. St. 166; Cobb v. Burns, 61 Pa. St. 278;

Christophers v. Selden, 28 Pa. St. 165. This act applies only to the distribution of money arising from sales under execution and Orphans' Court sales. Baker's Appeal, 59 Pa. St. 317.

Demand Supported by Evidence. — A demand for an issue from the Orphans' Court under the foregoing provisions must be supported by competent and sufficient evidence, usually such as would sustain a verdict in favor of the party. See infra, VIII. 2. a. Bill and Answer Unsupported by Evidence, notes.

Mixed Questions of Law and Fact. — The Orphans' Court can send issues only on contested questions of fact, not on mixed questions of law and fact. Cobb v. Burns, 61 Pa. St. 281, referring to Robinson v. Zollinger, 9 Watts (Pa.) 169; Shertzer v. Herr, 19 Pa. St. 34; Russel v. Reed, 27 Pa. St. 166; Christophers v. Selden, 28 Pa. St. 165; Robinson's Appeal, 36 Pa. St. 81. See infra, VIII. 3. Questions of Law.

Materiality and Relevancy of Issues. — The issues demanded must be material and relevant to prevent their refusal. In re Boyer, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 255.

Maryland. — The Code of Maryland, art. 93, § 250, requires the Orphans' Court, in all cases of controversy therein, if either party require it, to direct an issue or issues to be made up and sent to any court of law convenient for trying the same. Sumwalt v. Sumwalt, 52 Md. 338. Where different parties, by separate petitions in the Orphans' Court, are resisting a claim upon the same grounds, and ask for issues to try its validity, it is proper for the court to order the parties and proceedings to be joined on the trial of the issues sent. Yingling v. Hesson, 16 Md. 112.

erned by principles and statutes similar to those relating to the courts above dealt with.¹

VIII. GENERAL PRINCIPLES GOVERNING GRANTING OR DENYING

— 1. Where Matters Are Not Alleged in Pleadings. — In the exercise of the discretion with which a court of equity is endowed, to determine upon matters itself or to submit them to a jury, certain rules and principles will be more or less closely adhered to. For the most part no issue will be directed on matters not properly alleged in the pleadings.²

2. Questions Relating to Doubt, Evidence, Disputed Facts, etc. —

a. BILL AND ANSWER UNSUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE. — According to the practice prevailing in some cases, if the allegations of the bill are directly denied by the answer, though there be no evidence introduced, an issue to a jury may be awarded to try the question of fact thus raised.³ But the general and most approved doctrine is that where the allegations of the bill or answer are unsupported by any evidence or proof, no issue should be directed.⁴

1. For the most part the issues from these courts arise on probate and administration proceedings, and will be treated in the article PROBATE AND ADMINISTRATION.

2. See St. Paul's v. Kettle, 2 Ves. & B. 2; Morgan v. Fuller, L. R. 2 Eq. 296; Price v. Berrington, 3 Macn. & G. 486; Bennett v. Neale, Wightw. 324; Savage v. Carroll, 1 B. & B. 548; Borret v. Goodere, 4 Bro. P. C. 679. See infra, X. 8. From What Sources Issues Are Made Up.

3. Issue upon Inspection of Pleadings. — As illustrating this doctrine, it was said in a case in Pennsylvania that it is probable that since the adoption of the amended equity rules, issues will be awarded much more frequently whenever, upon an inspection of the pleadings, it becomes manifest that important and difficult questions of fact are asserted on one side and denied on the other. Flory v. Bangor Water Co., 4 Pa. Dist. Rep. 643.

Validity of Assignment. — So in another case in Pennsylvania, where a bill in equity alleged the assignment of certain shares of stock belonging to a decedent, which the executor denied, a feigned issue was granted to determine the validity of the assignment. Philadelphia Nat. Bank v. Henry, 13 W. N. C. (Pa.) 128.

Forgery or Alteration of Deed. — Likewise in Tennessee it was held that if a bill is filed for the cancellation of a deed because of forgery, or because a particular clause was inserted in it, after its execution, by the defendant, without the complainant's knowledge or consent, and the answer directly denies the charge, this makes an issue which the court of equity will submit to a jury. Maise v. Garner, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 383.

4. Claim or Title Unsupported by Evidence. — An issue out of chancery ought not to be directed to try a claim altogether unsupported by testimony, or a title not alleged in the bill, but suggested in the answer without proof; neither is this rule to be varied by the circumstance that infants are interested. Paynes v. Coles, 1 Munf. (Va.) 373.

Plaintiff's Suggestion of Mistake Without Evidence. — On a bill in equity to reform a policy of insurance by inserting a clause which it is alleged the parties agreed to insert, the plaintiff cannot have issues framed for a jury as a matter of right; and the court will not, in its discretion, frame such issues without evidence that the plaintiff's suggestion of mistake in the contract has some foundation, or circumstances indicating that the matter can be more satisfactorily tried by a jury than by the court. Ross v. New England Mut. Ins. Co., 120 Mass. 113.

Case Relied On by Answer but Omitted in Proof. — A defendant is not entitled to an issue or inquiry to establish a case relied on by his answer but omitted in proof. Savage v. Carroll, 1 B. & B. 548.

b. DOUBT PRODUCED BY NATURE OF PROOF OR CONFLICTING EVIDENCE. — Generally speaking, a court of equity will direct an issue to be tried at law only in cases where doubt is produced in the mind of the court, either by the nature of the proof itself or by reason of conflicting evidence.¹ When, however, important rights are depending upon disputed or controverted facts, and the court is in doubt as to the proof thereof, it is proper and usual to send such issues of fact to a jury for determination.²

No Evidence Against Denial in Answer.

— Where the case of the plaintiff is denied by the defendant, and there is no evidence against the answer, the court will not direct an issue to be tried and defendant to be examined, though the transaction be of such kind as to be exclusively within the knowledge of the defendant. Pritchard v. Gee, 3 L. J. Ch. 222.

Evidence on Demand of Issues from Orphans' Court. — In order to support a demand for an issue from the Orphans' Court of Pennsylvania, there must be competent and sufficient evidence produced, usually such as would sustain a verdict in favor of the party. Gray's Estate, 7 W. N. C. (Pa.) 542; Kates's Estate, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 569; Hansell's Estate, 2 W. N. C. (Pa.) 128; Restine's Estate, 3 W. N. C. (Pa.) 27; In re Boyer, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 255; Beeher's Estate, 3 Phila. (Pa.) 254.

1. Gray v. Haig, 20 Beav. 219; Harrod v. Harrod, 18 Jur. 853; Short v. Lee, 2 Jac. & W. 464; Atwood v. Smith, 11 Ala. 894; Miller v. Wack, 1 N. J. Eq. 215; Hurley v. Oakley Land, etc., Co., (Va. 1896) 24 S. E. Rep. 237.

In Case of a Rector or Heir at Law, an issue at law could be directed though there was no contradictory evidence, and nothing to prevent or embarrass the court's decision upon the evidence. 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. (1st Am. ed.) 728.

2. Ringold v. Patterson, 15 Ark. 209; Milk v. Moore, 39 Ill. 588; Munson v. Reed, Clarke Ch. (N. Y.) 580; Black v. Shreve, 13 N. J. Eq. 455; Fisler v. Porch, 10 N. J. Eq. 243; Miller v. Wack, 1 N. J. Eq. 215; Porter v. Child, 10 Lanc. Bar (Pa.) 45; Huston v. Huston, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 183, 36 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 202; Garsed v. Beall, 92 U. S. 684; Field v. Holland, 6 Cranch (U. S.) 8; Bott v. Smith, 21 Beav. 511; Plunkett v. Kingsland, 1 Bro. P. C. 322; Burkett v. Randall, 3 Meriv. 466.

Evidence Unsatisfactory or Insufficient.

— When feigned issues are directed by the court sitting in equity, it is generally done upon the ground that the evidence in the record is not of a character or not sufficient to afford the means of a satisfactory conclusion; but the verdict of the jury is only advisory, and may be set aside or even overruled. Goodyear v. Providence Rubber Co., 2 Cliff. (U. S.) 351.

Facts Doubtful from Bill, Answer, or Evidence. — Where an allegation of a bill in equity is denied by the answer, and the evidence leaves the fact doubtful, the court will direct an issue. Bullock v. Gordon, 4 Munf. (Va.) 450; Galt v. Carter, 6 Munf. (Va.) 245; Janney v. Imperial Oil Co., 6 Phila. (Pa.) 261; Huston v. Huston, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 183.

Submission for Additional Facts and Satisfactory Conclusion. — It rests in the sound discretion of the chancellor to award a feigned issue or not, and it is done to enable him to obtain additional facts, and to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion on the facts of the case. U. S. v. Samperyac, Hempst. (U. S.) 118.

To Determine Nature of Assignment. — The question whether an assignment was intended as an absolute one or as a mere authority to enable the defendant to collect being doubtful from the evidence, the court directed an issue out of chancery. Fisler v. Porch, 10 N. J. Eq. 243.

Whether Elder Grant Embraced Land Covered by Junior Patent. — Where the evidence fails to show that an elder grant, under which the plaintiff claims, covered the land embraced by a junior patent sought to be set aside, but yet makes it probable that such was the case the court should direct an issue to be tried by a jury to ascertain that fact. Randolph v. Adams, 2 W. Va. 519.

Submission on Written as Well as Oral Evidence. — The practice of referring doubtful questions in chancery cases to juries is not confined to those cases

c. WHERE THERE IS CONFLICTING EVIDENCE, OR CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES IS INVOLVED. — Where the evidence in the case is conflicting,¹ or the accuracy and credibility of witnesses is involved,² and the chancellor feels the necessity of a trial by where witnesses ought to be introduced; but where the chancellor is perplexed with doubtful questions of fact, he may invoke the aid of a jury as well where the decision must be upon written evidence in the record as where oral testimony is to be introduced. Lee v. Beatty, 8 Dana (Ky.) 212.

On written depositions it has always appeared proper, and therefore has been the practice, to direct issues on important questions of fact, Hilleary v. Crow, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 542; even though the whole of the evidence be written and the question depends upon the construction of that evidence, Collins v. Sawrey, 4 Bro. P. C. 692.

In West Virginia it was said that where, in a given case, a decree rendered is sustained with reasonable certainty by the facts and circumstances disclosed by the record, there would be no error in omitting or refusing to direct an issue to try any material matters of fact put in issue by the pleadings; but if the correctness of the decree is made to depend on the existence or nonexistence of such material facts, and the evidence and circumstances of the case are so equally balanced as to make their existence or nonexistence doubtful, then it would be error to fail or refuse to direct an issue to be tried by a jury. Powell v. Batson, 4 W. Va. 610.

1. Kennedy v. Kennedy, 2 Ala. 571; Guild v. Hull, 127 Ill. 523; Bassett v. Johnson, 3 N. J. Eq. 417; Wendell v. Highstone, 52 Mich. 552; Asbill v. Asbill, 24 S. Car. 359; Hooe v. Marquess, 4 Call (Va.) 416; Knibb v. Dixon, 1 Rand. (Va.) 249; Almond v. Wilson, 75 Va. 626; Steptoe v. Pollard, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 689; Stokes v. Edmeades, 1 McClel. & Y. 436; Savage v. Carroll, 2 B. & B. 451.

New York. — Under the code, when an equity case is called for trial, the court may order questions to be tried by a jury if it is apparent that their determination will depend on conflicting evidence. Zimmerman v. Schoenfeldt, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 692, 6 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 142.

In Oregon the code, providing for the submission of issues to a jury in an equity case, does not provide when or in what cases it becomes necessary or proper to inquire of a fact by the verdict of the jury, and in order to determine this question it is necessary to look to the general equity practice. Under such practice, if the evidence is contradictory and conflicting, and so nearly equally balanced that it is doubtful which scale preponderates, it is a proper case to be submitted to a jury. Swegle v. Wells, 7 Oregon 223.

Doubt as to Preponderance of Evidence. — A court of chancery usually will, in its discretion, when the evidence in regard to any material fact properly in issue in the cause is conflicting and the weight of testimony is so nearly balanced that it is unable to determine on which side it preponderates, direct an issue as to such facts, to be tried by a jury. O'Brien v. Bowes, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 657; Munson v. Reed, Clarke Ch. (N. Y.) 580; Mahnke v. Neale, 23 W. Va. 57; Anderson v. Cranmer, 11 W. Va. 582; Jarrett v. Jarrett, 11 W. Va. 585; McFarland v. Douglass, 11 W. Va. 637; Setzer v. Beale, 19 W. Va. 289; Vangilder v. Hoffman, 22 W. Va. 1; Crabb v. Larkin, 9 Bush (Ky.) 163; Stokes v. Edmeades, 1 McClel. & Y. 436.

Test of Doubtful Preponderance by Action of Appellate Court. — The conflict of the evidence must be regarded as justifying the direction of an issue whenever on appeal the appellate court is so divided in opinion as to the weight of the evidence that some of the judges think that the issue ought not to have been directed, because the evidence established clearly one state of facts, while others of the judges think that the evidence establishes an opposite state of facts. This marked diversity of opinion as to the weight of evidence is itself sufficient to establish that it is doubtful on which side is the preponderance, and therefore, in such case, the order directing such issue ought not to be reversed. Vangilder v. Hoffman, 22 W. Va. 1.

2. Ex p. Chambers, 1 Deacon 197, 38 E. C. L. 439; Chapman v. Chapman, 4 Call (Va.) 430; Isler v. Grove, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 257; Munson v. Reed, Clarke Ch. (N. Y.) 580.

jury to satisfy his conscience upon a question of fact before him for determination, it is proper to award an issue to a jury.¹ But even though the evidence is contradictory and conflicting, if the chancellor is satisfied that the weight of evidence is on one side, he is not bound to direct an issue. The expense and delay which it involves are only to be incurred when the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, may think it necessary, except in certain particular cases in which, by statute or practice, it is made a matter of right.² In some of the states the doctrine has been carried so far as to preclude the direction of an issue until the plaintiff has thrown the burden of proof upon the defendant, so that where there is a direct conflict between two witnesses, one affirming and the other denying a fact to be proven, there should be no issue to a jury.³

Conflict in Depositions Showing Perjury.

— In Witherspoon v. Dula, 2 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 279, it was held that when the depositions of the witnesses in an equity suit, transmitted to the Supreme Court for hearing, are in such direct conflict with each other that perjury has evidently been committed, but the court cannot tell on which side the guilt lies, it will direct feigned issues to be made up and tried, so that the witnesses may be personally examined in open court.

Pennsylvania. — In the trial of an equitable ejectment where the defendant relies upon an alleged parol contract and possession and improvements thereunder, where the facts alleged are sufficient, if satisfactorily established, but the evidence in relation to them is conflicting or the credibility of a witness is involved, and the conflicting testimony is of such a character that the chancellor can conscientiously sustain a verdict either way, according as the jury may find, the case should go to a jury with careful instructions, so that it may turn upon their finding on the disputed fact. On the other hand, if the evidence in support of the witness or fact necessary to sustain the parol contract is 'suspicious or unreliable in character, so that the chancellor could not conscientiously sustain a verdict resting upon it, he should not submit it to the jury. Their finding is in aid of his conscience, and when, upon all the evidence, he could not in good conscience accept their verdict as a fair and just disposition of the question, whatever the verdict might be, he may dispose of the case without their aid. Hess v. Calender, 120 Pa. St. 138.

England. — Robinson v. Anderson, 7 De G. M. & G. 239. See Mason v. Mason, 1 Meriv. 308; Collins v. Sawrey, 4 Bro. P. C. 692.

Extent of Conflict Necessary. — In West Virginia no issue is to be directed until there is such a conflict as renders it difficult to see on which side the preponderance lies; not for mere conflict short of this. Vangilder v. Hoffman, 22 W. Va. 1. See also Setzer v. Beale, 19 W. Va. 289.

3. Vangilder v. Hoffman, 22 W. Va. 1; Sands v. Beardsley, 32 W. Va. 594.

Plaintiff Failing to Overthrow Answer Denying Bill. — According to this doctrine, where the allegations of the bill are positively denied by the answer, and the plaintiff has failed to furnish two witnesses, or one witness and strongly corroborating circumstances, in support of the bill, it is error in the chancellor to direct an issue. No issue should be ordered until the plaintiff has shown enough to throw the burden of proof on the defendant, or until the onus is shifted and the case rendered doubtful

d. WHERE THERE IS NO CONFLICTING OR CONTRADICTORY EVIDENCE. — Where there is no conflict or contradiction produced by the evidence, or it is not so nearly balanced as to render an open and rigid cross-examination of witnesses before a jury necessary, no issue should in general be awarded.¹ But though this is the general rule, yet the court is not in all cases precluded from granting an issue because there is no conflicting evidence.²

e. WHERE THERE IS FAILURE OF PROOF. — If there is no conflict between the different portions of the evidence, no ambiguity or uncertainty in it, but simply a failure to prove material facts, no issue will ordinarily be directed.³

f. WHERE EVIDENCE IS SATISFACTORY OR DECISIVE. — Where the evidence is satisfactory or decisive, the court should decide the facts itself and not submit them to a jury for determination.⁴

g. WHERE EVIDENCE IS ALL ON ONE SIDE, OR PREPONDERANCE IS CLEAR. — If all the evidence⁵ or a clear preponderance by the conflicting evidence of the opposing parties. Smith v. Betty, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 752; Pryor v. Adams, 1 Call (Va.) 382; Carter v. Carter, 82 Va. 624. See also Jones v. Christian, 86 Va. 1031; Gamble v. Johnson, 9 Mo. 605.

2. Evidence All on One Side but Unsatisfactory. — Thus, where the evidence was all on one side and there was no conflicting evidence or claim, yet if the evidence was not satisfactory to the court, the practice was to direct an issue. Moons v. De Bernales, 1 Russ. 301; Burkett v. Randall, 3 Meriv. 466. See infra, VIII. 2. g. Where Evidence Is All on One Side, or Preponderance Is Clear.

3. Reed v. Cline, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 136; Beverly v. Rhodes, 86 Va. 419.

Thus, where in a bill for specific performance the plaintiff failed to prove the terms of the agreement relied on, the court would not direct an issue to ascertain them. Savage v. Carroll, 2 B. & B. 451.

But in Moons v. De Bernales, 1 Russ. 301, where the title of plaintiffs to certain goods in controversy was not made out strictly or conclusively, an issue at law was directed to try that fact, though no adverse claim was set up and strong uncontradicted evidence was produced on the plaintiff's part.

5. "It is generally in those cases only where there is contradictory evidence that the court will be induced to grant an issue to try a controverted fact; a mere suggestion upon the record, unsupported by evidence in opposition to evidence on the other side, will not be sufficient." 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. (1st Am. ed.) 733; Nichol v. Vaughan, 2 Dow. & Cl. 420; Winchilsea v. Garety, 1 Myl. & K. 253; Harrod v. Harrod, 1 Kay & J. 4; Hoitt v. Burleigh, 18 N. H. 390.

thereof is on one side, no issue should usually be awarded.¹ But even though all the evidence be on one side, if the court is doubtful or not satisfied it may direct an issue.²

h. WHERE THERE ARE NO DISPUTED OR CONTROVERTED FACTS. — An issue should not be awarded where there are no disputed or controverted facts and no evidence to make an issue necessary.³

3. Questions of Law. — An issue to a jury ought to be granted only to try definite and clearly defined questions of fact, and never to try questions of law.⁴ And where intricate questions

In Iler v. Roth, 3 How. (Miss.) 276, it was held that a chancellor may, whenever his mind is in doubt or uncertainty as to the preponderance of evidence, send an issue to the country, but he has the right, with certain exceptions, to take upon himself the decision of every fact in a cause; and that if the chancellor directs an issue to the country where the preponderance of evidence is clearly on one side, error will not lie, inasmuch as it is entirely a matter of discretion with him.

Controverted Facts. — In Massachusetts, whether or not a party to a suit in chancery has a constitutional right to a trial by jury, issues can be framed only in regard to controverted questions of fact material to the case. Shaw v. Norfolk County R. Co., 16 Gray (Mass.) 407; Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 344.

Facts in Dispute. — In proceedings to quiet title under Pennsylvania Act of July 10, 1893, where it appears that there are no facts in dispute, the court will not frame an issue for the jury. President, etc., of Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Genet, (Pa. Com. Pl.) 3 Lack. Jur. 281.

In St. Clair v. Piatt, Wright (Ohio) 537, it was said that a chancellor is not required to send contests about facts to a master or to a jury, of course. He may either send to a jury, refer to a master, or ascertain facts himself, at his option. In that case a reference was deemed unnecessary, because the case on paper showed the amounts, and there was little or no dispute, even among counsel, as to sums or dates.

As to Public Officer's Compensation. — In a suit for the determination of a public officer's right to compensation, an issue should not be awarded if the facts are undisputed. Scranton School Dist. v. Simpson, 133 Pa. St. 202, 25 W. N. C. (Pa.) 517.

4. Blaney v. Mahon, 4 Bro. P. C. 81; Noel v. Rochford, 5 Bligh N. S. 667; Thompson's Appeal, 36 Pa. St. 418; Crosier v. McLaughlin, 1 Nev. 348.

The Legal Effect of uncontroverted facts should not be the subject of issues to a jury. Sparks v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 225.

Mixed Questions of Law and Fact are not to be tried by a jury on issues. Landis v. Lyon, 71 Pa. St. 475; Cleandaniel's Estate, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 50; Cobb v. Burns, 61 Pa. St. 281, referring to Robinson v. Zollinger, 9 Watts' (Pa.) 169; Shertz v. Herr, 19 Pa. St. 34; Russel v. Reed, 27 Pa. St. 166; Christophers v. Selden, 28 Pa. St. 165; Robinson's Appeal, 36 Pa. St. 81.

Construction of Issue. — In an action brought by the plaintiff to recover a tract of land described by metes and bounds and alleged to have been purchased by the defendant from a party, the defendant asserted title to the land described by the same metes and bounds as in the complaint. It was held that an issue in the words, "Is plaintiff entitled to the possession of the following described land?" did not refer questions of law to the jury, but only an issue of fact to be determined by them under instructions from the court upon the law of the case. Robertson v. Sharpton, 17 S. Car. 592.

Issue on Opening Judgment. — Judgment was entered by a school district against a city treasurer, who was ex officio school treasurer, on his official of law will arise on the trial of an equity case, the discretion of the judge is best exercised by not allowing issues of fact to a jury.¹

4. Materiality of Issues.—An issue should not be directed on a question the decision of which is immaterial or unessential to the determination of the suit.² Unless the court can see that the result of the issue, in any event, must be material, no issue will be put to the jury.³

5. Issues Numerous, Minute, or Liable to Confuse.—Where the issues are very numerous or very minute, or so grouped that confusion and mistake by a jury may be expected, the court should decide them itself and not send them to a jury.⁴

bond, under a warrant of attorney contained therein. On opening the judgment the court framed an issue to determine his right to retain a certain sum for compensation as school treasurer. This was held error. There were no disputed facts, and nothing but a question of law to be decided, and to refer this to a jury was clearly wrong. Scranton School Dist. v. Simpson, 133 Pa. St. 202.

1. Blunt v. Hibbard, (C. Pl.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 121, citing Acker v. Leland, 109 N. Y. 5.

2. Price v. Griffin, 1 Moll. 401; Rochester v. Atty.-Gen., 4 Bro. P. C. 643; Ellensohn v. Keyes, 25 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 353; In re Boyer, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 255.

Materiality of Facts Where Issues Are of Right.—Thus, it is held in Massachusetts that even if a party has a statutory right to trial by jury in an equity case, it is only in regard to those controverted facts which are essential to the trial of the whole case. And whether the facts are so essential or material is to be determined by the court. Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 344.

So in Delaware it was held that the act which directs issues of fact in a chancery cause to be tried at the bar of the Superior Court must be understood as referring only to issues of fact which involve the merits of the case and are material to the decision of the cause, and the chancellor is not bound to order issues to be tried by a jury unless they are thus material. Waters v. Comly, 3 Harr. (Del.) 117, affirming Comly v. Waters, 2 Del. Ch. 72.

In Tennessee, likewise, where the parties to an equity case have a right to a jury trial, it is not reversible error for the court to refuse to submit an immaterial issue, all the material issues having been submitted. Pearce v. Suggs, 85 Tenn. 724.

Issues on Conditions of Chattels Which Were Considerations of Mortgage.—The current English and American authority on the subject of sales of chattels is firmly established that on such sales, in the absence of an express warranty of quality or condition, no implied warranty can be raised; therefore, in an action to foreclose a mortgage, an order for a feigned issue to ascertain whether the mortgage, which were the consideration of the mortgage, were reasonably sound and fit for the uses and purposes contemplated in the contract is improper where no express warranty of fraud was shown. Williams v. Slaughter, 3 Wis. 347.

Issue on Duration of Desertion in Divorce—Pennsylvania.—Under the Pennsylvania Act of April 26, 1850, P. L. 591, a petition or libel can be filed six months after the alleged desertion has taken place, but an issue will not thereupon be awarded to try the question whether there had been a desertion for six months, as it would be an immaterial fact and would not obviate the necessity of trying the real issue of a desertion of two years. Winpenny v. Winpenny, 16 Phila. (Pa.) 24.

Where the Finding Could Be But One Way there is no ground for an issue. See Ross v. Aglionby, 4 Russ. 489; Goodenough v. Powell, 2 Russ. 219.

4. Rutty v. Person, 49 N. Y. Super

IX. IN PARTICULAR PROCEEDINGS OR FOR DETERMINATION OF PARTICULAR FACTS — 1. Ejectment. — In an action of ejectment it is often proper for the court to direct an issue of fact to be tried by a jury.¹

2. Attachment and Garnishment. — The court is not always bound to grant an issue in attachment cases.² In garnishment Ct. 55; Brooklyn, etc., R. Co. v. Reid, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 274; Ellensohn v. Keyes, 25 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 353. See Elliott v. Balcom, 11 Gray (Mass.) 286. See infra, IX. 18. Accounts and Accounting.

In an Action by a Taxpayer to Enjoin a City from purchasing property, for the reason that it would be a waste of public funds, a court of equity will not submit issues of fact arising on the pleading to a jury if such issues are a very large number and apt to confuse the jury. The court must decide such facts itself. Ziegler v. Chapin, 26 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 317.

In an Action Brought to Set Aside a Composition Deed and release on the ground of fraud, and to vacate an order discharging an assignee on the ground of fraud, and to obtain a decree requiring all of the defendants to pay the plaintiff his claim against the debtors, and that a receiver be appointed, etc., the issues presented for trial by jury were thirty-three in number. The court held that this fact alone would be sufficient reason for not sending them to a jury, since there were so many that the jury would necessarily be confused. Blunt v. Hibbard, (C. Pl.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 121.

Where the Amount in Controversy Is Small, and the facts can be satisfactorily ascertained by the court, an issue will not be awarded. Gawood v. Eldridge, 2 N. J. Eq. 290; Stafford v. Stafford, 1 N. J. Eq. 525.

1. Issue on Doubtful Fact. — In an action of ejectment, where the defendant alleges that the lessor of the plaintiff has taken possession of more land than was recovered by the verdict, the court will order restitution, but where the fact is doubtful the proper course is to award a feigned issue to try the question. Jackson v. Hasbrouck, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 366.

Ejectment on Equitable Title to Land. — In Pennsylvania an action of ejectment on an equitable title to land is in fact a bill for specific performance, and therefore governed by the general principles of equity applying to an issue of fact. Reno v. Moss, 120 Pa. St. 49; Hess v. Calender, 120 Pa. St. 138. See infra, IX. 4. Specific Performance, etc.

For General Matters Relating to Ejectment, see article EJECTMENT, vol. 7, p. 260.

For Equitable Issues on Cross-complaint and Counterclaim in action of ejectment, see supra, VI. Cross-complaint and Counterclaim.

2. Question of Residence — Issue to Enable Appellate Review. — In an attachment case against an alleged non-resident debtor, it was asked that if the court should be of opinion that the defendant was a resident of the state at the date of issuing the writ, a feigned issue should be granted to determine that point, as otherwise the plaintiff would lose his remedy without being able to review the judgment in the Supreme Court. It was held that there was no reason why the court should not determine the case as other cases were determined, by the evidence submitted; and that it was not bound to grant a feigned issue merely for the sake of getting the case in form to carry it to the Supreme Court. Scott v. Hilgert, 14 W. N. C. (Pa.) 305.

Issue to Try Right to Money under Attachment Execution. — A feigned issue was framed between Lewis A. Landis, plaintiff, and Jeremiah Lyons and Henry Cross, assignees of Kurtz and Cross, defendants, to try the right of the said plaintiff, under the $300 law, of the money in the hands of Samuel Leonard, administrator of Joseph Kurtz, deceased, attached by the said defendants under an attachment execution. This issue was held not to have been properly made up. Feigned issues are for the trial of disputed facts, and not for mixed questions of law and fact; an issue to try the right of a party to anything is too general. Landis v. Lyon, 71 Pa. St. 475. See infra, IX. 19. Right and Title to Property, and supra, VIII. 3. Questions of Law.

3. Habeas Corpus. — In some cases it has been held that on habeas corpus the court has no power to order a jury to determine the questions of fact that may arise.² But in other cases it has been held competent and proper for the court to have issues tried by a jury.³

4. Specific Performance, Rescission, and Cancellation — Specific Performance. — An action for specific performance, being an equitable one, is triable by the court, subject to the power, in its discretion, of submitting proper issues of fact to a jury.⁴

Rescission and Cancellation. — An action brought to obtain the rescission or cancellation of an instrument is an equitable one in which the trial is by the court, unless in its discretion it takes the opinion of a jury upon some specific question of fact involved therein by an issue made up for that purpose. This issue will be granted or denied according to the rules governing the grant or refusal of equitable issues generally.⁵

1. Issues to Try Rights of Contesting Claimants. — Where money is paid into court by a garnishee, and there are contesting claimants, the court will award a feigned issue to try the right. Hiller v. Good, 2 Lanc. Bar (Pa.) 129.

For General Matters Pertaining to Garnishment, see article GARNISHMENT, vol. 9, p. 805.

2. State v. Farlee, 1 N. J. L. 49; State v. Beaver, 1 N. J. L. 94.

4. McCullough v. McCullough, 31 Mo. 226; Bronson v. Wanzer, 86 Mo. 408.

Equitable Ejectment. — In Pennsylvania an action of ejectment on an equitable title to land is in effect a bill for specific performance, and therefore governed by the general principles of equity applying to issues of fact. Reno v. Moss, 120 Pa. St. 49.

5. Conran v. Sellaw, 28 Mo. 320; Hornbrook v. Powell, 146 Ind. 39; Goldsborough v. Turner, 67 N. Car. 403; Blunt v. Hibbard, (C. Pl.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 121. See Atty.-Gen. v. Cashel, 2 Con. & L. 1, 3 Dr. & War. 294.

Cancellation and Delivery on Ground of Mistake. — Where a cause of action is founded upon the cancellation and delivering up of a note by mistake, and it is prayed that the defendant be decreed to pay the amount, it may properly be tried as a bill in equity, but issues may, in the discretion of the court, be framed and submitted to a jury. Weil v. Kume, 49 Mo. 158.

On Ground of Deceit, Falsity, or Fraud. — On a bill in equity to rescind a contract procured by fraud and misrepresentations, an issue will not be directed when the court can properly determine the facts from the evidence. Hurley v. Oakley Land, etc., Co., (Va. 1896) 24 S. E. Rep. 237.

Answer Denying Fraud and Deceit, etc. — Upon a bill filed to set aside a written contract for the purchase of land, or to obtain an abatement of purchase money on account of deceit and false and fraudulent representations by the vendor, when the answer positively denied the allegations of fraud and deceit and the testimony greatly preponderated in favor of the defendant, it was held to be error to direct an issue out of chancery to a jury to determine whether or not there were such deceit and fraudulent representations. DeVaughn v. Husted, 27 W. Va. 773. See infra, IX. 13. Fraud or Undue Influence.

Cancellation of Forged or Altered Deed. — If a bill is filed for the cancellation of a deed because it was forged or because a particular clause was inserted in it after its execution by the defendant, without the complainant's knowledge or consent, and the answer directly denies the charge, this makes an issue which the court of equity will submit to a jury. Maise v. Garner, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 383. See infra, IX. 14. Forgery.

5. Quieting Title, and Partition — Quieting Title. — In a suit in equity to quiet title, according to the general practice, the decree emanates from the judge, who may try the case without a jury or submit special issues to a jury.¹

Partition. — In actions for partition, it is sometimes optional with the court whether or not it will submit the issues of fact to a jury.² In other cases, however, by statutory or code provisions, the issues of fact in such actions, though they are of an equitable nature, are to be tried by a jury, if either party so desires.³

Issue on General Question Whether Sale Should Be Rescinded. — Upon the trial of a suit in equity to rescind the sale of land, where specific questions of fact were submitted to a jury, it is improper practice for the court also to submit, over objection of counsel, the question whether or not the sale should be rescinded, this being a question for the court to decide upon the other facts found by the jury. Bell v. Hutchings, 86 Ga. 571.

For Issues on Cross-complaint in an action to rescind sale of land, see Ross v. Hobson, 131 Ind. 166, and generally supra, VI. Cross-complaint and Counterclaim.

1. Mantle v. Noyes, 5 Mont. 274.

In Indiana the statutory action to quiet title to land was not an action of exclusive equitable jurisdiction prior to June 18, 1852, and therefore, by the practice in that state, in such case the issues are properly triable by jury. Puterbaugh v. Puterbaugh, 131 Ind. 288. See also Trittip v. Morgan, 99 Ind. 269; Spencer v. Robbins, 106 Ind. 581; Kitts v. Willson, 106 Ind. 147; Johnson v. Taylor, 106 Ind. 89; Martin v. Martin, 118 Ind. 227. See further, as to issues to the jury in Indiana, supra, p. 610.

For Issues on Cross-complaint in action to quiet title, see supra, VI. Cross-complaint and Counterclaim.

2. In California, for instance, this option exists. Lorenz v. Jacobs, 59 Cal. 262.

3. New York — Under Code of Procedure — Partition of Decedent's Lands. — In an action brought by plaintiff as heir at law of a decedent, to obtain partition under Laws of 1853, c. 338, the special term refused to settle issues for a jury trial. On appeal to the general term it was held that the provisions of the Revised Statutes on the subject of partition, to which section 448 of the Code of Procedure applied, clearly contemplated, if they did not require, a trial by jury where the legal title was in dispute, and that in this case the special term erred in refusing to settle the issues for a jury trial. Hewlett v. Wood, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 478, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 453, affirmed in 3 Hun (N. Y.) 736, appeal dismissed by Court of Appeals in 62 N. Y. 75.

Under Code of Civil Procedure. — The Code of Civ. Pro., § 1544, provides that an issue of fact joined in an action for partition is triable by a jury. See Cuthbert v. Ives, (Supreme Ct.) 20 N. Y. Supp. 469; Mellen v. Mellen, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 99, 21 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 301; Tucker v. Tucker, (Supreme Ct.) 45 N. Y. St. Rep. 458.

Reference. — Under the provision last above mentioned the issues in an action for partition should not be made the subject of a reference, either party having the right of a jury trial if he so desires. Larder v. Granger, (Supreme Ct.) 51 N. Y. St. Rep. 185. The issues cannot be tried by reference if one of the parties objects. Cassedy v. Wallace, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 240.

The issues of fact to which this code provision relates are only such as involve the maintenance of the action. It has no application unless some defense is interposed which, if successful, would prevent any partition at all; for example, a denial of the plaintiff's title, or a denial that the parties were joint tenants or tenants in common would be such a defense. But where there is no dispute as to their proportionate interests, and the only matters in controversy relate, directly or indirectly, to the amounts with which the respective shares are chargeable, neither party is entitled to a trial by jury as matter of right; and if the trial will require the examination of a long account,

6. Interpleader and Intervention. — Interpleader and intervention proceedings being equitable in their nature, the general rule applies, and the court may or may not, in its discretion, submit the issues to a jury.¹

7. Divorce. — In some of the states the submission of issues to a jury in divorce cases is governed by the practice and principles relating to equitable suits in general, while in others there are statutory provisions limiting the trial to the court, or giving a jury trial as a matter of right.² In at least one state, the right on either side, the action may properly be referred. Brown v. Brown, 52 Hun (N. Y.) 533.

1. Interpleader.—See generally article INTERPLEADER, ante, pp. 473, 474.

In New York, where in an action at law a third party, claiming to own the cause of action, has been brought in and substituted as defendant, and the original defendant has been discharged on payment into court of the amount of the demand, in pursuance of the provision of Code Civ. Pro., § 820, the action thereafter becomes an equitable one, triable by the court, and neither party has a right to a trial by jury. Where the trial judge impaneled a jury and submitted to them a single question of fact, but disregarded their finding and found the fact contrary thereto, his decision was pronounced correct on appeal. Clark v. Mosher, 107 N. Y. 118, 13 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 215, reversing (Supreme Ct.) 5 N. Y. St. Rep. 84.

Intervention. — Upon an intervention in railway foreclosure proceedings to recover damages against the receiver for personal injuries to an employee, the court has authority to send to a jury the single issue as to the amount of damages in case there is any liability. Kohn v. McNulta, 147 U. S. 238. See generally article INTERVENTION, ante, p. 494.

2. See article DIVORCE, vol. 7, pp. 118, 119.

In California, in an action for divorce, it is optional with the judge to submit issues to a jury or not; and his refusal to submit them cannot be reviewed in the Supreme Court on appeal. Clegghorn v. Clegghorn, 66 Cal. 309.

In Washington an action for divorce was brought, asking alimony and praying that a conveyance fraudulently made by the husband be set aside, since otherwise the plaintiff could obtain no alimony. It was held that under Washington Code Pro., § 776, dispensing with jury trials in divorce cases, the defendant was not entitled to have the issue of conspiracy tried by a jury. Prouty v. Prouty, 4 Wash. 174.

In Montana divorce cases are governed by the practice and rules of procedure obtaining in other chancery causes, except that by law, if the defendant appears and denies the charges alleged in the complainant's bill, the issues must be tried by a jury. But the jury tries only the issue framed by the defendant's denial or charge, upon which the complainant asks for a divorce. Rev. Stat. Mont., p. 514, § 511. So far as alimony and the custody of children is concerned, the judge sitting as chancellor is alone responsible for the decree. He may refer special issues to a jury to make findings as to these matters, but he is not bound by them, and he may set them aside and make other findings, and decree accordingly. Black v. Black, 5 Mont. 15. See Beck v. Beck, 6 Mont. 318.

In Iowa, under the old chancery practice, the chancellor might, to inform his conscience, submit any issue of fact to a jury, but under the provisions of the code, an issue of fact in an action for divorce cannot be submitted to a jury for determination, and the subsequent adoption by the court of the finding of the jury will not cure the error of submission. Hobart v. Hobart, 51 Iowa 512, reviewing and disapproving Sherwood v. Sherwood, 44 Iowa 192.

In Pennsylvania, in a suit for divorce, where a trial by jury is demanded it will usually be granted, but if there is a rule of court providing that if an answer to a libel shall be filed it shall state whether the respondent demands an issue, otherwise a jury trial shall be taken to be waived; and if the respondent files an answer without any demand for an issue, the refusal of a jury trial is proper. Johnson v. Johnson, 4 Pa. Dist. Rep. 460.

Under the Act of April 20, 1850, P. L. 591, a petition or libel can be filed to a jury trial of certain issues in a divorce case is a statutory and constitutional one, which has been aided and further secured by various code provisions.¹

six months after the alleged desertion has taken place, but an issue will not thereupon be awarded to try the question whether there has been a desertion for six months, as it would be an immaterial fact and would not obviate the necessity of trying the real issue of a desertion for two years. Winpenny v. Winpenny, 16 Phila. (Pa.) 24.

In Wisconsin, by Rev. Stat., § 2843, the issue of adultery in an action for divorce must be tried by a jury, unless a jury trial thereof be waived. Poertner v. Poertner, 66 Wis. 644.

1. New York — Statutory and Constitutional Provisions. — The trial by jury of the question of adultery, when put in issue in an action for divorce, has been used in New York ever since the power was given courts in that state to grant relief in such cases. By statutory enactments the trial of such an issue was an existing right prior to and at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of 1846, and when that instrument was adopted such right became a constitutional one by virtue of the provision therein, viz.: "The trial by jury in all cases in which it has been heretofore used shall remain inviolate forever, but a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases, in the manner to be prescribed by law." Art. 1, § 2. Conderman v. Conderman, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 181; Batzel v. Batzel, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 561; Ferguson v. Ferguson, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 307; Galusha v. Galusha, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 181; Whitney v. Whitney, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 585. And the right of trial by jury upon issues relative to the legality of a marriage, in an action for divorce, was a statutory right prior to the constitution, and by that instrument was made a constitutional one, unless waived in the manner to be prescribed by law. Morrell v. Morrell, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 324.

Under the Code of Procedure, § 253, an issue of fact in an action for divorce was to be tried by a jury, unless waived under section 266, or unless a reference was ordered under section 270. Batzel v. Batzel, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 561; Dietz v. Dietz, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 339; Leslie v. Leslie, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 311, distinguished in Compton v. Compton, 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 579.

The Code of Civil Procedure adopted September, 1877, did not, in terms, give the right to a jury trial in such an action, and repealed section 253 of the Code of Procedure above referred to. Yet this did not affect the right to a jury trial, for by section 970 of the Code Civ. Pro. it is expressly provided that where a party is entitled by the constitution, or by express provision of law, to a trial by jury of one or more issues of fact in an action not specified in section 968, he may apply, upon notice to the court, for an order directing all the questions arising upon those issues to be distinctly and plainly stated. The right to a jury trial of an issue of adultery being a statutory and constitutional right prior to the adoption of the Code of Procedure, that right remains and is included in section 970 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Batzel v. Batzel, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 561. By section 1757 of the Code Civ. Pro. as now in force, it is provided: "If the answer puts in issue the allegation of adultery, the court must, upon application of either party, or it may of its own motion, make an order directing the trial by a jury of that issue, for which purpose the questions to be tried must be prepared and settled as prescribed in section 970 of this act." See Conderman v. Conderman, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 181; Lowenthal v. Lowenthal, 92 Hun (N. Y.) 385; Carpenter v. Carpenter, (Supreme Ct.) 9 N. Y. Supp. 583.

Waiver. — Under section 266 of the Code of Procedure, the jury trial of an issue might be waived. Dietz v. Dietz, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 339; Leslie v. Leslie, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 311. Under the Code Civ. Pro., the method of waiver was prescribed by section 1009. Morrell v. Morrell, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 324.

Reference. — The party might defeat his right to a jury trial by consenting to have a reference, but unless that right is properly waived, or a reference consented to, a jury trial cannot be denied the party. A compulsory reference cannot be ordered. Leslie v. Leslie, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 311; Dietz v. Dietz, 2 Hun (N. Y.) 339; Batzel v. Batzel, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 561; Morrell v. Morrell, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 324. See further, on the question of reference, article REFERENCES.

8. Patents. — In suits in equity for the infringement of patents issues may or may not be granted, according to the determination of the court as to the necessity of a jury trial of the issues.¹

Limitation of Right by Rule of Court. — The party having an absolute right, by statutory, constitutional, and code provisions, to a jury trial of the issue of adultery, such right cannot be impaired by the rules of practice limiting the time for making application to frame issues; and rule 31, limiting the time for making application, is applicable to cases in equity where, by section 971 of the Code Civ. Pro., the granting of issues to a jury is discretionary; but in cases where a jury trial is a matter of right, the rule cannot convert the positive requirement of the statute into a matter of discretion, if the application be not made within ten days. Conderman v. Conderman, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 181; Sigel v. Sigel, 28 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 308.

Absence of Application or Denial of Part Only of Charges. — The right of trial by jury in a divorce case for adultery is, as we have seen, a right preserved by the constitution, which cannot be defeated unless waived as provided by Code Civ. Pro., § 1009, or otherwise tried by consent. By Code Civ. Pro., § 1757, if the answer puts in issue the allegation of adultery, the court must, upon application of either party, or it may, upon its own motion, direct the trial of that issue by jury, and thereupon the questions to be tried must be prepared and settled. Under these provisions, where no application is made, and the defendant denies some only of the charges of adultery alleged in the complaint, the court does not err in proceeding to try without a jury the charges not denied nor put in issue by the answer. Galusha v. Galusha, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 181.

Method of Stating Questions. — The method before the Code of Civil Procedure was to send a feigned issue to the jury for trial, for which the present statute has provided as a substitute (Code Civ. Pro., § 970) that in such cases the party may, upon notice, apply to the court for an order directing the questions of fact arising upon those issues to be distinctly and plainly stated for trial by jury, and upon the hearing of the application the court must cause the issues to be distinctly and plainly stated. This is not a matter of discretion with the court, but the provisions of the statute are imperative that the court, by order, direct the trial by jury and cause issues to be framed for that purpose. Conderman v. Conderman, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 181; Gross v. Gross, 2 N. Y. Month. L. Bul. 86. Where, however, the issues are stated and settled in pursuance of a stipulation of the attorneys for the parties, it is held that they thereby waive the right to have, preliminarily to the trial, any questions more specifically stated and settled; and that in such case the trial is properly permitted to proceed, subject to the power of the court to state and submit to the jury any further questions of fact which properly or necessarily were for them to determine. Whitney v. Whitney, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 585.

Alimony. — The amount of alimony which ought to be allowed annually to a wife if a decree of divorce be granted is a question to be determined by the court, and not submitted to a jury. In this respect the code has not changed the former practice; but if the court submits the question of alimony to a jury, their finding upon that question furnishes no ground for setting aside the verdict upon the guilt or innocence of the parties of the offense charged, and if their finding be disregarded by the court, it is superfluous and harmless. Forrest v. Forrest, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 103.

1. Identity of Two Machines. — On a question of infringement of a patent raised in a suit in equity, a feigned issue is not to be granted unless the opinion of the jury on the question is found to be needed, or unless the court has doubts as to the identity of the two machines. Van Hook v. Pendleton, 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 187.

Directing Issues Prior to Granting Injunction. — Where a court of equity, having heard a case, with full proofs, is well satisfied with the originality of an invention, the regularity of the patent, and of the fact of infringement, it will not send the issues to a jury for its verdict prior to granting a perpetual injunction, especially if the questions in the case, though questions of fact,

9. Mortgages and Liens — Mortgages. — An action or suit for the foreclosure or redemption of a mortgage is an equitable proceeding, and in the absence of statutory provisions the issues are not triable by jury.¹ Under the general practice in equity, the court may refer questions of fact to a jury, in such a case.²

are of that kind which the court can decide on the testimony of men of science as well as or better than a jury, and where a jury trial would be long, costly, or troublesome. Goodyear v. Day, 2 Wall. Jr. (C. C.) 283.

Issue on Newly Discovered Evidence as to Invention. — An action at law for the infringement of a patent was tried, and a verdict found for the plaintiff; and a motion for a new trial, on the grounds of errors in law at the trial, and of surprise in the exclusion of evidence, and of newly discovered evidence, was made and denied. After the verdict the plaintiff filed a bill against the defendants for a perpetual injunction, founded on the verdict. An answer was put in, setting up in defense the matters urged as grounds for a new trial. After the refusal of a new trial in the action at law, and after replication in the suit in equity, the defendants moved in the latter suit for a feigned issue, on the ground that they had just discovered new evidence which went to show a want of novelty in the plaintiff's invention, and was of a different character from any before presented. This was held a proper case for a feigned issue. Foote v. Silsby, 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 545.

Action on Patent Right Involving Accounting. — In an action growing out of a contract for the use of a patent right involving an accounting, the defendant is not entitled as a matter of right to a trial of the issues by a jury. Creighton v. Haggerty, 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 9.

Practice of Federal District Courts in Massachusetts. — It has not been the practice in the federal district courts in Massachusetts to send questions to a jury in patent cases, or in any cases. The court said: "The practice in England exists to a considerable extent, but it should be remembered that there are two classes of courts — the courts of common law and the courts of equity, both very distinct from each other; and when the chancellor sends a case for trial by a jury he sends it to another court, for trial before another bench, because he has no jury in his court; and one reason is, that it is supposed that the judges in the courts of common law determine questions of law in patent cases, and the chancellor can have the aid of the opinions of the judges in the other courts on questions of law, as well as the finding of the jury on the facts. But that is not our practice." Ely v. Monson, etc., Mfg. Co., 4 Fisher Pat. Cas. 64.

1. For trial of issues in suits to foreclose mortgages, see article FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGES, vol. 9, p. 396.

In Indiana a suit to foreclose, cancel, or set aside a mortgage was a suit of exclusive equitable jurisdiction prior to June 18, 1852, and under Rev. Stat. Ind. 1881, § 409, the issues are triable by the court, and there is no error in refusing to have them tried by a jury. Lane v. Schlemmer, 114 Ind. 296; Voss v. Eller, 109 Ind. 260; Brown v. Russell, 105 Ind. 46; Stix v. Sadler, 109 Ind. 254; Rogers v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co., 111 Ind. 343; Carmichael v. Adams, 91 Ind. 526; Brighton v. White, 128 Ind. 320.

Issue on Character of Evidence and Witnesses. — Where the evidence in a suit to foreclose a mortgage is contradictory, depends upon slight circumstances, or the veracity of witnesses is involved, and where the manner, intelligence, and relation of witnesses to a case must have their proper weight, it is highly desirable that the disputed issues should be tried by a jury. In this case, no issues having been submitted, the appellate court reversed the decree and remanded the cause, with directions to the court below to have the proper issues of fact formed and submitted to a jury for trial. Russell v. Paine, 45 Ill. 350.

Question of Payment on Application to Discharge Decree of Foreclosure. — On an

But whether it will do so or not is a matter within its discretion.¹

Liens. — An action to foreclose a mechanic's lien is an equitable action, triable by the court, in which generally the parties have application to discharge a decree of foreclosure, etc., on the ground that the amount due upon the decree has been fully paid, the court may properly direct the question of payment to be tried by jury. Williams v. Troop, 17 Wis. 465.

Question of Title on Bill to Redeem. — A bill to redeem alleged that the defendant was a mortgagee in possession; that the complainant was owner of the equity of redemption, and was ready to pay the mortgage debt. The answer alleged that the defendant had become the owner of the absolute title by purchasing the complainant's equity of redemption under a justice's court judgment against the complainant, docketed in the common pleas. The complainant filed a general replication. It was held that the question whether the title, under the docketed judgment, was valid or void on its face, was properly put in issue. On such an issue the proper practice in chancery is to send an issue on the legal title to be tried at law, or to retain the bill until an action can be brought at law to try the legal title, or until an action pending at law for that purpose can be determined; and the court of equity can so control the action at law that the legal question may be decided. If the parties waive a trial at law, the court of equity is at liberty to decide the question for itself. Freichnecht v. Meyer, 39 N. J. Eq. 551. See infra, IX. 19. Right and Title to Property.

To Ascertain the Value of Mortgage Property on a bill to redeem, it is not necessary for the chancellor to direct an issue unless he has doubts on the subject. Reed v. Lansdale, Hard. (Ky.) 8. See infra, IX. 20. Value of Property.

Counterclaim in Answer. — In New York, in an action to foreclose a mortgage, where the answer sets up a counterclaim, the defendant, by noticing the cause for trial at a court of which a jury forms no part, waives any right he may have to a jury and consents to a trial by the court; therefore, the granting or refusing of a request to frame issues is a matter of discretion, and is not reviewable on appeal. MacKellar v. Rogers, 109 N. Y. 468. See supra, VI. Cross-complaint and Counterclaim, and infra, XVI. Appellate Review.

Issue on Quality or Condition of Consideration of Mortgage. — The current English and American authority on the subject of sales of chattels is firmly established that on such sales, in the absence of an express warranty of quality or condition, no implied warranty can be raised. Hence, in an action to foreclose a mortgage, an order for a feigned issue to ascertain whether sheep, which were the consideration of the mortgage, were reasonably sound and fair for the uses and purposes contemplated in the contract, was held improper where no express warranty or fraud was shown. Williams v. Slaughter, 3 Wis. 347.

Jury Trial under Statutes of Wisconsin. — Wisconsin Laws 1864, c. 169, required every issue of fact joined in an action to foreclose a mortgage executed to a corporation, to be submitted to a jury on demand of either party. This made it imperative on the court to submit the issues to a jury only when demanded by either party. The act also made the verdict final and conclusive. The court, in the case cited below, did not pass upon the constitutionality of the statute, but said that to avoid all misapprehension it did not suppose it incumbent upon the Circuit Court to submit the issues of fact to a jury, unless it thought proper so to do. Truman v. McCollum, 20 Wis. 360.

Wisconsin Laws 1867, c. 79, prohibited courts from trying an action to foreclose a mortgage in which there were issues of fact, without the intervention of a jury, except upon the written stipulation of the parties, and gave to the verdict the same force and effect as in actions at common law. It was held that the power to decide questions of fact in equity cases belonged by the constitution to the chancellor, just as much as the power to decide questions no right to a trial by jury; but issues may be submitted to a jury in the discretion of the court.¹

10. Injunctions. — If in an injunction case there is a difficulty as to the law involved, the court may retain the case and send the parties to a court of law to determine the legal controversy; or if the facts are complicated or difficult, an issue may be awarded to try them.² The suit for an injunction being an equitable one, of law; that it was an inherent part and one of the constituent elements of equitable jurisdiction thereby conferred; and that this act attempting to confer on juries the final decision as to matters of fact in an equity case, and to make their verdict conclusive, was unconstitutional. Callanan v. Judd, 23 Wis. 343.

In New York actions to foreclose mechanics' liens in courts of record are not triable by jury as a matter of right under Laws 1885, c. 342; but by section 8 of that act the form of prosecuting such actions is the same as in the foreclosure of mortgages on real property. Sections 11 and 12, providing that issues in such actions must be tried the same as other issues in the respective courts in which the action is brought, are applicable only to courts not of record. Riggs v. Shannon, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 456, disapproving Schillinger Fire-Proof Cement, etc., Co. v. Arnott, (Supreme Ct.) 14 N. Y. Supp. 326.

Counterclaim for Damages — New York.

— In an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, the defendants set up a counterclaim in which they asked for judgment against the plaintiff, not only for the money which they claimed they had to expend to complete certain work left undone by the plaintiff, but also for damages caused by his delay. Under N. Y. Code Civ. Pro., § 970, as amended by the Act of 1891, the plaintiff was held entitled to have the question of damages for delay submitted to a jury, unless the defendants, before the settlement of an order in the case, which must be done on three days' notice, stipulated to abandon their claim for damages by reason of the delay, in which event the motion should be altogether denied. Riggs v. Shannon, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 456.

Washington. — In a suit to foreclose a mechanic's lien, the fact that defendant has set up a claim for damages for breach of contract does not entitle him to a trial by jury, although the statutes of Washington give him the right to interpose such legal defense. The foreclosure suit was properly cognizable in a court of equity, and the court of equity, having once obtained jurisdiction of the cause, will retain it until final determination, and the interposition of a legal defense does not carry with it all rights incident to such legal defense, so as to make it triable by jury as of right. Installment Bldg., etc., Co. v. Wentworth, 1 Wash. 467. See infra, IX. 12. Damages; supra, VI. Cross-complaint and Counterclaim; and supra, V. Legal and Equitable Issues in the Same Action or Suit.

In Wisconsin, by Rev. Stat. (Sanb. & B. Annot. Stat. 1889), § 3323, either party to an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien has the right to demand a jury. But this does not prevent the court on its own motion ordering a jury to try any issue of fact. Huse v. Washburn, 59 Wis. 414.

Defendant Denying Plaintiff's Right or Setting Up Title in Himself. — Where the complainant seeks protection in the enjoyment of a natural watercourse upon his land, the right will ordinarily be regarded as clear. The mere fact that the defendant denies the right by his answer, or sets up title in himself by adverse user, will not entitle him to an issue before the allowance of an injunction. Holsman v. Boiling Spring Bleaching Co., 14 N. J. Eq. 335; Carlisle v. Cooper, 21 N. J. Eq. 576; Denton v. Leddell, 23 N. J. Eq. 64; Shields v. Arndt, 4 N. J. Eq. 234.

If the Title of the Complainant Is Not Disputed, and the Injury Is Clear, it is not necessary that the fact of a nuisance there is in general no right to a trial by jury. The court may submit questions of fact to a jury, but whether it will grant or refuse an issue is a matter resting within its sound discretion.¹ In the exercise of this discretion the court, acting on the general principles of chancery practice, will direct an issue if this be the proper course,² or will decline to do so and will determine the should be first established by a verdict at law. Duncan v. Hayes, 22 N. J. Eq. 25. See generally article NUISANCES.

Existence or Absence of Doubt. — The court will exercise its discretion whether to order a trial at law or not before granting an injunction to restrain a private nuisance; always inclining, if there be reasonable doubt, to put the case to a jury. Where, however, the court has no doubt as to the weight of evidence or the facts of the case, it will not send the case down for trial at law, but will grant or refuse the injunction as it deems proper. Shields v. Arndt, 4 N. J. Eq. 234; Colman v. Dixon, 50 N. Y. 572. As to the establishment of a right or title at law generally, see article INJUNCTIONS, vol. 10, p. 887 et seq.

But see Hutchins v. Smith, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 251, in which case it is said that where the issues have been voluntarily brought to a hearing before the court, the finding of the court ought to stand in the place of a verdict of the jury, and the defendant is to be regarded as having waived a trial by jury.

Indiana. — Formerly in Indiana a suit for a perpetual injunction was triable before a jury unless a jury trial was waived. Edwards v. Applegate, 70 Ind. 325; Pence v. Garrison, 93 Ind. 345. By the Code Civ. Pro. of 1881 the trial of such a cause is by the court, but the court may in its discretion, for its information, cause any questions of fact involved in the trial to go to a jury. The statute gives no particular directions concerning the trial by jury in such case, and the provision contemplated is that used in trial by jury of questions of fact sent out of the Court of Chancery before the adoption of the Code of 1852, instead of modified by the provisions of the Code Civ. Pro. of 1881. Pence v. Garrison, 93 Ind. 345.

Damages Claimed in Injunction Suit. — In Nebraska, although damages are claimed for wrongs previously committed, the defendant is not entitled to a trial by jury. Disher v. Disher, 45 Neb. 100.

In California an action to restrain the continuance or repetition of a trespass of a character to produce irreparable injury, and to recover for damages already suffered, is an equitable action, in which the issues of fact raised by the pleadings may be tried by the court, or submitted by the court, in its discretion, to a jury. McLaughlin v. Delre, 64 Cal. 472.

In New York, however, it was held that where an action is brought for the double object of removing a nuisance and recovering the damages occasioned by it, it is always tried by a jury. Hudson v. Caryl, 44 N. Y. 553.

Injunction Ancillary to Legal Issues. — In Nevada, where an injunction is sought as ancillary to legal issues, parties have a right to claim a jury to determine the legal issues. Ophir Silver Min. Co. v. Carpenter, 4 Nev. 534.

Prohibition of Acts by Action at Law or Suit in Equity. — In Iowa there are statutory provisions conferring power upon the courts of law in certain cases to prohibit the continuance or repetition of certain acts, and in such a proceeding there is a right to a trial by jury. In order, however, to secure this right, the defendant must pursue the course pointed out by law. If he fails to object at the proper time to the prosecution of an injunction suit in the court of equity, his right to a jury trial will be waived; he has no such right in the equitable injunction proceeding. Richmond v. Dubuque, etc., R. Co., 33 Iowa 422.

2. Case Proper for Jury. — If the court thinks there are matters of fact that would render it proper to send the case to a jury, it may do so. Ely v. Monson, etc., Mfg. Co., 4 Fisher Pat. Cas. 64. In Hammond v. Fuller, 1

fact itself if the contrary be the case.¹

11. Nuisances. — An equitable action to abate a nuisance or to restrain the continuance thereof, or an action for a nuisance in which equitable relief is also demanded, is one in which the parties are not usually entitled to a jury trial, though in its discretion the court may refer issues of fact to a jury.²

Paige (N. Y.) 197, it was impossible for the court to determine whether or not a dam raised the water of a stream above its natural level in such a manner as to injure materially the mill privileges of the plaintiff, and an issue was therefore awarded to determine the question, and all other proceedings, questions, and directions were reserved until after the trial of that issue.

Facts Doubtful and Evidence Conflicting. — Where there is a question of fact involved in the injunction suit upon which the court is doubtful or upon which the evidence is conflicting, an issue should be directed to ascertain it. Nelson v. Armstrong, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 354; Billups v. Sears, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 31; Wise v. Lamb, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 294; Galt v. Carter, 6 Munf. (Va.) 245; Carlisle v. Cooper, 21 N. J. Eq. 576.

Issue to Ascertain Bona Fides of Claim of Creditors. — In Virginia, where a debtor remained in possession of slaves for five years under a parol loan, they were liable to satisfy his creditors, though the possession were resumed by the lender before executions levied upon them. Under these circumstances, where an injunction against the judgment creditors was applied for, it was held that an issue should be directed for the parties to ascertain whether the claim of the creditors for which they sought to subject the slaves was fair and bona fide, or fictitious and fraudulent. Beale v. Digges, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 582.

1. Where a Case Is Not a Doubtful One, there is no necessity for a trial by jury. Newark Plank Road, etc., Co. v. Elmer, 9 N. J. Eq. 786.

Where the Facts Can Be Satisfactorily Ascertained by the Court without the aid of a jury, it is its duty to decide as to the facts and not to subject the parties to the expense and delay of a jury trial. Carlisle v. Cooper, 21 N. J. Eq. 576.

If the Issues Are Numerous and Apt to Confuse a Jury, the court will not submit them to a jury. So held in an action by a taxpayer to enjoin the city from purchasing property for the reason that it would be a waste of public funds. Ziegler v. Chapin, 26 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 317. See further, for issues on injunctions in nuisance cases, infra, IX. 11. Nuisances.

2. Cogswell v. New York, etc., R. Co., 105 N. Y. 319, reversing 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. 92, and holding that it is not an action for a nuisance within the meaning of the provisions of the New York Code Civ. Pro., § 968, which declares that such an action must be tried by a jury.

In New York, before as well as since the writ of nuisance was abolished by the code, the right existed to maintain an action for the removal of a nuisance which, when brought, was exclusively of equitable cognizance, properly triable at special term and not by a jury, unless the court in its discretion should otherwise order. An action at common law might also have been maintained for the recovery of the damages occasioned by the nuisance which was exclusively of common-law jurisdiction and triable at circuit, and always by a jury, unless the parties should otherwise agree. Where, however, the action was brought for the double objects of removal of the nuisance and recovery of damages occasioned by it, it was always tried by a jury. Hudson v. Caryl, 44 N. Y. 553.

Facts Doubtful or Plain. — In an equity case, where the question whether a structure will be a nuisance is doubtful, the chancellor will usually refer it to a jury to determine; but if the question is too plain to admit of reasonable doubt, there is no necessity for a jury trial and the chancellor will be right in deciding the fact for himself. Newark Plank Road, etc., Co. v. Elmer, 9 N. J. Eq. 790, where the alleged nuisance was a bridge over a navigable stream, and the chancellor decided the issue.

Proper Case for an Issue. — On a bill in equity by a riparian proprietor of land on a natural stream, to restrain another proprietor from so conducting his busi-

12. Damages. — In some cases where a court of equity has jurisdiction of a suit involving a claim for damages, it may ascertain and assess the damages.¹ In other cases the damages may be assessed by a jury impaneled for the purpose, or on issues submitted,² and this seems to be the common course.³ In at least ness as to pollute the waters of the stream, and to cause disagreeable odors at the plaintiff's land, the answer denied that the stream was polluted or disagreeable odors produced at the plaintiff's land, or that the plaintiff intended to use his land as a residence, and alleged that the defendant had a prescriptive right to carry on his business in the manner in which he was carrying it on. Defendant filed a motion for issues to a jury, which motion was overruled. It was held that without passing upon the question whether the defendant had a constitutional right to trial by jury, it was erroneous to refuse him the right to have issues framed which should submit to a jury the important facts which were in controversy between himself and the plaintiff. Harris v. Mackintosh, 133 Mass. 228.

Necessity of Applying for Issue Where Parties Have Adequate Remedy at Law. — A bill in equity was filed asking the abatement as a nuisance of a building which was being erected within the line of the street, and obstructed and delayed public travel. The answer denied that the building was erected within the line of the street. It was held that an issue at law could be directed to try the disputed facts and the bill retained, but that since the parties had an adequate remedy at law, and the case was one not requiring the extraordinary powers of the court of equity to be exercised, the bill must be dismissed unless an issue of fact were applied for. Atty.-Gen. v. Heishon, 18 N. J. Eq. 410. See generally article NUISANCES. As to issues in nuisance cases where injunction is sought, see further, supra, IX. 10. Injunctions.

Uncertain Demands Where Right and Remedy Are Equitable. — Whatever may be the proper mode of ascertaining uncertain and unliquidated demands in cases where a court of chancery may be compelled to decide legal rights or questions on account of defect of a remedy at law, it is a well-established principle that where both the right and the remedy are equitable, the chancellor may ascertain and fix, without resorting either to a jury or commissioners, all uncertain sums to be adjusted between the parties. Head v. Head, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 112; Baltzell v. Hall, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 97.

2. McDowell v. Wilmington Bank, 1 Harr. (Del.) 369; Hilleary v. Crow, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 542; Watson v. Stucker, 5 Dana (Ky.) 581.

Issue on Damages After Disapproval of Commissioner's Award. — In a case where relief was sought in the premises by injunction, commissioners were appointed to assess the damages sustained by complainant arising from an obstruction of a lane on his land by an embankment erected by a railroad company. The court was unable to determine, from the award of the commissioners, what would be proper compensation. The award, therefore, was not approved, and instead thereof an issue was directed to be framed on the defendant's paying into court the amount of the award to insure the complainants' damages, and undertaking to try the issue at the next circuit, the ad interim injunction being dissolved. Carpenter v. Easton, etc., R. Co., 24 N. J. Eq. 408.

3. Braxton v. Willing, 4 Call (Va.) 288; Isler v. Grove, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 257, where the subject-matter in controversy was in the nature of estimated and unliquidated damages, and the accuracy and credit of witnesses were impeached, the appellate court, considering the issue proper, reversed the decree of the chancery court rendered on report of a commissioner, and remanded the cause, with instructions to direct an issue to a jury to try the questions of fact involved.

In Kentucky, in a suit in chancery to enforce a lien upon a note pledged to secure a reasonable compensation for services performed, the appellate court, in reversing the decree, suggested the propriety, upon return of the cause, of submitting an inquiry to a jury to ascertain and fix the amount upon an issue to be directed, with a view to that object. The court stated that upon the one instance, by statutory provisions, either party has been given the right to jury trial on the question of damages.¹

13. Fraud or Undue Influence. — Where there is a question of trial of such an issue more satisfactory evidence might possibly be adduced, but if it should not be, the assessment of unliquidated damages for services rendered falls more properly within their province, as more consistent with the genius of our institutions and more likely to be satisfactory to the parties. Moore v. Martin, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 97.

In Tennessee, where a widow filed her bill charging her deceased husband with selling and conveying his land with intent to defraud her of her dower, and praying dower and damages for the detention thereof, the chancellor submitted both the validity of the deed and the quantum of damages to the jury. It was held that the submission of the matter of damages to the jury was not in accordance with chancery practice. The validity of the deed being settled by the verdict of the jury, it was said that the court should have given relief by assigning dower and taking all proper accounts between the parties. London v. London, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 1.

1. In New York, by Code Civ. Pro., § 970, as amended by Laws of 1891, c. 208, it is provided that where one or more questions arise on the pleadings, as to the value of the property or as to the damages which a party may be entitled to recover, either party may apply, upon notice at any time, to the court for an order directing all such issues or questions to be distinctly and plainly stated for trial accordingly. Upon the hearing of the application the court must cause such issues or questions to be distinctly and plainly stated. See note, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 101.

Under the foregoing provision, in an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, questions as to the amount of the lien do not affect the value of the property or damages which one party may be entitled to recover; and the plaintiff, therefore, cannot demand as matter of right that issues as to such questions be framed and sent to a jury. Riggs v. Shannon, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 456, holding, however, that in such an action, where a counterclaim asks judgment not only for money expended by the defendant to complete the work left undone by the plaintiff, but also for damages caused by the plaintiff's delay in completing the work, the plaintiff is entitled to have questions of damages or delays submitted to a jury, unless the defendant waives his claim thereto.

Section 253 of the New York Code of Procedure provided that actions for the recovery of money only, or for specific real or personal property, or for divorce on the ground of adultery, must be tried by a jury, unless waived, as provided by section 266, or a reference be ordered. Section 254 provided that every other issue was triable by the court, which, however, might order the whole issue or any specific question of fact involved therein to be tried by a jury, or refer it, etc. Under this provision an order of the court that all issues be tried by a jury in an action brought to recover damages for alleged wrongful acts and to restrain the continuance thereof was held valid, irrespective of the question whether issues might have been tried by the court or not. Parker v. Laney, 58 N. Y. 469. See Colman v. Dixon, 50 N. Y. 572.

Under the Code Civ. Pro., an equitable action for the recovery of damages is triable by the court, with the assistance of a jury upon such issues of fact as the court may refer to them. Brinckerhoff v. Bostwick, 105 N. Y. 567, reviewing and distinguishing Hun v. Cary, 82 N. Y. 65; Bradley v. Aldrich, 40 N. Y. 504; Davison v. Associates, etc., 71 N. Y. 333; and reversing Brinckerhoff v. Bostwick, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 458.

So, in an equitable action to recover damages for alleged illegal acts of defendants, the special term, on motion or of its own volition, may direct questions of fact to be tried at circuit. If any special right of the parties is violated in the final disposition of the issues tried, whether as to the mode of the trial or otherwise, such question may be raised on the trial and exception taken. Kellum v. Durfoo, 78 N. Y. 484, dismissing appeal from Kellum v. Knecht, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 583.

fraud or undue influence involved in a suit in equity, the court can determine the question without the aid of a jury.¹ But it is often deemed desirable to have an issue directed to determine that fact.² Where a bill in equity alleges fraud in fact, which is denied by the answer and not established to the satisfaction of the court, an issue should be awarded.³ If, however, the chancellor

Undue Influence Implied by Law.—When undue influence is to be inferred from the nature of the transaction, or where the transaction itself is contrary to the policy of the law, it is the province of the court of equity to determine the point, and the question should not be sent to a jury on issues. Casborne v. Barsham, 2 Beav. 76.

Whether Certain Promises and Assurances Were Fraudulently Made, to the plaintiff's injury and the defendant's gain, are issues which should be submitted to a jury. Rutherford v. Williams, 42 Mo. 18.

Deed Impeached as Fraudulent.—On a hearing in equity, the deed under which the defendant claimed to hold the premises was impeached as fraudulent, and the court ordered a jury to try the question of fraud. Pomeroy v. Winship, 12 Mass. 514; Anonymous, 1 Desaus. (S. Car.) 124.

Bond to Defraud Creditors.—Where there is reason to believe that a bond has been given to defraud creditors, the court will direct an issue to try the validity of the bond and the quantum of the debt. M'Neal v. Smith, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 552.

Fraud and Mismanagement of Directors of Corporation.—In Hedges v. Paquett, 3 Oregon 78, stockholders of a corporation sued the directors and the corporation, charging fraud and mismanagement; a jury was impaneled to pass upon the question whether there had been gross mismanagement on the part of the directors and on the question whether the directors had been guilty of actual fraud.

In New York it is held that an action against directors of a bank, by stockholders, to call them to account for losses and damages sustained by reason of their fraud and misconduct, is an equitable action, in which defendants are not of right entitled to a jury trial of the whole issue. But it is proper in such an action to frame issues to be submitted to and tried by a jury. Brinckerhoff v. Bostwick, 105 N. Y. 567 [reviewing and distinguishing Hun v. Cary, 82 N. Y. 65; Bradley v. Aldrich, 40 N. Y. 504; Davison v. Associates, etc., 71 N. Y. 333; and reversing Brinckerhoff v. Bostwick, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 458].

3. Janney v. Imperial Oil Co., 6 Phila. (Pa.) 261; Hooe v. Marquess, 4 Call (Va.) 416; Bullock v. Gordon, 4 Munf. (Va.) 450.

Where the agent of a landlord had procured from a tenant a conveyance of his farm under suspicious circumstances, the court, not being satisfied with the evidence in the cause, after the lapse of five years directed an issue to inquire whether the deed had been obtained by fraud, duress, imposition, or undue influence. Smith v. Ward, Hayes & J. 705.

Reversal for Failure to Order an Issue.—If the appellate court is satisfied, from the conflicting and unsatisfactory testimony, that the chancery court should have directed an issue to determine the fraud, it will reverse the decree of the chancellor, and remand the cause back, and direct an issue to be submitted to a jury. Hooe v. Marquess, 4 Call (Va.) 416; Bullock v. Gordon, 4 Munf. (Va.) 450.

Suit to Subject Property Fraudulently Conveyed.—In a suit in equity, under Massachusetts Stat. 1875, c. 235, for the collection of a debt for goods sold and delivered, out of property alleged to have been fraudulently conveyed by the defendant to a third person, the existence of the debt was denied and a trial by jury demanded in the answer. The Supreme Court was of opinion that the defendant had a constitutional right to have issues framed covering the material facts in dispute, but it was not deemed necessary to determine that can satisfactorily decide, from the evidence, on the question of fraud, no issue should be submitted.¹

14. Forgery. — If the question of forgery is in issue in an equitable case, it may be submitted to a jury for determination.²

15. Usury. — The question of usury arising in an equitable case may be determined by the court, or made the subject of an issue.³

point, since the case was to be remanded. It was held, however, that exercising the discretion existing in equity and given by Mass. Stat., c. 151, § 27, issues should be framed covering all the material facts relating to the alleged fraudulent conveyance. Powers v. Raymond, 137 Mass. 483.

Issue Confined to Pleadings. — Where the pleadings present the question of one particular fraud only, an issue whether there was any fraud is not warranted. Brink v. Morton, 2 Iowa 411.

An action to set aside a release as fraudulent and procured by duress and for malicious prosecution is such an equitable action as is triable by the court, and the plaintiff has no right to the trial by jury of the question of fraud in the release. Stono v. Weiller, (Supreme Ct.) 32 N. Y. St. Rep. 936, affirmed in 3 Silv. Ct. App. (N. Y.) 556, 128 N. Y. 655. 2. Wilson v. Thornbury, 30 L. T. N. S. 667; Maise v. Garner, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 383.

In Stafford v. Stafford, 1 N. J. Eq. 533, after the delivery of the opinion application was made to the court upon the part of the complainant for an issue at law. The chancellor refused the application, but stated that if the evidence had led to the conclusion that the deed in question was a forgery, he would not have pronounced a decree involving a party in a criminal charge without the intervention of a jury, and would have awarded an issue at law. Cited in Garwood v. Eldridge, 2 N. J. Eq. 291, note.

Without Sending the Fact of Forgery to a Jury, the court has jurisdiction to declare an instrument forged, and to order it to be delivered up. Peake v. Highfield, 1 Russ. 559. For issues in cases involving the rescission or cancellation of instruments because of forgery, see supra, IX. 4. Specific Performance, Rescission, and Cancellation.

3. The Refusal of the Court to Frame Issues on the question of usury in such a case is not error. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. v. Nelson, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 21.

Where No Doubt Exists as to usury charged, it is proper that no issue thereon should be submitted to a jury. Keagy v. Trout, 85 Va. 390.

Where Doubt Exists whether the sale of property is really intended as a shift to evade the statute against usury, the court of chancery ought to direct an issue to be tried upon viva voce testimony if it can be had. This not having been done, the decree was reversed on appeal, and the cause remanded to the court of chancery with directions to have the specified issues made up and tried. Douglass v. McChesney, 2 Rand. (Va.) 109.

Where No Reason Appears why the court should exercise its discretion by sending the issue of usury to a jury, such a motion will be denied. Hayes v. Bainbridge, (Supreme Ct.) 61 N. Y. St. Rep. 853, 30 N. Y. Supp. 148.

In Virginia the Code of 1860, c. 141, § 10, provided that "upon a bill requiring no discovery of the defendant, but praying an injunction to prevent the sale of property conveyed to secure the repayment of a sum of money or other thing borrowed at usurious interest, the court shall cause an issue to be made and tried at its bar by a jury, whether or no the transaction be usurious," etc. It was held that such an issue was not a mere incident to the suit, as ordinary issues out of chancery, but the sole object of the suit; that it was not to inform the conscience of the court, but the court was bound to decree according to the verdict, unless for good cause a new trial were granted; and that it was to be tried in the same manner, and the verdict was to have the same effect, as if the suit

16. Insanity. — Where the question of insanity is involved in a suit in equity, the court may inform its conscience by directing an issue to determine the matter.¹ But this question is within the sound discretion of the judge, who may decide the question of insanity himself, without any submission to a jury.²

17. Partnership. — Authorities which declare that the question whether or not a partnership exists is generally to be decided by a jury have reference to actions at law, and not necessarily to suits in equity; and the fact that a question of partnership arises in the case does not affect the general rule in relation to an issue in chancery causes.³ Where there is a serious doubt upon a were an action at law to recover a debt alleged to be usurious. Brockenbrough v. Spindle, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 21. The provision above quoted was incorporated in the Code of 1873, c. 137, § 12, and has no application to a bill requiring a discovery. Keagy v. Trout, 85 Va. 390.

In West Virginia the special issue of usury required to be submitted to a jury by the court, under the Code, c. 96, § 6, is intended to apply to jury trials alone, and not to cases wherein a jury is waived and the court, by agreement of the parties, is substituted to try the issue. In such a case neither party can afterwards complain that such special issue was not directed. Ravenswood Bank v. Hamilton, (W. Va. 1897) 27 S. E. Rep. 296.

Submission of Issue upon Unsworn Allegation. — A motion, in a suit to foreclose a mortgage, to submit to a jury a question of fact as to the insanity of the mortgagor upon the allegation of insanity in an unsworn answer, without any affidavit of the fact, is properly refused. While an issue of insanity might be a proper one for a jury in a case of that character, yet there is no rule of chancery practice which would require a chancellor to submit a question of fact to a jury upon the bare assertion of counsel that the fact existed, unsupported by any evidence whatever. Hahn v. Huber, 83 Ill. 246, approving Sea Ins. Co. v. Day, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 369.

For Further Treatment of the question when issues of insanity will be submitted to a jury, see article INSANE PERSONS, vol. 10, p. 1169.

For Submission of Issues in a Will Case where the question of sanity is involved, see article PROBATE AND ADMINISTRATION.

3. Robinson v. Allen, 85 Va. 721, where the court in its discretion refused an issue to a jury to determine whether or not there was a partnership.

New York. — An action brought by a plaintiff alleged a partnership with the defendant, and prayed for a dissolution and account, a receiver, a sale and distribution of the property, and payment to the plaintiff of whatever was found due. The answer denied every material fact alleged, and the issues thus raised were brought to trial. It was held that such action was not one for the recovery of money, or for any of the relief specified in the Code of Procedure, § 253, declaring what actions must be tried by jury, but sought other relief and fell within the provisions of section 254, which declared that "every other issue is triable by the court, which, however, may order the whole issue, or any specific question of fact involved therein, to be tried by a jury," and was also within the provisions of the Code of Procedure, § 72, which provided that "feigned issues are abolished; and instead thereof, in cases where the power matter of fact in a partnership case, the court may, and usually will, award an issue to determine the fact.¹

18. Accounts and Accounting. — Where a case involves an accounting on the examination of a long account, the matter will usually be decided by the court or made the subject of a reference, and not of issues to a jury.²

19. Right and Title to Property. — Issues may be and frequently are directed to decide on questions affecting the right of property.³ And where a court of equity has jurisdiction of the subject-matter, as in cases of dower, partition, etc., and title to property is now exists to order a feigned issue, * * * an order for the trial may be made, stating distinctly and plainly the question of fact to be tried, and such order shall be the only authority necessary for a trial." Hence there was no lack of power in the court to order any question of fact arising upon the issues between the parties to be tried by a jury, and to settle and determine what questions should be so tried. O'Brien v. Bowes, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 106.

Various Controverted Questions in Action to Settle Partnership. — Where, in an action between partners to settle copartnership matters, it becomes evident to the court, on examination of the issues, that the several interests of the parties will, on the trial, involve much contradiction, perhaps questions of veracity, of mistake or fraud in the drawing of the papers, etc., and is manifestly an inquiry which business men, accustomed to examine facts, should decide, the court will direct the issue to be tried by a jury. Clark v. Brooks, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 285.

1. The Existence of a Copartnership being doubtful upon bill and answer, the court will award an issue to determine it. Huston v. Huston, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 183, 36 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 292; Drope v. Miller, Hempst. (U. S.) 49. See Hinds v. Daley, 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 52, in previous note. Also M'Gregor v. Bainbrigge, 7 Hare 164, note.

Withdrawing from Master and Submitting to Jury. — While the court is disposed to withdraw sharply contested questions of fact from masters, in order that they may be settled with less expense, more expedition, and perhaps more satisfaction, by a jury, nevertheless, this practice ought not to be encouraged where the finding of the jury might not put an end to the case by placing the facts in such a condition on the record as to make it possible for the court to enter a final decree without further reference to a master. This is particularly true in matters of account, of which partnership cases form one of the most numerous classes. Hinds v. Daley, 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 51.

2. Complicated Accounts. — Thus where the matter involved arose upon complicated accounts, the court refused an issue, holding such matters to be more satisfactorily triable by the court than by a jury. Sparks v. Farmers' Bank, 3 Del. Ch. 225.

Accounting in Partnership Cases. — See supra, IX. 17. Partnership.

An Action on a Contract Relating to the Use of a Patent Right, and involving an accounting, is one in which the defendant is not of right entitled to a trial of the issues by a jury. Creighton v. Haggerty, 50 N. Y. Super. Ct. 9. See supra, IX. 8. Patents.

Issues upon Counterclaims involving account, see supra, VI. Cross-complaint and Counterclaim.

3. Issue to Try Right in Attachment. — An issue in an attachment case to try the right of a party to anything is too general. If the right depends upon disputed facts, these facts may be ascertained by a feigned issue; as, for instance, if the fact in question was whether the defendant had demanded the exemption at the time of the service of the attachment, this fact could be so ascertained. But the right of a party may depend upon law and fact. When this is the case the court should send the contested facts to trial by a jury, and retain the questions of law for its own decision. Landis v. Lyon, 71 Pa. St. 475. See supra, IX. 2. Attachment and Garnishment, and VIII. 3. Questions of Law.

involved, it is believed to be the general practice of the court not to determine on the title, but to leave that matter to a jury, by directing an action at law or ordering an issue.¹

20. Value of Property. — The ascertainment of the value of property involved in a suit in equity may be determined by the court or on issues to a jury, according to the general practice in equity.²

In McDougald v. Dougherty, 11 Ga. 570, it was held that when titles to property are in dispute before a court of chancery, a jury alone is competent to determine the real truth of the fact, and that neither the chancellor himself nor the master will undertake to decide upon antagonistic claims to property.

In Reams v. Spann, 28 S. Car. 530, the action was to recover real estate, and incidentally thereto obtain a partition of it, the plaintiffs claiming title on one ground as heirs at law. It had been determined on a former appeal that such claim was invalid and a new trial had been ordered. When the case went back to the circuit, the judge, upon motion of the plaintiff's attorney, framed issues to be submitted to the jury, "whether the plaintiffs are the owners in fee simple, or are entitled to the land in dispute." It was held that the issues framed were so general in their character as practically to supersede the decision already made and to authorize the plaintiffs to bring a new action of ejectment, when one of that character, certainly as to the question of titles, was already then and there pending; and it was said that upon the question of title it was not a case for issues from chancery.

2. Value and Profits of Land. — Where it is necessary to ascertain the value and profits of land in a suit in equity, an issue should be directed to a jury, and the matter should not be referred to commissioners. Eustace v. Gaskins, 1 Wash. (Va.) 188.

Value of Land Condemned. — In a controversy in an equity case between the owner of certain lots of land, and a corporation which had condemned them for a raceway, an issue was ordered to ascertain their value. Trenton Banking Co. v. McKelway, 8 N. J. Eq. 84.

Value of Mortgaged Property. — On a bill to redeem mortgaged property, it is not necessary for the chancellor to direct an issue to ascertain the value unless he has doubts upon the subject. Reed v. Lansdale, Hard. (Ky.) 8. See supra, IX. 9. Mortgages and Liens.

Value of Deficiency of Land Conveyed. — If a tract of land, with the growing crops, and a few articles of personal property, be all sold together for a given sum, and the land proves deficient in quantity, the court of chancery may deduct a ratable proportion of the purchase-money without directing an issue to ascertain it. Anthony v. Oldacre, 4 Call (Va.) 489.

Where the Value of an Interest in Slaves was involved in a suit in chancery, it was deemed best to ascertain it by a jury impaneled for the purpose. Smiley v. Smiley, 1 Dana (Ky.) 94.

The Value of Property Wrongfully Attached and Converted, where the whole controversy is in equity, may be determined by the court without the intervention of a jury. Greer v. Powell, 1 Bush (Ky.) 499, decided under section 343 of the Kentucky Civil Code, providing that issues of fact in equitable proceedings shall be tried by the court, "subject to its power to order any issue or issues to be tried by a jury."

21. Agreements, Deeds, and Covenants Generally. — Questions of fact relating to agreements, deeds, and covenants generally, when involved in a suit in equity, may be, and often are, submitted to a jury for their determination under the ordinary principles applicable.¹

22. Lost Papers. — Where a bill is filed to recover the amount of a lost note, the chancellor may direct an issue to be tried by a jury to ascertain the fact of loss.² And though it has been held that the consideration of a written paper is a matter for the judge to determine, yet it is proper for him to submit an issue as to what the terms of the lost paper were.³

23. Leases and Rents. — Where, in a suit concerning leases and rents, questions of fact arise, they may be determined by a jury.⁴

It was held that as it did not appear that the court was asked to exercise the power thus conferred to order a jury, its failure to do so of its own volition was not an abuse of its discretionary power.

In New York it is provided by Code Civ. Pro., § 970, as amended by Laws of 1881, c. 208, that where one or more questions arise on the pleadings as to the value of property, either party may apply to the court, upon notice at any time, for an order directing the issues or questions to be distinctly and plainly stated for trial, and upon the hearing of the application the court must cause such issues or questions to be distinctly and plainly stated. Covenants Broken. — Whether a party has broken any of his covenants or not is a matter properly triable at law, as the damages, supposing a breach, cannot be settled without such trial. Stafford v. London, 4 Bro. P. C. 635.

Illegal Agreements. — An issue may be directed to try whether an agreement to carry on an illegal game and a contribution for that purpose had been made. Nash v. Ash, 1 Eden 378.

A lease made before the enactment of the statute of frauds and afterwards lost, being proved to contain an agreement as to the amount of a fine to be paid "upon the renewing of any life or lives," and having been seven times since renewed, an issue was directed to try whether at or before the making of the lease there was an agreement for a lease of lives renewable forever; and a second issue to try whether such lease contained any clause or covenant relating to the renewal, and independent of the stipulation as to the amount of fines. *Nangle v. Determination of Rent, Commencement and Duration of Lease, etc. — Where, in an agreement for a lease, the particular rent, and the commencement and duration of the lease are uncertain, or dependent upon the approbation of a third person, a court of equity will direct proper issues to ascertain these several facts before any specific performance of the contract will be decreed. Plunket v. Kingsland, 1 Bro. P. C. 322.

24. Custom. — An issue to determine a custom may or may not be granted, according to the court's discretion, exercised on general principles of chancery practice.¹

25. Heirship, Legitimacy, and Marriage — Heirship. — The question of heirship, according to the English practice, was sometimes made the subject of an issue to a jury and sometimes decided by the court.²

Legitimacy and Marriage. — Issues to try the question of legitimacy or marriage raised in a suit have been granted in some cases and refused in others.³

26. Boundaries. — Matters in dispute concerning boundaries of property may be, and often are, according to the English practice, determined by a jury on issues directed for that purpose.⁴

27. Bankruptcy and Insolvency. — In bankruptcy matters, issues to a jury are often directed to ascertain certain facts.⁵

28. Miscellaneous Instances. — Other cases than those already specifically treated, in which it has been considered proper to Issues upon Legality of Marriage. — How. Annot. Mich. Stat., § 6622, provides that "all issues upon the legality of a marriage (except where a marriage is sought to be annulled on the ground of the physical incapacity of one of the parties), shall be tried by a jury of the country." Under this statute the court has authority to frame an issue and submit it to the jury on its own motion, but the statute is not mandatory and may be waived. *Maier v. Information to Establish Title to Alluvium. — An information for the purpose of having the title of the crown to alluvium gained from the sea declared and established is analogous to a bill to ascertain boundaries, and requires in support of it admissions or evidence showing a title in the crown to some lands in the possession of the defendant. But where the witness in support of the information deposed that the alluvium had been added to the main land, not gradually and imperceptibly, but rapidly, it was held that a sufficient case had been made for directing issues. *Atty.-Gen. v. The chancellor of Maryland, by the Act of 1801, c. 18, had power to direct issues in a summary way and inquire whether a debtor who applied to him for relief under the insolvent law was liable to be made a bankrupt under the law of the United States. Clarke v. Ray, 1 Har. & J. (Md.) 318. For general matters of practice pertaining to bankruptcy and insolvency, see article INSOLVENCY, ante, p. 1.

submit issues, will be found in the notes. In general, it may be said that for the determination of any question of fact, in all equity cases and proceedings, issues to the jury may be directed subject to the general principles governing the discretion of the court.¹

X. PRINCIPLES AND PROCEEDINGS RELATIVE TO SUBMISSION, FRAMING, REQUISITES, CORRECTION, ETC. — 1. By Whom Granted — In General, as has been seen, issues to the jury may be granted by courts of various natures, such as courts of equity, courts of law, and those of a probate nature.²

Jurisdiction. — It is obvious that the court granting the issues should possess the requisite jurisdiction.³

Court of Proper County. — It is equally evident that the granting and framing of issues should be by the court of the proper county.⁴

Single Judge. — In some cases the application in a cause pending before a court in banc may be made to and issue granted by a single judge.⁵ In other cases it appears that

1. Issue on Donatio Mortis Causa. — An issue has been directed to try whether there was a donatio mortis causa, as it did not appear to have been in the last illness. Blount v. Burrow, 1 Ves. Jr. 546.

Issue Ordered to Discover Witness's Interest. — Stokes v. M'Kerral, 3 Bro. C. C. 228.

An Issue to Try a Solicitor's Authority to use a relator's name was directed under the circumstances, although such relator afterwards acknowledged the authority. Atty.-Gen. v. Skinners' Co., Cooper's Pr. Cas. 1.

The Practice of Making the Agents of a Party Defendants when nothing but costs is prayed against them, as it deprives him of their evidence, is improper, and should be made by directing an issue. Attwood v. Small, 6 Cl. & F. 232, reversing Small v. Attwood, Young 407.

The Question as to an Agent's Authority, denied by the answer and by his deposition stating his declaration to the contrary at the time of execution, was held proper to be determined by issue. Howard v. Braithwaite, 1 Ves. & B. 202.

A Suit in Equity Involving the Professional Conduct of an Attorney is appropriately tried by a judge without a jury, and if there is no suggestion, nor any reason why a trial by a jury is necessary, the appellate court will reverse the order directing the issues. Ellensohn v. Keyes, 25 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 353.

Currency with Reference to Which Contract Was Made. — Questions in an equity case as to whether a contract was made with reference to Confederate money as a standard of value or whether the notes were to be paid in the currency of the time when they fell due, are more properly subjects of reference to a commission than of issues to a jury, and the court makes no error in refusing an issue in such a case, and especially where there is no conflict of testimony. Kraker v. Shields, 20 Gratt. (Va.) 377.

2. See supra, I., II., IV., VII.

3. Judgment on Issue in Wrong Court No Bar. — The award of an issue by a court without jurisdiction and affirmance of the judgment on exceptions to the ruling upon the trial, in which the question of jurisdiction was not mooted, is no bar to the granting of another issue by the proper court. Gordon's Appeal, 93 Pa. St. 361.

4. Issue to Test Validity of Judgment. — In Pennsylvania the court of the county in which the transcript of the record of a judgment from another county was entered cannot frame an issue to test the validity of the judgment. Only the court of the county in which it was originally entered has this power. Gordon's Estate, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 350.

5. Massachusetts Stat. 1826, c. 109, provided that in suits in equity pending in the supreme judicial court, any justice thereof might make all interlocutory orders and decrees necessary

it should be so made.¹

2. On What Proceedings Granted — a. ON APPLICATION OR EX MERO MOTU. — The submission of issues is done either upon the application of a party or upon the court's own motion.² The failure to make a demand or application may constitute a waiver of the right to an issue,³ and it is apprehended that the court, subject to the rules governing its discretion, is never obliged to submit issues without a request therefor.⁴ But in general the court has power ex mero motu to direct an issue in an equitable case whenever such issue is proper,⁵ and it may do this in a case in which a party would have an absolute right to the full hearing and final determination of such suits. It was held that an order directing the trial of a material fact by jury was an interlocutory order, and consequently that where the only material question in the suit in equity was of the sanity of the plaintiff, it was competent for the court, when holden by a single judge, to direct an issue to be framed and tried by a jury, for the purpose of determining this question, before the general hearing. Eames v. Eames, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 141. See infra, X. 4. Time of Application and Order for Issue.

1. In Tennessee, under the Act of Assembly in force in 1804, to regulate the proceedings of the court of equity and for the amendment of the law, it was held that an application to the court to make up issues of fact should be made to a single judge out of court. Duncan v. King, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 79.

2. Ringgold v. Patterson, 15 Ark. 209; Carroll v. Deimel, 95 N. Y. 255; Brinkley v. Brinkley, 56 N. Y. 192; Ellensohn v. Keyes, 25 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 353; Black v. Shreve, 13 N. J. Eq. 455. As to whom application is made, see supra, X. 1. By Whom Granted.

3. Thus, in an action for partition in which there is a counterclaim, if there is no request made for a trial by jury, the right, if any such exists, must be regarded as waived. Sheets v. Bray, 125 Ind. 33.

In the Probate Courts of Alabama there must be a requisition by one of the parties for issues to the jury; the court cannot ex mero motu submit them. Blankenship v. Nimmo, 50 Ala. 506. See also supra, V., VI., and VII.

Spracher*, 87 Va. 162.

Foreclosure of Mortgage. — In New York, under the former chancery practice where, on bill to foreclose a mortgage, a cause came on to be heard upon pleadings and proof, and the testimony as to a leading and decisive fact in the cause was so nearly balanced as to leave the court in doubt, a feigned issue might have been awarded by the court itself without any motion from either party to have such fact tried by a jury. Munson v. Reed, Clarke Ch. (N. Y.) 580. And under the Code Civ. Pro., §§ 823, 791, 1003, in an action for the foreclosure of mortgages the trial is by the court, but the court is authorized to direct any matter of fact in issue to be tried by a jury; and such a direction is a substitute for the former practice of awarding feigned issues in an action in equity, and the direction may be given on the application of either party or by the court on its own motion. Carroll v. Deimel, 95 N. Y. 255.

Issue on Legality of Marriage. — In Michigan, under How. Anno. Stat., § 6622, providing for trial by jury, of issues upon the legality of a marriage, the court has authority to frame an issue and submit it to a jury on its own motion, and the failure to base the order on a special motion will be no ground for vacating the order by mandamus. Maier v. Lillibridge, (Mich. 1897) 70 N. W. Rep. 1032.

b. REQUISITES AND ACCOMPANIMENTS OF APPLICATION OR DEMAND—(1) Demand in Pleading or by Independent Application.—In some cases the demand for an issue is to be made by the party in his first pleading in the cause,² but it is believed that this practice is peculiar, dependent upon statutes or rules of court, and that generally the application is an independent one made at the proper time.³

(2) Application for Proper and Material Issue.—The application or demand must be made for a proper and material issue.⁴

(3) Affidavit and Evidence.—And it must in many cases be accompanied by affidavits, or supported by competent and sufficient evidence.⁵

(4) Time of Application or Demand.—See infra, this article, X. 4. Time of Application and Order for.

(5) Notice of Motion.—In several of the states provisions exist requiring notice to be given within a certain time of the motion

1. Hoitt v. Burleigh, 18 N. H. 390.

In Tennessee the Code gives either party to an equitable action the right to have the issues tried by a jury, on proper application therefor, but if this application be not made, the court, ex mero motu, may submit proper issues to a jury. London v. London, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 1; Orgain v. Ramsey, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 580; Timmons v. Garrison, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 148; Lowe v. Traynor, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 633.

In Wisconsin Rev. Stat., § 3323, gives either party to an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien the right to demand a jury. But this is held not to prevent the court, on its own motion, from ordering a jury to try any issue of fact. Huse v. Washburn, 59 Wis. 414.

2. In Pennsylvania rules of court have been made providing that if an answer to a libel in a divorce case be filed, it shall state whether the respondent demands an issue, otherwise a jury trial shall be taken to be waived. Johnson v. Johnson, 4 Pa. Dist. Rep. 460. Rules making such provisions will be strictly enforced. Reinbold v. Reinbold, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 335.

In Tennessee, however, it has been expressly decided that the Act of 1875, relating to the demand for a jury in a party's first pleading tendering an issue triable by jury, does not apply to chancery causes. Allen v. Saulpaw, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 481; Cooper v. Stockard, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 140; Cheatham v. Pearce, 89 Tenn. 668.

3. See infra, X. 4. Time of Application and Order for Issue.

4. See supra, VIII. 3. Questions of Law; VIII. 4. Materiality of Issues; and infra, X. 9. The Preparation of the Issues.

5. Issue of Usury in Foreclosure Suit.—Where the defendants in a foreclosure suit, who had set up the defense of usury in their answer, which was put in without oath, applied for an issue to try the question of usury by a jury, it was held that an issue ought not to be granted without an affidavit showing some probable ground for believing that the defense of usury could be sustained by proof, and that the issue was not asked for by the defendant for the purpose of delay merely. Sea Ins. Co. v. Day, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 369.

Insanity.—The rule above stated is applicable likewise where insanity is alleged in an unsworn answer. Hahn v. Huber, 83 Ill. 246.

In Pennsylvania, evidence to support demand for issue from Orphans' Court is necessary, and ordinarily it must be of such a character as to sustain a verdict in favor of the party. Gray's Estate, 7 W. N. C. (Pa.) 542; Hantell's Estate, 2 W. N. C. (Pa.) 128; Restine's Estate, 3 W. N. C. (Pa.) 27; Kates's Estate, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 569; Beehler's Estate, 3 Phila. (Pa.) 254; In re Boyer, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 255.

See supra, VII.; and supra, VIII. 2, a. Bill and Answer Unsupported by Evidence.

to be made for a jury trial of the issues of fact, and regulating the practice connected with such notice.¹

3. Order for Trial of Issue — a. NECESSITY FOR. — The doctrine is believed to be, that if the issue is to be tried before a different court from the one directing it, there must be an order from the latter court furnishing to the trial court its authority for proceeding.² But if the judge by whom the issues are directed be the one before whom the trial is to take place, even though the jurisdictions in equity and law are separate, previous formal order for the trial of the issue may be dispensed with.³

b. REQUISITES AND CONTENTS. — Besides ordering the trial and stating the issues to be determined, the order oftentimes contains various directions and suggestions to the trial court. These, for the most part, relate to the place and time of trial, the form which the proceeding is to take, the parties thereto, the general nature of and proceedings at the trial, whether by general or special jury, the admissions to be made, the evidence to be used, etc.⁴ It has been hereinbefore shown that in many of the states

1. See infra, X. 4. a. (2) At or Within a Definite Time.

In South Carolina it was objected in an equity case that the court could not submit issues on motion of the plaintiff, without previous notice of such intended motion. Without expressly deciding the point, the court said it was true that in cases where the trial of issues of fact was not provided for in the code, if either party desires a trial by jury, such party shall, within ten days after issue joined, give notice of a special motion to be made upon the pleadings. "But at the same time," continued the court, "in cases triable by the judge he may, for his own enlightenment, order an issue as to the whole, or as to any specific questions of fact, to be tried by a jury. Now, although the issues here were ordered on motion of the plaintiff, yet it does not appear but that the circuit judge granted the motion for his own satisfaction and enlightenment, under the power with which he was invested, independent of the motion of the plaintiff." Rynerson v. Allison, 28 S. Car. 81.

Sufficiency of Notice. — In Bailey v. Ryder, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 74, it was objected by the counsel for defendants that the notice was for a motion for a settlement, and not for the award of issues required by the New York Act of 1839, §§ 2 and 3, that the notice presupposed an award of issues under the second and third sections of the Act, and that the application was under the fourth section; and they insisted that the court could not award issues upon a notice in this form. The court said: "The notice of motion is sufficient under the statute and the 59th rule, although the settlement is in fact merely incidental to the award of issues. The intention of the rule was that the whole matter should be disposed of on the motion for settlement of the issues. The award of issues being necessarily precedent to their settlement, no party can be misled by such a notice as this, under the rule; and as copies of the pleadings are to be presented to the court by the party making the application, no harm can arise from the form of the notice, although the practice under the rule may be somewhat artificial."

a simple direct order for the trial by jury of such facts as are so desired to be determined is all that is necessary.¹

4. Time of Application and Order for Issue — a. BEFORE HEARING — (1) In General. — In general, the application for the issue should be made at the hearing of the cause. If made before the hearing it will frequently be refused as being premature, since, until a hearing, it cannot be determined whether or not, according to the evidence, an issue is necessary.² On the other hand, in many cases an issue may be directed on an interlocutory application, before the cause is brought to a hearing.³ Thus, where, Bosher v. Harris, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 206; Bassett v. Johnson, 3 N. J. Eq. 421.

Determining Whether Order Is for Issue or Action. — Whether an order is for an action at law or an issue out of chancery does not depend upon the form in which the issue is framed, but the order itself must be inspected to determine whether an issue or an action is directed. American Dock, etc., Co. v. Public Schools, 37 N. J. Eq. 266.

Sufficiency of Order. — Where, in a suit pending in equity, the only issue made by the pleadings was as to the liability of the defendant to the plaintiff for the demand asserted by the latter, and the extent of such liability if it existed, which issue was transferred to the common-law docket to be tried by a jury, the order on the subject, to the effect that the issue raised by the pleadings was to be tried by a jury, was held sufficiently explicit. Savings Bank v. Benton, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 240.

In Cobb v. Burns, 61 Pa. St. 281, it was held that an order of the Orphans' Court which merely "directs an issue in the matter of specific performance of contract" in a case before the court, and specifies it in these words only, is simply void; that it ascertains no fact in dispute and certifies nothing to be tried; that if it means to send to the Common Pleas a question of specific performance, it is improper as an unauthorized delegation of jurisdiction; and that if it means to send any issue the parties may themselves choose to raise in the Common Pleas, it is equally irregular.

In New York the Court of Chancery was authorized by statute to award an issue previous to the hearing or taking of testimony in cases proper to be tried by the jury, if, in the opinion of the chancellor, such trial would be conducive to the ends of justice. New-Orleans Gas Light, etc., Co. v. Dudley, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 452.

The question, however, being addressed to the discretion of the court, it has been held that on a motion, before hearing, to frame issues for a jury, it was not a proper exercise of the discretion of the court in ordinary cases to instruct the court before which the case is to be tried beforehand, what question it shall submit to a jury and what it shall not. The court thought it better as a general rule to leave the court, which is to be charged with the conduct of the trial, to determine for itself the manner in which the questions of fact in the case shall be decided. Church v. Freeman, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 294.

In Massachusetts the proper time to present a request for a jury trial of issues is before the hearing. Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 7 upon inspection of the pleadings in the cause, it appears that important facts are asserted and denied, and it is clear to the court that such questions should be submitted to a jury, the order for the jury trial is properly made before the hearing.¹

(2) At or Within a Definite Time. — In some of the states the motion is to be made at or within a definite time.² Such rules, Pick. (Mass.) 345; Eames v. Eames, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 141; Dole v. Wooldredge, 142 Mass. 161; Stratton v. Hernon, 154 Mass. 310.

A hearing was had and decree entered in 1886, but on appeal the decree was reversed in 1887. The cause was again set down for hearing, and on the day appointed for the hearing the defendant for the first time applied for a jury to try the issues. The presiding judge of the court below certified that the juries at that time had been dismissed for the term, and that there had been ample time, while the juries were still in court, to make the request for a trial by jury. The appellate court held that the proper time to make such request was before the hearing in 1886; that by going into that hearing without requesting a jury trial, the defendant had waived his right to a jury, if he had any such right; and that it was a proper exercise of the discretionary power of the court to refuse the request because of laches in making the application. Blanchard v. Cooke, 147 Mass. 215.

Term at Which Issues Moved for. — In Coffin v. Easton, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 107, it was held that the proper term to make a motion to have issues in an equity case submitted to a jury was at the equity term, and not at a law term. The motion at a law term was denied, and the cause was fixed for hearing before one judge at the next nisi prius term.

In Pennsylvania it has been held that an issue out of chancery should not be awarded before the hearing. The court said: "How could the chancellor know whether it was within his exclusive province or not to decide upon all the issues involved in the cause, whether of law or of fact, until a full hearing had been had? How could he determine that there was such a conflict in the testimony as made it desirable to have his conscience informed by sending an issue to the jury, until that testimony had been elicited before an examiner? True, a case might arise where, after bill, answer, and replication, a chancellor would be warranted in sending an issue to a jury before hearing, as, for instance, where questions of fact were in dispute well known to the chancellor at the outset to be supported on the one side and denied on the other by equally respectable testimony; but this is not that case." Genet v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 13 Phila. (Pa.) 534. In a later case, however, it was said that the proposition that an issue may be awarded before the hearing upon a mere inspection of the pleading is a corollary of the theory on which the whole practice of awarding such issues rests; and that the provision in the amended equity rule, "after a cause in equity is at issue upon questions of fact" either party may move for an issue, is but declaratory of the practice theretofore in vogue. Flory v. Bangor Water Co., 4 Pa. Dist. Rep. 643.

1. Waterman v. Dutton, 5 Wis. 413; Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 354.

Usury, Forgery, Lunacy. — In cases of usury, forgery, lunacy, in case of a will, or where some fact of that kind is asserted or denied in the bill and answer, it would usually be necessary to take the opinion of a jury thereon, and to save time and expedite the cause the court may and usually will order an issue before the hearing. Waterman v. Dutton, 5 Wis. 413; Eames v. Eames, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 141.

2. When the rules of the court require issues to be framed and presented to the court two days before the trial, the court may properly refuse to submit the issues in a case where the rule is disregarded. Gay v. Ihm, 3 Mo. App. 588, affirmed 69 Mo. 584.

In Massachusetts, where the case had been marked for hearing six weeks, and the juries had been excused before a motion for a jury trial was made, it was held that the motion was properly overruled. Bourke v. Callanan, 160 Mass. 197.

In Tennessee, — Construing the Provisions of the Code, it was held that the Act of 1875, providing "that hereafter however, operate neither as an enlargement nor restriction, so far as the power of the court itself to direct an issue is concerned.¹ Nor do they apply to cases in which the parties have a right to the submission of issues to a jury.²

when any civil suit in any of the courts of record in this state, whether such suit comes to this court by summons, appeal, certiorari, or otherwise, and which is now triable by jury, either party desiring a jury shall, in case of original suits, demand a jury in his first pleading, tendering an issue triable by jury; and in the cases of all other suits shall demand a jury within the first three days of the trial term," is not applicable to suits in chancery. The demand for the jury, therefore, does not have to be made in the first pleading in the cause, and may be made at any time before the case is actually heard by the chancellor. Allen v. Saulpaw, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 481; Cooper v. Stockard, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 145; Cheatham v. Pearce, 89 Tenn. 668. It is competent for the Chancery Court, however, to make all reasonable rules upon the subject. The rules in force in 1884 declared that for the purpose of saving costs and time, and to have all jury cases tried about the same time, and for the convenience of the court, no jury would thereafter be allowed in that court, unless demand therefor be made on or before the second day of the term, by motion on the motion docket, or at the bar of the court. This was held on appeal to be a reasonable regulation, preventing surprise to the adverse party, and affording opportunity to obtain a jury. Stadler v. Hertz, 13 Lea (Tenn.) 315, where the motion for a jury was made more than a week after the beginning of the term, and on the same day on which the case was heard and the decree entered, and it was held that the chancellor committed no error in refusing to order a jury. By the rules of 1889, it is required that applications for a jury must be made within the first three days of the trial term. This, also, was held to be a reasonable rule, which the Chancery Court had the right to make and enforce. Cheatham v. Pearce, 89 Tenn. 668.

In New York it has been provided by several successive rules of court that "in cases where the trial of issues of fact is not provided for by the Code, if either party shall desire trial by jury, such party shall, within ten days after issue joined, give notice of the special motion to be made upon the pleading, that the whole issue or any specific question of fact involved therein be tried by jury." O'Brien v. Bowes, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 106; Paul v. Parshall, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (Buffalo Super. Ct.) 138; Clark v. Brooks, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 285; Apel v. O'Connor, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 482; New York L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Cuthbert, 25 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 377.

If the Motion is Not Made Within Ten Days after issue joined, as provided by the rule, it will be too late to make it afterwards. Blunt v. Hibbard, (C. Pl.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 121.

Under the rule, by going to trial before a judge without a jury, the parties lose all right to move for such a trial on the hearing or to make such motion at any time afterwards. O'Brien v. Bowes, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 106, reviewed in Brinkley v. Brinkley, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 501.

1. New York. — The rule does not apply to the power of the court to direct an issue, and the court deviates from it whenever in its judgment a proper case is presented. Therefore, if special reasons exist, it is within the power of the court, notwithstanding that the application is not made within ten days after issue joined as required by a rule, to make an order for the framing of issues and the trial of those issues by a jury. O'Brien v. Bowes, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 106; Clark v. Brooks, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 285; Apel v. O'Connor, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 482; MacKellar v. Rogers, 9 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 6; New York L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Cuthbert, 25 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 377; Paul v. Parshall, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (Buffalo Super. Ct.) 138.

The court undoubtedly has power to open a default, and allow the application to be made; but facts must be shown to excuse the neglect to apply within the time prescribed by the rule. Ellensohn v. Keyes, 25 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 353.

2. New York. — In an Action for Divorce for Adultery the right of either

b. ON HEARING AND DURING TRIAL. — As before stated, the application is generally to be made and the issue directed at the hearing,¹ and it is believed that as a rule an issue may be submitted at any time during the trial up to the final determination of the cause.²

c. BEFORE OR AFTER PLEADINGS CLOSED. — As a rule, the application should not be made, nor the issue be directed, before the pleadings in the case are closed, so as to enable the court to see what facts are controverted, and give the party entitled the benefit of the discovery which the defendant may make in his answer.³

party to have the question of adultery tried by a jury is a constitutional and statutory one, which is not impaired or modified by this rule of practice so as to make it a matter of discretion with the court if the application be not made within ten days after issue. Conderman v. Conderman, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 181; Sigel v. Sigel, 28 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 308.

Issue as to Value of Property or Damages. — The rule of court is likewise not applicable to a motion for the trial of issues as to the value of property or damages; and if it were, it would be superseded by legislative enactment. Eggers v. Manhattan R. Co., 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 463.

In South Carolina the provision was the same as that in New York, set forth in next to the last note. Ryerson v. Allison, 28 S. Car. 81.

1. In New York the statute which empowered the chancellor to award an issue before the hearing did not deprive him of the right to award an issue at the hearing. New Orleans Gas Light, etc., Co. v. Dudley, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 452.

In Tennessee, either on a motion for a jury in open court by one of the parties, or on the chancellor's own motion, a jury trial of the issues in an equity case has been ordered in several cases, even after the hearing has commenced. Duncan v. King, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 79; London v. London, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 4; Lowe v. Traynor, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 635; Morris v. Swaney, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 591; Pearce v. Suggs, 85 Tenn. 728. See supra, p. 658, note 2.

2. See Zimmerman v. Schoenfeldt, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 692; Paul v. Parshall, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (Buffalo Super. Ct.) 138; Wear's Assignment, 1 Kulp (Pa.) 104; Russell v. Paine, 45 Ill. 350.

In O'Brien v. Bowes, 10 Abb. Pr. (N.

Y. Super. Ct.) 106, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 657, it was held that, under the New York Code of Procedure, where no application is made for a jury trial in a case in which the court has a power to order one, and the court at the trial makes no order submitting the issue, but the trial is proceeded with before the judge, all the testimony in the case given, and the cause submitted for determination, the judge had no alternative but to give his decision, and could not, at such a stage, invoke the aid of a jury for the conflict of evidence. This case was questioned and limited in Brinkley v. Brinkley, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 501, where it was held that after an equity case has been tried and finally submitted for decision, the court at special term has the power of its own motion to direct certain issues therein to be passed upon by a jury, if the case be one in which, under similar circumstances, the late court of chancery was authorized to direct a feigned issue; and that the former practice had not been changed except so far as to substitute a 'simple interrogatory' for the wager.

3. Tibbetts v. Perkins, 20 N. H. 275; Hoitt v. Burleigh, 18 N. H. 389; Johnston v. Hainesworth, 6 Ala. 443.

In Horner v. Harris, 10 Bush (Ky.) 360, it was said: "We are aware of no state of case in which the chancellor can compel a petitioner to establish his cause of action or any fact essential thereto to the satisfaction of a jury, until he has first required the defendant to answer, and has thereby ascertained whether or not the existence of the fact is denied."

After Replication. — In Hoitt v. Burleigh, 18 N. H. 389, it was held that if a party exercises his constitutional right given him in New Hampshire to require a trial by jury, it should be after the

d. BEFORE OR AFTER TESTIMONY TAKEN. — The general rule of practice is that an order for the issues will not be directed until the testimony is taken. The reason is that until the testimony is taken it cannot be known whether any conflict will arise, so as to make it necessary to refer the decision to a jury.¹ This rule is not universal, and there are many cases in which it is held that the order for the jury trial may, and should, be made before the testimony has been taken.²

e. AFTER REFERENCE TO MASTER. — Ordinarily the motion for a jury trial of the issues of fact in an equity case should be made before the case is referred to a master, and the motion will not usually be granted after the master has made a finding and returned his report,³ or after he has proceeded with the case to any considerable degree.⁴

replication and before the taking of the testimony.

A Supplemental Bill opens a case to a further answer, and to further evidence, and in such case a motion for an issue to be tried by a jury is in order after the coming in of the answer to the supplemental bill. Hoitt v. Burleigh, 18 N. H. 389.

1. Hamp v. Hamp, 35 Beav. 189; Roberts v. Kerslake, 23 L. J. Ch. 632; Johnston v. Hainesworth, 6 Ala. 443; Rice v. Tobias, 83 Ala. 348; Porter v. Child, 10 Lanc. Bar (Pa.) 45; Goodyear v. Providence Rubber Co., 2 Cliff. (U. S.) 351. But see Flory v. Bangor Water Co., 4 Pa. Dist. Rep. 643.

It Is Premature to Apply for an issue immediately after filing a replication to an answer, when no testimony has been taken, and the testimony is to be mostly in writing. Herdsmen v. Lewis, 20 Blatchf. (U. S.) 266; Genet v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 13 Phila. (Pa.) 533.

2. Right to Decree Depending on Question of Usury. — The question of usury arising out of disputed facts, upon the determination of which the right of the complainant to a decree against the defendant solely depends, is a proper case for the granting of an issue before the testimony in the cause is taken, if the costs will not be enhanced, nor the proceedings unreasonably delayed, by the awarding of such issue. New-Orleans Gas Light, etc., Co. v. Dudley, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 452.

Issues of Right. — It has been held that if a party exercises the constitutional right given him in New Hampshire to require a trial by a jury, it should be after replication, and before the taking of the testimony. Hoitt v. Burleigh, 18 N. H. 389, holding, however, that the court, for sufficient reasons, may cause issues to be framed after the evidence has been taken.

3. Lower's Appeal, 1 Walk. (Pa.) 404; Shaw v. Norfolk County R. Co., 16 Gray (Mass.) 407.

A motion for the issue will not be granted after the coming in of the master's report if the case on the issues made by the pleadings has been referred to the master without objection, and heard before him at great length, and the evidence before him is not reported, and there is nothing to show that the master's conclusion is unsatisfactory, or that the case can be better tried by a jury. Atlanta Mills v. Mason, 120 Mass. 244; Nichols v. Ela, 124 Mass. 333.

4. Waiver by Reference to and Hearing before Master. — Where an application to frame issues for a jury would have been granted if seasonably made, the plaintiff waives his right by allowing a reference to a master and a hearing before him before asking for a jury trial. Parker v. Nickerson, 137 Mass. 487; Freeland v. Wright, 154 Mass. 493, holding that it would be unreasonable to permit a party to go to trial before a master and take his chances of a favorable report, and then, if he is dissatisfied with the result, have another trial before a jury, and thereby put the other party to unnecessary expense and trouble.

Testimony Taken and Case Virtually Closed. — An issue in an equity case will not be awarded where the defendant has made no application, and has stood by after a master has been appointed, and after the plaintiff has virtually closed his case, involving the taking of voluminous testimony. Flory v. Bangor Water Co., 4 Pa. Dist. Rep. 643; Phillips v. Edsall, 127 Ill. 548.

5. General Methods of Submitting. — There are several methods adopted in the framing and submitting of issues to a jury. One is by directing the parties to plead to issue, and submitting to the jury the issue joined on their pleadings.¹ Another is by reciting in the order what one party alleges and the other denies, and directing the issue made by such allegation and denial to be tried by a jury.² Still another mode is by directing an issue framed in the form of a simple question, and recited in the order, to be tried by a jury.³

6. Necessity of Framing Special and Distinct Issues. — Where questions of fact in an equity case are to be tried by a jury, the general and most approved practice requires that proper issues presenting these questions should be settled, made up, or framed.⁴

Withdrawing from Master to Submit to Jury. — In Pennsylvania it was held that though the court is disposed to withdraw sharply contested questions of fact from masters, in order that they may be settled with less expense, more expedition, and perhaps more satisfaction, by a jury, nevertheless this practice ought not to be encouraged where the finding of the jury might not put an end to the case by placing the facts in such a condition on the record as to make it possible for the court to enter a final decree without further reference to a master. Particularly is this so in partnership cases where there are matters of account, and if the verdict established the alleged partnership, there would have to be a further reference to a master. Hinds v. Daley, 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 51.

Case before Examiner. — In Pennsylvania an issue may be granted after an examiner has entered upon his duties upon payment of costs. Fougeray v. Fougeray, 6 W. N. C. (Pa.) 38. But usually it will not be granted after the examiner has examined some of the witnesses. Lathrop v. Lathrop, 2 Northam L. Rep. (Pa.) 9. Nor after the testimony has been returned by the examiner. Uhrich v. Uhrich, 3 Del. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 281; Schaeffer v. Schaeffer, 3 Kulp (Pa.) 14. So a demand for an issue is too late after the report of the examiner has been filed; especially where the respondent has entered a rule to take testimony. Lynch v. Lynch, 7 Luz. Leg. Reg. (Pa.) 69; Uhrich v.

2. Dorr v. Tremont Nat. Bank, 128 Mass. 357, giving, as the usual form, the following: "Whereas the plaintiff alleges, and the defendant denies (stating the question in dispute), now, therefore, it is ordered that a jury be impaneled to try said issues."

3. Dorr v. Tremont Nat. Bank, 128 Mass. 357, stating that this mode of framing issues is one of long use in Massachusetts [and citing Eames v. Eames, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 141; Stockbridge Iron Co. v. Hudson Iron Co., 107 Mass. 290; Barker v. Comins, 110 Mass. 477].

4. Warring v. Freear, 64 Cal. 54. See Smith v. Rowe, 4 Cal. 6; Reed v. Bott, 100 Mo. 62; Bedloe v. Bedloe, 40 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 46; Hall v. Layton, 10 Tex. 55; Soenksen v. Weyhausen, 32 Wis. 521.

Time of Framing Special Issues. — In Smith v. Rowe, 4 Cal. 6, the court said: "The matter of time we deem immaterial, except that for greater certainty and convenience it would best serve the ends of justice that the particular issues upon which a verdict is to be rendered should be framed and settled before the trial rather than after, thus enabling the jury to pursue their investigations intelligently upon the points they would be called upon by the court to decide." See supra, X. 2. b. (4) Time of Application or Demand.

The issues submitted should be special and specific,¹ and should be separately, plainly, and distinctly stated, so that each question will relate to only one fact.² But though this is the practice most in vogue, and is believed to be the best, yet, according to some authorities, the whole issue may be submitted generally, without the framing of any special issues for the determination of the jury.³

1. Hulley v. Chedic, 22 Nev. 127; Hall v. Doran, 6 Iowa 433.

In Brewster v. Bours, 8 Cal. 502, the court said that it would be next to impossible to find a jury capable of passing understandingly upon various and complicated questions of fact without the aid of special issues, and that the statute of California contemplates that in all such cases special issues should be framed under the direction of the court, according to the long-established rules of chancery practice. See infra, X. 7. Number of Questions or Issues Submitted — Part or Whole Thereof.

Divorce Cases. — The issues in divorce cases should in general be distinctly and definitely stated. See infra, X. 11. b. Application to Particular Cases.

In New York, under the N. Y. Code of Procedure, it was held, in one case, that in an action for divorce on the ground of adultery in which the issues were raised by the pleadings themselves, it was not necessary to frame issues for a jury trial; that the issues joined by the pleadings might be tried. Parker v. Parker, 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 478. But it was afterwards held that in such an action in which a jury trial was given of right by section 253 of the Code of Procedure, the issue of adultery must be settled before notice of trial could be given, or the cause placed on the calendar. Leslie v. Leslie, 11 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 311, distinguishes in Compton v. Compton, 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 579.

According to the provisions of the Code Civ. Pro., § 970, if a party desires a trial by jury he may apply, upon notice to the court, for an order directing questions of fact arising upon the issues to be distinctly and plainly stated for trial by jury, and upon the hearing of the application the court must cause the issues to be distinctly and plainly stated. Conderman v. Conderman, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 181; Whitney v. Whitney, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 585. Where, however, the issues are stated and settled in an action for divorce in pursuance of a stipulation of the attorneys for the parties, they respectively waive the right to have, preliminarily to the trial, any question more specifically stated and settled. In such a case the trial is properly permitted to proceed, subject to the power of the court to state and submit to the jury any further questions which are proper or necessary for them to determine. Whitney v. Whitney, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 585.

2. Phoenix Water Co. v. Fletcher, 23 Cal. 482; Milk v. Moore, 39 Ill. 588.

The chancellor, in submitting issues, should confine the inquiry to a single point, and if more than one point arises the different points ought to be specially and particularly stated. Ayers v. Scott, Sneed (Ky.) 164. See Cobb v. Burns, 61 Pa. St. 281.

When issues are framed in a court of equity, they are so condensed as to present some proposition the affirmative or negative of which cannot be affirmed or denied without finding all the other facts necessary to a conclusion. Barth v. Rosenfeld, 36 Md. 605.

3. See the following section, and supra, X. 5. General Methods of Submitting.

Estoppel to Object. — Where the failure to present issues was the result of the plaintiff's own motion, he preferring a general verdict, he cannot be allowed to take advantage of the failure to present special issues. Brewster v. Bours, 8 Cal. 502.

Waiver of Special Issues. — Where an equitable case was, on plaintiff's motion, submitted to the court for trial, and the court of its own motion, "and for its information as to the facts in the case, called a jury and caused them to be sworn to well and truly try the issues in said cause," etc., the jury, having heard the evidence, arguments of counsel, and instructions of the court, returned a general verdict for the defendant, upon which the court rendered judgment. On appeal it was contended that the court erred in that, after calling a jury for its own information as to the

7. Number of Questions or Issues Submitted — Part or Whole Thereof. — The court may submit to the jury one or more issues of fact, according to the number of questions of fact in the case upon which it desires to be informed.¹ It may refer one or more questions of fact, without embracing in the reference all the questions of fact in the cause.² And for the most part, the practice facts, it failed to frame and submit proper questions for the jury to answer, but permitted them to consider the whole case and return a general verdict. The court held that while the course pursued was not to be commended, yet, in the absence of a motion or request to the court to submit special questions, it was not such error as should reverse the case. "The court having advised the parties that the jury was only called for its information as to the facts, the parties having, without objection, permitted the jury to retire without requesting the court to submit special questions, and having moved the court to make a finding after the jury had advised the court as to the facts by a general verdict, it must be held that the irregularity of the court in failing to frame special questions of its own motion was waived." Ikerd v. Beavers, 106 Ind. 483, distinguishing Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Griffin, 92 Ind. 487.

When All Equitable Features Have Been Eliminated from a case, reducing it simply to an action for the recovery of real property, it is properly triable by jury, and there is no necessity for framing the issues to be submitted. Robertson v. Sharpton, 17 S. Car. 592.

Action for Partition. — The New York Code Civ. Pro., § 1544, provides that an issue of fact joined in an action for partition is triable by a jury, and that unless the court directs the issues to be stated as prescribed in section 970 of the code, the issues may be tried upon the pleadings. In Tucker v. Tucker, (Supreme Ct.) 45 N. Y. St. Rep. 458, the special term directed that the cause be placed on the calendar of the Circuit Court for trial, "and that upon the trial the issues proper to be submitted to a jury be so submitted under the direction of the court as to form and substance." But, by reason of the duties and functions of the Supreme and Circuit Courts of the state of New York, it is considered the proper practice in an equitable action for partition to have the issues framed at the special term, and not place that labor upon the judge holding the Circuit Court. Cuthbert v. Ives, (Supreme Ct.) 20 N. Y. Supp. 469, holding, however, that under the Code Civ. Pro., § 1544, above cited, this practice is not a jurisdictional requisite, and that the court has the power to direct the trial of the issues raised by the pleadings.

As Many or As Few, All or Any Part, of the questions of fact involved, may be submitted, as the court may deem expedient. Pence v. Garrison, 93 Ind. 345; Zimmerman v. Schoenfeldt, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 692, 6 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 142; Church v. Freeman, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 298.

The rule applies to issues from the Probate Court in Pennsylvania. If more than one fact be in dispute, all may be certified at the same time, but each one constitutes the subject of a separate issue. Cobb v. Burns, 61 Pa. St. 281.

Several Questions Incorporated in Order. — Where several questions are to be determined by an issue framed to determine the validity of a judgment, it is the better practice to incorporate the several questions in the order of the court, and to require them to be separately answered. Martin v. Kline, 157 Pa. St. 473.

Unnecessary Multiplication of Issues. — In submitting issues from the Orphans' Court of Maryland, under section 250, art. 93 of the code, there is an obvious impropriety in multiplying issues unnecessarily, especially by presenting the same substantial question in two separate and distinct issues. Sumwalt v. Sumwalt, 52 Md. 338.

2. Pankey v. Raum, 51 Ill. 88; Evansville, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 30 Ind. 209; Chamberlain v. Juppiers, 11 Iowa 513. See Phoenix Water Co. v. Fletcher, 23 Cal. 482.

Some of the issues may be immaterial and irrelevant, and to refer all the issues would often tend only to delay and embarrass the cause, increase the is against submitting the whole issue or case to a jury.¹ But oftentimes the court is authorized to submit either the whole issue made by the pleadings, or any specific question of fact involved therein, in its discretion.²

8. From What Sources Issues Are Made Up — a. FROM THE PLEADINGS — General Rule. — It is an almost universal rule that in any case where issues are submitted to a jury they are to be made up from the pleadings in the cause, and are designed for the trial of only those questions of fact which are distinctly put in issue by the pleadings.³

expense, and result in no possible advantage to any of the parties. Waterman v. Dutton, 5 Wis. 413.

So in Indiana the doctrine stated in the text has not been changed by any statutory provisions. A court of chancery rarely has occasion to take the opinion of a jury upon all questions involved in the suit. If it were otherwise, in a complicated case, involving many facts and separate interests, however much the court might wish the opinion of a jury upon a particular question, as of title, usury, or the like, it could never be taken. Lapreese v. Falls, 7 Ind. 695.

Issue as to One or All of Several Defendants. — Where several defendants set up the same matter in defense, or put in issue the same allegations in the bill, and a replication is filed to all such answers, an issue must be awarded as to all or neither. But if the defendants have not a common interest, or if their defenses are distinct, an issue may be awarded as to one defendant and refused as to the others. New Orleans Gas Light, etc., Co. v. Dudley, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 452.

1. Gill v. Rice, 13 Wis. 549; Milk v. Moore, 39 Ill. 587.

A chancellor, in order to inform his conscience as to any point arising in the cause, has the right to direct any issue to be tried as to that point, but in doing so the inquiry ought to be confined to the single point, and if more than one point arises the different points ought to be specially and particularly stated, and the jury, in their answer, should answer each separately; therefore, in Ayers v. Scott, Sneed (Ky.) 164, it was held that the court below erred in submitting the whole case arising upon the allegations contained in the bill and answer. See supra, X. 6. Necessity of Framing Special and Distinct Issues.

2. Hess v. Miles, 70 Mo. 203.

In South Carolina, under section 227 of the code in force in 1875, it was held that the judge might submit the whole issue made by the pleadings, or any specific question of fact involved therein, to a jury. Flinn v. Brown, 6 S. Car. 209. In a later case it was held that a reference to a jury of all issues in a chancery cause cannot be declared error, where it was done without objection and where no exception raises the question. Frank v. Humphreys, 24 S. Car. 338.

Kansas. — In this state the court may, in its discretion, send in all of the issues to a jury to be tried; if it sends all of such issues to a jury, it may do so by a general order and without even mentioning any particular issue. The jury may then (unless the court should otherwise order, either on its own motion or at the request of one of the parties) find a general verdict upon all such issues. Hixon v. George, 18 Kan. 258.

In New York. — Under the Code of Procedure, § 254, it was held that the court might order the whole issue or any specific question of fact involved therein to be tried by a jury. Paul v. Parshall, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. (Buffalo Super. Ct.) 138; Church v. Freeman, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 298.

3. Morgan v. Fuller, L. R. 2 Eq. 296. See supra, VIII. 1. Where Matters Are Not Alleged in Pleadings.

"The issues to be tried are necessarily issues of fact, and cannot be properly presented except by appropriate pleadings. The chancellor may, and frequently does, submit questions of fact to a jury, but the issues are always made up from the pleadings in the action. We are aware of no state of the case in which the chancellor can compel a petitioner to establish his cause of action, or any fact essential thereto, to the satisfaction of a jury until he has first required the defend-

Issues Not Broader than Pleadings. — The issue presented to the jury, therefore, should not be broader than the issue raised by the pleadings in the case.¹

b. FROM THE PLEADINGS AND TESTIMONY. — Proceeding a step farther, it has been held that since as a general rule an issue can only be awarded at the hearing,² it must be confined not only to facts put in issue by the pleadings, but to facts concerning which some testimony has previously been introduced and read at the hearing.³

c. FROM OTHER SOURCES THAN PLEADINGS. — According to the practice in some cases, however, it is not necessary, in order to have a trial by jury, that the issues be made by the pleadings.⁴

ant to answer, and has thereby ascertained whether or not the existence of the fact is denied." Horner v. Harris, 10 Bush (Ky.) 360.

In Suits for Divorce feigned issues are only to be made up for the trial of facts contested by the pleadings. The allegations expressly made on one side and denied on the other, and those only, are to be tried. Morrell v. Morrell, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 236. Therefore, in such a suit where a defendant recriminated generally, but gave no time, person, or place, the court would not let the issue (applied for by complainant) go to prove the complainant's conduct, although the defendant, when the issue was asked for, presented an affidavit stating names, and declared that he had been unable to put them in his answer. Burr v. Burr, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 448.

1. Chamberlain v. Juppiers, 11 Iowa 513.

General Fraud Submitted Where Particular Fraud Plead. — Thus where the pleadings present the question of one particular fraud only, an issue on the general question whether there was any fraud is not warranted. Brink v. Morton, 2 Iowa 411. See infra, X. 11.

b. Application to Particular Cases.

Issues Embracing Acts Not Specified in Complaint. — In an action for separation, issues to a jury were framed upon motion, and were treated as the equivalent of specifications in an amended complaint. Upon the opening of the second jury trial the defendant's counsel objected to such of the issues as were not within the specifications of the complaint. The judge informed him that the only effect of his objection would be to delay the trial for an amendment which would cover what was new in the framed issues. Defendant's counsel proceeded, stating that he did not wish to delay the trial, but still desired to make the objection. The court held that plainly there was no surprise, and that as the same objection was taken on the first jury trial, and after the disagreement of the jury, and before the second trial, the issues were resettled upon the defendant's own motion; he could not object that some of the issues embraced acts not specified in the complaint. McBride v. McBride, (Supreme Ct.) 5 N. Y. Supp. 388.

2. See supra, X. 4. Time of Application and Order for Issue.

3. Dunn v. Dunn, 11 Mich. 284, where the pleadings in a divorce case put in issue adultery committed by one of the parties in April, May, and June, 1858; but no testimony was taken tending to show its commission in April, and at the hearing issues were framed for trial by a jury covering the months named, and also December and January preceding. It was held that such issues, so far as they related to the months of December, January, and April, were irregular, and that a general verdict of guilty rendered thereon must be disregarded.

4. Issue on Exceptions to Master's Report. — As an instance of a case where an issue may be submitted to a jury though not raised by the pleadings, may be cited a case where an issue is granted on exceptions to a master's report. Crabb v. Larkin, 9 Bush (Ky.) 163. See generally article REFERENCES.

Matter Not in Issue Going to Very Right of Cause. — Where at the hearing of an equity cause a matter not in issue goes to the very right, the court will sometimes order an issue. Balch v. Tucker, 2 Ch. Ca. 40.

Additional Issues Raised by Evidence. — In England it has been held that after

9. The Preparation of the Issues—By Court. — The issues may be prepared by the court.¹

By Parties Under Direction or Approval of Court. — The issues may be made up by counsel, under the direction of the court,² or may be prepared by counsel and submitted to the court for approval.³ It is the province of the court to determine what facts are to be submitted, and neither party has a right to dictate the terms of any particular question.⁴

By Agreement of Parties. — If the issues as submitted were agreed to by the parties they will be bound thereby, and will not be per-issues have been directed, a new issue not raised on the pleadings will not be added. Morgan v. Fuller, L. R. 2 Eq. 296.

In the United States, however, the contrary doctrine has at times been held. Thus in one case it appeared on the trial that the paper in question was discounted for the sole purpose of renewing a note previously due and discounted, on which payment was secured by the mortgage set forth in the complaint. To meet the case in this new phase the judge submitted to a jury such additional issues as were essential to bring to the view of the court all the facts material to a just and intelligent decision. The appellate court said: "To this we see no well-founded objection. He was invested with the same power at the circuit which he exercised at special term in framing the original issues; it was a question addressed to his sound discretion. We think he was clearly right in the disposition which he made of it; but if we entertained a different opinion, we should not be at liberty to reverse the judgment on a question of mere practice, in respect to which the court below is the ultimate arbiter." Farmers', etc., Bank v. Joslyn, 37 N. Y. 353.

Settlement by Judge at Chambers or by Commissioner. — Where any difference arises in the making up of a feigned issue by the court, it was held that the issue must be settled before a judge at his chambers, or by a commissioner; not by the court. Richards v. Brown, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 320.

Settlement by Court, Judge, or Referee. — By rule of court in New York the court or judge might settle the issues, or might send it to a referee to settle them. Rule 31, Gen. Rules of Practice.

Court Changing Issues. — Tennessee Code, § 5218, provides that the issues shall be made up by the parties under the direction of the court, and shall set forth briefly and clearly the true questions of fact to be tried. In the case cited below the complainant simply tendered a long list of issues, and the bill of exceptions recited: "The court allowed only such issues as appears in the decree showing the verdict of the jury, and the plaintiff excepted to the ruling refusing or modifying the issues submitted in his behalf." It was held that no error was pointed out. The objection to the action of the court was general, and might have been applied as well to the change of phraseology as to the substance: Besides, had the attention of the court been called to the particular change objected to, he might have had the issues corrected. But the reading of the issues as presented satisfied the appellate court that every material issue, rung with many changes, was presented to the jury. Pearce v. Suggs, 85 Tenn. 731.

Party Must Submit Proper Issue. — The party who asks for a jury in a chancery court in Tennessee, and submits for its determination an issue of fact, is bound at his peril to submit a proper issue. It is too late, after an appeal to the Supreme Court, to have the case remanded for trial upon a proper issue if the facts are so presented in the record that the Supreme Court can determine them for itself. Gass v. Mason, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 508.

mitted to allege that the issues were improper, either in form or substance.¹ If one of the counsel does not prepare, as requested by the court, a statement of such issues as he desires to have submitted to a jury, he cannot complain after verdict that all the issues made by the pleadings were not submitted by the court.²

10. General Form of Issues — Definiteness and Certainty. — Care should be exercised in selecting the form in which issues are to be submitted, and they should be in language so plain and perspicuous that no doubt can arise as to the meaning.³

Issues with Fictitious and Formal Pleadings. — In making up feigned issues it has been heretofore shown that formal and fictitious pleadings were resorted to.⁴

Action on Wager and Other Actions. — The form of the action or issue might be and often was on a wager, but formal pleadings in various other common-law actions were frequently used.⁵

Issue in Action of Assumpsit on Promise. — In Barrow v. Bispham, 11 N. J. L. 110, the question whether a bond on which a judgment by confession was entered had been obtained by fraud was tried upon a feigned issue in the form of an action of assumpsit on promise.

Issue in Action of Ejectment. — In Decker v. Caskey, 1 N. J. Eq. 427, on a bill filed for the discovery and production of a deed of conveyance alleged to have been lost or destroyed, and the foreclosure of a mortgage upon promises made by the grantee named in the conveyance, it being alleged in the answer that the deed was never delivered and that the grantor was not competent to make the conveyance, an issue as to the existence and validity of the deed was ordered to be tried at law, under the direction of the chancellor in the action on ejectment.

In James v. Brooks, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 150, the issue was made as in a case of ejectment.

Issue in Action of Trespass Quare Clausum Fregit. — Under the Pennsylvania Act of February 17, 1831, incorporating a railroad company, where an appeal

Issues Without Fictions and Formal Pleadings. — In modern practice issues are in many cases made up without the use of any formal declarations or pleadings, and the real point in dispute is submitted to the jury without resorting to a fictitious issue reciting patent absurdities;¹ and, as hereinbefore stated, in several of the states nothing more is requisite than a simple order for the trial of the issues.²

11. Scope, Contents, and Requisites — a. IN GENERAL. — The issues should, of course, embrace the object contemplated.³ They should not be too restricted, narrow, or sifting,⁴ nor, on the other hand, should they be too broad.⁵ Issues should not embrace general questions on the merits in addition to special questions of fact submitted.⁶

In Illinois it has been the practice to make an issue without using the common-law forms of pleadings. Milk v. Moore, 39 Ill. 588.

In the United States Circuit Court, where a feigned issue in an equity suit was directed, it was held that no declaration of any sort was requisite, and the case was put on the trial list and the jury sworn to try the issue in the words of the order itself. Wilson v. Barnum, 1 Wall. Jr. (C. C.) 342.

3. If the Issues Do Not Embrace the Object Contemplated, the appellate court, according to the Virginia doctrine, will reverse the decree and remand the cause for proper proceeding on new issues. Braxton v. Willing, 4 Call (Va.) 288; Galt v. Carter, 6 Munf. (Va.) 245.

4. Galt v. Carter, 6 Munf. (Va.) 245.

Submission of Broad Questions and Main Issues. — In Georgia, on submitting issues to a jury in an equity case, it is necessary that the judge propound only such broad questions and put such main issues as will enable him, from the answers thereto, the admitted or uncontested facts, the pleadings, and principles of law and equity, to decree on the entire case, and to adjudicate the rights of the parties. To put sifting questions would tend to confuse the jury, instead of drawing from them the main facts of the case. Macon v. Harris, 75 Ga. 761; Jefferson v. Hamilton, 69 Ga. 401; Coleman v. Slade, 75 Ga. 61; Creech v. Richards, 76 Ga. 36.

5. Dunn v. Dunn, 11 Mich. 290.

Issue Not Broader than Raised by Pleadings. — The issue presented to the jury should not be broader than the issue raised by the pleadings in the equity case. Chamberlain v. Juppier, 11 Iowa 513; Dunn v. Dunn, 11 Mich. 284.

Thus, where the pleadings present the question of one particular fraud only, an issue on the general question whether there was any fraud is not warranted. Brink v. Morton, 2 Iowa 411. See supra, X. 8. From What Sources Issues Are Made Up.

6. General Question as to Rescinding Sale. — Upon the trial of a suit in equity to rescind the sale of land where specific questions of fact are submitted to a jury, it is improper practice for the court also to submit, over objection of counsel, the question whether or not the sale should be rescinded, this being a question for the court to decide upon the other facts found by the jury. It would be useless generally to submit special questions of fact to a jury, if the general questions on the merits were submitted also at the same time. Bell v. Hutchings, 86 Ga. 571.

b. APPLICATION TO PARTICULAR CASES.—FRAUD AND DIVORCE—In General.—By the application of the foregoing principles, the scope and requisites of the issues in any particular case will be determined.¹

In Cases of Fraud the issue should be so specifically framed as to inform the party charged precisely what he is required to meet.²

Divorce.—It is said that there is no class of cases wherein more care is necessary to make definite issues than in divorce cases where adultery is charged.³ Everything should be excluded from

1. Issue as to Past Damages.—In an action to enjoin the operation of an elevated railway in a street in front of the plaintiff's premises and for past damages, it is necessary, in view of the plea of the statute of limitations, to state the exact date from which the right of recovery exists, in formulating an issue as to past damages. Eggers v. Manhattan R. Co., 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 463.

Issue on Claims under Marriage Articles and Settlements.—Where a party claims under marriage articles, and settlements made in pursuance thereto, it is not sufficient to direct an issue to try the validity of the articles only, but the issue should be extended to try the execution of the subsequent settlements. Edgworth v. Swift, 4 Bro. P. C. 654.

Issues Between Executrices as to Conversion of Testator's Property.—A bill was filed by one executrix against her co-executrix, charging her with having secretly and improperly possessed herself of part of the testator's property during his lifetime. The defendant, by her answer, denied the accusation and insisted that the spoliation was committed by the plaintiff, but did not file a cross-bill. It was held, that if an issue were directed to try the fact, the issue should be not merely whether defendant possessed herself of any part of the testator's property in the manner alleged, but also whether the plaintiff possessed herself of any part of it in like manner. Lancaster v. Atkinson, 2 Russ. 60.

2. Wood v. New York, 3 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 467.

Proper Issues in Fraud Case.—Where a bill was filed by the plaintiff, to set aside a conveyance on the ground that she was old and imbecile, an apoplectic, and speechless; that from her mental and physical condition she was an easy victim to fraud and imposition, and that she had been overreached and deceived by the representations of the vendee, and thereby induced to part with her property; the allegations being denied; and an issue was submitted by the chancellor to a jury for the determination of the facts, it was held that such issues should be: "Was the complainant at the time she executed the conveyances laboring under mental imbecility and physically unable to communicate such ideas as she had; so much so as to render her an easy victim to importunities, undue influence, and imposition? And were these conveyances procured through these influences?" Gass v. Mason, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 497.

Distinction Between Issue of Fraud and of Unfairness.—In a suit by a party to recover money paid on a bond and warrant of attorney, subsequently discovered to have been "fraudulently" obtained by the defendants from the principal obligor, an issue was directed, but the court disapproved the superadding of an issue whether the bond and warrant were "unfairly" obtained, because of uncertainty as to what, in a legal sense, constitutes unfairness as distinguished from fraud. Parker v. Morrell, 2 Phil. 453, 12 Jur. 253.

Issue Throwing Burden of Proof upon Party Charged.—An issue involving the question of fraud may, in the discretion of the court, be so stated as to throw upon the party charged the onus of establishing bona fides. Browne v. McClintock, 22 W. R. 521, L. R. 6 H. L. 434.

3. Dunn v. Dunn, 11 Mich. 290, where the court said: "No one can have had much experience at the bar without discovering how large a proportion of such charges are fabricated, and how often they are allowed to be proved by incomplete testimony. Circumstantial evidence is undoubtedly necessary, as a general thing, to prove such offenses; but this renders it the more necessary to secure to the party charged such information of time, place, and circumstance, as will enable him or her to meet the proof by legal evidence. It is the issues to be tried in such cases, except what will affect the decision.¹ But the averments of the issue must be sufficiently definite and certain as to circumstance, time, place, and person, to apprise the party of the specific charges which he is called upon to meet.²

12. Parties — In General — Plaintiff. — The party who has the affirmative of an issue will usually be directed by the court to be the plaintiff therein.³ Ordinarily this will be the plaintiff in the suit in equity, but, as matter of convenience, the court may make any party plaintiff in the issue and is not confined in this behalf to the actor in the original proceeding.⁴

Issue Between Co-plaintiffs. — But the issue should not be made up between co-plaintiffs in a cause.⁵

Nominal or Real Parties in Interest. — The issue should be between very manifest that in the case before us the vagueness of the issues, as well as their extension beyond the pleadings, has caused the introduction before the jury of testimony very well calculated to prejudice their minds against complainant, and yet in no sense evidence of any fact charged." See supra, X. 6. Necessity of Framing Special and Distinct Issues.

Time and Place. — Therefore, an issue whether plaintiff was guilty of adultery at any time generally, before the suit, with a person mentioned in the answer, should not be included where there is no statement of either time or locality. Strong v. Strong, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 233, 4 Robt. (N. Y.) 621.

Mere Indefiniteness as to Time and Place, however, will not cause such allegations to be expunged on motion, where no objection was made. Strong v. Strong, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 233, 4 Robt. (N. Y.) 621.

Defendant in Equity, Plaintiff in Issue of Fraud. — An issue directed by the court of chancery in a case where the bill charges the defendant with fraud in the purchase of land is not defective in form because it directs the defendant in the suit to support the affirmative of the issue and show that the purchase, which is the subject of the issue, was made bona fide. Browne v. McClintock, L. R. 6 H. L. 456.

Where a Party Directed to Be the Plaintiff in Issue Refuses to Proceed with the trial thereof, the court may substitute other persons in his stead, security for costs of the trial being given. Elliot v. Ince, 7 De G. M. & G. 489.

Effect on Parties of Result of Issue. — If the court of equity directs an issue in a case where there are many parties, and selects some of them for conduct of the trial, giving all leave to attend, all are bound by the result. Malone v. Malone, 8 Cl. & F. 179.

But an order directing an issue "with the consent of all parties in the cause" is erroneous so far as it purports to be with the consent of an infant party; for it is a question whether if the infant gave consent he is bound by it. But where the order for the issue was a right order to be made if the infant had not consented, it is immaterial whether he ought to be bound by the consent or not, especially where he was relieved from the effect of the consent by being allowed, on coming of age, to make a new defense. Malone v. Malone, 8 Cl. & F. 179.

5. Thus, in a suit in which the assignor and assignees of an equitable interest are made plaintiffs, an issue directed to try the validity of a deed of assignment is improper as being an issue between co-plaintiffs and not between them and the defendant. Fulham v. McCarthy, 1 H. L. Cas. 703, 12 Jur. 757.

13. Additional Issues. — In addition to the issues primarily presented to a jury, the court may in some instances submit to them any others which it may deem proper and necessary to the full determination of the case;² but there will be no error in the refusal of the court to submit to a jury additional equitable issues asked for, where these were fairly comprehended in the issues which the court did submit.³

14. Reformation or Amendment of Issues — The Issues May Be Reformed. where the court considers this course necessary.⁴

1. Pepper v. Bavington, 1 Phila. (Pa.) 337.

Garnishee, Not Claiming Fund. — A held a judgment against B, and issued an attachment execution thereon against C as garnishee of B. In answer to interrogatories served on him, C stated that he had a certain sum in his hands, which was claimed by B and also by several others. C submitted to the court to determine the rights of the respective claimants. The Court of Common Pleas thereupon ordered a feigned issue to be framed, wherein the claimants should be plaintiffs and A and C defendants. It was held that a feigned issue should be framed between the opposing claimants of the money so far as they were known to the court, and it was an error to make a garnishee a party to the issue and submit him to expenses and costs when he made no claim to the fund, and was in no default. The judgment was reversed and the issue set aside with instructions to the court on application to order such an issue to be framed between the parties claiming the fund as it should deem necessary to determine their rights. Fish v. Keeney, 91 Pa. St. 138.

2. For submission of additional issues not raised by pleadings, see supra, X. 8, c. From Other Sources than Pleadings.

3. Keithley v. Keithley, 85 Mo. 217.

Striking Out Additional Issues. — In an equity case in New York, on appeal from the report of a referee, the general term of the Supreme Court ordered the framing of an issue to be submitted to a jury as to the mental incapacity of a party. Upon the hearing of an application for the submission of that issue, eight additional inquiries were added; on the trial of these issues the jury failed to agree. The succeeding trial was brought on, when all the additional issues not contemplated by the direction of the general term were stricken out and the jury rendered a verdict answering the three issues which were returned. On appeal to the general term, the judgment was reversed for want of authority of the trial court to make the change in the issues. On motion afterwards made to the special term an order was made to strike out the additional inquiries, returning those which reduced the issues to the compass designed by, and within the decision of, the general term. The case being again appealed to the general term, the action of the special term in striking out such issues was held proper. St. John v. Coates, (Supreme Ct.) 9 N. Y. Supp. 202.

4. Reformation by Special Term in New York. — The special term of the Supreme Court of New York settled and framed eleven issues for trial by jury. Upon the trial at circuit the presiding judge, of his own motion, struck out all the issues except three, and upon each of these the jury found in the affirmative. Upon appeal by the defendants from the order striking out the issues, the general term reversed the order, on the ground that the justice at circuit had no power to strike out issues framed and theretofore tried. A motion was made at the special term to reform the issues. It was held that the decision of the general term, as above stated, was no objection to the reformation of the issues by the special term, simply because the parties had theretofore consented to other issues being tried, when there was no necessity or propriety whatever for such issues being presented to a jury, and did not preclude the court from taking them away from the jury when it was apparent that submission of such issues would only embarrass the case and would not subserve any useful pur-

Amendment of Issues.—The issues may, in proper cases, be amended.¹

15. Withdrawing Issues, Setting Aside Order, and Discharging Jury.—Since in an equity case the submission of issues is usually a matter of discretion in the court, it follows that the court may withdraw an issue which has been sent to a jury,² or annul and set aside the order directing the issue, and determine the whole case itself.³ And even after a jury has been impaneled, the pose, but would only tend to obstruct the course of justice. St. John v. Coates, 24 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 158.

1. Issues on Opening Judgments.—Where, upon the opening of several judgments, issues were awarded, and tried five times, upon subsequent discovery that one of the judgments opened had been omitted from the preliminary rule to show cause, the court permitted an amendment of the record nunc pro tunc so as to include it. Kittanning Ins. Co. v. Adams, (Pa. 1887) 10 Atl. Rep. 895.

Laches in Applying for Amendment.—On issues submitted to a jury in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage, a motion was made to amend the order awarding and settling the question to be tried by jury. It was held that no error should be predicated on the denial of the motion, since the defendants obtained this order on their own motion, had accepted and acted on it down to the final hearing of the case, without objecting to its form or sufficiency, in so far as was disclosed by the record, and that the motion came too late. Madison University v. White, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 490.

In Pennsylvania it was held that an issue directed under the sheriff's interpleader act cannot be amended on the trial. Grant v. Hill, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 173.

² Cook v. Bay, 4 How. (Miss.) 485. See St. John v. Coates, 24 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 158.

No Issue Presented on Evidence.—The court, submitting issues in an equity case, commits no error in withdrawing one of the issues at the conclusion of the evidence, given at the trial, where there is no such issue on the evidence. Keithley v. Keithley, 85 Mo. 217. See supra, X. 8. b. From the Pleadings and Testimony,

3. Issue Not likely to Be Tried.—Where an issue had been directed to the law court and for seven years afterwards no attempt had been made to try it, the Court of Chancery, seeing no reasonable hope that the issue would ever be tried by the Circuit Court, withdrew it, and, the complainants not appearing further to prosecute the issue, the chancellor annulled that portion of the interlocutory decree which ordered the issue, and took the trial and determination of the same upon himself. On appeal, this action was affirmed as eminently proper. Cook v. Bay, 4 How. (Miss.) 485.

Where Issue Should Not Have Been Ordered.—In West Virginia it was held that even after a verdict is rendered by a jury on an issue out of chancery, if, upon the proofs as they stood at the hearing, an issue ought not to have been ordered, it is the duty of the chancellor, notwithstanding the verdict, to set aside the order directing the issue and enter a decree on the merits as disclosed by the proofs on the hearing when the issue was directed. McFarland v. Douglass, 11 W. Va. 637; Jarrett v. Jarrett, 11 W. Va. 585; Anderson v. Cranmer, 11 W. Va. 562.

Order Set Aside at Subsequent Term.—The order from a chancery court directing an issue at law is interlocutory merely, and hence may be set aside by the court ordering it at a subsequent term. Dabbs v. Dabbs, 27 Ala. 646.

Interlocutory Decree Without Trying or Setting Aside an Issue.—It is completely in the discretion of a court of equity to ascertain a fact itself, if the testimony enables it so to do, or to refer the question to a jury, and consequently there is no error either in directing the issue or in discharging it. But where, without trying the issue or setting aside the order, the court made an interlocutory decree deciding the merits of the case, it was held that this interlocutory decree was an implied discharge of the order directing the issue and was substantially equivalent to such discharge; but that if the issue had been set aside in terms, in the body of the decree, or court may discharge the jury without the rendition of any verdict, and take upon itself the final decision of the cause.¹

16. Dismissal of Bill — Before Issue Tried. — At any time before the issue is tried, even upon the hearing of the cause, the plaintiff may move and obtain an order for the dismissal of the bill with costs.²

After Issue Tried. — But after the issue has been tried and determined for the defendant, the plaintiff cannot then move to dismiss, because the defendant is then entitled to have the cause set down for a hearing in order to obtain a formal dismissal of the bill so as to enroll it as a final judgment and thereby make it pleadable.³

XI. THE TRIAL — 1. Trial to Be by Jury. — The mode of trial of issues out of chancery is, of course, by jury, since this is the very object of the submission. And a judge at law trying an issue cannot direct a trial in another manner, as by arbitration.⁴ But if the parties think proper to refer it to arbitration, and a reference by previous order, it would have been more formal, though the situation of the case and of the parties would have been essentially the same. The court said: "The only real objection to the proceeding is, that the parties might not have been prepared to try the cause in court, in consequence of their expectation that it would be carried before a jury. There is, however, no reason to believe that this could have been the fact. Had there been any objection to a hearing on this ground, it would certainly have been attended to, and, if overruled, would have been respected by this court. But no objection appears to have been made, and the inference is that the cause was believed to be ready for a trial." Field v. Holland, 6 Cranch (U. S.) 22.

1. Israel v. Jackson, 93 Ind. 546, where the court said: "Whether any of the questions of fact presented in the cause should be sent to a jury for trial rested entirely in the discretion of the circuit court. For the same reason, any verdict which the jury might have returned would only have been for the information of the court and not obligatory upon it in the final disposition of the cause. The court, therefore, in the exercise of a sound discretion, could have disregarded any verdict which the jury might have rendered in the cause."
* * * The obvious inference, from what has been decided, is that where a jury has been impaneled in a cause of exclusively equitable jurisdiction to try some question of fact for the information of the court, and there is a failure of proof sufficient to justify the return of a verdict for the plaintiff, the court may discharge the jury, without a verdict, and proceed to dispose of the cause as if the jury had not been impaneled."

2. Carrington v. Holly, Dick. 280; Saylor's Appeal, 39 Pa. St. 498.

3. Gartside v. Isherwood, Dick. 612; Saylor's Appeal, 39 Pa. St. 498.

On a bill for injunction against an infringement of copyright, and an account, the court of law, on an issue, having certified against plaintiff's right, the defendant cannot move to dismiss the bill. Brooke v. Clarke, 1 Swanst. 550.

Dismissal at Hearing, where Issue Improperly Directed. — If upon the state of the proofs at the time the issue is directed the bill should be dismissed, it is error to direct the issue; and though the issue be found in favor of the plaintiff, the bill should, notwithstanding, be dismissed at the hearing; and in such case, if the bill is not dismissed by the court below, it will be dismissed by the appellate court. Vangilder v. Hoffman, 22 W. Va. 1. See also DeVaughn v. Husted, 27 W. Va. 773.

Verdict Recorded After Dismissal of Bill. — Where the bill was dismissed after an issue had been awarded, it was ordered that the verdict, proving forgery of a deed, should be filed and become of record in the court. Thompson v. Thompson, 1 Desaus. (S. Car.) 136.

is adopted by consent, the effect of that is to abandon not merely the direction to try the issue, but the whole proceeding.¹

2. In What Forum Issues Are Tried. — It was formerly the practice in England to have the issue in a chancery case which the court could not satisfactorily determine tried by a jury in a court of common law.² By the former practice in the United States, which still prevails to some extent, the trial of issues by a jury in an equity case is had before a separate court of law, either as matter of convenience or because the court of equity has no jury.³ There have, however, been many changes wrought by the statutes and codes of the various states, and now, in numerous jurisdictions, the trial of equitable issues may be by a jury at the bar of the court ordering them, or on its law side, the judge who directed the issues presiding at the trial thereof.⁴

1. Woodley v. Johnson, 1 Moll. 394.

Effect of Award Where Parties Choose Arbitration. — The Court of Chancery having directed an issue, the parties waived a trial by jury and submitted the question to five persons mutually chosen by them, and agreed that their report should be certified in lieu of a verdict. The court must consider such a report as an award, to be governed by the same rules and principles which prevail in cases of awards. Pleasants v. Ross, 1 Wash. (Va.) 156.

Plaintiff Having Choice of Court. — The party who had to sustain the affirmative was the plaintiff in the issue, and as such had the choice of the court in which it was to be tried. Ex p. Malkin, 2 Rose 27. See Antrobus v. East India Co., 5 Madd. 3.

Issues Concerning Lands or Hereditaments. — Where issues concerned lands or other hereditaments, the trial was generally had in the county where they were located. Chapman v. Smith, 2 Ves. 506; Sparke v. Ivatt, 1 Sim. & S. 366.

Trial of Issue in Exchequer. — An issue would not be directed to be tried in exchequer, unless for some special reason and on motion made for that purpose. Antrobus v. East India Co., 5 Madd. 3.

Trials at Bar. — "It is said that the court seldom or never directs a trial at bar, but only intimates that it would be desirable. This, however, is not strictly correct; for although the court, owing to the great increase of expense attendant upon trials at bar, is very cautious in directing an issue so to be tried, yet frequent instances are to be found in which such trials have been directed."

3. Common-law and Equity Tribunals Distinct. — When common-law and equity jurisdiction is vested in different courts, the issue is sent to a court of law for trial. Milk v. Moore, 39 Ill. 587.

In North Carolina, under the former practice, owing to the inconvenience and expense of having a jury and witnesses come to the court of equity, it was customary to send the issues to be tried at law. Fisher v. Carroll, 1 Jones L. (N. Car.) 27; Reid v. Barnhart, 1 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 142.

Unless some objection was suggested, the court of the county where the parties and witnesses resided was selected to try the issue. Fisher v. Carroll, 1 Jones L. (N. Car.) 27.

New Hampshire. — Formerly in New Hampshire, where an issue was ordered by the court, it was to be made up under the direction of the court and sent to the Court of Common Pleas for trial. Tibbetts v. Perkins, 20 N. H. 275.

4. Illinois. — See Milk v. Moore, 39 Ill. 587.

In Indiana, under Code Civ. Pro. (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 409), the questions are not sent as formerly to another court presided over by another judge or to another side of the same court, but they are submitted by the judge who desires the information to a jury in the court over which he presides. The court thus hears the evidence heard

3. Change of Venue. — The method of obtaining a change of venue is by application to the court which directed the issue.¹ Although the authorities are not entirely uniform, yet it seems that ordinarily no right to a change of venue exists where issues by the jury. If there be questions of fact involved in the trial of the cause other than those so submitted to the jury, the court may hear the evidence thereon and try them at the same time or at another time. Pence v. Garrison, 93 Ind. 349.

North Carolina. — See Fisher v. Carroll, 1 Jones L. (N. Car.) 27.

Pennsylvania. — In Maynard v. Esher, 17 Pa. St. 222, the Court of Common Pleas of Philadelphia county was held to be a court of justice administering remedies both in the forms of law and chancery; that, unlike courts of chancery elsewhere, it had no need of the assistance of another court in administering justice, for it was bound to know both law and equity, and it had jurors at all times in attendance capable of trying all disputed facts arising in a suit. Where, therefore, issues of fact arose and a jury was demanded, that court should oversee and frame the issues, and order them to be tried by itself under a jury, and the District Court might very properly refuse to try an issue directed to it by the Court of Common Pleas; and in this case they had hesitation in allowing it to be tried before them. But it being shown on error to the District Court that an issue so tried was ancillary to a cause actually pending in the Common Pleas, the Supreme Court consented, in order to save delay and expense to the parties, to overlook the irregularity of the proceedings and to hear the case.

In South Carolina, when a judge, trying what would have been called a suit in equity before the Code of Procedure abolished the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity, orders an issue upon any question of fact, it is an interlocutory order made to enlighten his conscience, that should be set down on the law side of the court, not as an ordinary case for a jury, but as a submission. Ivy v. Clawson, 14 S. Car. 272.

In Virginia the court may direct an issue out of chancery to be tried on the law side of the court. Ford v. Gardner, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 71; Meek v. Spracher, 87 Va. 162.

Issue to Determine Usury. — The Virginia Code of 1860, c. 141, § 10, gives to a party the right to trial by jury of an issue of usury, where the bill does not require a discovery. This statute seems to contemplate that all the proceedings, including the trial of the issue, are to be had in the chancery court, instead of having the issue tried on the law side of the court. Brockenbrough v. Spindle, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 21, holding that there is no well-founded objection to the former course, and it may even be recommended by its simplicity and directness, but that if the latter course is pursued the substance and effect are the same.

In West Virginia the Code of 1868, c. 131, provided that "a circuit court wherein a chancery cause is pending may direct an issue to be tried in such court," and it was held no error to direct the issue to be tried at the bar of that court; but whether the trial should be at the bar or on the law side of the court was left undecided. Ogle v. Adams, 12 W. Va. 213. The code provision above quoted did not change the general chancery practice. It only specified where an issue might be tried. Jarrett v. Jarrett, 11 W. Va. 584.

In Washington it is not proper to send part of a trial on the merits into another department, or after the trial has progressed, to send the whole case to some other judge, merely because there are found to be questions in the equity case which might better be submitted to a jury. Hill v. Young, 7 Wash. 33.

In the Federal Courts it was held that the chancellor, being the judge before whom the issues were tried, committed no error in calling a jury into the chancery side of the court, though it would be more formal to order a jury to be impaneled on the law side. Wilson v. Riddle, 123 U. S. 608, where it was pointed out that the latter course was pursued in Kerr v. South Park Com'rs, 117 U. S. 379.

1. Lovett v. Lovett, 5 W. R. 5, 2 Jur. N. S. 1130.

In Sparke v. Ivatt, 1 Sim. & S. 366, it was held that where an issue is directed to prove the validity of moduses, and the plaintiff wishes to have it tried in a county different from that wherein have been made and submitted in an equity case, and that the court will usually not allow such change unless for very weighty and material reasons.¹

4. Time of Trial. — This will be specified in the order directing the trial, and the parties will not be forced to proceed in advance of that time.²

5. Taking Issue Pro Confesso. — According to the English practice, it is customary for an order for an issue to contain a direction that the issue be taken pro confesso if the trial be not had at the proper time or according to the directions of the order.³ And it is an established rule that where an issue is directed to be tried at a certain time, and by the default of one party unexplained the trial is not then had, an order will be made to take the issue pro confesso.⁴ But having regard to the par-

the lands lie, an order for that purpose is not to be inserted in the decree, but to be obtained by petition.

On the Trial of an Action directed by the court instead of an issue, if the jury was dismissed without having found a verdict, the action must be considered as remaining in the same state as if no trial had taken place; and a change of venue, if there be a case for it, rests with the court of law. Dowell v. Dew, 7 Jur. 548.

Trial Before Judge Alleged to Be Prejudiced. — The chancellor will not listen to an affidavit tending to show that a judge is prejudiced, as an objection to the trial of a feigned issue before him, in an action for divorce for adultery. Walgrove v. Walgrove, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 227.

Issue from Probate Court. — In California, under the practice and statutes of that state, the Probate Court of one county has jurisdiction to change the place of trial of an issue of fact to the Probate Court of another county. People v. Probate Ct., 46 Cal. 246.

Issue from Orphans' Court in Pennsylvania. — In Woods v. Woods, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 12, it was held that a feigned issue directed from the Orphans' Court, on an administration account presented for confirmation, may be removed for trial by certiorari from the Court of Common Pleas to which it was sent to the District Court. The court said that such an issue from the Orphans' Court was unlike an issue out of chancery; it was to every legal intent an action, and that the Orphans' Court was not to be governed exclusively by the opinion of the court to which the issue was sent, nor did it exercise any power of selection, as it could send an issue to no other court than the Court of Common Pleas; but that, as there was neither reason nor authority for restricting the trial of the issue to that court, it might be removed, subject to the limitations which are applicable to other actions.

Action Instead of Issue. — Though an issue may be taken pro confesso, it is not the practice to order that an action directed by the court to be brought and tried at the next assizes, and not so brought, should be taken as tried. Bradbury v. Manchester, etc., R. Co., 16 Jur. 1011.

Manner of Obtaining Pro Confesso Order. — Where there has been an order to take an issue pro confesso, it appears that if the issue was directed on the

6. The Jury — a. SUMMONING, IMPANELING, AND QUALIFICATIONS — In General. — The general method of and practice pertaining to summoning and impaneling a jury for the trial of issues, and the qualifications of the jurors, appear to be the same as in other cases where jury trials are had.²

Time of Impaneling. — Since issues in an equity case cannot be tried by the jury until it is impaneled, it has been held that there is no error in impaneling the jury before framing the special issues to be submitted to it.³ The jury may be impaneled immediately, and it is not necessary that it should be summoned to appear at the succeeding term of the court, unless either party should move on good cause shown to postpone the inquiry to a subsequent term.⁴

b. COMMON, SPECIAL, OR STRUCK JURY. — The jury trying the issues may be a common, special, or struck jury, according to the direction or permission contained in the order directing the trial or afterwards obtained from the court.⁵

hearing the cause should be set down for further hearing, at which time the issue will be taken pro confesso according to the order. If the issue was directed on an interlocutory application, before the hearing, the cause should be brought on for hearing in the usual manner. 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. (1st Am. ed.) 742.

If the party on whom rests the affirmative of the issues directed to be tried does not proceed to trial in the time directed by the order, the proper course is to move to have the issues taken pro confesso. Underwood v. Darracott, 8 Ir. R. Eq. 345. See Hartland v. Dancocks, 21 L. J. Ch. 449, 5 De G. & Sm. 561.

The Costs of an issue taken pro confesso should be paid by the party by whose fault and against whom it was so taken. Drake v. Smyth, McClel. & Y. 380. See Reeves v. Hodgson, 10 Hare, appendix xxiv.; — v. —, 4 Madd. 255; Hargrave v. Hargrave, 8 Beav. 289. See also infra, XV. Costs.

1. Hargrave v. Hargrave, 8 Beav. 289.

An order having been made for a new trial of an issue at a certain time, or that the issue should be taken pro confesso against the plaintiff, and the plaintiff having by mistake omitted to give notice of the trial in time, the court, under the circumstances of the case, refused to order the issue to be taken pro confesso, and made an order appointing a further time for the new trial of the issue. Varty v. Duncan, 11 Jur. 809, affirming 11 Jur. 552.

Where Material Witnesses were unable to attend at the trial of the issue, and for this reason the issue was not tried, the rule as to taking it pro confesso was properly relaxed. Hargrave v. Hargrave, 8 Beav. 289, 14 L. J. N. S. Ch. 250.

2. See generally articles JURIES and STRUCK JURIES; and 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. (1st Am. ed.) 742.

Effect of Errors or Irregularities. — The submission of issues in an equity case being discretionary, and the verdict advisory, errors or irregularities committed by the court in summoning or impaneling the jury cannot be a subject of complaint by the defeated party. Peck v. Farnham, (Colo. 1897) 49 Pac. Rep. 364.

In Apthorp v. Comstock, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 482, the order directing the issue contained the proviso that the trial must be by a struck jury, if requested by either party.

In Bassett v. Johnson, 3 N. J. Eq. 422, the order stated that a special jury would be ordered by the court on the

c. SWORN TO TRY ISSUES SUBMITTED. — The jury should not as a general rule be sworn to try the matters in issue between the parties; it should be sworn to try the question and issues submitted to it.¹

7. General Conduct and Control of Trial. — Where an issue is directed from a court of equity to be tried by a jury before a court of law the trial will in general be regulated and conducted according to the practice of the law court.² It must be carefully noted, however, that the court of equity does not part with the cause in submitting an issue. The whole proceeding is still under its control, and the mode of trial before the jury is a matter within its discretion. It is accordingly a frequent practice for the submitting court to regulate to a greater or less degree the course of the trial, and to direct that strict legal rules, which would otherwise be applicable, be disregarded or modified.³ In jurisdictions application of either party, subject to the preference given the plaintiff by the rules of the Supreme Court.

1. Pence v. Garrison, 93 Ind. 345.

In Ikerd v. Beavers, 106 Ind. 483, distinguishing Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Griffin, 92 Ind. 487, the court, in an equitable case, caused the jury to be sworn to "well and truly try the issues in said cause."

In Hornbrook v. Powell, 146 Ind. 39, it was held that if under the Indiana Rev. Stat. (1881), § 409, in a suit on notes, and to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, the court submitted certain issues to the jury, and the jury was sworn to "well and truly try the cause now in hearing," instead of being sworn to try such particular question of fact as the court for its own information submitted to them, the error was harmless.

In the United States Circuit Court for the Third Circuit a feigned issue directed for trial is put on the trial list and the jury is sworn to try in the form and in the words set forth in the order of issue. Wilson v. Barnum, 1 Wall. Jr. (C. C.) 342.

2. The court of law knows nothing of the equitable proceedings in the case, or whether there are any, or what are the pleadings in the court of equity. The court must try the issue, not as an equitable proceeding nor regulated by any statute or rules which are applicable to proceedings of an equitable nature. The issue must be tried as a straight issue of law, subject, however, to the regulation and control of the court of equity. Black v. Lamb, 12 N. J. Eq. 108.

In the Orphans' Court of Maryland, where issues are sent to a court of law for trial, it is held that the jury is substituted in aid of the Orphans' Court to ascertain the facts, and the proceeding is all the while within the probate powers of that court, and the court of law must decide on the same principles and rules as govern the Orphans' Court. Yingling v. Hesson, 16 Md. 112.

Joint or Several Trial. — Where several issues are sent from the Orphans' Court of Pennsylvania to the Common Pleas, the trial of them together or severally is a matter to be regulated by the sound discretion of the latter court. Cobb v. Burns, 61 Pa. St. 281.

3. Black v. Lamb, 12 N. J. Eq. 108; American Dock, etc., Co. v. Public Schools, 37 N. J. Eq. 266. See Yingling v. Hesson, 16 Md. 112, where issues were sent from the Orphans' Court to a court of law.

Thus in North Carolina, where, owing to the inconvenience and expense of having a jury and the witnesses come into the court of equity, an issue was sent to a court of law, the court of equity did not part with the cause or control of the issue, but simply called into requisition the aid of a court of law to act as a substitute for the jury which might have been summoned to attend and try the issue in the court of equity. Fisher v. Carroll, 1 Jones L. (N. Car.) 27.

The manner of proceeding on a trial of a feigned issue is entirely under the control of the court of equity. It will often, by its order, suspend certain rules of evidence for the purpose of where the practice prevails of calling in a jury before the court of equity and there submitting to it the issues instead of sending them to an independent court of law, the proceedings are, of course, under the control of the former court, and are governed, it seems, by the rules applicable to equitable trials in general.¹ But if the case, though it be in reality an equitable one, is treated by the court and parties as an action at law regularly triable by jury, and the trial of it as such is entered upon, and the proceedings until the jury has retired for consultation are conducted as in ordinary actions, the rules applicable to such actions must be substantially followed.²

8. Powers and Duties of Judge — In General. — The powers and duties of the judge presiding on the trial of issues appear to be similar to those governing the ordinary jury trial, in so far as his proceedings do not conflict with the directions or usurp the proper province of the court by which those issues were submitted.³ For example, he is to decide the legal questions arising upon the trial, regulate the admission or rejection of evidence when this has not been done by the submitting court,⁴ and oftentimes give the proper directions and instructions.⁵

Declining Trial or Changing Mode. — But the judge has no authority to decline to try the issues, nor to change the mode of trial thereof.⁶

Orders and Domain of Submitting Court. — And in general he must not in any way go contrary to the orders of the court from which the issues are sent, nor in any manner encroach upon the domain and jurisdiction of that tribunal.⁷

Functions Cease After Report. — After receiving the findings of the jury and making his report on the trial, the functions of the judge cease.⁸

affording facilities for the trial of the issue. It frequently will direct the examination of one or more parties to the suit. It will also direct that the parties are at liberty to read the depositions taken in a cause of such of the witnesses as upon the trial shall be proved to be dead or unable to attend to be examined. As the whole proceeding takes place for the purpose of informing the conscience of the court, it is not bound down strictly to the forms incident to a regular common-law trial. Black v. Shreve, 13 N. J. Eq. 455.

7. Form of Issues. — It is not for the presiding judge at a jury trial to say that issues sent from a court of equity are so improperly framed that they are not distinct from each other. Bell v. Woodward, 47 N. H. 539.

The Pertinency of the Issue sent on a matter raised before an auditor may be highly important, but it cannot be considered until the court comes to enter judgment on the whole record. McDonough v. Norris, 2 Phila. (Pa.) 266.

In Fisher v. Carroll, 1 Jones L. (N.

9. Continuing or Postponing Trial. — The application to postpone the trial of an issue must be made to the court which directed it.¹ Under special circumstances, the application will be granted and a postponement ordered,² though it may and will be denied if under the circumstances of the case a postponement is not necessary or desirable.³

10. Presenting the Issues to the Jury. — The method of submitting the issues to the jury has already been treated.⁴ The actual presentation of them at the trial should be carefully and correctly made.⁵

11. Scope of Trial or Inquiry. — The trial or inquiry is to be limited to the issues submitted or raised by the pleadings, and is to be decided without reference to their bearing on the case out of which they arose.⁶

Car.) 27, the court said: "When an issue is sent to a court of law, the court of equity does not part with the cause or the control of the issue, but simply calls into requisition the aid of the court of law to act as a substitute for the jury which might have been summoned to attend and try the issue in the court of equity. The consequence is, that when the jury in the court of law return a verdict, that court, having done all it was requested to do, can take no further action, and returns the verdict of the jury, together with the judge's notes (or, as we term it, a statement of the case made by the judge), to the court of equity, where, the cause coming on for their directions, the court will examine into all that took place at the trial."

Absence of Material Witnesses may also be ground for postponement. Kebel v. Philpot, 9 Sim. 614.

3. Hargrave v. Hargrave, 9 Beav. 153.

Postponement on Account of Newspaper Publication. — In Willis v. Farrer, 3 Y. & J. 381, a motion to postpone the new trial of an issue in a tithe case from the summer to the spring assizes, on the ground that a report of the application for a new trial and the decision of the judge granting it, in which he observed that the verdict in the first trial was against the opinion of himself and the judge who tried it, had been recently published in the newspapers and would influence the minds of the jury, especially as the issue would be tried before the same judge, was refused with costs.

4. See supra, X. 5. General Methods of Submitting.

5. Reading Issues to Jury from Paper Separate from Bill and Answer. — In a case in Tennessee the objection was insisted upon by the defendant's counsel that the petition and answer were not read to the jury as forming issues to be tried, but the matters submitted were drawn up on a distinct piece of paper. The court said: "We perceive no error in this; the matter in issue by the pleadings is the adultery of defendant with the negro Polly, and with other women unknown. This identical inquiry is the one which was submitted to the jury and to try which they were sworn. Whether it was read to them from the bill and answer or from a distinct piece of paper, can make no difference." Richmond v. Richmond, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 344.

6. McDonough v. Norris, 2 Phila. (Pa.) 266, where the issue submitted was raised before an auditor, and the court said that such a course would be "plainly at variance with the object of an issue, which is to narrow the controversy to a particular point without reference to what lies beyond it. Every issue must stand or fall by itself at the trial, and be decided by the jury with a view to its own truth or falsehood, without reference to the bearing which it may have on the controversy out of which it arises."

12. Powers and Duties of Counsel. — These appear in general not to differ from the same on ordinary trials, unless a difference is made by order of the submitting court.¹

13. Opening and Closing. — The party having the affirmative of the issue and the burden of proof, is entitled to open and close the case, on the trial of issues as on other trials.²

14. Burden of Proof. — The general rule, on the trial of issues as on other trials, is that the party holding the affirmative must take upon himself the burden of proof.³

15. Evidence — a. GENERAL PRINCIPLES GOVERNING. — Whether the principles of law or equity govern the introduction of evidence on the trial of issues before a court of law, is a matter of some dispute among the authorities. The doctrine that equitable principles govern has at times been adhered to,⁴ but it is believed that the best doctrine is that in so far as the evidence has not been regulated by order of the court of equity, the rules of law proceeding in a probate court is framed for a jury, if the plaintiff replies to the answer, he admits it to be good and confines the inquiry to the truth of the matters at issue. Clem v. Durham, 14 Ind. 263, holding that such pleadings are conducted subject to the same rule as in other chancery proceedings. See supra, X. 8. From What Sources Issues Are Made Up.

1. Arrangement of Counsel as to Matters in Cause. — On the trial of the issue the common-law counsel entered into an arrangement as to all the matters in dispute in the case. It was held that the matters were not so distinct as to be beyond his authority. Hargrave v. Hargrave, 12 Beav. 408, 14 Jur. 212.

Counsel Questioning Jurymen. — Upon the trial of an issue in divorce, it was held not improper for the libellant's counsel to ask the jurymen before they were sworn whether they were conscientiously opposed to the granting of divorce. Beck v. Beck, 163 Pa. St. 649.

2. See generally article OPEN AND CLOSE.

General Rule Applicable to Equity Cases. — "There is no reason why the general rule of practice in this commonwealth, by which the plaintiff is entitled to the opening and close, should not be adhered to in equity, and there is nothing in the form of the order for an issue in the present case to take it out of the general rule. We are not required to decide what the effect might have been if the order, as is often the case in England, had directed that the defendant in the cause should be plaintiff at the trial of the issue." Dorr v. Tremont Nat. Bank, 128 Mass. 357.

Issue to Try Validity of Claim. — Where a claim by an executor or any other creditor of an estate is resisted and issues are sent to try its validity, the claimant on the trial of such issues ought to open and conclude. Yingling v. Hesson, 16 Md. 112.

Under Interpleader Act in England. — In an issue under the Interpleader Act the plaintiffs averred in the declaration that certain goods were not the property of the plaintiffs, or either of them. The defendant pleaded that the goods were the property of the plaintiffs, or one of them. It was held that on this issue the defendant had the right to begin. Hudson v. Brown, 8 C. & P. 774, 34 E. C. L. 631.

3. Yingling v. Hesson, 16 Md. 112.

Burden of Proof Thrown on Party Charged. — An issue involving the question of fraud may in the discretion of the court be so stated as to throw upon the party charged the onus of establishing bona fides. Browne v. McClintock, 22 W. R. 521, L. R. 6 H. L. 434.

4. Brown v. Clifford, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 46, in which case the court said: "It would be grossly unjust under pretense of trying a question of facts by a jury in an equitable action, to deprive the party of the right of having his rights determined according to the principles of equity which are administered in the court in which his action was brought."

govern its introduction and admissibility, and that it is for the law judge to enforce those rules.¹

b. ORAL TESTIMONY. — It is the usual course in the trial of issues out of chancery to take viva voce testimony.²

c. CONTROL OF EQUITY COURT, AND ORDER REGULATING — In General. — The proceeding being entirely within the control of the court of equity, it may, and perhaps should, by its order regulate the evidence and testimony to be used on the trial.³

Suspension of Strict Rules. — It will often suspend certain rules of evidence for the purpose of affording better facilities for the determination.⁴

Transmission of Evidence Already Taken. — The testimony taken in the chancery court may be transmitted to the trial court with the order that it be used there.⁵

Papers on File. — Directions ought to be given respecting the reading of papers filed in the chancery cause.⁶

1. New Jersey. — Black v. Lamb, 12 N. J. Eq. 108. See also Black v. Shreve, 13 N. J. Eq. 455. In the case first cited it was said: "The court must try the issue, not as an equitable proceeding, nor regulated by any statutes or rules which are applicable to proceedings of an equitable nature. The issue must be tried as a strict issue at law, and the rules of law in regard to evidence, its admissibility, and the weight of it, govern the proceedings, except so far as they have been otherwise regulated by the terms of the issue out of this court."

In Massachusetts, by rule of court, the issue is to be tried upon the like evidence as in a suit at law, together with such parts of the answer, depositions, and other proceedings in the cause, as the court shall order. Chancery Rule 33.

The Pertinency of the Evidence to the Issue is the only question which the court of law can consider in rejecting or admitting evidence. That court has nothing to do with its bearing on the main cause. McDonough v. Norris, 2 Phila. (Pa.) 266.

Further Evidence After Closing. — On trials before a jury, when the evidence has been closed on both sides and the argument of the cause has commenced, as a general rule, no further evidence should be received from either party; but the judge presiding at the trial, in the exercise of a sound discretion, may relax the rule under peculiar circumstances, and receive additional evidence, if the nature of the case and the ends of justice require it. If the introduction of such additional evidence takes the adverse party by surprise, he should be allowed time and opportunity, if desired, to meet it with further evidence on his side. George v. Pilcher, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 310.

2. Paul v. Paul, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 525.

Issues Submitted After Depositions Published. — But if an issue is submitted to a jury after the written evidence has been taken and published, it has been held that the issue should be tried upon the same evidence on which it would have been tried had it taken the usual course of cases in chancery and been examined by the court, unless the court upon cause shown makes an order permitting further evidence to be introduced. Marston v. Brackett, 9 N. H. 350.

6. It has been held in Virginia that any papers may be read at the trial of the issue, which were read upon the hearing of the cause in chancery, or at a former trial. M'Call v. Graham, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 13; but that the court of chancery ought to give directions respecting the reading of these papers,

Further Evidence Adduced at Trial. — The order of the court need not be limited to directions concerning the testimony taken before it; the use of further evidence to be adduced at the trial may be ordered.¹

d. INTRODUCING AND READING ANSWER. — According to what is conceived to be the correct practice, the answer of the defendant filed in the main cause is not to be introduced as evidence and read to the jury at the trial of the issues, unless the chancellor so orders,² which, of course, it is competent for him to do.³

e. READING DEPOSITIONS. — The reading of depositions taken in the law court at the trial of issues, or taken in the chancery court from which those issues have been sent, where there is no order of that court on the subject, appears to be regulated by the rules pertaining to ordinary trials.⁴ When it is desired to have the depositions taken in a chancery cause read on the trial, an order will be made by the submitting court directing them to be so used.⁵ According to the English practice, the object of this direction is not to render the depositions evidence which ordinarily would not be admitted, but only to save the expense of proving the bill, answer, and proceedings.⁶ This doctrine, and the order

Ford v. Gardner, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 72; Paul v. Paul, 2 Hen. & M. (Va.) 525; and that otherwise the omission to read any of them on the trial will not be a ground for reversal, if the court of chancery refuses to grant a new trial, Ford v. Gardner, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 72.

5. 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. (1st Am. ed.) 743, wherein the reason for this order, under the English practice, was stated as follows: "The ordinary method of proving depositions taken in the court of chancery, upon the hearing of a cause in another court, is by proving an examined copy of the bill and answer, which is done for the purpose of laying a foundation for the introduction of such evidence, by showing that there has been matter in issue, between the parties; but such rule has gradually been relaxed, and, in directing an issue to be tried at law, the court will order the depositions taken in the cause to be read at the trial of the issue, so as to dispense with the strict proof, which would otherwise be required, of the bill and answer."

6. Gordon v. Gordon, 1 Swanst. 166.

Therefore the general direction incorporated in the order is that "the depositions of the witnesses shall be read at the trial of the issue, in case such under it, still leaves the actual determination of the admissibility of the depositions, in most cases, to the judge of the law court; and he will, before allowing them to be read, require strict proof of the witness's death or his inability to attend the trial.¹ In this country a view has been taken which renders the practice different from, or at least modifies, the English procedure. Here it has been declared a proper exercise of discretion for the court of equity to order that the depositions may all be read on the trial of the issues, unless in cases where the attendance of the witnesses is actually procured; that in this way it will be in the power of either party, by procuring the attendance of all witnesses, to substitute a viva voce examination for the deposition.² And it has also been judicially pointed out that when, by order of a court of chancery, certain depositions are authorized to be read on the trial, the law judge has nothing to do with the admissibility of the whole or any part of the evidence; the chancery court alone being responsible for its legality.³ It must be observed, however, that in this country, as in England, the order may limit the depositions to be read to those of such witnesses as are dead or cannot attend, in which case the death or inability must be proved at the trial.⁴

f. PRODUCTION OF RECORD. — When it is necessary that matters contained in the record of the cause in the chancery court be produced on the trial of the issues, the court will not usually order the original sent down, but will substitute therefor an office or certified copy.⁵ The application to take affidavits witnesses or either of them shall be dead at the time of the trial, or shall be proved, at such trial, to be in such a state of health as not to be capable of attending the trial." See Palmer v. Aylesbury, 15 Ves. Jr. 176; Turner v. Maule, 2 De G. & Sm. 209; Bellingham v. Pearson, 1 Ves. & B. 339, note a; Watkins v. Atchison, 10 Hare, appendix xlv.; Andrews v. Beauchamp, 7 Sim. 65; Lynch v. Lynch, Drury 538.

But even under this practice the rule is not carried so far as to preclude the court of equity from deciding whether or not a witness is dead or unable to attend. It may investigate the question, determine the fact, and order the depositions to be read, thereby dispensing with any proof on the point before the court trying the issues. Corbett v. Corbett, 1 Ves. & B. 335. See also Lynch v. Lynch, Drury 538; Watkins v. Atchison, 10 Hare, appendix xlv.

and answers from the files will often be refused, but it will sometimes be granted, and original writs allowed to be produced.¹

g. PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS. — The rule is that the court, either in its original order directing the issue or by one afterwards obtained on motion, will direct the production at the trial of all documents which the court conceives will be useful upon that trial.² Questions relating to a production of documents have, however, been already elaborately treated in another article.³

h. EXAMINATION OF PARTIES. — It is competent for the court of equity in directing an issue to order the examination of one or both parties to the cause, where otherwise parties would not be called as witnesses.⁴ But this is a discretionary power to be carefully exercised, and the court will often refuse to exert it.⁵

i. ADMISSIONS. — If it is desired to have either of the parties admit certain facts, for the purpose of properly raising the question to be tried, the court sending the issue may, by its order, direct those admissions to be made.⁶ On the other hand it may, and sometimes should, refuse to direct any matters to be admitted,

Special Order. — It is said that a general order is not sufficient to insure the production of documents at the trial; that there must be a special order relating thereto, whether it be incorporated into the original one or obtained afterwards on application. 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. (1st Am. ed.) 739.

Waiver of Objections by Order. — By the order directing a party to be examined as a witness, on the trial of an issue, no objection is waived, except that which arises from his being a party to the cause. Rogerson v. Whittington, 1 Swanst. 39.

5. Parker v. Morrell, 2 Phil. 453, 12 Jur. 253; Hepworth v. Heslop, 6 Hare 622, 13 Jur. 384; Howard v. Braithwaite, 1 Ves. & B. 374.

Where Unfair Advantage Would Result.

— The practice of allowing the parties on the trial of issues to be examined was said to be rare in England, and never resorted to where from the position of the parties an unfair advantage would be given to one over the other. Parker v. Morrell, 2 Phil. 453, 12 Jur. 253.

Knowledge Peculiarly in Possession of Parties. — The court will not order the examination of persons at the trial of the issue who, by the rules of the court of law, could not be examined without order, except sometimes in cases where the facts in dispute rest only in the knowledge of the plaintiff and defendant. Ex p. Dister, Buck 234.

or will specifically relieve a party from so doing.¹ And it is said that before the court will order the admission of any fact its admission on the pleadings must be quite clear and free from doubt.²

16. Instructions — General Power and Duty to Give. — The general rule is that in an equity case where a jury is called to try certain questions of fact, which, when found, are not obligatory but simply for the purpose of informing the conscience of the chancellor, the court is not bound to give instructions to the jury, and neither party has the right to ask the court for them.³ But under particular circumstances and in some jurisdictions it has been held that the court should properly instruct the jury.⁴

3. Danielson v. Gude, 11 Colo. 87; Luce v. Barnum, 19 Mo. App. 359; Conran v. Sellow, 28 Mo. 321. For general practice pertaining to instructions, see article INSTRUCTIONS, ante, p. 47.

Refusal to Give Not Reversible Error. — Where special issues are submitted to a jury in an equity case and the court adopts the findings of the jury and finds on any or all of the issues, the refusal to give instructions is not cause for a reversal. Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 353; Hewlett v. Pilcher, 85 Cal. 542; Riley v. Martinelli, 97 Cal. 575; Conran v. Sellow, 28 Mo. 321.

Where, at the trial, the verdict could not have been different had certain instructions been given, the refusal to give the instructions is not error for which the verdict will be set aside, and the rule is the same where the court gives, in lieu of the instructions asked for by a party, others substantially embodying the same ideas. Snouffer v. Hansbrough, 79 Va. 177.

Expression of Opinion by Judge. — In Brown v. Parkinson, 56 Pa. St. 337, on a writ of error from the trial of a feigned issue between two judgment creditors to try the validity of a judgment in favor of one of them, a complaint was made that the judge erred in treating the matter as an action at common law to be determined alone by a jury. The court said that this complaint arose from a vague notion that the judge should indicate to the jury, in some strong way, his opinion on the fact; whereas, if this had been done in the case in hand, it would have been against the evidence, and complaint could justly be made that he threw his opinion into the jury-box, when the object of the issue was to have an unbiased verdict of the jury upon the facts presented for their decision.

4. Equity Case Treated as Action at Law. — In a pure equity case, perhaps neither party has a right to ask the court to instruct the jury; but when the action is tried as an action at law, and so treated by the courts and parties, it should at least be fully submitted to a jury and the law correctly stated to them. VanVleet v. Olin, 4 Nev. 95.

Issue of Quantum Damificatus. — In Kentucky, on trying this issue, the attention of the jury should be called particularly to points of inquiry. Griffith v. Depew, 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 183.

In the Circuit Court of Baltimore City under art. 29, § 58, of the Code of Maryland, when issues are framed for jury trial, the court has the right to instruct the jury. Barth v. Rosenfeld, 36 Md. 604.

Instructions as to Admissibility of Evidence. — In Georgia it is not only the province, but the duty, of the court on the trial of equity causes to instruct the jury what portions of the defendant's answer are responsive to the allegations in the complainant's bill, so that the jury may understand from the proper source what is legal evidence for their consideration, and what is not. Beall v. Beall, 10 Ga. 342; Shiels v. Stark, 14 Ga. 429. When the answer to the bill contains statements which

On the Law Applicable to the Case. — The verdict of the jury being simply for the purpose of informing the conscience of the court, general instructions as to the law applicable to the facts of the case are not proper, for the jury have nothing to do with the application of the law to the facts, this being the province of the court directing the issue.¹

On Evidence Given. — Instructions on the trial of issues should not, in general, comment on the evidence.² But though there is no error in refusing to charge the jury that under all the evidence the verdict must be in favor of the defendant,³ there is equally no error in the court instructing the jury to find for the defendant, if, upon all the evidence, the charges made in the petition were not established by the weight of the evidence.⁴

are not responsive to the allegations of the bill, and the court charges the jury that the answer is evidence, it should also charge them that the statements not in reply to the allegations are not evidence; and should, either by specific mention of the points not responsive, or by general instructions, according to the nature of the cause, point out to the jury the application of the rule. Neal v. Patten, 40 Ga. 363.

Instructions on Law Applicable to All Issues in a Case. — Where instructions asked for embrace the law as applicable to all the issues in a case, and are not limited to such rules as would enable the jury to determine the questions of fact submitted to them, they are properly refused. Farmers' Bank v. Butterfield, 100 Ind. 230; Stickel v. Bender, 37 Kan. 457.

In Georgia all equity cases are tried by special jury under the direction of the court as to the law. Brown v. Burke, 22 Ga. 574; Mounce v. Byars, 11 Ga. 180.

2. Morris v. Morris, 28 Mo. 114; Brown v. Burke, 22 Ga. 574; Mounce v. Byars, 11 Ga. 180.

4. Robinson v. Dryden, 118 Mo. 539. See infra, XI. 17. Directing Verdict.

Instruction as to Competency of Finding for Plaintiff or Defendant on Different Issues. — It is not the province of the trial judge to determine that issues sent from a court of equity are so improperly framed, as not to be distinct from each other. All that the jury have to do is to return a finding on each issue. The consequences resulting from their findings are to be determined by the court of equity. Therefore, an instruction to the jury by the trial judge "that it was competent for them to find either of the issues for the plaintiffs, and the other for the defendants," was correct. Bell v. Woodward, 47 N. H. 539.

5. Henry v. Davis, 7 W. Va. 715; Branger v. Chevalier, 9 Cal. 353.

And where the instructions asked for had no relevancy to the question submitted to the jury, there could be no error in refusing them, however pertinent they might have been to other portions of the case. Carlisle v. Foster, 10 Ohio St. 198.

Substitution of New Issues by Instruction. — On a bill to set aside a deed and contract on the ground of incompetency of the maker to transact business, and fraudulent and false representations, the court of equity, on submission of issues to a jury, instructed them that if either of these grounds were sustained, the allegations of the bill, that said instruments were wrongfully and improperly obtained, were made out. It was held that this instruction submitted to the jury issues different from those which they were impaneled to try, but that this was in no sense a substitution of new issues, and was only an instruction properly informing the jury as to what facts must be found

17. Directing Verdict. — The verdict of the jury on issues in an equity case being advisory, the chancellor may accept or reject the verdict and enter a decree according to his own determination;¹ or, what is equivalent to this, he may, when he presides at the trial of the issue, direct a particular verdict upon the facts, as being in accord with his own conclusions.²

18. Verdict — In General. — The general manner of arriving at and rendering a verdict on equitable issues, the formalities thereof, etc., are substantially the same as in an ordinary verdict in a court of law.³ The verdict should be sensible, consistent, to entitle the complainant to a verdict upon the issues already submitted. Hoobler v. Hoobler, 128 Ill. 645.

As to New Trial and Appeal on questions pertaining to instructions, see infra, XIV. 8. b. In Instructions or Directions; and infra, XVI. Appellate Review.

Even under Conflicting Evidence the court may reject verdicts, general or special, and enter a decree in accordance with its own determination; or, as an equivalent, direct the rendition of a particular verdict. Galvin v. Palmer, 113 Cal. 46.

General Instead of Special Direction. — If, in exercising the power of submitting certain issues to a jury, in a suit on notes and to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent, under Indiana Rev. Stat. (1881), § 409, the court directs a verdict as to the notes instead of directing a verdict on particular questions of facts concerning the notes, and the court disregards the verdict, the error will be harmless. Hornbrook v. Powell, 146 Ind. 39.

Judge of Law Court Directing Verdict. — Following the intimation in Birdsall v. Patterson, 51 N. Y. 43, upon the trial of special issues from the special term (substituted for feigned issues in equity cases), at the close of the evidence the judge at circuit directed the jury to find a verdict on all such issues in favor of the defendant. This was held not error in a case where the evidence was so overwhelmingly in favor of the defendants as to have made it the duty of the court to set aside any verdict which might have been rendered thereon for the plaintiff. Browne v. Murdock, 12

Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 360. But see McKinley v. Lamb, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 199, where it was said that it seems hardly consistent with the issues sent to the jury to be tried, that the court should direct a verdict on matters of law, and that such questions should be submitted to the court on an application for judgment on the verdict.

Issue to Determine Right to Subrogation. — In the trial of an issue instituted to determine a right to subrogation the court may direct the jury to find a verdict for the co-defendants of one by whom money was borrowed from a third person, and who agreed that the suit might be marked to the use of the lender, and then admit the declarations and admissions of the borrowing defendant for the purpose of binding him. An issue to determine a right to subrogation, like an issue out of chancery, is subject to the control and intended to inform the conscience of the court. Eddy v. Reed, 4 Phila. (Pa.) 116.

For General Practice Relating to Directing Verdict, see article DIRECTING VERDICT, vol. 6, p. 667.

3. See article VERDICT.

Finding on the Evidence. — As in other cases, the jury on determining issues are to find on the evidence submitted, which they will weigh and then render their verdict according to the preponderance thereof. Smith v. Newton, 84 Ill. 14.

In Michigan all objections to the competency, materiality, or relevancy of the testimony offered must be reserved until the final hearing. But all the evidence being admitted on the trial of the issue, if the verdict is contrary to the weight of such of the testimony as was properly admitted, the chancellor must give the verdict no effect whatever.

Reconsideration of Verdict. — Until the verdict rendered on the issues has been and certain;¹ responsive to the issues, and a full and exhaustive finding on all of them.² It must not be too broad, nor contain findings on questions not submitted to the jury.³ Where special issues in an equity case have been submitted, each issue must be passed on separately; the verdict must be special and not general.⁴

received, the jury may retire to further consider it. This may be done of its own accord, or the court may send it back for such reconsideration. Hageman v. Cantrell, 40 N. Y. Super. Ct. 381.

Issues Found for Both Parties. — Where two issues are sent from a court of equity, the jury may find one issue for the plaintiff and the other for the defendant, without any inconsistency. Bell v. Woodward, 47 N. H. 539.

Verdict on Issue in Action at Law. — In an action to recover a tract of land described by metes and bounds, an issue was submitted by consent to the jury as to the ownership of the lands. The verdict was for the plaintiff for the "land in dispute." This was held to be sufficiently certain and definite. Robertson v. Sharpton, 17 S. Car. 592.

2. Duff v. Duff, 71 Cal. 514, affirmed 87 Cal. 104; Warring v. Freear, 64 Cal. 54. See also Marshall v. Marshall, 18 W. Va. 395; Parker v. Laney, 58 N. Y. 469, modifying 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 590. See infra, XIV. 7. b. Verdict Not Responsive or Determinative of Issue.

The Jury Cannot Find on One Issue and Disagree on Another; the findings must be altogether or not at all, and the court will not receive the finding of the jury on one issue and discharge the jury as to the other. Berry v. Wallen, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 186.

Sufficient Finding on All Issues. — The issues submitted were: (1) Whether the contract was made with the agent of the state as stated in the bill. (2) If so, was the complainant hindered or prevented from performing his contract by the acts of the agent of the state? (3) And if both these are found affirmatively, then the jury shall assess the damages (if any) that may be due and owing the complainant. The verdict was: "We, the jury, find for the complainant and assess his damages at eleven thousand two hundred dollars." It was held that this was a substantial finding on all the issues, as the jury were not authorized to find damages unless they found the other issues for the complainant. State v. Farish, 23 Miss. 483.

Affirmative Finding Sufficiently Responsive. — Where the complaint alleged that by agreement at the time of executing a deed absolute on its face, it was received as security merely, a feigned issue presenting the question whether the deed was a mortgage having been found in the affirmative, is substantially the same as a finding that the agreement set out in the complaint had been made. Brown v. Clifford, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 46.

3. See Bailey v. Sewell, 1 Russ. 239; Brink v. Morton, 2 Iowa 416. Infra, XIV. 7. c. Verdict Too Broad.

Finding Being a Conclusion of Law. — It is the province of a jury, in an equity suit, to try only such disputed facts as the parties, by the bill and answer, submit to them; but a finding that a sale is justifiable is a conclusion of law not submitted to them. Jones v. Zollicoffer, Term (N. Car.) 212.

4. Martin v. Kline, 157 Pa. St. 473; Cobb v. Burns, 61 Pa. St. 281; Dunn v. Dunn, 11 Mich. 284; Warring v. Freear, 64 Cal. 54; Ivy v. Clawson, 14 S. Car. 272; Ketchum v. Brazil Block Coal Co., 88 Ind. 515.

In Georgia "special verdicts of the facts only may be found by the jury,*on the trial of chancery cases, when requested by counsel before the beginning of the introduction of the evidence, and the presiding judge when charging the jury, shall inform them what issues of fact are made by the pleadings in the cause. Before the passage of the Act of 1876, on this subject, the issues made by the pleadings were all tried and passed on by the jury, as now, but summed up in a general verdict; and these, from the number involved, often greatly confused the jury and made them return verdicts unsatisfactory to the chancellor, applicable only to part of the case, and frequently the result of a compromise of the special and material facts to reach a general finding. By this act a change is made, only to the extent of changing the finding from a general verdict on all the issues made by the pleading, to a special verdict on each issue separately, and which greatly aids both chancellor and jury in the proper adjudication of the rights of the parties." Carter v. Lipsey, 70 Ga. 422.

19. Exceptions and Objections — In General — Where and to What Taken. — It is often proper and necessary that exceptions and objections should be taken to irregular procedure on the trial, such as the improper admission or rejection of evidence, or other erroneous rulings of the presiding judge, etc.¹

If the Jury Cannot Agree upon the special issues, but can agree to a general verdict, and both counsel consent to withdraw the special issues, the court commits no error in receiving a general verdict. Mitchell v. Hockett, 25 Cal. 539.

Where Both Special Findings and a General Verdict are returned for the same party, it is harmless error for the court to accept the special findings and render judgment on them. McCauley v. McKeig, 8 Mont. 389.

If the Court Disregards the Verdict, the error in directing a verdict generally instead of specially will be harmless. Hornbrook v. Powell, 146 Ind. 39.

Exceptions of Fact to an Auditor's Report must be passed upon seriatim. It will not be sufficient to find an aggregate amount for one party, nor to find generally for the other. Mayo v. Keaton, 78 Ga. 125.

Issue as to Compensation for Release of Right to Lands. — Under the Pennsylvania Act of 1810, authorizing an issue to decide a controversy between parties as to the share to which they were entitled of a sum of money, to be paid by the commonwealth in consideration of their having released their rights to several tracts of land within certain townships, etc., the jury in an issue so framed were to find generally for the plaintiff or defendant, and the verdict finding the sums due to each party was bad. Moore v. Albright, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 231.

1. Pence v. Garrison, 93 Ind. 345.

Exceptions Might Influence Chancellor. — Exceptions to rulings are proper to be taken and noted; for upon a review of the whole case the mind of the chancellor may be influenced by them. Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 247.

Exceptions to Directions. — Exceptions to wrong or improper directions given by the court should be taken in the trial court. Dodge v. Griswold, 12 N. H. 573.

To Misconduct of Jury. — Likewise to the misconduct of the jury. Dodge v. Griswold, 12 N. H. 573.

To Consideration of Improper Evidence. — So, too, exceptions should be taken to the admission of improper evidence. Dodge v. Griswold, 12 N. H. 573.

If the testimony given upon the trial of issues in a chancery case is not objected to at the time, it is competent and will not be considered on appeal. Minton v. Pickens, 24 S. Car. 592.

Where the court directing issues in an equity case to be submitted to a jury transmits certain evidence to the trial court with the order that it may there be used on the trial of the issue, such order does not preclude exceptions to any particular portion of the testimony as irrelevant, improper, or inadmissible for any cause. Such exception must still be taken at the trial court, or it will be considered as waived. Dodge v. Griswold, 12 N. H. 573.

To Be Taken by Party. — It is not the proper province of the trial court to take exceptions to any particular part of the testimony sent down from the court directing the issues, because such exceptions are left for the party to take in the progress of the trial. Dodge v. Griswold, 12 N. H. 573.

In Michigan the practice differs from that generally used, for whether the evidence is taken before a circuit court commissioner or in open court, all objections made to the competency, materiality, or relevancy of the testimony offered must be reserved until the final hearing. "This avoids sending the case back because of the rejection of evidence which the circuit or appellate court might consider proper and material. That such practice enables counsel, sometimes in good faith, to offer and introduce evidence clearly incompetent, there is no doubt; but as the evidence must be passed upon by the court no harm is done, except in the matter of costs, which the court can generally so regulate as to prevent any very great abuse of the practice." Collins v. Jackson, 43 Mich. 561.

Transmission of Exceptions. — These exceptions should be certified, or brought to the attention of the court which ordered the issues,¹ and it appears are to be used there, as upon a motion for a new trial.²

Bills of Exceptions. — But a bill of exceptions as such cannot usually be taken, or if taken can be used only on a motion for a new trial to the court ordering the issues. This general rule, however, is not universal in its application.³

20. Dismissal of Complaint. — An order dismissing the complaint cannot properly be made upon the trial before a jury of issues settled in an equitable action. The verdict in such case must be rendered and the cause afterwards heard by the equity court, where the proper disposition will be made of the case.⁴

21. Nonsuit. — The judge of a court of law to which issues out of chancery are sent for trial cannot order a nonsuit; he has no authority but to try the case and report back the result.⁵

Failure to Bring to Attention of Court. — If these exceptions are not brought to the notice and attention of the court which sends the issues, no objections can be raised in an appellate court. Brockett v. Brockett, 3 How. (U. S.) 691.

"We do not understand that the plaintiffs asked leave to discontinue their whole case, but that they might have an order of nonsuit as to the issue ordered, leaving the proceeding in equity still standing. We do not see how the judge could have granted a nonsuit as to the issue, which was not an independent action, 'but 'an issue from chancery,' ordered at the instance of the plaintiffs themselves, to determine (in a manner they had a right to demand) a question which had arisen in the progress of the cause. We suppose the plaintiffs might have brought an original action at law, or possibly may have obtained an order in their case, that an action at law should be brought; but, probably for some good reason, they chose not to do so. They instituted on the equity side of the court an action for partition, and obtained an order out of chancery for the issue. This being the case, the officer who tried that issue sitting as a law judge, could not grant a nonsuit, for that would have been precisely equivalent to revoking the order. He had no right to do that, or refuse to try the issue, or to grant a new trial or nonsuit. He had no option but to try the case and report back the result." Woolfolk v. Graniteville Mfg. Co., 22 S. Car. 335.

Nonsuit Where Trial Is Had on Pleadings. — The New York Code Civ. Pro., § 1544, provides that an issue of fact joined in an action for partition is triable by jury, and that unless the court directs the issues to be stated as prescribed in section 970 of the Code, the issues may be tried upon pleadings. Under these provisions the special term directed that the cause be placed on the calendar of the Circuit Court for trial, "and that upon the trial the issues proper to be submitted to a jury be so submitted under the direction of the court as to form and substance." At the trial, the plaintiff producing no evidence, a nonsuit was directed. The Appellate Court held that by the order of the special term the court declined to submit specific issues to be tried, and only directed that the issues proper to be submitted should be so submitted. There being no evidence to support the plaintiff's allegations, there were no issues proper to be submitted to the jury, and the direction of nonsuit was properly made. *Tucker v. Judgment on Law Side by Judge Who Directed Issues. — A judgment entered on the law side of the court to which issues from the chancery side have been sent, on a verdict rendered on such issues, is erroneous, and upon proper motion should be set aside; and this though the judge on the chancery side who ordered the issues be the same one who on the law side tried them. Sloan v. Westfield, 11 S. Car. 445.

22. Judgment. — On issues submitted to be tried before a jury of another court, or on the law side of the same court, the judge presiding can give no judgment upon the finding of the jury. His duty is to certify the record of the finding to the court which directed the issue, which court, on further hearing of the case, will enter the appropriate judgment or decree.¹

Motion in Arrest of Judgment on Mistrial. — Where there has been a mistrial on an issue directed by a court of equity, there can be no motion in arrest of judgment, such a motion being incompatible with the nature and object of the trial of issues in aid of a court of equity. Mosley v. Davies, 11 Price 162.

Judgment on Issues from Probate and Orphans' Court. — In Pond v. Pond, 10 Cal. 495, the following points were decided: The Probate Court of California does not lose its jurisdiction over a subject by directing an issue; the finding of the jury being merely in aid of its jurisdiction, by settling the facts and thus furnishing the material upon which it is to act. After the finding the functions of the district judge cease. He is not in the exercise of an original, but of a special jurisdiction, given him for a special and limited purpose. He is to certify back his findings, which then become a part of the record of the Probate Court. There is no authorization of a withdrawal of any portion of the jurisdiction of the Probate Court, by giving a power to the District Court of rendering a final decision or judgment upon the findings.

The Orphans' Court in Pennsylvania directed an issue to the Common Pleas, for which purpose the parties entered an amicable action by agreement. The jury found for the plaintiff, and the court entered judgment according to the verdict. On appeal, it was held that this judgment was erroneous because contrary to the agreement of the parties. Matters in issue were to be found, and a certificate transmitted to the Orphans' Court, which would then proceed in the case. The judgment was reversed. Finney v. Moore, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 345.

2. As to general methods of procuring the transmission of proceedings and evidence, see infra, XIV. 4. c. Procurement of Proceedings and Evidence.

Certificate Where Same Judge Directs and Tries Issues. — Where the judge who directs the issue from the chancery side also superintends the trial on the law side of the court, a certificate of the result by the judge presiding on the trial to himself as chancellor was held to be unnecessary, although it would have been more formal if the verdict had been certified by the clerk to the equity side. Wilson v. Riddle, 123 U. S. 608.

2. Verdict. — The verdict or findings of the jury are, perhaps, the most important part of the certificate, and should, of course, be returned.¹

And since the union of jurisdictions of law and chancery in Virginia, though it might be well to observe this formality, it would be going too far to hold that the order made by the judge on the chancery side of his court in a cause there depending, setting aside the verdict, which he thought contrary to the evidence, should be reversed because he had not observed the formality of certifying to himself that it was against the evidence. Lavell v. Gold, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 473.

Certificate of Record. — The finding of a jury on an issue sent from a court of chancery to be tried in a court of law must appear by the record certified by the judge. A certificate of the judge made from memory will not be sufficient. The chancellor having proceeded to a decree on such a judge's certificate, the decree was reversed by the appellate court, and a trial de novo on the issues ordered, which, when regularly certified to the chancellor, was to be the basis of the decree. Baker v. King, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 402.

To What Court Return Is Made. — Where an issue is awarded by the Chancery Court in New Jersey, to be made up in the Supreme Court, and is tried by the Circuit Court, the record and postea, together with the usual certificate of the judge that he is satisfied with the verdict, should be returned to the Chancery Court, and not to the Supreme Court. Where an action at law is directed by a court of equity, the postea must be returned to the court in which the suit at law is instituted; the cause is there, and motions for a new trial and all other proceedings are to be had in that court; but when an issue is directed by the court of equity, the postea must be returned to the court which ordered the issue, and all subsequent proceedings are in that court. Trenton Banking Co. v. Rossell, 2 N. J. Eq. 492.

A judge in directing a jury trial of issues of fact in an action for partition, to which the parties are entitled by New York Code Civ. Pro., § 1544, should not direct in the order that the verdict be certified to himself. It should require that the verdict be certified to the Supreme Court at special term, in order that the proper decree may be entered upon the issues as determined by the verdict. Cuthbert v. Ives, (Supreme Ct.) 20 N. Y. Supp. 469.

Proper Term for Return and Recordation of Certificate. — The evidence and rulings of the court on the trial of an issue which are certified by the court as authentic and correctly reported, and which the decree cites to be the basis of its findings, will not be disregarded by the appellate court because they were not certified and spread on the record at the same time at which the decree was entered. The subsequent certificate merely ascertains and verifies what proceedings took place before the court at the time of the hearing, and although they should regularly be on the record at the same time, there is no rule of chancery practice or procedure which forbids the making of a nunc pro tunc order to supply such omission, to prevent injustice. Kerr v. South Park Com'rs, 117 U. S. 379.

Probate Courts. — In California, when the place of trial of an issue of fact in the Probate Court is changed to another county, the clerk of the court to which the case is sent should certify a transcript of the proceedings and result of the trial back to the court from which the cause was sent, on entering appropriate judgment. People v. Almy, 46 Cal. 246.

1. Sloan v. Westfield, 11 S. Car. 445.

Probate and Orphans' Court. — This is true likewise in the Probate and Orphans' Court. Pond v. Pond, 10 Cal. 495; Finney v. Moore, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 345.

The Result of Each Finding should be so certified, if several issues have been submitted. Cobb v. Burns, 61 Pa. St. 281.

Any Special Circumstances Found by the jury which may be material in taking action on the verdict should be indorsed on the postea, and the order of the court will often direct this to be done. White v. Lisle, 3 Swanst. 342.

Character of Certificate of Verdict. — The whole of the proceedings at the trial of an issue out of chancery, so far as they are spread on the record, properly constitute a certificate of the verdict, and of course become a part of the chancery record, and though, to save costs, the verdict only is certified

3. Statement of Trial. — And the judge should not only send the postea, but go further and furnish to the court a fair statement of the trial.¹

4. Evidence. — The character of the evidence given upon the trial, with notes thereon, should usually be stated.² But it is not necessary that the judge should recite the evidence itself.³

5. Exceptions and Objections. — The return should also show the exceptions and objections taken on the trial.⁴

6. Instructions. — If required, the instructions given to the jury are also to be certified.⁵

in practice, yet in strictness the whole record should be so. But were it otherwise, still the order to certify the verdict necessarily implies that everything should be certified which was spread upon the record as part of the proceedings at the trial. Watkins v. Carlton, 10 Leigh (Va.) 586.

Verdict Sufficiently Identified in Transcript. — The verdict of the jury on issues submitted to them in an equity case is sufficiently identified as such, so as to be considered on appeal, when the clerk of the trial court certifies "the foregoing to be a full, true, and correct transcript of the issues submitted, and answers thereto, and verdict of the jury thereon, in the foregoing entitled action, as appears from the original thereof on file in my office, and of the whole thereof." Such verdict is a part of the judgment roll, and will be presumed to have been properly recorded and entered by the clerk in the minutes of the court, as required by California Code Civ. Pro., § 628. Goldman v. Rogers, 85 Cal. 574.

1. Bassett v. Johnson, 2 N. J. Eq. 161.

3. Bassett v. Johnson, 2 N. J. Eq. 154.

Where Same Judge Directs and Tries the Issues. — It is true that the evidence is usually certified along with the verdict. This is done so that the chancellor may know whether the verdict accords with the weight of evidence, and to enable him to determine whether he ought to disregard the finding or send the issue to another jury. But where, as is generally the case in Pennsylvania, the issue is tried before the same judge who sits as chancellor, this reason for certifying the evidence does not exist, and it is no valid objection, therefore, to a decree, that the evidence was not returned with the verdict to the equity side of the court. Saylor's Appeal, 39 Pa. St. 495.

Evidence as Part of Record — New Trial. — In Duff v. Fisher, 15 Cal. 379, it was said that the verdict or findings of the jury are certified to the chancellor, without evidence, which is not called for except upon expressed application, with a view to a motion for a new trial. The evidence upon such issues taken before a different tribunal forms no part of the record before the chancellor, for, after the findings are objected to, the evidence is presented upon a statement prepared for that purpose and brought before the court on motion for new trial. The evidence then becomes a part of the record, and the order made on the motion a subject of review on appeal.

Certifying Evidence Instead of Facts Proved. — Where there is a conflict of evidence on the trial of an issue out of chancery, it is sufficient if the court finds it his duty, on the trial, to certify the evidence instead of the facts proved. Nease v. Capehart, 15 W. Va. 299.

4. Bassett v. Johnson, 2 N. J. Eq. 154; Sloan v. Westfield, 11 S. Car. 445; Dodge v. Griswold, 12 N. H. 573; Brockett v. Brockett, 3 How. (U. S.) 691. See supra, XI. 19. Exceptions and Objections.

Exceptions Included in Certificate of Verdict. — Where exceptions are taken on the trial of an issue out of chancery and made part of the record, the certificate of the verdict by the court of law is a certificate of the whole record, and exceptions, though not expressly certified, become a part of the chancery record. Johnson v. Harmon, 94 U. S. 371; Watkins v. Carlton, 10 Leigh (Va.) 586.

5. Bassett v. Johnson, 2 N. J. Eq. 154; Watkins v. Carlton, 10 Leigh (Va.) 586.

7. Satisfaction or Dissatisfaction of Judge. — It is proper also for the judge to certify whether or not he is satisfied with the verdict of the jury.¹

8. Statement Not Sufficiently Full. — If the statement made by the judge is not sufficiently full, an additional statement will be ordered; but this will not be a cause for granting a new trial on the issue.²

9. Weight and Effect. — See infra, XIII. 3. b. Certificate of Judge; XIV. 8. a. In Admission or Rejection of Evidence.

XIII. PROCEEDINGS IN COURT DIRECTING ISSUE AFTER TRIAL THEREOF — 1. Further Hearing and Trial — a. GENERALLY. — Where issues out of chancery have been submitted to a jury, whether such submission was a matter of discretion or of right, there must be a further hearing, after the return of the findings, before the court which ordered the issues, and further action by it on the whole case.³

1. Ross v. Pynes, 3 Call (Va.) 568.

Manner of Showing Dissatisfaction. — If the court before which the issues in chancery are tried is dissatisfied with the verdict, the dissatisfaction must be certified on the record by the court; or, if refused, it should be put on the record by bill of exceptions; it is not to be supplied by affidavit, especially of counsel in the cause. Stannard v. Graves, 2 Call (Va.) 369.

2. Bassett v. Johnson, 2 N. J. Eq. 154.

3. An order directing an issue is an interlocutory order, made to enlighten the conscience of the judge, in which the consideration of further questions in the cause is reserved until after the trial of the issue. Ivy v. Clawson, 14 S. Car. 272.

"But, as before stated, there was no trial of the cause. It is an equity suit in which a trial cannot be had elsewhere than in that branch of the court having cognizance of such causes. Although it is such a suit, yet the parties are entitled as matter of right to a trial by jury of the issues; but that does not change the inherent nature of the action, nor authorize the justice at the trial term to dismiss the complaint or make a final determination of the action. The issues may be tried upon the pleadings or on framed issues, but it is a trial of issues only, preliminary to the hearing of the cause, after which the final judgment can be directed at the special term and nowhere else. The verdict is binding on the court at special term as the trial by jury is a matter of right; but before any judgment can be pronounced the court at special term must act on the whole case. Nothing has been changed in this regard by the abolition of the circuit courts and the institution of the new judicial system." Toch v. Toch, 9 N. Y. App. Div. 502.

Verdict Alone as Evidence in Collateral Suit. — In a Federal case the court, per Story, J., in deciding against the admissibility as evidence of a verdict on issues submitted to a jury, said: "No hearing was ever had by the court subsequently to the verdict, and no decree rendered upon the merits of the case. A verdict upon an issue ordered by a court of equity is in no just sense final upon the facts it finds, or binding upon the judgment of the court. * * * But it can never be known what effect is given to the verdict, or whether any is given to it, until the subsequent hearing upon the merits, and a decree rendered thereon by the court. Under such circumstances, it is plain to me that this verdict is not admissible in evidence, for it has not been sanctioned or established by the court, and without such sanction it is no proof of any fact but that it was actually rendered in the case, and not proof of the facts found thereby." Allen v. Blunt, 3 Story (U. S.) 742.

Hearing and Judgment at Chambers. — On consent of parties that the hearing of a motion for a new trial of issues submitted in an equity case be had at chambers, a judge in South Carolina, after refusing the motion, has no power to proceed to render final judgment in

b. WHERE VERDICT DOES NOT COVER ENTIRE CASE. — Where the questions submitted to the jury do not embrace all the issues of fact in the case,¹ or where the verdict does not respond to all the issues submitted, it becomes the duty of the court, if it adopts the verdict, to proceed and find upon the evidence which has been given, and any other which may be offered by the parties, as to the issues not covered by the verdict.²

c. WHERE VERDICT COVERS ENTIRE CASE. — If, however, the questions submitted to and answered by the jury, together with the facts admitted by the pleadings, cover the whole case, so that no further facts need be proved, no further trial is necessary, and motion may at once be made for judgment.³

the cause in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant not consenting thereto. The appellate court, in setting aside such a judgment, held that there was no statutory authorization for its rendition at chambers, and that notwithstanding the verdict the parties had a right to have a hearing before the court upon the merits. Grierson v. Harmon, 16 S. Car. 618.

Where the Issue Is Not Tried. — When the cause is brought on for further hearing, and it appears that the parties have not gone to trial on the issue directed, the court will still direct it to be tried, if the grounds upon which is based the failure to try the issue are unsatisfactory to the court. Legh v. Holloway, 8 Ves. Jr. 213.

1. Stahl v. Gotzenberger, 45 Wis. 121; Goldsborough v. Turner, 67 N. Car. 403.

Failure to Try Remaining Issues. — The trial court, having taken the verdict of a jury upon two of the issues presented by the pleadings in an equity case, adopted the verdict and rendered judgment upon the whole case without trying the remaining issues; this was held to be erroneous. Leeper v. Lyon, 68 Mo. 216.

Trial of Untried Issues. — Where the court submits several issues to a jury, reserving for itself or a referee the determination of the remaining issues, and upon the coming in of the verdict, orders judgment entered "upon the findings of the jury," but does not try the other issues, a party will be entitled to a trial of the untried issues upon motion made therefor, but not to a new trial of the issues tried by the jury. Cobb v. Cole, 44 Minn. 278.

Judgment Entered by Clerk Where Other Issues Remain for Trial. — The court may properly set aside a judgment entered upon the verdict of a jury in an equity case, where it appears that it had been inadvertently entered by the clerk, without judicial sanction, when other issues of fact remained to be determined by the court, and the court may proceed with the trial of such issues, and may adopt the advisory verdict of the jury upon the special matter therein involved, making findings as to the other issues, and have a new judgment entered. Cummings v. Ross, 90 Cal. 68.

2. Warring v. Freear, 64 Cal. 54.

Where All the Issues in the case are ordered to be tried by a jury, and the verdict does not determine all the material facts, it has been held that the court should not find additional facts, but should set aside the verdict as defective and grant a new trial. Parker v. Laney, 58 N. Y. 469.

3. Hammond v. Morgan, 101 N. Y. 186, 3 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 438, reversing 51 N. Y. Super. Ct. 472.

It is only where the question tried before the jury does not really embrace the determination of all the issues of fact in the action, that the law requires a further trial by the court of remaining issues. Acker v. Leland, 109 N. Y. 5.

And it was held that where in an equitable action the order of the court directed all the issues of fact in the case to be tried by a jury, as authorized by the New York Code of Procedure, § 254, they must all be so tried, while the order remained in force, and therefore, while the order so remained, it was irregular for the trial judge to find additional facts upon which, together with the verdict, judgment should be given. If the order directed the trial of some specific question of fact only, such a proceeding would be proper, but not where all the issues.

d. SETTING DOWN FOR FURTHER HEARING. — For the purposes of the further hearing the cause should be set down within a reasonable time.¹

2. Final Decision by Court — a. NECESSITY OF — In General. — The verdict of the jury does not end the trial, and the final completion thereof must be established by a decision of the court.²

Issues of Right. — If the submission of the issues to a jury was a matter of right in the parties, the verdict is conclusive and the decision of the court must be in accordance therewith.³

were submitted. Parker v. Laney, 58 N. Y. 469. See Browne v. McClintock, 22 W. R. 521, L. R. 6 H. L. 434.

Motion for Judgment. — In Indiana a motion for judgment upon the answers of the jury to interrogatories was held to have been properly overruled, as such a motion is unauthorized on the trial of an equitable cause by the court. Such motions are only entertained when a cause is tried, and a general verdict, with answers to interrogatories, is returned by the jury. Farmers' Bank v. Butterfield, 100 Ind. 229.

In New York, if the verdict and facts admitted by the pleadings cover the whole case, motion may at once be made for judgment. Upon such motion both parties have a right to be heard, and the court may order judgment upon the case as then made, or may set aside the findings of the jury, or use some of them, and it may allow either party to give further evidence. So, if the motion for judgment be not at once made, it must be brought in upon motion so that both parties may be heard. But if the findings of the jury, together with the facts admitted in the pleadings, do not cover the whole case, and other issues remain to be tried, or other facts requisite for equitable relief remain to be proved, then the case must be regularly brought to a hearing before the court, when it may or may not adopt the findings of the jury. Hammond v. Morgan, 101 N. Y. 186, 3 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 438, reversing 51 N. Y. Super. Ct. 472.

1. English Practice. — By the early English practice, the cause was not to be set down for further hearing until after the first four days of the term next after the trial had elapsed, in order that the party against whom the verdict was found might have an opportunity of moving for a new trial. 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. (1st Am. ed.) 758; 1

Newl. Ch. Pr. 357. This practice was afterwards changed and the cause allowed to be set down as soon as the trial had taken place. Rogers v. Nowill, 6 Hare 338.

Stay of Hearing Pending Appeal. — The further hearing is not to be stayed because of the pendency of an appeal from an order refusing a new trial. M'Gregor v. Topham, 4 Hare 162.

2. Bates v. Gage, 49 Cal. 126; Pence v. Garrison, 93 Ind. 353; Gadsden v. Whaley, 9 S. Car. 147; Reno v. Moss, 120 Pa. St. 49; Vermilyea v. Palmer, 52 N. Y. 475; Mandeville v. Avery, (Supreme Ct.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 745; MacNaughton v. Osgood, 114 N. Y. 574 [citing Acker v. Leland, 109 N. Y. 5]; Carroll v. Deimel, 95 N. Y. 252.

The New York Code Civ. Pro., §§ 972, 1003, has not changed the former practice nor made the verdict of the jury the final determination of the issue. The enactment that questions not submitted to a jury must be tried by the court is not a declaration that the questions submitted to the jury must not be tried by the court. It simply provides in what manner the issues not tried shall be tried, leaving the issues which have been tried to be determined the same as formerly, upon the final hearing. Learned v. Tillotson, 97 N. Y. 6.

Whether the Jury's Findings Are or Are Not Controlling, they must be approved by the court before they are made the basis of a judgment, and, if approved, they become, by adoption, the findings of the court. Vermilyea v. Palmer, 52 N. Y. 474.

Judgment Interlocutory. — A judgment on an issue out of chancery is interlocutory. Woodside v. Woodside, 21 Ill. 207.

Adoption of Verdict Equivalent to Finding, see infra, XIII. 5. Adopting Verdict.

3. See infra, XIII. 6. 1. Where Issues Are of Right with the Parties.

Issues Discretionary. — If the submission was discretionary with the court, the verdict is merely an aid, and the judge alone is responsible for the final determination of the facts; it is his exclusive jurisdiction to find them and make the decree.¹

Duty to Determine According to Convictions. — Notwithstanding the verdict, the duty still devolves upon the court to determine the case according to its own convictions of the law and the facts, in doing which it may accept or reject the conclusions reached by the jury.²

Pro Forma Decree or Judgment. — It follows that a pro forma decree or judgment rendered on the verdict of the jury alone, without any independent finding by the court, is erroneous.³

1. The Judge Can Only Delegate to the Jury the authority to find facts, in such manner as to make him finally responsible for their decision. Creighton v. Hershfield, 1 Mont. 639. See also Fisher v. Carroll, 1 Jones L. (N. Car.) 27.

A Chancellor Cannot Surrender to a Jury, even if he would, his high prerogative and duty of deciding upon facts according to the convictions of his conscience. Baker v. Williamson, 4 Pa. St. 469.

The Judge's Findings Are Decisive of the Facts, whether he was or was not aided in his findings by the answers returned by the jury. Koons v. Blanton, 129 Ind. 393. Therefore, where the court finds on the issues differently from the jury, the finding of the court determines the fact. Freeman v. Stephenson, 63 Cal. 499.

Decree Without Regard to Verdict. — A suit in equity is properly tried by the court that bases the judgment and decree upon the pleadings, evidence, and proceedings in the case, in accordance with its convictions, and without any regard to the finding of the jury upon questions that were submitted to aid the conscience of the court or any other considerations. Gallagher v. Basey, 1 Mont. 457.

Jury's Finding Set Aside. — If one of the parties asks the court to make additional findings, such party cannot complain, though the subsequent findings of the court set aside a part of the special findings of the jury, when the judgment is based upon the findings of the court and those of the jury approved by the court. Frank v. Jones, 39 Kan. 236.

2. Guild v. Hull, 127 Ill. 523; Grierson v. Harmon, 16 S. Car. 619; Brownlee v. Martin, 21 S. Car. 402; Adickes v. Lowry, 12 S. Car. 97; Charlotte, etc., R. Co. v. Earle, 12 S. Car. 53; Talbott v. Sandifer, 27 S. Car. 623; Gadsden v. Whaley, 9 S. Car. 147; Ivy v. Clawson, 14 S. Car. 272; Gill v. Rice, 13 Wis. 549; Stahl v. Gotzenberger, 45 Wis. 121. See infra, XIII. 3, 4, 5, and 6.

The trial of the issues is simply for the information of the court, and may be wholly disregarded, but whether disregarded or not, it is necessary that the court make its own finding; inasmuch that, were all the jury proceedings stricken from the record, there would still be a complete trial, finding, and judgment of the court left. Garard v. Garard, 135 Ind. 15, where this course was pursued, and the verdict of the jury was treated as advisory and a source of information, but the court was careful to make its own finding, viz.: "And the court, being advised of and concerning the verdict of the jury in this cause, does now find for the plaintiff; and that the plaintiff recover of the defendant," etc.

Findings by Court and Waiver Thereof. — In an equity case where issues have been submitted, express findings by the court are necessary unless they are waived. But the absence of such findings in the record on appeal is not a fatal defect, unless it affirmatively appears that they were not waived. Richardson v. Eureka, 110 Cal. 441. See Warring v. Freear, 64 Cal. 54.

Error Cured by Court's Finding. — Error in overruling an objection to a proposed issue is cured, if the court, notwithstanding the answer of the jury, finds all the facts connected with such issue. Graham v. Stewart, 68 Cal. 374.

b. UPON WHAT EVIDENCE AND FACTS. — In arriving at his decision the judge should consider all the evidence, facts, and circumstances in the cause, and render judgment according to his conclusion.¹

Hull, 127 Ill. 523; Rynerson v. Allison, 28 S. Car. 81; Brownlee v. Martin, 21 S. Car. 402; Adickes v. Lowry, 12 S. Car. 97; Charlotte, etc., R. Co. v. Earle, 12 S. Car. 53.

Presumption as to Consideration of Evidence. — Where the decree is based on the verdict alone, there can be no presumption that the chancellor acts upon proper evidence only and rejects that which is incompetent, and in such a case the decree will be reversed if the finding of the jury was the result of or was influenced by the admission of improper evidence, or by improper instructions. In such a case the effect is the same as though the decree was based on improper evidence, or a misconception of the law. Thus where the chancellor submits to a jury the questions of the sanity of the maker of a deed, and undue influence in procuring the execution of the deed, and the jury finds that the maker was not sane, and that there was undue influence, and the chancellor enters a decree setting aside the deed "pro forma and pro forma only," this will preclude the idea or presumption that he acted upon his own judgment of the truth of the allegations upon which the deed was set aside, and will be error, as the parties are entitled to the judgment of the chancellor and his consideration of the evidence, notwithstanding the verdict. Guild v. Hull, 127 Ill. 523.

Extent of the Rule. — Whether the judge hearing the cause on the equity side of the court be the one who tried the issues on the law side, or whether he only heard the evidence on the equity calendar, with the verdict of the jury and the evidence on which it rests certified to him by the law judge who tried the issues, in neither case can he enter up judgment on the verdict or order it to be done, but must grant or refuse the relief demanded according to his own findings of fact and conclusions of law upon a full hearing of the whole cause on the merits, on the equity side of the court. Peake v. Peake, 17 S. Car. 421.

Error in Rendering Judgment on Verdict Cured by Subsequent Decree. — Where a judgment in a chancery case was rendered in accordance with the verdict upon issues submitted, without any independent decision, but subsequently a decree was filed in which the judge gave a statement of the case and his own conclusions upon the facts, and specifically directed judgment for the defendants, it was held that the former error was thereby cured. Shaw v. Cunningham, 16 S. Car. 631.

1. McGan v. O'Neil, 5 Colo. 58; Guild v. Hull, 127 Ill. 523; Ivy v. Clawson, 14 S. Car. 272; Peake v. Peake, 17 S. Car. 421.

Evidence Heard by or Certified to Judge. — The judge's decision is to be made according to the conclusion he may have arrived at upon hearing the evidence, if he presided at the trial, or may form from a careful review thereof, if certified to him by the judge who did preside at the trial of the issues. Peake v. Peake, 17 S. Car. 421.

Presumption that Court Acted on Evidence. — Where it does not appear in any legitimate form that the court adopted the facts as found by the jury, if the finding is general, the presumption must be in favor of the action of the court — that it acted on the evidence in the cause and made such finding as it thought the evidence required. Sheets v. Bray, 125 Ind. 36.

Recourse to Record for Evidence and Facts. — In West Virginia it was held that after a verdict is rendered upon an issue properly directed, the court cannot look at the record for the facts submitted in the issue, nor to the facts or evidence certified upon the trial of the issue, but must accept the verdict of the jury for such facts, unless under the rules governing courts of equity in such cases it should set aside the verdict and grant a new trial. The verdict must be responsive to the issue directed, otherwise the court has not before it the very facts to ascertain which the issue was directed. Marshall v. Marshall, 18 W. Va. 395; Nease v. Capehart, 15 W. Va. 299.

Evidence on Trial as Evidence on Final Hearing. — It has been held that the evidence used on the trial of an issue is not before the chancellor upon the final hearing except collaterally, to be used in determining what weight was to be given the verdict. Prudden v. Lindsley, 29 N. J. Eq. 615, where the court said: "Doubtless the chancellor might properly order the proofs offered before the jury to stand as testimony in the cause, but it would not be fair to the party who had secured the verdict to regard those proofs as comprising all the evidence which he should be allowed to produce as to a matter of fact not actually disputed in the forum of litigation. * * * If the verdict is not warranted by the proofs upon all the points which should have been decided in the issue, then the parties should be permitted to bring in their evidence on the points not so settled, the verdict standing as conclusive upon the other points, or the verdict should be set aside and all points be thrown open to controversy. But if the verdict be vacated, then the cause is not ripe for decision upon disputed questions of fact."

Further or Additional Evidence. — Whether or not the judge will hear further or additional evidence than that given on the trial of the issues, is a matter of discretion with him. He may do so, or he may predicate his findings on the evidence already given.¹

Car. 421, where it was said that while it would be an unusual thing for the judge to hear further testimony upon the issues passed upon by the jury, yet he has the power to do so, and for good and satisfactory cause would do so.

In West Virginia it was held that generally the depositions of witnesses taken after the verdict on issues submitted out of chancery, to which there is no sufficient objection, and before the decree, cannot be read upon the final hearing of the cause, because if that principle were admitted it would be a needless waste of time to try an issue, and would be a premium put upon the grossest negligence. *Nease v. In Indiana it is not necessary for the court to state its findings upon the issues except generally, for the plaintiff or defendant, unless one of the parties requests the court to state the facts in writing and the conclusions of law thereon. Pence v. Garrison, 93 Ind. 345.

It is too late, after a general finding has been announced by the court, for a party to request it to make a special finding. Brundage v. Deschler, 131 Ind. 174.

In Sheets v. Bray, 125 Ind. 35, an action for partition of land, the court, of its own motion, called a jury, to whom it submitted questions of fact for the information of the court. Upon return of the answers the court prepared what purported to be a special finding of the facts proven in the cause, and its conclusions of law thereon. It did not appear that the court made such

(3) Filing and Exceptions. — The decision is to be filed and the defeated party is at liberty to file exceptions to it.¹

3. General Effect of Verdict and Certificate of Judge — a. VERDICT. — In an Equity Case, where issues have, in the discretion of the court, been submitted to a jury, whether under the original chancery practice or under the codes, the verdict is for the enlightenment and information of the conscience of the court, and it is merely advisory to and in no way binding or conclusive on the court.²

In Wisconsin the court should file its findings on the whole case, and direct the entry of the appropriate judgment. Stahl v. Gotzenberger, 45 Wis. 121.

In Indiana, under Rev. Stat. (1881), § 409, providing for the submission of issues in cases which were of exclusive equitable jurisdiction prior to 1852, the verdict of the jury is simply advisory, which the court may or may not use in rendering the final decree. Lake Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Griffin, 92 Ind. 487; Evans v. Nealis, 87 Ind. 262; Pence v. Garrison, 93 Ind. 345; Ikerd v. Beavers, 106 Ind. 483; Garard v. Garard, 135 Ind. 15; *Ariden v. Where, in a case of equitable jurisdiction, the trial is not proceeded with under the provision above mentioned, but the case is tried by jury as an ordinary action at law, the verdict will be treated as binding and conclusive in all respects as in a law case; and especially will this be so if an unsuccessful effort was made to secure a trial as in chancery. Summers v. Great-house, 87 Ind. 205; Dawson v. Shirk, 102 Ind. 188.

In Kentucky, according to the earlier cases, the verdict on issues was held not to bind the chancellor. Whittemore v. Stout, 3 Dana (Ky.) 427; Moore v. Payne, 7 Dana (Ky.) 380. A later case held, however, that where a verdict was found and a motion for new trial overruled, the court could not, at a subsequent trial, disregard the verdict and find the issue the other way, since the same weight should be given the verdict of a jury on an issue in equity as in an action at law. Moore v. Shepherd, 2 Duv. (Ky.) 132. But still later, the court said that the jury having been impaneled only to help the chancellor to a right conclusion, their finding was not entitled to the

In Massachusetts it has been held in two cases that the verdict of the jury upon the issue is conclusive, unless set aside for good cause shown. In the first case cited below the court considered the jury trial upon the issues a constitutional right. In the second the submission was deemed discretionary, but it was said that the court, in the exercise of its discretion, should not order such a trial unless it was satisfied that the issue could be better tried by a jury. Franklin v. Greene, 2 Allen (Mass.) 519; Ross v. New England Mut. Ins. Co., 120 Mass. 117.

In Michigan the verdict on an issue upon the legality of a marriage, under How. Annot. Stat., § 6622, is advisory. Maier v. Lillibridge, (Mich. 1897) 70 N. W. Rep. 1032.

In Montana the statute regulating proceedings in civil cases, and declaring that an issue of fact shall be tried by a jury unless a jury trial be waived, does not apply to equity cases, and does not require the court in such a case to regard the findings of the jury as conclusive, though no application to vacate the findings be made by the parties, if in its judgment they are not supported by the evidence. Mantle v. Noyes, 5 Mont. 287; Black v. Black, 5 Mont. 15; Beck v. Beck, 6 Mont. 318; Basey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 680, a case governed by the Montana law.

In New York neither the Code of Procedure nor the Code of Civil Procedure made any change in the long-established rule that the office of a verdict on issues submitted in an equity case is advisory, and simply to inform the conscience of the court, and that the court on the final hearing is not precluded from rejecting it, and finding the fact for itself. Learned v. Tillotson, 48 N. Y. Super. Ct. 239, affirming 97 N. Y. 1; Vermilyea v. Palmer, 52 N. Y. 471; Wallace v. American Linen Thread Co., 16 Hun (N. Y.) 404; Madison University v. White, 25 Hun (N. rule. It must be observed that this and the following sections deal for the most part with the effect of the verdict, where the submission of the issues is discretionary with the court, reserving for a subsequent section its effect where the submission is of right in the parties.¹

In Probate and Orphans' Courts. — Whether the verdict on issues sent from a Probate, Orphans', or like court is advisory or conclusive, depends on the various statutory provisions of the several states and the nature of the proceeding.²

Brooklyn El. R. Co., 46 Hun (N. Y.) 530; Hatch v. Peugnet, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 189; Jones v. Stewart, 7 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 164; Mandeville v. Avery, (Supreme Ct.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 745; Brown v. Clifford, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 46.

The case of Griffith v. Griffith, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 315, holding that the verdict of the jury, upon issues framed under the Act of 1838, was conclusive on the court unless a new trial of the issues was granted by the court of law in which such issues were tried, was decided under the special provisions of that act, afterwards repealed, and does not now express the law.

In Tennessee when the chancellor, on his own motion, calls a jury and submits a question of fact to them, the rule that their verdict is only advisory still remains in force, and he may disregard it and find the facts for himself. This does not apply to issues made up and submitted to a jury upon application of either party, as provided for in the code. London v. London, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 1; Orgain v. Ramsey, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 580; Timmons v. Garrison, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 148; Lowe v. Traynor, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 633.

In West Virginia the discretion to submit issues is somewhat limited, and it is held that when an issue is properly directed and regularly tried and a verdict is rendered by the jury, unless there is some sufficient ground for setting it aside it must be considered conclusive of the facts submitted; the chancellor's conscience must be satisfied by such a verdict, and he must render a decree in accordance therewith. Setzer v. Beale, 19 W. Va. 289; Nease v. Capehart, 15 W. Va. 299; Hickman v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 30 W. Va. 296.

In Wisconsin the verdict is advisory. Gill v. Rice, 13 Wis. 549; Law v. Grant, 37 Wis. 548. The Wisconsin Act of 1867, c. 79, prohibiting courts from trying an action to foreclose a mortgage without the intervention of a jury, where there are issues of fact, except upon the written stipulation of the parties, and giving the verdict the same force and effect as in actions at common law, was declared unconstitutional. Callanan v. Judd, 23 Wis. 343. Wisconsin Rev. Stat., § 3323, gives either party to an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien the right to demand a jury. But the court is not thereby prevented from submitting issues on its own motion and for its information, and when it does this the verdict is still advisory. Huse v. Washburn, 59 Wis. 414.

1. For the effect of the verdict where issues are of right, see infra, XIII. 6.
l. Where Issues Are of Right with the Parties.

2. Pennsylvania. — In Wills's Appeal, 22 Pa. St. 325, it was held that where it becomes necessary to settle a doubtful fact in a controversy involving a guardian's account, in the Orphans' Court, and an issue is submitted, the verdict ought to be treated as conclusive unless produced by the illegal admission or improper rejection of evidence. But the verdict is not entitled to rule the decree if the findings were on immaterial facts; if the jury was influenced by erroneous rulings on evidence, or by misdirections on the law; or if the verdict was palpably founded on insufficient evidence. If the verdict is open to these objections it should be disregarded.

Under the Act of March 29, 1832, the verdict on issues directed is held to be no more binding on the Orphans' Court than is an auditor's report. Whether the finding is by the verdict of a jury or by the report of an auditor, the court is bound to revise it, and is responsible for its rectitude. Thompson's Appeal, 103 Pa. St. 606.

In Actions at Law. — Where special issues are submitted to a jury, in an action at law, a conclusive effect will generally attach to the verdict.¹

b. CERTIFICATE OF JUDGE. — The certificate of the judge before whom the issue out of chancery was tried, where the trial was had before another court than the one ordering it, expressing his satisfaction or dissatisfaction with the result, is advisory and not conclusive, and though it is entitled to great weight and will ordinarily be followed, yet the matter is within the sound discretion of the court, which will be governed by the certificate or not as it deems best.²

4. General Power of Court over Verdict and Findings. — Since, therefore, the verdict in an equity case is merely advisory, the court may approve the findings in whole or in part, may qualify or alter any of them, may disregard them wholly or partly and find the facts itself, or it may set aside the verdict and grant a new trial.³

5. Adopting Verdict — In General. — Though the verdict of the jury is not binding on the court, yet it is entitled to much weight and respect and will ordinarily be adopted as the basis of its final decision, if the court is satisfied that at the trial justice has, upon the whole, been substantially done.⁴

Particular Cases. — Thus in such equity causes as interpleader and intervention, divorces, injunctions, suits on mortgages, and the like, or where, though the cause is legal, equitable issues are involved and the court in its discretion has submitted issues to a jury, the verdict is advisory and may be set aside or disregarded and the facts determined by the court.¹

1. Interpleader and Intervention. — In Indiana interpleader is a case of exclusive equitable jurisdiction, in view of Rev. Stat. (1881), § 409, and the verdict of a jury upon questions of fact may be disregarded by the court and a decree may be made according to its own judgment. Ketcham v. Brazil Block Coal Co., 88 Ind. 515.

So in New York, where, in an action at law, a third party claiming to own the cause of action has been brought in and substituted as a defendant, and the original defendant has been discharged upon payment into court of the amount of the demand, in pursuance of the provision of Code Civ. Pro., § 820, the action thereafter becomes an equitable one, triable by the court, and neither party has a right to trial by jury. Where, therefore, in such an action, the trial judge impaneled a jury and submitted to them a single question of fact, but disregarded their finding and found the fact to the contrary, it was held that judgment entered pursuant to the finding and conclusions of the court was regular. Clark v. Mosher, 107 N. Y. 118, 13 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 215, reversing (Supreme Ct.) 5 N. Y. St. Rep. 84.

Upon an intervention in a railway foreclosure proceeding for the recovery of damages against the receiver of the road for personal injury suffered by an employee, the verdict on an issue submitted as to the amount of damages, if there was any liability, is merely advisory, and the court may set it aside and dismiss the intervening petition. Kohn v. McNulta, 147 U. S. 238.

Divorce Cases. — In Montana, under Rev. Stat., § 508, divorce cases are of chancery jurisdiction; the decree must proceed from the chancellor, and verdicts or special findings may be approved or disregarded, as the conscience of the chancellor may demand. Beck v. Beck, 6 Mont. 318. So where issues have been referred to a jury upon the question of alimony and custody of children, the chancellor is not bound by the findings, but may set them aside and make other findings, and decree accordingly. Black v. Black, 5 Mont. 15.

In Colorado, under the general statutes, where a divorce case is tried by issues framed for a jury, one party charging upon the other the commission of a matrimonial offense which the other party denies, the verdict of the jury is entitled to great weight, notwithstanding the statutory provision that like process, practice, and proceedings shall be had in such cases as are usual to other cases in chancery; but to be binding upon the court, such verdict must be sustained by evidence and instructions free from substantial error. Gilpin v. Gilpin, 12 Colo. 504.

Suit for Injunction. — An injunction proceeding is one of exclusive equitable jurisdiction, and the court is not

b. WITH OR WITHOUT NEW TRIAL. — In disregarding or setting aside the verdict, the court may order a new trial and resubmit the issue,¹ but it is not necessary to do this, and the final determination may be made without either formally setting aside the verdict or granting a new trial.²

c. PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE NOT REPORTED. — Where there is no report of the testimony submitted to the jury, nor of the questions of law raised on the trial, nor any report of the case bound by the finding of the jury. Whitlock v. Consumers' Gas Trust Co., 127 Ind. 62; Platter v. Elkhart County, 103 Ind. 360. And where, in such a suit, an issue is framed and submitted to a jury as to the amount of damages, the verdict will be set aside or disregarded if deemed unwarranted, and the amount of compensation determined by the court in its discretion. Carpenter v. Easton, etc., R. Co., 26 N. J. Eq. 168.

Mortgage — Foreclosure. — The verdict of a jury on issues submitted in suits to foreclose mortgages is advisory and may be set aside or disregarded by the court in rendering its final decree. Johnson v. Powers, 65 Cal. 179; Rariden v. Rariden, 129 Ind. 288; Farrin v. Cox, 47 Ill. App. 273; Moors v. Sanford, 2 Kan. App. 243; Carroll v. Deimel, 95 N. Y. 252; Gleason v. Hamilton, 64 Hun (N. A Petition to Enforce a Mechanics' Lien is, in Illinois, governed by the same rules as a chancery case, and is in effect a chancery proceeding, and the object of a verdict of the jury is to advise the conscience of the chancellor. He has the same power to change or reject the finding of the jury in the case as he has where an issue of fact is submitted to a jury in a chancery case and verdict returned. Sharkey v. Miller, 69 Ill. 560.

In Montana this proceeding is equitable in its character, and the court may set the verdict aside and render a contrary judgment. O'Rourke v. Butte Lodge No. 14, (Mont. 1897) 48 Pac. Rep. 1106.

Equitable and Legal Issues in Same Action—Equitable Issues in Legal Action. — Where, in a legal action, there are equitable issues which, in the discretion of the court, have been submitted to a jury, the verdict on these equitable issues is merely advisory, and may be disregarded or set aside by the court in arriving at its final determination. Haggin v. Raymond, 67 Cal. 302; Wallace v. Maples, 79 Cal. 434; Tabor v. Sullivan, 12 Colo. 136; Adiekes v. Lowry, 12 S. Car. 97.

Legal Issues in Equitable Action. — But the foregoing principle does not apply where there is a distinct legal issue in an equitable action. In that case a jury trial of the legal issues is a matter of right, the verdict is conclusive and not merely advisory, and the court cannot disregard or set it aside and make findings contrary thereto without a motion for and the granting of a new trial. Hughes v. Dunlap, 91 Cal. 385; Hill v. Phillips, 87 Ky. 169.

Missouri. — Snell v. Harrison, 83 Mo. 651, disapproving Cochran v. Moss, 10 Mo. 416.

Pennsylvania. — Baker v. Williamson, 4 Pa. St. 456.

United States. — Idaho, etc., Land Imp. Co. v. Bradbury, 132 U. S. 509.

In an Action at Law, where special issues have been submitted to the jury, and the court, upon hearing the evidence, makes findings upon all of the issues contrary to the verdict, this is in effect a setting aside and vacating of the verdict, and it becomes the duty of the court to order a new trial by jury, and it has no power to determine the cause without so doing. Montgomery v. Sayre, 91 Cal. 206.

by the presiding judge, the court may properly refuse to receive the verdict and may find the facts in a contrary manner.¹

d. COURT DISSATISFIED WITH VERDICT GENERALLY. — Where the court is dissatisfied with the verdict, it is not only at liberty to set it aside or disregard it, but it is its plain duty to do so and to proceed with the cause in such manner as to accomplish complete justice between the parties.²

e. VERDICT AGAINST EVIDENCE OR WEIGHT THEREOF. — Where the chancellor considers that the verdict is unsupported by the evidence, he may disregard it and render judgment according to his own view thereof.³ And if the verdict is clearly against the weight of evidence, the court should and will set aside or disregard it, either granting a new trial or rendering a decree on the evidence heard on the trial of the issue.⁴

1. Small v. Small, 16 S. Car. 70. But it is held that when no certified exceptions are brought before the court, and the record does not show what evidence was adduced on the trial before the jury, the appellate court cannot say that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree non obstante veredicto, because the finding of the jury is not sustained by the depositions on file in the cause. Adams v. Munter, 74 Ala. 339.

2. Abbott v. Monti, 3 Colo. 562; Milk v. Moore, 39 Ill. 588.

Finding Clearly Wrong. — Where the chancellor believes the finding is clearly wrong, it is his duty to disregard it and have the issue retried, or proceed with the trial of the cause and find the issue himself. Meeker v. Meeker, 75 Ill. 260.

Conscience Not Satisfied. — If, on reflection and due consideration of the verdict and entire evidence in the cause, the chancellor is of the opinion that the verdict is one which in conscience ought not to be adopted, he is not concluded by it, but it becomes his plain duty to disregard it. Snell v. Harrison, 83 Mo. 651. The chancellor will examine the notes of evidence by the judge who tried the cause, listen to explanation of counsel, and at last, if his conscience is not satisfied, will decide the cause according to his own conviction, disregarding the verdict of the jury. Baker v. Williamson, 4 Pa. St. 469.

Verdict Contrary to Rules of Chancery. — The chancellor has the right, and it is even his duty, to disregard the verdict and find the facts contrary thereto, if the same was not authorized by the rules governing courts of chancery.

Lowe v. Traynor, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 633.

Showing Cause for Setting Aside. — It has been decided that where in a chancery case the verdict is supported by the proofs, it is the duty of the judge setting aside such verdict to show of record the cause therefor, and if this be not done, the proceeding will be held to be erroneous. Owens v. Owens, Hard. (Ky.) 162.

3. Caldwell v. Brown, 56 Kan. 566; Moors v. Sanford, 2 Kan. App. 243; Upton v. Hugos, 7 S. Dak. 476; Lowe v. Traynor, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 633.

In Montana the provision in the statutes of 1867 regulating proceedings in civil cases, declaring that "an issue of fact shall be tried by a jury, unless a jury trial is waived," did not require the court, in an equity case, to regard the findings of a jury called in a case as conclusive, though no application to vacate the findings were made by the parties, if, in its judgment, they were not supported by the evidence. Basey v. Gallagher, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 670, controlled by the Montana law.

4. London v. London, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 1; Smith v. Newton, 84 Ill. 14.

The verdict may be disregarded and issue found by the chancellor, as, in his judgment, the weight of evidence may justify, although the verdict is not so clearly against the weight of evidence as would be cause for new trial in an action at law. So the court in an equity suit in which the issue of sanity is sent to a jury may set aside the verdict, although it is not so manifestly contrary to the evidence as to raise the presumption of fraud or undue prejudice where the presumption,

f. VERDICT UNCERTAIN. — If the court is satisfied upon the facts in the case, a verdict need not be set aside for uncertainty, but the court may act independently of it.¹

g. GENERAL INSTEAD OF SPECIAL VERDICT. — Where special issues in an equity case have been submitted to a jury, a general verdict is not determinative of the issues involved, and the court should not receive it or render judgment thereon.² Such a general verdict is to be set aside or disregarded, and the facts must be found by the court.³

h. DISAGREEMENT OF JURY. — Where there are several issues of fact in an equity case the jury cannot find one issue and disagree as to the other; the finding must be altogether or not at all.

before inquest found, is in favor of sanity. Stevens v. Shannahan, 160 Ill. 330.

Verdict on Conflicting Evidence. — It has been held that where the evidence is irreconcilably conflicting, the court will not interfere with the finding unless it is seen to be clearly wrong. Smith v. Newton, 84 Ill. 14. See also Steptoe v. Flood, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 323.

But in Missouri it is said that if the evidence is conflicting, the verdict should not be taken as the basis of the decree. Luce v. Barnum, 19 Mo. App. 359.

1. Humphreys v. Blevins, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 178.

2. McLaughlin v. Del Re, 64 Cal. 472; Learned v. Castle, 67 Cal. 41, holding that if a judgment be rendered on such a verdict it must be reversed for a failure of the court to find upon the issues. To the same effect see Hulley v. Chedic, 22 Nev. 127. See also supra, XI. 18. Verdict.

General Verdict Where Court Makes Separate Findings. — Where the issues are submitted to the court and a jury is called to inform the court as to the facts merely, if without objection the court takes the advice of the jury by means of a general verdict, making its own finding and treating such verdict as advisory merely, it is held not reversible error. Ikerd v. Beavers, 106 Ind. 483 [citing Farmers' Bank v. Butterfield, 100 Ind. 229; Evans v. Nealis, 87 Ind. 262].

General Verdict by Consent. — Where special issues are submitted to a jury and they announce that they cannot agree upon them, but can agree upon a general verdict, and by consent of counsel on both sides the special issues are withdrawn and a general verdict is received by the court, no error is committed. Mitchell v. Hockett, 25 Cal. 539.

Both General and Special Verdicts Returned. — The fact that in an equity case the jury are allowed to return a general verdict is harmless error, where they also return special findings for the same party which are accepted by the court, and on which judgment is rendered. McCauley v. McKeig, 8 Mont. 389.

Special Finding Immaterial. — Where a question for a special finding which, answered either way, would be immaterial to the issues in view of the evidence, was submitted to a jury and such question was not answered, there was no prejudicial error in rendering a judgment on a general verdict without previously requiring a finding on the question indicated. Doane v. Smith Bros. Loan, etc., Co., (Neb. 1897) 70 N. W. Rep. 909, affirming Towne v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., (Neb. 1897) 70 N. W. Rep. 402.

3. Wingate v. Ferris, 50 Cal. 105; Brandt v. Wheaton, 52 Cal. 430.

General Verdict on Issues Irregularly Framed. — Where the jury renders a general verdict upon issues which have been irregularly framed because some of them were upon matters not put in issue by the pleadings or evidence at the hearing, it is to be disregarded. Dunn v. Dunn, 11 Mich. 284.

Verdicts Both General and Special. — Where the jury has found upon the special issue submitted to them, and has also returned a general verdict, the court may set aside the general verdict and substitute its own findings of fact for the special finding of the jury. Idaho, etc., Land Imp. Co. v. Bradbury, 132 U. S. 509. See also Warring v. Freear, 64 Cal. 54.

The court will not receive the finding of a jury upon one issue and discharge it as to the other.¹ And where a jury impaneled to try an issue either in a law or in an equity court fails to agree thereon, the court may refuse to call another jury and may decide the case on the evidence already heard.²

i. ISSUE IMPROPERLY DIRECTED. — In some of the states, at least, if an issue out of chancery has been improperly directed, it is the duty of the court on the final hearing to disregard the findings of the jury and enter a decree on the merits, and if it does not do this, the error will be corrected by the appellate court.³

j. TIME OF SETTING ASIDE, ETC. — The time within which the court must act on the verdict, in disregarding or setting it aside, does not appear to be governed by any fixed rules.⁴

k. REINSTATEMENT OF VERDICT SET ASIDE. — Where the court has set aside the verdict on the issues submitted, another judge holding a subsequent term cannot set aside the order of the judge at the previous term and reinstate the verdict.⁵

l. WHERE ISSUES ARE OF RIGHT WITH THE PARTIES. — In some of the states, by statutory or constitutional provisions, the trial by jury of all or some of the issues in equity cases is not dependent on the discretion of the court, but is a matter of right in the parties, and in such cases the verdict is conclusive and of the same effect as a verdict in an action at law. Therefore, unless set aside and a new trial granted, it must stand as the determination of the facts, and the court cannot disregard it and find according to its own conclusions.⁶

1. Berry v. Wallen, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 186.

2. Keithley v. Keithley, 85 Mo. 217; Adams v. Soule, 33 Vt. 538.

3. Wise v. Lamb, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 294; McFarland v. Douglass, 11 W. Va. 637; Jarrett v. Jarrett, 11 W. Va. 584; Anderson v. Cranmer, 11 W. Va. 562; Vangilder v. Hoffman, 22 W. Va. 1.

4. Thus the fact that no action was taken by the court on the verdict for three months after each party had moved for judgment on it was held no objection to the action of the court in then disregarding it and hearing additional evidence, it not appearing what was the cause of the delay, or that any objection thereto was urged by the appellants. Clavey v. Lord, 87 Cal. 413.

So where the court was dissatisfied with a verdict rendered on an issue awarded on the opening of a judgment, it was held within the court's power to set aside the verdict and a judgment thereon, though two years had elapsed from the rendition and en-

5. Laveil v. Gold, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 473.

6. Massachusetts. — In Franklin v. Greene, 2 Allen (Mass.) 522, it appears that the court considered it a duty imposed by the constitution to allow the parties to submit to a jury all such material facts as were proper to be decided by it, and held that where the verdict was not set aside for good cause shown, it would be regarded as settling the facts in issue conclusively. In Ross v. New England Mut. Ins. Co., 120 Mass. 117, though the court considered the submission of issues discretionary, it stated the effect of the verdict to be as above noticed.

New York. — Where a Jury Trial Is a Matter of Right, the court has no power, even in an equity case, when the issues have been tried in the exercise of that right, to disregard the verdict, as in the case of special issues on a question not triable by jury as of right. Mellen v. Mellen, 27 Abb. N.

XIV. NEW TRIAL — 1. In General. — As previously seen, the court, on setting aside or disregarding a verdict on discretionary issues, is not obliged to grant a new trial, but may, without doing

Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 99; 21 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 301.

Action for Partition. — While partition is an equitable action, yet the statute in New York has given the absolute right to a trial thereof by jury, and the verdict of the jury cannot be disregarded. Mellen v. Mellen, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 99, 21 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 301; Jones v. Jones, 120 N. Y. 589.

Determining Value of Property or Damages. — The Code Civ. Pro., § 970, providing for a trial by jury in a case where the party, as a matter of right, is entitled to an order stating specific questions of fact for trial by jury and providing that the findings of the jury upon each question so stated is conclusive in the action unless the verdict is set aside or a new trial is granted, was, by Laws of 1891, c. 208, amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Where one or more questions arise on the pleadings as to the value of property, or as to the damages which a party may be entitled to recover, either party may apply, upon notice, at any time to the court for an order directing all such issues or questions to be distinctly and plainly stated for trial accordingly [by jury]." Under this provision the court, considering that the parties had a right to have the issues submitted to a jury, accordingly so submitted them, and no objection was made by either party. On the coming in of the verdict the court refused to abide by it, and, ignoring the verdict, rendered judgment in hostility to it. It was held on appeal that although the amendment above quoted did not apply to cases of a purely equitable nature, and hence that the order of the court submitting the issues was erroneous, yet since the court had decided that the defendant had a right to have these questions stated for trial by jury, and no objection had been made by the plaintiff, the verdict rendered was conclusive until set aside. Danziger v. Metropolitan El. R. Co., 81 Hun (N. Y.) 5.

Tennessee — Early Chancery Practice. — Formerly, in Tennessee, the issues were submitted for the information of the chancellor, and if he was not satisfied with the verdict he might set it aside and proceed to decree as if no issues had been submitted to the jury. See Humphreys v. Blevins, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 178; Orgain v. Ramsey, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 581; London v. London, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 1.

Issue of Right in Chancery Suits Under Statutes. — Under the legislation of 1846 and the provisions of the code, §§ 4465, 4469, either party to a suit in chancery may have a jury to try issues of fact in the case, the finding of the jury to have the same force and effect as on a trial at law. Under these enactments the verdict upon a material issue has all the weight of a verdict at law, errors in the proceeding must be corrected in the same mode, and the court cannot disregard the verdict and decree against it without setting it aside and granting a new trial. James v. Brooks, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 150; Morris v. Swaney, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 591; Memphis First Nat. Bank v. Oldham, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 718.

Verdict on Immaterial Issues. — But if the party applying for a jury trial fails to submit proper issues the verdict will necessarily be immaterial, and the verdict upon immaterial issues may be set aside and a decree pronounced as if no trial by jury had been had. Gass v. Mason, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 508; Ragsdale v. Gossett, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 740; Nelson v. Claybrooke, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 687. See Memphis First Nat. Bank v. Oldham, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 720.

Submission on Chancellor's Own Motion. — And if the chancellor upon his own motion submits issues to a jury the effect of the verdict is advisory, as it was prior to the code, and may be disregarded. Lowe v. Traynor, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 633. See supra, XIII. 3. a. Verdict.

Virginia — Issue to Determine Usury on Bill Not Requiring Discovery. — Code of Virginia of 1860, c. 141, § 10, provides that "upon a bill requiring no discovery of the defendant, but praying an injunction to prevent the sale of property conveyed to secure the repayment of a sum of money or other thing borrowed at usurious interest, the court shall cause an issue to be made and tried at its bar by a jury, whether or no so, proceed to a final determination of the case. It may, however, and often does order the issues to be tried anew, where it sees fit.¹

the transaction be usurious," etc. Such an issue is not a mere incident to the suit as an ordinary issue out of chancery, but is the sole object of the suit. It is not to inform the conscience of the court, but the court is bound to decree according to the verdict, unless for good cause a new trial be granted. It is to be tried in the same manner and the verdict is to have the same effect as if the suit were an action at law to recover a debt alleged to be usurious. Brockenbrough v. Spindle, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 21.

South Carolina. — In Peake v. Peake, 17 S. Car. 421, the court seems not to accept the general doctrine where issues are of right. "If we assume, as contended here, that by the code and the rules of court parties have a right to demand an order for the trial of the issues of fact in an equity case before a jury, I do not find it anywhere laid down that the verdict is conclusive, or that the judge has no right to hear the whole case on the testimony and exercise an original jurisdiction on hearing the whole case, when it is his duty under the constitution and law to render judgment on the law and the facts. Unless the will of the legislature to restrict a circuit judge hearing an equity case as a chancellor to the testimony taken before a jury on the trial of issues at second hand, without seeing the witnesses and without any control over the process by which the testimony was introduced, was expressed in clear and unmistakable language, I would hesitate long before I would adopt such a construction of the code or rules of court. To hold that a circuit judge who hears an equity case after verdict on issues tried by a jury is bound to render a judgment as proposed by the motion now before me would seriously interfere with the jurisdiction conferred on him by the constitution. The motion must, therefore, be refused."

In Montana the general doctrine appears not to obtain, for the court said that even conceding without deciding that under section 250 of the Code Civ. Pro. the parties had a right to demand that the issue of the existence of a co-partnership be submitted to a jury, yet nothing was found in that statute which indicated an intention to change or trench upon the equity functions of the court respecting the finding of the jury on an issue presented to it in an equitable action. Arnold v. Sinclair, 12 Mont. 248.

Divorce Cases. — In Tennessee a party has by statute a right to have the issue of adultery in a divorce case tried by a jury, and it is not competent for the chancellor to disregard the verdict and decide the cause upon his own conclusions of fact. Richmond v. Richmond, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 343.

In Wisconsin, under Rev. Stat., § 2843, the issue of adultery in a divorce case must be tried by a jury unless waived. Hence a verdict on that issue cannot be disregarded and the fact found differently, but, if set aside, a new trial must be ordered. Poertner v. Poertner, 66 Wis. 644.

In New York, under Code Civ. Pro., § 1757, in an action for divorce for adultery, either party is entitled to have that issue tried by jury, and the case is therefore within Code Civ. Pro., § 970, providing that "the finding of the jury upon each issue or question so stated is conclusive in the action, unless the verdict is set aside or a new trial is granted." Carpenter v. Carpenter, (Supreme Ct.) 9 N. Y. Supp. 583. See Whitney v. Whitney, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 585; Lowenthal v. Lowenthal, 92 Hun (N. Y.) 385. This conclusive effect, however, does not necessarily apply to issues in the case other than adultery, and therefore where the court, through a misapprehension of the form of a question, directed the jury to find that the plaintiff had consented to the acts of adultery on the defendant's part, and there was no proof justifying such a finding, the court on the final hearing may disregard such finding and determine the fact according to the truth of the matter. Lowenthal v. Lowenthal, 92 Hun (N. Y.) 385.

Discretion of Court. — The entire matter is within the discretion of the court, to be exercised upon sound principles.¹

2. Upon Application or Ex Mero Motu — Upon Application. — The new trial may be granted on application for that purpose, made by the party dissatisfied.²

Ex Mero Motu. — Or the court may direct it ex mero motu, without any application therefor.³

3. Application or Motion for — a. PROPRIETY AND NECESSITY OF. — If either party is dissatisfied with the findings of fact and desires a review or a new trial thereof, his proper course in most cases is to make application for a new trial to the court which ordered the issues.⁴ If this is not done the appellate court is

3. New York Supreme Court Rule 40, which provides that neither party, where a feigned issue has been tried, shall question the rulings at the final hearing, or subsequently, unless he has moved for a new trial, does not preclude the court, when the case is brought on for final hearing, from rejecting the verdict and ordering a new trial ex mero motu, or from deciding the question of fact for itself. Brown v. Clifford, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 46.

New York. — Under the old code, the remedy for error of the judge at circuit who tried the issues in admitting or rejecting evidence was by motion to the general term for a new trial upon a case. It seems that a bill of exceptions and appeal to the general term were not appropriate remedies. Snell v. Loucks, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 385.

Maryland. — Upon the rendition of the verdict upon issues submitted to a jury by the Circuit Court of Baltimore City, in virtue of section 58, art. 29 of the code, the party against whom it is given, if he thinks it contrary to evidence, has the right to move for a new trial, or proceed to take further testimony. Barth v. Rosenfeld, 36 Md. 605.

Motion for Decree in Conflict with Verdict. — The Code of Colorado requires that when a party objects to a finding of a jury on issues submitted to it in chancery cases, as being against the evidence, a motion for a new trial must be interposed; but it is held that a motion for a decree in conflict with the verdict is sufficient compliance with the code as to the motion for a new trial. Hall v. Linn, 8 Colo. 264.

Motion to Dismiss Bill for Defect of Evidence. — In Missouri, where, in a chancery cause, an issue is tried by a jury, or the court sitting as a jury, if the unsuccessful party wishes the verdict revised he must move for a new trial before the decree is pronounced. A motion to dismiss the bill for defect of evidence will not bring the question before the Supreme Court. Woodson v. McClelland, 4 Mo. 495.

Bills of Exceptions, as such, are not applicable in most cases where the verdict is advisory. The verdict, therefore, can only be set aside on a motion for a new trial, based not on mere errors of the judge, but upon a review of the whole case as submitted to the jury. Barnett v. Montgomery, etc., R. Co., 51 Ala. 555; Mathews v. Forniss, 91 Ala. 157; Barth v. Rosenfeld, 36 Md. 604; Snell v. Loucks, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 385; Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. (U. often precluded from reviewing the case.¹ It is to be observed, however, that the necessity of making this application exists only so far as an appellate court is concerned, since the court directing the issues may direct a new trial ex mero motu, without any application.²

b. WHERE MADE. — According to the former chancery practice, and in those states which substantially follow it, where equity issues have been submitted to a jury, a new trial is to be sought, and motion therefor made, in the court which directed the issues and not in the court which tried them.³

Same Judge Ordering and Trying Issues.

— A motion on the law side of the court for a new trial of an issue out of chancery, upon the ground that there was no evidence to sustain it, is irregular and properly refused. Such motion cannot be granted, and should be made to the chancery side ordering the issue. It makes no difference that by a statute the judge ordering the issue tries the same. Sloan v. Westfield, 11 S. Car. 445, explaining Flinn v. Brown, 6 S. Car. 209.

The Principle on which the motion is made to the court of chancery and not to the court of law is that the former court reserves to itself the review of all that passes at law, and regards the judge's report with a view to determine whether the information collected before the jury, together with what appears upon the record, is sufficient to enable it to proceed satisfactorily. Boote v. Blundell, 19 Ves. Jr. 500.

Resignation of Judge Who Directed Issue. — The application for new trial must be made to the judge who directed the issue; by this is meant the same jurisdiction, although the judge may have resigned. Footner v. Figs, 2 Sim. 319.

Issue Directed at Rolls. — In Pemberton v. Pemberton, 11 Ves. Jr. 50, it was held that where an issue was directed by the Master of the Rolls, a motion for a new trial might be made to the Lord Chancellor. In Bourke v. Rothwell, 2 B. & B. 56, where motion for new trial was refused at the Rolls upon an issue directed by the Master of the Rolls, the Lord Chancellor would not, by way of appeal, entertain a similar application.

Distinction Between Issue and Action at Law. — The distinction between the cases where an issue is directed for the information of the court and an action at law directed to be prosecuted for the settlement of legal rights is to be carefully noted. In the former the application for a new trial is to be made to the court directing the issue; in the latter, to the court in which the trial is had. See Fowkes v. Chadd, 2 Dick. 576; Ex p. Barker, 1 Cox 418; Carstairs v. Stein, 2 Rose 178; Ex p. Kensington, Cooper 96; Hope v. Hope, 10 Beav. 581; Re Horner, 2 Moll. 442. See infra, XVII. Action Directed Instead of Issue.

New Trial by District Court on Issue From Probate Court — California. — In Pond v. Pond, 10 Cal. 500, the point as to the authority of the District Court to grant a new trial did not arise, the question being as to the effect of the decision of the District Court; but the court thought it very questionable whether the District Court could grant a new trial of an issue framed by the Probate Court. In Matter of Bowen, 34 Cal. 687, the court arrived at an opposite conclusion, and in reviewing the case of Pond v. Pond, above cited, said: "We, on the contrary, entertain no doubt that that court [District Court] possesses the requisite power to grant a new trial; and this from the very necessities of the case, for otherwise the party is without remedy in case of misconduct of the jury, accident, sur-

In New York, while the chancery practice was in vogue, this was the rule.¹ But under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, the judge who tries the issue may direct the motion to be made upon his minutes,² or he may direct exceptions to be heard in the first instance before the court at general term.³ But where the judge who presided at the trial of the issues neither entertains a motion for a new trial on his minutes, nor directs exceptions to be heard at the general term, a motion for a new trial can be made only at the term where motion for final judgment is made or the remaining issues of fact are tried, as the case requires.⁴

prise, newly discovered evidence, or insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict."

1. Under the Early Chancery Practice in New York, when a feigned issue was directed by the court of chancery, application for a new trial might be made either to the court of chancery which ordered the issue or to the Supreme Court. Doe v. Roe, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 402, 25; Den v. Fen, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 487. Under the later practice, however, the proper course was to move for the new trial in the court of chancery which ordered the issue. Doe v. Roe, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 216; Doe v. Roe, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 55; Apthorp v. Comstock, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 482; Mulock v. Mulock, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 14. See Snell v. Loucks, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 387, in which the cases are reviewed and the early and modern practice stated.

2. Sufficient Direction for Motion. — Under a rule of the Supreme Court, a motion for a new trial, on issues, could not be made before the judge on the trial, unless he specifically directed that it should be so made. The court, on appeal, said, without formally so holding, that when a judge allowed a motion for a new trial in such case to be made before him on his minutes, without objection by counsel, and the judge did not refuse to hear it, it would hesitate to decide that such action was not tantamount to a direction of the judge that it shall be heard, and did not satisfy the rule. Keck v. Werder, 37 N. Y. Super. Ct. 219.

Appealability of Order Denying Motion for New Trial Made on Minutes of Trial Judge. — The order of a judge at circuit refusing a new trial upon his minutes is not, in a case of trial of special issues in an equity action, appealable; but the defeated party must wait until after the trial of the action at special term, or at least until after the motion at special term for a new trial has been heard. Hatch v. Peugnet, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 189.

The Old Code did not provide for the new trial of issues, but it was settled by the Supreme Court that such motions on issues directed by a special or general term should be made by the party dissatisfied with the decision, directly to the general term, upon a case settled according to the course and practice of the court in other trials. Snell v. Loucks, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 387. See also Brown v. Clifford, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 46.

3. An Action for Divorce is triable by the court, except that by Code Civ. Pro., § 1757, upon the application of either party, the court must, and upon its own motion it may, direct the trial by a jury of the issue of adultery. Therefore, the issue having been tried by jury, the order of the circuit for the hearing of the exceptions at general term, in the first instance, was properly made in accordance with the Code Civ. Pro., § 1003, which extends the provisions of section 1000 to cases in which there has been a trial by jury "of one or more specific questions of fact arising upon the issues in an action triable by the court." And the defendants' exceptions will be allowed or disallowed, and a new trial granted or refused by the general term, in the same manner and with the same effect as if the exception had been heard on a motion for a new trial at special term, under section 999, before the same judge who presided at the trial. Carpenter v. Carpenter, (Supreme Ct.) 9 N. Y. Supp. 583.

Motion at Special Term Preferable. — Under N. Y. Code Civ. Pro., the motion for a new trial of specific questions

c. WHEN MADE — As to Time. — The motion for a new trial must be made within a reasonable time.¹

As to Stage of Proceedings. — In England it was said that the application must in all cases be made before the cause comes on for the further hearing.² In the United States not only may the new trial be moved for at the final hearing, upon the equity reserved,³ but in many of the states, where discretionary issues have been submitted to a jury, the motion is not to be made until the case has been completed by the rendition of the court's final decision upon the verdict and all the facts; for the court may adopt or reject the verdict, and until its final action there is nothing on which to base such a motion.⁴

of fact in an equity case, submitted to a jury, may be made upon the minutes before the judge who presided at such trial, yet the preferable and more usual course is to leave the motion for a new trial to be made at the term when the motion for final judgment shall be made, or the remaining issues of fact tried, upon a case and exceptions as provided in the code. Jones v. Stewart, 7 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 164.

1. Van Alst v. Hunter, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 148.

In Betts v. De Vitre, 15 W. R. 701, there were circumstances under which a defendant was allowed to move for a new trial, although upwards of two years had elapsed since the trial of the issues. In Legard v. Daly, 1 Ves. 192, a new trial was refused on account of the great length of time elapsing between the verdict and the application for a new trial. The time was five and a half years, and the chancellor said that would be an objection even in a court of law. He further observed that although the cause had not been set down upon the equity reserved till lately, it could not be said that the other side should not have applied for a new trial; for perhaps the defendant might have no reason to set it down.

2. 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. (1st Am. ed.) 755; Rogers v. Nowill, 6 Hare 338.

In Atty.-Gen. v. Montgomery, 2 Atk. 378, the chancellor declared that an original motion must be made for a new trial, and that the court would not answer a petition for it where the cause came on upon the equity reserved.

3. Van Alst v. Hunter, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 148; Apthorp v. Comstock, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 482.

4. California — Motion Premature Before Final Decision. — In California the findings of the jury in equity actions are merely advisory, and an application for a new trial is premature if made before the final decision by the court. Gray v. Eaton, 5 Cal. 448; Bates v. Gage, 49 Cal. 126; Spottiswood v. Weir, 66 Cal. 525; Duff v. Duff, 71 Cal. 513, affirmed in 87 Cal. 104.

Time to Give Notice of Motion After Final Decision. — And so it has been held that the ten days allowed to give notice of the motion do not begin to run until the court has either adopted or rejected the findings of the jury. Bates v. Gage, 49 Cal. 126; Warring v. Freear, 64 Cal. 54; Bell v. Marsh, 80 Cal. 414. The rule is that notice of a motion for a new trial must be given within ten days after notice of the filing of the final decision in the case. Where, therefore, no notice of such filing has been given, notice of motion for a new trial is proper, though the time has elapsed, and the party is entitled to be heard on his exceptions on appeal from the refusal of the new trial. Duff v. Duff, 71 Cal. 513, affirmed in 87 Cal. 104.

Rules Applicable to Equitable Defense in Legal Action. — The foregoing rules apply to the trial by jury of an equitable defense to an action at law, upon which special issues are submitted to the jury, if the case is treated by the court and by the parties in all respects as an action in equity, whether properly or improperly. Bell v. Marsh, 80 Cal. 411.

Indiana — Motion for New Trial of Entire Case. — In Indiana the only motion for a new trial in an equity case where issues have been submitted to a jury, the overruling of which may be assigned in the appellate court as error, is one made after the finding of the court and having reference to the former trial as a whole. Where such

d. HOW MADE.—The application for a new trial may in some instances be made upon the minutes of the judge before whom the issues were tried, and in others upon exceptions properly taken.¹

e. NOTICE OF MOTION.—The motion should generally be made upon notice.²

motion is made before final judgment, it presents no question on appeal. Pence v. Garrison, 93 Ind. 345; Ikerd v. Beavers, 106 Ind. 483; Garard v. Garard, 135 Ind. 15.

In Nevada it is held that when the court in the trial of an equity case calls a jury to decide special issues, and the jury also find a general verdict, the presumption is that the court only called the jury as advisory; that until the verdict has been sanctioned by the court it is no proof that it was actually rendered in the case, and that the party against whom the verdict is found is entitled to ten days after the findings are filed by the court in which to give his notice to move for a new trial. Duffy v. Moran, 12 Nev. 94.

New York—Motion for New Trial of Issues Made Before Judgment.—Under N. Y. Code Civ. Pro., § 1003, a motion for a new trial of the issues submitted to a jury in an equity case, made upon a case and exceptions, must be made before judgment; otherwise, the errors are not available on appeal. Chapin v. Thompson, 80 N. Y. 275 [reversing 18 Hun (N. Y.) 446], followed in 23 Hun (N. Y.) 12, affirmed in 89 N. Y. 270.

Motion for New Trial of Action Made After Judgment.—The N. Y. Code Civ. Pro., § 1005, providing for a motion for a new trial after judgment, has reference to a new trial of the action itself, not to a new trial upon the feigned issues which may have been awarded therein. It is, therefore, not inconsistent with section 1003, under which the motion for a new trial upon the issues submitted must be made before judgment. Chapin v. Thompson, 80 N. Y. 275.

1. In New York, under the old code, it was held that the motion to the general term for a new trial of issues sent from the special term to the circuit should be upon a case. Such case, if made to set aside the verdict for an error of law, should contain no more of the evidence than is necessary to raise the question. If made because the verdict was against evidence, it should contain all the evidence given on the trial, or so much thereof as was material. Snell v. Loucks, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 385. Rule 40, Supreme Court Rules, 1874, requires either party feeling aggrieved by the determination of the special issues, and desirous of a new trial on the ground of any error of the judge, or on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence, to make such motion upon a case and exceptions to be served and settled as provided in other cases, except where the judge trying the issues directs such motion to be made upon his minutes. Keck v. Werder, 37 N. Y. Super. Ct. 219; Hegeman v. Cantrell, 40 N. Y. Super. Ct. 386. See supra, XIV. 3. b. Where Made.

2. Hearing on Motion by Party Not Giving Notice.—Where the plaintiffs in equity gave notice of motion for a new trial of the issues, but the defendants gave none, it was held that nevertheless the defendants might be heard in support of the motion. Johnston v. Todd, 5 Beav. 394.

Proceedings and Evidence Must Be Secured.—The party applying for the new trial must secure for the use of the chancellor notes of the proceedings of the trial and the evidence there given. Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 247; Clyde v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 72 Fed. Rep. 121.

Evidence Not Before the Court.—Where the evidence adduced upon the trial of issues out of chancery proceedings in a probate court, under Indiana Rev. Stat. 1843, was not before the court to

b. CONSIDERATION OF EXCEPTIONS. — For this purpose the exceptions taken on the trial and certified back to the court may be considered.¹

c. PROCUREMENT OF PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE. — The party moving for a new trial may have the proceedings and evidence brought before the court, either by having them reported with the verdict, or by moving the court to send to the judge who tried the issues for his notes of trial, or by procuring a statement of the same in some other proper mode.²

d. RECORD OF PROCEEDINGS AND EVIDENCE FOR APPELLATE COURT. — The evidence and proceedings then become a part of which the verdict was returned, a motion to set the verdict aside and grant a new trial was properly refused. Clem v. Durham, 14 Ind. 263.

1. It has been seen that exceptions may properly be taken and certified back to the court for use on the motion for a new trial, and that they must be so certified or brought to the attention of the court. Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 247; Brockett v. Brockett, 3 How. (U. S.) 691. And that, though a bill of exceptions as such has no place in the courts of most of the states, yet if taken it may be used on the motion for the new trial. Johnson v. Harmon, 94 U. S. 371; Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 247; Watkins v. Carlton, 10 Leigh (Va.) 586. See supra, XII. 5. Exceptions and Objections.

In Mississippi it is held that since a verdict upon issues sent to a jury is by statute placed upon the same footing with verdicts rendered in courts of law, if a motion for a new trial be made there must be a bill of exceptions embodying the evidence to enable the appellate court to determine as to the propriety of the action of the chancellor's court. State v. Farish, 23 Miss. 483.

As to certification of the exceptions taken at the trial, see supra, XI. 19. Exceptions and Objections; and XIII. 5. Adopting Verdict.

2. Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 247. As to certifying evidence and proceedings on the trial of issues, see supra, XII. Return of Findings and Proceedings at Trial.

Application for Judge's Notes. — The application to the chancery court for the judge's notes of the proceedings and evidence, on the trial, is ex parte, and not granted as of course, but on a showing that there is reasonable ground for questioning the verdict, and for sending to the judge for his notes. Ex p. Chuck, 3 Mont. & A. 15, nom. Ex p. Church, 2 Dea. 72; Anonymous, 6 Madd. 58; Morris v. Davies, 3 Russ. 318; Hungerford v. Jagoe, 1 Jones & L. 691.

Order for State of Case and History of Trial. — In New Jersey, on motion for a new trial on issues at law, in order to enable the chancellor better to decide whether or not a new trial should be granted, the solicitor of the party applying for the rule was ordered to prepare a state of the case and the history of the trial, and to serve a copy thereof upon the opposite solicitor. It was further ordered that in case said solicitors could not agree upon the state of the case, the points in difference between them should be settled by the judge before whom the feigned issue was tried. When the state of the case was finally agreed upon or settled, it was directed to be filed in the chancery court among the papers in the cause.

the record and go up to the court of appeal if an appeal be taken.¹

5. Where Necessary Objections Were Not Made. — It is oftentimes necessary, in order to save a point, that an objection be interposed at the proper time, and in many cases if this be not done the party cannot obtain relief on a motion for a new trial.²

6. General Principles Governing Granting or Refusing — a. WHERE ISSUES ARE DISCRETIONARY OR OF RIGHT. — The general principles governing the granting of a new trial, where the direction of issues is in the court's discretion, differ in many respects

1. Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 247; Clyde v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 72 Fed. Rep. 121.

2. See supra, XI. 19. Exceptions and Objections.

Objection to Form of Issue. — An issue out of chancery was made up with the concurrence of the parties, the order having the indorsement of the solicitor upon it, no objection or suggestion being made as to the form or substance of the issue. The issue was made up by the counsel of the complainants and was wholly in the handwriting of their solicitor. After the verdict was returned, on motion for a new trial, an objection to the form of the issue was taken. It was held that the objection not having been taken before, its defects were waived. Black v. Lamb, 12 N. J. Eq. 108.

Objection that Issue Not Broad Enough. — On a motion for a new trial of an issue out of chancery, it cannot be objected that the issue was not broad enough, and that it ought to have embraced other inquiries. Bassett v. Johnson, 2 N. J. Eq. 154.

Objection to Depositions Taken. — The proper time and place for excepting to objectionable questions is before the chancery court, and at the time the order is made that depositions taken before a master ought to be read at the trial of the issue. Where objections to testimony are taken before the master they are to be settled by the chancery court, and if they are not renewed at the hearing or when depositions are acted upon by the court they are waived. It is the duty of the counsel, when the court makes an order in reference to depositions, to object to them, or such parts of them as they deem objectionable, and if they fail to do so, then they will not be heard to object on a motion for a new trial. Black v. Lamb, 12 N. J. Eq. 108.

Issue Tried by Justice Before Whom Jury Struck. — On a motion for a new trial, the defendants cannot complain that the issue was tried by the justice before whom the jury was struck if they permitted the jury to be struck and the trial to be had without objection. Bassett v. Johnson, 2 N. J. Eq. 154.

Variance Between Title Claimed and Proved. — If there be no objection to the production of the evidence, or to the claim at the trial, and there is no allegation of surprise, there would seem to be no good reason for ordering a new trial merely because the title proved differed, though radically, from that set up in the answer. Powell v. Mayo, 26 N. J. Eq. 120.

Objection to Counsel's Question and Charge of Court. — When a case in equity was tried on special issues, and a question was propounded by plaintiff's counsel at the conclusion of the argument without notice to the respondent's counsel and was given by the court in his charge, if counsel for respondents desired an opportunity to be heard in argument in respect to such issue he should have asked it, and if he failed to do so a new trial will not be granted on that ground. Macon v. Harris, 75 Ga. 761.

Admission and Exclusion of Evidence — Giving and Refusing Instructions. — In Hulett v. Stockwell, 34 Mo. App. 601, the court said: "The motion for new trial appears to be one framed in general terms, without reference particularly to the cause in which it was filed. It calls attention to errors in admitting and excluding evidence, when no objection or exception of this sort was taken at the trial. It likewise calls attention to errors in giving and refusing instructions offered by plaintiffs and de-from those applicable where the matter is of right with the parties. For the reason that the discretionary submission is the rule, while the submission of right is the exception, the principles controlling the former case have been taken as the basis in the treatment of this question. The differences in the principles and practice, where they exist in the latter case, will be shown in a separate subdivision.¹

b. EQUITABLE AND LEGAL PRINCIPLES. — The general principles regulating the granting or refusing of a new trial, on issues to a jury in an equity case the determination of which is advisory to and for the information of the conscience of the court, are considerably different from those which govern courts of law on the same question, courts of equity not being bound down to the same strict rules as are courts of law.²

fendants when none were in fact offered by either party. After the jury had made their findings on the issues, and before rendering judgment, the court gave an instruction of its own motion, but this is not a matter for reversal in an equity cause."

Symes*, 2 Atk. 319; Faulconberg v. Peirce, Ambl. 210.

Difference Where Issues Are Tried at Bar and at Nisi Prius. — In England it was said that a distinction was formerly taken between trials at bar and at nisi prius, because the latter was subordinate to the other, and not of so solemn a nature; but that this distinction has been done away with and a new trial may be granted after trial at bar as after trial at nisi prius. Reg. v. Ballivos, 1 P. Wms. 207; Richards v. Symes, 2 Atk. 319.

"This court [of chancery] directs issues to be tried at law to inform the conscience of the court as to facts doubtful before, and therefore expects in return such a verdict and on such a case as shall satisfy the conscience of the court to found a decree upon; if, therefore, upon any material and weighty reason the verdict is not such as to satisfy the court to found a decree upon, there are several cases in which this court has directed a new trial for further satisfaction, notwithstanding it would not be granted if in a court of common law, because it is diverso intuitu, and because the court proceeds on different grounds." Stace v. Mabbot, 2 Ves. 552.

Where the Inheritance Is in Question. — In England courts of chancery have frequently granted new trials on issues to a jury merely because the inheritance was to be bound by it, for they were in many cases unwilling to bind the rights by a single trial. Stace v. Mabbot, 2 Ves. 552; Cleeve v. Gascoigne, Ambl. 323; Darlington v. Bowes, 1 Eden 270; Locke v. Colman, 2 Myl. & C. 42; Baker v. Hart, 3 Atk. 542. On an issue directed to be tried touching the question of manor, the cause being set down on the equity reserved, and it being alleged to be a cause of value and concerning the copyholds of a manor, a new trial was directed upon payment of costs. Edwin v. Thomas, 2 Vern. 75.

In Illinois it was also said that on a trial of a feigned issue touching the inheritance, courts of chancery frequently direct another trial in analogy to the rule of law allowing several trials in ejectment, though it be not a matter of right. And as these trials are to inform the conscience of the chancellor, and do not settle or bind the rights of the parties, the chancellor will order them until he is satisfied. Williams v. Bishop, 15 Ill. 553.

In New York, in analogy with the statute of that state which provides that at any time within three years after judgment rendered in an action of ejectment the court in which the same

c. COURT MUST BE SATISFIED — In General — On What Considerations. — The practice is to consider not merely whether there was evidence which would support the finding of the jury, and in that case to refuse a new trial, but to consider whether, having regard to the entire subject-matter, and to the whole of the evidence given at or before the trial, and what has since become known, the court is satisfied that full and complete justice has been done between the parties, and that no further investigation is necessary to attain that end.¹

Where the Court Is Not Satisfied. — Unless the court is so satisfied, it may require that the matter shall be again tested by an examination before a jury, with such directions and modifications as it may consider desirable for the fair, thorough, and impartial sifting of the whole matter.²

was rendered, on application of the defeated party and payment of costs and damages, shall vacate such judgment and grant a new trial, it is a recognized rule of courts of equity to grant a new trial in a case in which the verdict binds the heir at law as to the inheritance, or upon an issue as to the validity of a will of real estate, upon grounds which, in other cases, would be deemed altogether insufficient to sustain such an application. Clayton v. Yarrington, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 144.

New Trial May Be Refused. — But though it is the most usual course to award a second trial on a feigned issue in cases touching the inheritance, where the verdict is in favor of the will and against the heir at law, yet it rests entirely in the discretion of the court to award a second trial or not, according to the circumstances and testimony in the case. Van Alst v. Hunter, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 148.

Even where the inheritance was concerned the court refused to grant a new trial where there had been two trials, one at bar and the other at nisi prius, the verdicts being contrary to each other, but the last verdict was had on evidence newly discovered which changed the weight of evidence. Montgomery v. Atty.-Gen., 9 Mod. 388.

Personal Demand of Value — Forgery. — "This [the rule stated in the text] extends also to a personal demand where of considerable value, and where the court is not satisfied with the grounds on which the determination was made at law, and when an objection is made and supported by proof; and particularly in a case of forgery new trials have been granted and that by judges who sat here who have been as reluctant as any, and who inclined to adhere to the rules of common law." Stace v. Mabbot, 2 Ves. 552.

If the conscience of the judge is not satisfied, though no rule of law was violated on the trial and though a new trial would not be granted in a corresponding case at law, he may send it back again and again, until he is satisfied. Patterson v. Ackerson, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 96.

Issue as to the Validity of Two Deeds — New Trial as to One. — Issues were awarded to try the question as to the genuineness of a grantor's signature to two deeds — one to his daughter and another to his son-in-law — and as to the competency of the grantor to execute such deeds; and the jury having found in favor of the validity of both deeds, a motion was made for a new trial, upon which motion it appeared that it was the grantor's intention to make the shares of all the children in his estate equal. The deed to his daughter professing to have been given with the view of putting her upon an equality with his other children, and the court being satisfied, from the evidence, that the grantor could not have understood the effect of that deed upon the division of his property, and the grantees having failed to prove that equality among the grantor's children would be produced by allowing both deeds to stand, a new trial of the issues was ordered, so far as they related to the deed to the grantor's daughter. Lansing v. Russell, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 325, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 510.

Where the Court Is Satisfied. — If the court is satisfied, however, that full and complete justice has been done between the parties, the motion for a new trial will generally be denied.¹

Errors on Trial. — And though there were errors on the trial, yet if they were technical and unimportant to the general result, it is no abuse of the discretion with which the court is clothed to refuse the application to reopen the controversy. To call for a retrial the error must be of such a character as to have produced injustice in the general result.²

Issue in Habeas Corpus Cases. — In Graham v. Graham, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 330, it was said to have been the practice of the Court of Common Pleas in habeas corpus cases to direct an issue for trial of facts in doubtful cases, and that, by analogy to equity practice, the Court of Common Pleas in such cases might grant a new trial if the verdict were unsatisfactory.

Verdict by Direction of Court. — Where the jury, on the trial of an issue relating to the title to land, in delivering their verdict declare that neither party has made out his title to their satisfaction, and that they find for the defendant in accordance with the judge's direction, which direction was that if, upon considering the evidence, their minds were equally balanced and they could not make them up they should find for the defendant, the court will not regard the verdict as establishing the right of the defendant and will direct a new trial. Sunderland v. Durham, 16 Jur. 370.

Presumption of Law Strong and Evidence Unsatisfactory. — After two trials of an issue as to the legitimacy of the plaintiff, the first resulting in favor of and the second against the plaintiff, the court, on his application, directed a third trial on the ground that the presumption of law was strong in his favor and the evidence to the contrary unsatisfactory, there being also an affidavit stating facts discovered since the trial tending to discredit the testimony of one of the principal witnesses for the defendant. The court said that upon the whole the matter had not been sufficiently investigated, and that it could not bind the parties by a decree without its going to a further trial at law. Hargrave v. Hargrave, 13 Jur. 463.

1. Johnson v. Harmon, 94 U. S. 371; Marvin v. Marvin, 5 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 429, note, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 139, note; Forrest v. Forrest, 25 N. Y. 501.

Plaintiff Dead at Time of Trial. — The circumstance that the death of the plaintiff in an issue before the issue was tried was unknown at the time of trial, was held not to afford ground for a new trial. Bird v. Kerr, 4 Kay & J. 270.

2. The Inquiry with the Chancellor is not whether on the trial of the issue errors intervened in the admission or rejection of evidence, or in the instructions to the jury, but whether, notwithstanding such errors, the verdict relieves the mind of the court of the doubts compelling the issue. If it does, the verdict will stand. Barnett v. Montgomery, etc., 1 R. Co., 51 Ala. 557.

Mistake as to Date of Document. — A new trial of an issue will not be granted upon the ground of a mistake at the trial as to the date of a document, if the court is satisfied that the correction of such mistake confirms the verdict. Hughes v. Jones, 1 N. R. 124.

In New York, under the former chancery practice, the rules which governed courts of law in granting new trials upon the ground of testimony improperly rejected or admitted were never adopted. And if from the whole case there was sufficient to show that the verdict was substantially right, a new trial would not be granted. Mulock v. Mulock, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 14. The affidavits on both sides were to be taken together, to ascertain whether there was ground for disturbing the verdict within any principles governing the court; and if not, then the only consideration was whether the judge on the trial erred in admitting or rejecting the testimony, or in giving any directions, or in any law points, whereby injustice had been done. Van Cort v. Van Cort, 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 621.

7. For Incorrect or Improper Verdict — a. VERDICT AGAINST EVIDENCE OR WEIGHT THEREOF — In General. — Acting on the difference in principle prevailing in courts of equity and courts of law, the evidence given on the trial may be nicely balanced, and even if the court finds the verdict not to be against the evidence, yet if it be against the weight thereof a new trial may be granted.¹

And when the Supreme Court succeeded to the powers of the chancery court the rules were the same. The court was not bound by the same rules that prevail on bills of exceptions. In those no more of the testimony is set forth than is sufficient to show the materiality of the decision complained of. But in a motion for a new trial on a case, or to set aside a verdict on a feigned issue, the whole evidence is set forth at large. If the court can see, from the whole case, that no error has been committed by the presiding judge prejudicial to the complaining party, and the verdict appears to be right, the court will not grant a new trial. Lansing v. Russell, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 510. See also Forrest v. Forrest, 25 N. Y. 501. Under the Code Civ. Pro. the subject is a matter of statutory regulation, for by section 1003 it is provided that an error in the admission or exclusion of evidence, or in any other ruling or direction of the judge upon the trial, may, in the discretion of the court which reviews it, be disregarded if that court is of opinion that substantial justice does not require that a new trial should be granted. See Post v. Mason, 91 N. Y. 539.

Where the Court Is Satisfied with the Result. — Formerly in England, as in many of the states of the Union, the chancery and common-law courts were entirely distinct and unconnected, and in sending an issue from chancery to be tried by a jury the only thing that informed the chancellor as to the circumstances that attended the trial, the conduct of the jury, etc., was the report and notes of the judge before whom the trial took place. It is said that perhaps, where such practice obtains, the chancellor may direct a new trial for errors and misconduct of the jury, even though he is satisfied with the verdict. Harrison v. Rowan, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 32. However, in England, regard must be had to the new rule introduced by the Judicature Act, namely, that it is not a matter of right on the part of the court to grant a new trial, even if there were a technical misdirection or if there were an improper reception of evidence, unless the court or judge thinks it might have materially affected the result. Jenkins v. Morris, 14 Ch. Div. 674.

In the Circuit Courts of the United States the judges who direct an issue at law superintend also the trial of it, and they hear all the evidence and are acquainted with all the circumstances of the trial. If, therefore, they are satisfied that the verdict is warranted by the evidence, there is no ground upon which they can direct a new trial. Harrison v. Rowan, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 32. See infra, XIV. 8. For Errors Committed on the Trial.

1. Williams v. Bishop, 15 Ill. 553; Smith v. Newton, 84 Ill. 14; Powell v. Mayo, 26 N. J. Eq. 120; Lansing v. Russell, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 325; Faulconberg v. Peirce, Ambl. 210; Head v. Head, 1 T. & R. 138; Cleeve v. Gascoigne, Ambl. 323; Browne v. McClinck, L. R. 6 H. L. 456; Casborne v. Barsham, 2 Beav. 76.

New Hampshire. — In Clark v. First Congregational Soc., 45 N. H. 331, upon a review of the English and American authorities, the conclusion was arrived at that whether the submission of issues to the jury be a matter of discretion or of right, in either case, upon a motion for a new trial upon the ground that the verdict is against evidence, the court will ordinarily be governed by the rules and principles applied to such motions in suits at law, and will not grant the new trial merely because on weighing the evidence the court would have reached a different result.

North Carolina. — In Peebles v. Peebles, 63 N. Car. 656, where it was held that the court of equity could not order a new trial of an issue sent to be tried at law upon the ground merely that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, the court said: "In an issue

On the other hand, if the court is satisfied with the verdict it need not set it aside and grant a new trial on this ground, and generally will not do so unless the preponderance of the evidence against the verdict be clear and strong.¹

Trial Court Satisfied or Dissatisfied. — Where the issues have been tried before a court other than the one ordering them, and the judge presiding at the trial stated or certified that he was not dissatisfied with the verdict, the court will not usually direct a new trial if the application therefor rests solely upon the ground that the verdict is against the weight of evidence.² Where, however, the judge expresses his dissatisfaction with the verdict and certifies that it is contrary to the evidence, it is usual for the chancery directed by the court sitting in equity, the very reason for referring the matter to a jury is that because of the imperfect manner of taking depositions, and the impossibility of the court's deciding on the weight of evidence, when the statement of one witness looks as good on paper as that of another, the court feels its incompetency to decide between conflicting testimony, and chooses rather to rely on the common sense of a jury, who have the witnesses before them, and are supposed to be capable, by observing their looks, demeanor, and the effect of cross-examination, which can in that mode only be made to have its full force, to arrive at the truth."

Issue from Surrogate's Court — New Trial on All Issues. — Where a verdict on an issue from the surrogate's court of New York shows that the jury were prepared to find a verdict unsupported by evidence, a new trial should be granted as to all the issues submitted, though the verdict on some of them was not in fact contrary to the evidence. In re Booth's Will, (Supreme Ct.) 6 N. Y. Supp. 41.

1. In Stephoe v. Flood, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 323, it was held that if the evidence on the trial of issues out of chancery be greatly conflicting, the court of chancery need not set aside the verdict and grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence. And in Ringrose v. Todd, 12 Price 650, the court refused to disturb the verdict on motion for a new trial made upon the ground that the evidence, chiefly documentary, was wholly with the plaintiff.

Strong and Clear Preponderance of Evidence. — Recollecting that the verdicts of juries are not to be set aside capriciously by courts of justice, the chancellor will not usually say that the conclusion is wrong, and although he is not quite satisfied that he would have arrived at the same conclusion, yet he ought not only to be satisfied that they are wrong, but that they are so manifestly and clearly wrong that there has been a miscarriage of justice, before the parties are exposed to the risk, delay, and annoyance of a new trial. Jenkins v. Morris, 14 Ch. Div. 674; Fellows v. Harrington, 4 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 340.

Question of Science Not Fully Solved. — It is held, however, that the ordinary reasoning according to which the verdict of a jury on a question of fact ought not to be disturbed, unless the preponderance of evidence against the verdict be strong and clear, does not apply to cases in which the verdict depends upon a question of science which is not fully solved, but is still within the domain of bona fide controversy. The importance of the verdict to others besides the parties to the litigation, and also the novelty of the question at issue, are elements to be taken into consideration in deciding whether or not a new trial should be granted. Metropolitan Dist. Asylum v. Hill, 47 L. T. 29.

2. Gibbs v. Hooper, 2 Myl. & K. 353; Stace v. Mabbot, 2 Ves. 552; Jenkins v. Morris, 14 Ch. Div. 674.

Where, on an issue, the evidence is fairly before the jury, and the judge has expressed his satisfaction, there is great difficulty in supporting a motion for a new trial on the ground that the verdict is not supported by the evidence; but the court will nevertheless entertain the motion and attend to the course of the trial, the issue having been directed for its satisfaction. Johnston v. Todd, 5 Beav. 597.

court to set it aside and grant a new trial; but it seems that this need not be done in all cases if the chancellor is satisfied with the verdict.¹

1. Faulconberg v. Peirce, Ambl. 210.

But the Dissatisfaction, Weakly Expressed, of the judge who has tried an issue directed by the court of equity, is not ground for granting a new trial if the verdict be satisfactory to the chancellor. Atkins v. Drake, McClel. & Y. 213.

In Virginia, where the court which tries the issues out of chancery certifies that the verdict is against the weight of evidence, the chancery court should be governed thereby, and will set aside the verdict and grant a new trial. Pryor v. Adams, 1 Call (Va.) 382; Pleasants v. Ross, 1 Wash. (Va.) 156. Thus in Southall v. M'Keand, 1 Wash. (Va.) 336, the District Court, in which the trial of the issues out of chancery were had, certified that the weight of evidence was against the verdict. The chancellor declared the verdict satisfactory. An appeal was taken, and the court decided that the verdict in the District Court ought not to stand, upon the certificate of the judges that the weight of evidence was against it. The court remarked that it was unusual for the chancellor to be satisfied with such a verdict, and though the chancellor was to judge whether his conscience was satisfied, yet the appellate court, in exercising its legal discretion on the same subject, saw no reason to depart from the general rule. And in Lavell v. Gold, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 473, it was held that if the judge of a common-law court certified to the chancellor that the verdict was against the evidence, it was the duty of the chancellor, at least if there had not been more than one trial, to set aside the verdict and award a new trial. But in Ross v. Pynes, 3 Call (Va.) 568, it was held that the court of equity was not bound to grant a new trial on the judge's certificate that the weight of evidence was against the verdict, especially after two verdicts in favor of the same party. See also M'Rae v. Woods, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 548.

The rule deducible from the authorities is that where the judge before whom the issue is tried certifies to the chancellor against the verdict, it is the duty of the chancellor to set it aside, unless it appears from the evidence certified, or circumstances varying the case, that the verdict was right. Lavell v. Gold, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 477. Where the judge before whom the issues were tried certifies that the verdict was contrary to the evidence, but also certifies the facts which were proven on the trial, and it is evident to the chancellor that the verdict was not contrary to the evidence, the chancellor is not bound, in deference to the certificate of the judge of the court, to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial. Grigsby v. Weaver, 5 Leigh (Va.) 197, holding that the verdict of the jury, which was supported by the evidence in the record, outweighed the certificate of the judge.

In Alabama it was held that the court of chancery has such implied discretion over the subject of issues that it will not, as matter of course, direct the issues to be tried anew, though the judge of the court of law certifies that he is dissatisfied with the verdict; but it is usual, under such circumstances, to award a new trial. Alexander v. Alexander, 5 Ala. 518.

In New York, where a feigned issue was awarded by the court of chancery to try the genuineness of a receipt involving a question of payment on a bond, it was held that a new trial ought not to be granted solely on the ground that the judge who presided at the trial doubted the correctness of the finding of the jury on a question of fact; and that to entitle a party to a new trial in such a case it should appear that the verdict was so clearly against the weight of evidence as to entitle him to a new trial in a court of law. Fellows v. Harrington, 4 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 340.

Dissatisfaction of One of Judges.—A new trial may be granted on a feigned issue on account of the dissatisfaction of one of the judges who tried the case. Vanlear v. Vanlear, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 3.

In the Circuit Court of the United States, composed of a district and circuit judge, the trial of issues directed from the chancery side thereof is presided over by the same judges who direct the issue, and though the circuit judge is satisfied that the verdict is warranted by the evidence, yet if the district judge does not concur in this view, a new trial on the issues should

b. VERDICT NOT RESPONSIVE OR DETERMINATIVE OF ISSUES. — Where the verdict is not responsive to the issues, or does not satisfactorily determine all the questions submitted, it may be set aside and a new trial granted.¹

c. VERDICT TOO BROAD. — If the verdict covers more than the issue made by the pleadings the court may set it aside and grant a new trial, though this course need not be pursued.²

d. VERDICT INSENSIBLE, CONTRADICTORY, OR UNCERTAIN. — Where the verdict is sensible and contradictory the court may be awarded. Harrison v. Rowan, 4 Wash. (U. S.) 32.

1. Verdict Not Responsive to Issues. — In West Virginia it was held that where the evidence is so conflicting that it is the duty of the court to order an issue, and the verdict of the jury is not responsive thereto, the chancery court should set it aside and grant a new trial. The court said: "In Nease v. Capehart, 15 W. Va. 299, it was held that after a verdict is rendered upon an issue properly directed, the court cannot look at the record for the facts submitted in the issue, nor to the facts or evidence certified upon the trial of the issue, but must accept the verdict of the jury for such facts, unless under the rules governing courts of equity in such cases it should set aside the verdict and grant a new trial. This being true, the verdict must be responsive to the issue directed, otherwise the court has not before it the very facts to ascertain which the issues were directed. Where the issue is properly directed, and the verdict of the jury is not responsive thereto, the verdict ought to be set aside and a new trial granted." Marshall v. Marshall, 18 W. Va. 395.

Verdict Not Determinative of All Issues. — In an action to recover damages for alleged wrongful acts, and to restrain their continuance where all the issues are ordered to be tried by a jury, under the Code of New York, if the verdict does not determine all the issues it is irregular for the trial judge to find additional facts upon which, together with the verdict, judgment should be given. Such a finding would be proper where an order directed the trial of some specific question of fact, but where all the issues are submitted and the verdict does not determine them all so as to enable the court to give judgment upon the entire case and as to all the relief demanded, the verdict is defective and should be set aside as such and a new trial ordered. Parker v. Laney, 58 N. Y. 469, modifying 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 590.

2. No Surprise or Disadvantage Shown. — The defendant having set up a farm modus in answer to a bill for tithes, issues were directed to try whether the ancient farm consisted of the lands mentioned in the answer, or whether a certain modus had been immemorably payable for the tithes arising upon it. The jury found that the farm consisted of these lands, and, together with four other closes, was covered by a modus. To this verdict it was objected that the jury had found a different modus from that which was in issue between the parties, extending its verdict further than was covered by the pleadings. The court held that if the plaintiff in equity could have shown that if he had been aware of that fact he could have adduced other evidence which might have altered the case, that would have afforded a ground for a new trial. But where there was no attempt to show that the proof of that fact was a surprise upon him, or exposed him to any disadvantage, the finding of the jury with respect to the lands not included among the parcels mentioned in issue furnished no ground for a new trial. Bailey v. Sewell, 1 Russ. 239.

Decree Directed on the Evidence. — In an action for specific performance, where the issues were submitted to a jury for special findings, and the issue of fraud submitted was general, and much broader than made by the pleadings, which were special, and the issue was found for the defendant, it was held on appeal that since the special finding was upon an issue broader than made, and the evidence did not establish the fraud as pleaded, or as found by the jury, the court would not simply set aside the verdict and remand for a new trial, but would decree a specific performance upon the evidence. Brink v. Morton, 2 Iowa 416.

8. For Errors Committed on the Trial — a. IN ADMISSION OR REJECTION OF EVIDENCE — Prejudicial Errors. — If there has been a serious error in the admission or rejection of evidence, which affects the justice and final determination of the case, the court may direct a new trial.²

Errors Not Prejudicial. — But a new trial will not be granted merely on the ground that the judge received improper testimony on the trial of an issue, or that he rejected that which was proper, if, on the whole facts and circumstances, the court is satisfied that justice has been done, or that the result ought not to have been different if such testimony had been rejected in the one case or received in the other.³

1. Kirby v. Newsance, 2 Hawks (N. Car.) 105.

A verdict on issues submitted to a jury which answered some of the questions specifically and replied to others by saying: "We do not know;" "Not known to us;" "Refer to the court," etc., is in fact no verdict, and the court should base no decree thereon. In such case the granting of a new trial is eminently proper. Cooper v. Branch, 86 Ga. 234.

2. White v. Lisle, 3 Swanst. 342; Woolfolk v. Graniteville Mfg. Co., 22 S. Car. 332.

Thus, in an action for divorce, a feigned issue was framed to try the question of adultery of the defendant with F. in Troy, on a certain day, and with divers persons unknown in New York. The verdict was founded on proof of adultery in Troy with a person other than F. The court held that evidence of adultery with other persons than those named in the issues framed was not admissible, and set the verdict aside and ordered a new trial, also granting leave to the plaintiff to amend the feigned issues. Germond v. Germond, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 347.

Witness Not Examined. — Where an issue has been tried by direction of the court for the purpose of enabling the defendant to examine one of the plaintiff's witnesses, the omission to examine that witness at the trial will be a sufficient reason to grant a new trial. The Principle Is that upon the motion for a new trial the judge in equity may look, not only at the report, but at the record in the suit in equity; and may collect from the whole what may satisfy

b. IN INSTRUCTIONS OR DIRECTIONS — Where None Are Given. — Since the court in an equity case is not in general obliged to give any instructions or directions to the jury trying the issue, it is held that nondirection is a ground for granting a new trial only when it produces a verdict against the evidence.¹

Errors Not Prejudicial. — A new trial may be granted for misdirection where the court is not satisfied that the jury may not have been thereby influenced.²

Errors Not Prejudicial. — But if, on the whole, the court is satisfied that the verdict is right, it will disregard any misdirection of the judge, and not grant a new trial on this ground.³

9. For Misconduct or Irregularity of Jury. — Where the jury has his conscience; and if upon the whole he is satisfied that justice has been done, though he may think some evidence was improperly rejected at law, he is at liberty to refuse a new trial. Pemberton v. Pemberton, 11 Ves. Jr. 53.

Refusal to Permit Re-examination of Witness. — Refusal of the judge presiding at the trial of a feigned issue in divorce to permit a witness to be re-examined, is not ground for a new trial unless material injury is shown. V. Chan. Ct. 1814; Van Cort v. Van Cort, 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 621.

Examination of Witness on Matter Foreign to Issue. — Although witnesses on a feigned issue have been examined on matter foreign to the issue, and their evidence excepted to, yet if no use is afterwards made of their testimony it is to be presumed that it has not influenced the jury, and will not be ground for disturbing the verdict. V. Chan. Ct. 1814; Van Cort v. Van Cort, 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 621.

Nondirection Not Misdirection. — The mere refusal of a judge to direct a jury to find for a plaintiff or defendant does not constitute misdirection; there is no misdirection unless there is something wrong or erroneous in what he lays before the jury, or unless he improperly withholds a direction when the grounds for it were distinctly and clearly stated by the counsel who asked for it. *Greene v. Opinion Formed Without Regard to Directions. — In Tatham v. Wright, 2 Russ. & M. 1, the master of the rolls said: "I have carefully read every word of the report of the learned judge, but have purposely abstained from reading the shorthand-writer's notes of the summing up, in order that my judgment might be formed upon the evidence alone. * * * As this opinion is formed without any reference to the summing up of the learned judge, and as I should have considered it my duty to direct a new trial upon the evidence alone, whatever the summing up had been, if the jury had come to a different conclusion, it is not necessary to take any notice of the observations which have been made in that respect." The chancellor was clearly of opinion been guilty of misconduct, or the court is not satisfied with the verdict in view of the circumstances under which the jury returned it, a new trial may be granted.¹ But though irregularities may have occurred, yet if the court is satisfied with the verdict it is not error to refuse a retrial.²

10. For Surprise at Trial — Unexpected Evidence. — Where, on the trial of the issues, a party has been surprised by the evidence produced, which he had no reason to expect would be given, the court may direct a new trial on this ground.³ But even though new evidence has been introduced at the trial, yet if it appears that there was no reason for the party to be surprised thereby, a new trial will not be granted.⁴

that the weight of evidence was in accord with the finding of the jury, and a new trial was refused.

1. 2 Daniell Ch. Pr. (1st Am. ed.) 752; East India Co. v. Bazett, Jac. 91, holding that no certificate from the judge as to such misconduct is necessary; Pleasants v. Ross, 1 Wash. (Va.) 156.

For misconduct of jury generally, see article JURY.

2. Thus in an action for partition of land in which the court submitted certain questions of fact for its information, it appeared from the record on appeal that one of the jurors called was related by marriage to one of the appellees, and it was insisted that the court below for that reason should have granted a new trial. The appellate court said: "Did it appear that the judgment in this cause was based upon the verdict of a jury one of whom was related to one of the parties within the sixth degree, there would be ground for the complaint here made. But in a case like this the finding of facts submitted to the jury is only advisory to the court, and the court may wholly ignore the facts as found by the jury, and doubtless would do so if not satisfied that such facts were found correctly. It does not appear in any legitimate form that the court adopted the facts as found by the jury, and, as the finding is general, we must presume, in favor of the action of the court, that it acted on the evidence in the cause, and made such finding as it thought the evidence required." Sheets v. Bray, 125 Ind. 36.

3. Exton v. Turner, 2 Ch. Cas. 80; M'Gregor v. Bainbrigge, 7 Hare 166, note; Willis v. Farrer, 3 Y. & J. 264; Ex p. Christie, 2 Dea. & Ch. 461; Germond v. Germond, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 347.

Surprise by Introduction of New Witness. — On the trial of an issue on a question of legitimacy, a witness was called to prove a fact showing that there might have been access between a husband and wife at a particular place and time. This witness had not been examined in a suit in the ecclesiastical court, to which the mother of the child whose legitimacy was disputed was a party, and in which his evidence would have been material to her; nor was an attempt made by her in that suit to establish the fact of access, which his testimony went to make out. The testimony of this witness was held to be a surprise upon the party against whom it was produced, and, its accuracy being impeached by affidavits, the court directed a new trial of the issue. Gibbs v. Hooper, 2 Myl. & K. 353.

New Trial for Plaintiff Where Evidence Surprised Defendant. — The court will not direct a new trial of issues for the plaintiff on the ground of evidence adduced on the former trial, where that evidence was a surprise on the defendant, and tended to defeat the intention of the court in directing the former issue. Carrington v. Jones, 2 Sim. & S. 135, 3 L. J. Ch. 56.

4. Thus where evidence is discovered after the answer of the defendant has been put in and has been used at the trial of the issues, the court will not direct a new trial on the ground of surprise to the party applying, if before the trial he had opposed a motion by the other party for the express purpose of having the trial postponed, in order that the issues might be rectified. Legard v. Daly, 1 Ves. 192.

Sufficient Notice as to Evidence. — A notice to the defendant before the trial of the issues that the plaintiff will prove

By Claim Made. — It is also cause for a new trial if the complainant is surprised, on the trial of the issue, by the claim of the defendant to title under an instrument or from a source not stated or referred to in the answer.¹

11. For New Evidence. — If, after a verdict has been rendered on issues submitted out of chancery, there be new and important evidence produced which was not before the jury at the trial, the chancery court may set aside the verdict and grant a new trial, under the rules applicable in such cases.² But where the evidence could not have been used at the trial,³ or, either through negligence or design, was not there presented, a new trial will not be granted on the production of such new evidence.⁴

a person to be abroad, though it does not point out his whereabouts particularly, is sufficient to prepare the defendant to encounter this evidence, and affords no ground for a new trial by reason of surprise. Richards v. Symes, 2 Atk. 319.

1. Powell v. Mayo, 26 N. J. Eq. 120.

Claim Under Other Title than Set Up in Answer. — In the trial of an issue directed under a bill filed to quiet title to inquire and determine whether the defendant had any such estate or interest in the property as was claimed by him, the defendant is bound by the title set up in his answer; and where, on the trial, he claims under a title substantially different, and objection is made, a new trial will be granted as a matter of course if the verdict be in his favor. Powell v. Mayo, 26 N. J. Eq. 120.

Necessity of Objections and Allegation of Surprise. — But if in such cases there be no objection to the verdict or the evidence, or to the claim at the trial, and there is no allegation of surprise, there would seem to be no good reason for ordering a new trial merely because the title proved differs, though radically, from that set up in the answer. Powell v. Mayo, 26 N. J. Eq. 120.

Amendment of Answer to Conform to Finding. — In the absence of such objections and allegations as above shown to be necessary, if it appears that justice will be done by establishing the title proved at the trial, different though it be from the one set up in the answer, it is competent for the court to direct an amendment of the answer, if necessary, to conform to the finding of the jury. The court is not restricted to a decree in favor of or against the title set up in the answer. Powell v. Mayo, 26 N. J. Eq. 120.

Production of New Witness. — In Cleeve v. Gascoigne, Amb. 323, a motion for a new trial was made on the ground that the verdict was in favor of the plaintiff when the weight of evidence was on the side of the defendant, and that a material witness could not attend the trial by reason of illness, but had now recovered and was able to give evidence at another and future trial. On this ground a new trial was granted.

Evidence to Corroborate Discredited Evidence. — Where, upon the trial of an issue, the evidence of a material witness had been discredited by the judge, and a verdict rendered against the party producing that witness, the court, upon being satisfied by affidavits filed since the trial that the evidence of the witness might be corroborated, granted a new trial. Shields v. Boucher, 1 De G. & Sm. 40.

3. New Trial on Evidence Properly Rejected. — Where, on a bill for tithes, a verdict is found for the modus, the court will not grant a new trial because of evidence which was incompetent and properly rejected by the trial judge. Colegrave v. Juson, 3 Atk. 197.

4. Hughes v. Jones, 1 N. R. 124; Shedden v. Patrick, 22 L. T. N. S. 631, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. App. 470.

Evidence Kept Back by Party. — A new trial will not be granted on account of a party having further evidence to produce, though the court is dissatisfied with the verdict, if the evidence has been kept back in order to bring it for-

12. Granting New Trial Without Setting Aside Verdict. — In granting a new trial of an issue, it is not necessary formally to set aside the verdict on the previous trial, as it ceases to be a ground for any subsequent proceedings.¹ Indeed, in England it is said that the usual practice is not to set the verdict aside;² but it is believed that the general practice in the United States is to the contrary.

13. Terms and Conditions on Granting. — The court, on granting a new trial, may impose such terms and conditions as it deems advisable to secure justice in the case.³

On Payment of Costs. — Thus, the condition of paying the costs of the previous trial may be imposed on the applicant.⁴

14. New Trials Subsequent to Second Trial — Generally. — Since the verdict is not binding, new trials of the issue may be ordered again and again, as many times as shall be necessary to satisfy the conscience of the court.⁵

ward afterwards, and try the cause again with more advantage. Standen v. Edwards, 1 Ves. Jr. 133.

Evidence Which Might Have Been Found and Produced. — A paper which, with due diligence, might have been found at first, is not, in legal meaning, noviter repertum, and a new trial will not be granted upon the discovery, after the trial of the issues, of a letter which might have been found before. Browne v. McClintock, L. R. 6 H. L. 456.

New Evidence to Make Forged Documents Immaterial. — Where, on the trial of an issue, a party has resorted to fraud and set up forged documents, he will not be permitted to say that, regardless of the question of the truth or falsity of the documents, there is other evidence which makes them immaterial, and no new trial will be granted on such ground. Kemp v. Mackrell, 2 Ves. 580.

3. Commission for Examination of Witness and Stay of Trial. — On granting a new trial of an issue the court directed a commission for the examination of a witness abroad and ordered that the trial be stayed until the return of the commission. The parties having improperly delayed the execution and return of the commission, upon application to the court the whole of the original order was discharged. On appeal, however, it was held that the laches as to the commission ought not to affect the right to proceed to a new trial of the issue, and this part of the case was reversed, with special directions. Colvin v. Campion, 8 Bligh. N. S. 523.

New Trial on Unsatisfactory Verdict. — Where a new trial is granted on the ground of the unsatisfactory nature of the evidence, a condition should not be imposed that the party applying for the new trial should pay the costs of the previous trial. Metropolitan Dist. Asylum v. Hill, 47 L. T. 29.

New Trial Not Proceeded With. — If an order be made that upon the defendant's paying the plaintiff's costs a new trial should be had, the defendants are not compellable to pay the costs under the order unless they think fit to proceed to a new trial. Lambert v. Fisher, 7 Sim. 525.

5. U. S. v. Samperyac, Hempst. (U. S.) 118; Williams v. Bishop, 15 Ill. 553; Moore v. Payne, 7 Dana (Ky.) 380.

There Were Three Trials before the jury in Cleeve v. Gascoigne, Ambl. 323; Hargrave v. Hargrave, 13 Jur. 463; Pemberton v. Pemberton, 13 Ves. Jr. 290; Stannard v. Graves, 2 Call (Va.) 369; Ferguson v. Ferguson, Seld. Notes (N. Y.) 249, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 307.

First and Second Verdicts Contrary. — If the verdict on the first trial has gone one way, and on the second trial another way, the court will usually grant a third trial; which it is said is commonly conclusive.¹

Third Trial After Two Concurring Verdicts. — After two concurring verdicts, a third trial will usually be denied.²

Fourth Trial. — Where there have been three trials, it is seldom that a fourth will be granted, unless upon some special ground.³

Right of Court to Determine Issue After Several Trials. — After any number of trials and verdicts, however, it seems that the court has the right to decide the case according to its own view of the evidence.⁴

15. Where Issues of Right, and Verdict Conclusive — In General. — Where, by statutory enactments in some of the states, issues are a matter of right with the parties and the verdict is conclusive, the rules of law, and not of equity, prevail on determining the motion for a new trial; it may be granted for the same reasons and on the same grounds as would a new trial in an action at law.⁵

Verdict Contrary to Evidence or Against Weight Thereof. — Hence, if the verdict is contrary to the evidence, it is a proper ground for a retrial.⁶ But where there is conflicting evidence a verdict should

1. Hargrave v. Hargrave, 13 Jur. 463. See M'Rae v. Woods, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 548.

In Atty.-Gen. v. Montgomery, 2 Atk. 378, a third trial was denied when the second one was at bar. Lord Ch. Hardwicke said that the last trial, being at bar, should prevail, and that to lay down a rule that there must be three trials would be attended with great expense.

Verdicts in Opposition to Trial Judges and Contrary to Former Verdict. — After two concurring verdicts for the same party on an issue out of chancery, the chancellor is not bound to direct a new trial, notwithstanding both verdicts were in opposition to the judges before whom the issues were tried, and a verdict had originally been rendered in favor of the other party. M'Rae v. Woods, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 548. But it may be granted if the court is still not satisfied with two verdicts. Pemberton v. Pemberton, 13 Ves. Jr. 290.

3. Pemberton v. Pemberton, 13 Ves. Jr. 290; Stannard v. Graves, 2 Call (Va.) 369, holding that after three verdicts on issue to the jury, the court of chancery did right in decreeing according to the opinions of the juries. Ferguson v. Ferguson, Seld. Notes (N. Y.) 249, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 307, holding that after three verdicts of guilty in an action for divorce the court would not again interfere, although the evidence was purely circumstantial and not entirely conclusive.

4. Moore v. Payne, 7 Dana (Ky.) 380. See U. S. v. Sampereyac, Hempst. (U. S.) 118.

In O'Sullivan v. M'Sweeny, 2 Con. & L. 486, the plaintiff was held entitled to a decree without an issue at law, after three trials, and an admission in the last of the principal fact in dispute.

not be set aside and a new trial granted simply because the court may think it against the weight of evidence, or would have decided differently from the jury.¹

Errors on Trial. — Whether, in cases where issues are of right, a new trial must be granted for errors occurring on the trial, such as the improper admission or rejection of evidence or misdirection of the judge, is a matter upon which the practice in the different states is not entirely uniform.²

16. Proceedings on the New Trial. — The proceedings on the new trial will in general be similar to those had on the original trial, with such modifications, directions, or terms as the court may consider advisable.³

ute in New York the issue of adultery in an action for divorce is triable by jury as of right, and, in analogy to the practice in an action at law, if there is an entire absence of evidence, direct, presumptive, or circumstantial, the verdict of the jury will be set aside and a new trial granted. Ferguson v. Ferguson, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 307.

1. Divorce Cases. — In New York an issue of adultery in an action for divorce is a matter of statutory right, and the rule stated in the text is applicable in such cases. Ferguson v. Ferguson, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 307; Whitney v. Whitney, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 585.

In Tennessee similar statutory provisions exist. Richmond v. Richmond, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 343.

2. In Tennessee it seems that a new trial must be granted on this ground. Errors must be corrected in the same mode as in actions at law. James v. Brooks, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 153.

In New York — Action for Divorce. — The old code, § 242, provided that the trial of the issue of adultery should be by jury, but it was held that the application for a new trial was addressed to the discretion of the equity judge; and that, upon principles well settled before the code, and not altered thereby, a new trial would not be awarded in such cases unless for substantial errors showing that a fair trial was not had, and affording reasonable doubt as to the justice of the result. If the court were satisfied, upon the whole case, that justice had been done, though there were errors, technical and unimportant to the general result, it was no abuse of the discretion with which it was clothed to refuse to reopen the controversy. Forrest v. Forrest, 25 N. Y. 501.

Under the Code Civ. Pro., § 1757, in an action for divorce for adultery that issue is triable by jury as of right. By section 970 the proceedings subsequent to stating the issue are the same as where questions arising upon the issues are stated for trial by a jury, in a case where neither party can, as of right, require such a trial, except that the finding of the jury upon each issue or question so stated is conclusive in the action, unless the verdict is set aside or a new trial granted. Therefore, these cases are within section 1003, which provides that an error in the admission or exclusion of evidence, or in any other ruling or direction of the judge, upon the trial, may, in the discretion of the court which reviews it, be disregarded if that court is of opinion that substantial justice does not require that a new trial should be granted. Lowenthal v. Lowenthal, 92 Hun (N. Y.) 385; Whitney v. Whitney, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 585.

In Wisconsin — Divorce Cases. — Where, by Wis. Rev. Stat., § 2843, the issue of adultery in a divorce case is required to be tried by a jury unless a jury trial be waived, if material error be committed on the trial of the issue the verdict should be set aside and a new trial granted; otherwise the injured party is without remedy. If, however, upon the whole case, it appears that although errors have intervened the verdict is manifestly right, and that in all reasonable probability a new trial would result in the same verdict, then the court may well say that the errors alleged are immaterial, because not prejudicial to the rights of the complaining party. Poertner v. Poertner, 66 Wis. 644.

3. Swinfen v. Swinfen, 27 Beav. 148. Change of Place of Trial. — After two trials of an issue at assizes a third trial, being directed, was ordered, upon the

The Form of the Issue should not be changed.¹

Verdict Not Given in Evidence. — The verdict on the first trial should not be given in evidence on the new trial, and the order therefor should contain no such direction.²

XV. Costs — 1. Of Withdrawn or Untried Issues. — Where the issues have been withdrawn or not proceeded with to trial, it is usual to give the costs against the party who procures the withdrawal, or is in fault for the failure of the trial.³

2. Of Tried Issues — a. WHEN AWARDED — In General. — The costs of an issue are generally disposed of at the further hearing of the cause.⁴

Issue Directed on Interlocutory Application. — But if the issue was directed on an interlocutory application, the costs may be disposed of after the decision of the issue without waiting for the further hearing.⁵

Of Former Trial Where New One Applied For. — Where, as in England, the application for a new trial is to be made before the cause application of the plaintiff, to be tried at the bar of the King's Bench instead of the assizes; the party who applied for the trial at bar agreeing to accept nisi prius costs in the event of the verdict being in his favor. Baker v. Hart, 3 Atk. 546; Hite v. Salter, 2 Dick. 495.

1. White v. Lisle, 3 Swanst. 342, where the lord chancellor was of opinion that no order changing the form of the issue could be made on a motion for a new trial; and that the propriety of the form of the issue could be questioned only on an appeal from the decree by which it was directed.

Objection that Issue Not Broad Enough. — On a motion for a new trial it cannot be objected that the issue was not broad enough, and that it ought to have embraced other inquiries. Bassett v. Johnson, 2 N. J. Eq. 154.

Case Not Different on Second Trial. — Equity will not assist a party to make out a different case upon a second trial at law from that which he made upon the first. Cockburn v. Hussey, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 504.

2. O'Connor v. Malone, 6 Cl. & F. 572, reversing 2 Dr. & Wal. 491, and overruling Baker v. Hart, 3 Atk. 542, 1 Ves. 28.

3. Withdrawal of Issues. — Thus, where the plaintiff withdraws the issues he pays the costs. Brookland v. Golding, Wightw. 100.

The withdrawal of the cause upon the trial of an issue between an adult and infant was accomplished through a compromise signed by the counsel. The agreement, not binding on the infant, was repudiated by the adult. On the direction of a new trial the adult party was ordered to pay so much of the costs of the issue as had been rendered fruitless, and could not be made available on the subsequent trial. Hargrave v. Hargrave, 12 Beav. 408, 14 Jur. 212.

Failure to Go to Trial of Issue. — It is held that on an issue out of chancery it is proper to move that court for costs for not going on to trial, or to move there for a special jury. Anonymous, 2 P. Wms. 68.

But it is also decided that equity will give cost for not going to trials on an issue directed only where a court of law would have done so, and therefore where notice of trial was countermanded in time costs were refused. Moore v. Bevis, Hanmer 73.

Consideration of Nisi Prius Costs on Direction of Issue. — Issues being directed to be tried at bar, the court refused to make it part of the order that the defendant should pay only nisi prius costs if the issues were found against him. Falmouth v. Innys, Moss. 87. But where a party has prayed an issue the court has directed it on the terms that he would be contented with nisi prius costs. Baker v. Hart, 3 Atk. 542, 1 Ves. 28.

comes on for further hearing,¹ the costs of the former trial will not in general be taxed upon the application for the new trial, but will be reserved for the further hearing.²

b. HOW AWARDED — Discretionary with Court. — The awarding of costs of an issue is a matter within the discretion of the court, and does not follow the verdict as of course.³

Generally Follow Event and for Successful Party. — The practice of the court, however, is generally to allow them to follow the event, and give them to the successful party.⁴

Where Neither Party Is Completely Successful on the issues, no costs need be given.⁵

Each Party Successful on Some Issues. — Where there are several issues, and some are found for the plaintiff and some for the defendant, the parties will be allowed costs on the issues found in their favor, and must pay costs on those found against them.⁶

Where a New Trial Is Granted for misdirection of the judge, or where the question raised by the motion was a doubtful one, the usual practice is to award no costs of the first trial of the issue.⁷ But where a new trial is ordered, the costs to abide the event, such

New Trial on Condition. — It has been seen, however, that the court may make the payment of these costs a condition to granting the new trial. See supra, XIV. 13. Terms and Conditions on Granting.

Issue on Bill to Redeem Mortgage when Heir-at-law Dead. — On a reference to a master on a bill by a mortgagee to redeem, the master reported the heir-at-law to be dead. Exceptions were taken and the mortgagee insisted that the heir was living. Issues were then directed, upon which also he was found to be dead. It was held that the mortgagee would not have to pay the costs of the issue, as it was not vexatious so long as the court saw fit to direct an issue. Wilson v. Metcalfe, 3 Madd. 45.

Plaintiff's Title Being Probable, Though the Verdict Was Against It, the court refused costs against him. Trethewy v. Hoblin, 2 Ch. Ca. 9.

Issue on Matter on Common-law Side of Court. — In a feigned issue directed by the court in a matter arising on the common-law side the costs always follow the verdict, and the court has no discretion to change the rule. Jarrard v. Zook, 1 Woodw. (Pa.) 406.

4. Parkes v. Stevens, W. N. (1869) 269; Metcalfe v. Beckwith, 2 P. Wms. 376; Blackburn v. Gregson, 1 Bro. C. C. 420; Carpenter v. Easton, etc., R. Co., 28 N. J. Eq. 390.

7. New Trial for Misdirection. — White v. Lisle, 3 Swanst. 342. Thus, where the verdict on the first trial of the issue was for the defendant, in consequence of a misdirection of the judge, and on the second trial was for the plaintiff, the costs of the suit, of the motion for a new trial, and of the second trial were given against the defendant, but no costs were given for the first trial. Bearblock v. Tyler, Jac. 571.

Doubtful Question on Motion for New Trial. — Where two trials resulted in favor of the defendant, the court dismissed the bill with all costs at law and in equity except the costs of the first trial of the issue, as to which it was ordered that each party pay his own costs, the question raised by the motion event means the ultimate event of the cause, and therefore, if the verdict on the second trial be set aside, and on a third trial the result is the same as at the first trial, the successful party will be entitled to the costs of the first trial.¹

3. Of the Application for New Trial. — The costs of the application for the new trial will usually be governed by the result of the new trial.²

4. Of the New Trial. — The rules pertaining to the costs of the new trial are, it seems, similar to those governing the costs of issues in general. They usually abide the event of the suit and are given to the successful party.³

5. Of the Entire Case. — Not only, then, may costs be allowed for the first and new trials of the issues, but the costs of all the trials at law and of the suit in equity may be included and given in the final award.⁴

Costs of Refusal of Application as Costs in Cause. — If the application for a new trial is refused, the costs of resisting it are costs in the cause, unless the application is made after decree, in which case the costs are not costs in the cause, but the application may be expressed to be dismissed with costs. White v. Lisle, 4 Madd. 214; Devie v. Brownlow, 2 Dick. 796; Daniell Ch. Pr. (1st Am. ed.) 761.

Costs of Rule for New Trial Where Rule Drops. — Where a rule for a new trial drops in consequence of the court being equally divided in opinion, the party who obtained the verdict is not entitled to the costs of the rule. Dansey v. Richardson, 18 Jur. 957, 23 L. J. Q. B. 361.

How Awarded*, and as to costs of the first trial where a new trial is ordered, see supra, XV. 2. b. How Awarded.

4. On a bill filed in behalf of an infant, with the sanction of the master, to set aside deeds executed by a lunatic at a time subsequent to which he had been found a lunatic by inquisition, an issue was directed and found in favor of the deeds. The bill was dismissed with costs of the suit and of the issue. Frank v. Mainwaring, 4 Beav. 37.

Issue in Bankruptcy. — Where, on an issue at law to try the bankruptcy of a party, he is found not to be a bankrupt, and costs are given against the petitioning creditors at law, costs of the proceedings in equity will follow of course. Ex p. Gulston, 1 Atk. 139.

On Reversal with Costs in Court Below. — When a case has been sent to a court of law and the chancery court gives a decree with costs, including the costs at law, and the decree is reversed "with costs of the suit in the court below," the defendant is entitled, of course, to the costs at law. Smith v. Clarke, 2 Con. & L. 160, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 423.

Where New Trials Were Granted. — An issue on a bill to settle boundaries, being tried, was found for the defendant on three successive trials, and the defendant was not only allowed the costs of all the trials at law, but also the costs in equity. The defendant had no bill, and the plaintiff might have tried it at law without coming into equity. Metcalf v. Beckwith, 2 P. Wms. 376.

Where two trials of an issue resulted in favor of the defendant, the bill was dismissed with all costs at law and in equity except the costs of the first trial. Stuart v. Greenall, 13 Price 755.

So where the first verdict was for the defendant, in consequence of a misdirection, and the second was for the plaintiff, the costs of the suit, of the motion for a new trial, and of the second trial were given against the defendant, but no costs were given

XVI. APPELLATE REVIEW — 1. Of Allowance or Refusal of Issue

— a. POWER TO REVIEW IN GENERAL — By Appeal. — According to the weight of authority in England, an order granting or denying an issue to the jury in an equity case is appealable.¹ In the United States the subject is involved in a considerable conflict of opinion. In some of the states the doctrine is maintained that the discretion of the court in submitting or refusing issues is not reviewable on appeal,² or at least that the appellate court will not attempt to interfere with that discretion unless it has been palpably abused.³ In other states it is considered that the discretion of the court must be exercised upon sound principles of reason and justice; that a mistake in its exercise is a just ground of appeal; and that the appellate court will judge whether such discretion has been soundly exercised in a given case.⁴

By Writ of Error. — The granting or refusal of an issue is so much a matter of discretion with the court that its exercise is not usually subject to review by writ of error.¹

Bill of Exceptions. — The discretion in submitting or refusing issues is generally not the subject of a bill of exceptions.²

b. REVIEW OF METHOD OF SUBMISSION. — Ordinarily, the appellate court will not interfere with the method by which issues have been submitted, though the one selected be not in accordance with the approved practice, if no prejudicial error has been occasioned.³

c. REVIEW OF FORM, MANNER OF FRAMING, SETTLEMENT, ETC. — As a general rule, the form of the issues submitted or the manner of framing and settlement thereof will not constitute ground for reversal if they are presented in a way appropriate to the securing of a fair and thorough trial, and the court can see that the parties could not have been prejudiced.⁴ Sometimes, however,

2. In Massachusetts. — Whether any or what issues in equity shall be submitted to a jury, is a subject of appeal under Gen. Stat. In Tennessee. — Where the objection was to the changing of issues as presented to the court by the complainant, who simply tendered a long list of issues, and the bill of exceptions only recited: "The court allowed only such issues as appear in the decree showing the verdict of the jury; and plaintiff excepted to the ruling refusing or modifying the issues submitted in his behalf," it was held that no error was pointed out. The objection to the action of the court was general, and might have applied as well to the change of phraseology as to the substance, and besides, had the attention of the court been called to the particular changes objected to, they might have been corrected. Pearce v. Suggs, 85 Tenn. 724.

where there has been a palpable error in the form or manner of framing, the appellate court will reverse the order directing the issues.¹

d. DECREE OF APPELLATE COURT — Improper Direction of Issue. —

Where the grant or refusal of issues is reviewable, and it appears to the appellate court that the discretion of the equity court was erroneously exercised and an issue improperly directed, the error will be corrected either by rendering a decree on the merits, or by reversing and remanding the case, as occasion may require.²

Improper Refusal of Issue. — So where a decree has been rendered in an equity cause without the aid of a jury, and the appellate court can see from all the facts, circumstances, and evidence that issues should have been submitted, it will sometimes, without a reversal, try the case on the facts and render a verdict on the merits,³ but more frequently it will reverse the decree and remand the cause to be proceeded with in the proper manner,⁴ often specifically directing the submission by the court below of the proper and necessary issues.⁵

Issues Being Minute and Numerous, the order submitting them was reversed. Rutty v. Person, 49 N. Y. Super. Ct. 55.

The Immateriality of issues submitted may be ground for reversal and remand of cause for further action. Hall v. Doran, 6 Iowa 433. But where the submission and determination of one issue in the case renders the trial of another issue immaterial, its regularity will not be looked into on error. Dabbs v. Dabbs, 27 Ala. 646.

Issue Directed at Improper Time. — On a prayer for an accounting, where the answer contains a counterclaim, an order requiring that special issues be framed and submitted to a jury will be reversed, where the motion was noticed before the plaintiff's time to reply or demur to the counterclaim set up in the answer had expired. *Rutty v. 2. Of Proceedings at Trial, Verdict, Action of Court, etc. — a. METHODS OF SECURING APPELLATE REVIEW — (1) Motion for New Trial and Appeal. — In most of the courts of chancery the verdict of the jury on issues submitted is, as has been seen, merely advisory, and the proper method of presenting a question arising on the trial thereof to the consideration of a reviewing court is by motion for a new trial in the court ordering the issue, and an appeal if the decision be unsatisfactory.¹ By this method, if the proper course has been pursued on the motion for a new trial, the evidence and proceedings become a part of the record, and go up to the appellate court if an appeal is taken.²

(2) Bills of Exceptions. — Therefore, bills of exceptions as such cannot usually be taken on the trial of issues in equity, or if taken can only be used on a motion for a new trial. They do not lie, according to their proper functions, for the presentation of errors to an appellate court.³ Though this is the general rule, yet its

1. The Findings of Facts will not be reviewed on appeal unless a motion for a new trial was properly made in the court below. Deputy v. Stapleford, 19 Cal. 302; Gagliardo v. Hoberlin, 18 Cal. 396; Duff v. Fisher, 15 Cal. 379, distinguishing Dewey v. Bowman, 8 Cal. 145; Still v. Saunders, 8 Cal. 281, disapproving Gray v. Eaton, 5 Cal. 448. To the same effect, see Beck v. Beck, 6 Mont. 318; Ward v. Warren, 15 Hun (N. Y.) 600; Fanning v. Russell, 94 Ill. 386, reversing 2 Ill. App. 632.

Errors Occurring on the Trial will likewise not be reviewed by an appellate court if a new trial was not moved for. Chapin v. Thompson, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 12; Whitney v. Whitney, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 591. See Armstrong v. Armstrong, 3 Myl. & K. 45.

Evidence Not Before Appellate Court. — It is held in Montana that where there is no motion for new trial the evidence is not before the appellate court, and the decree will be presumed to be supported by the evidence until the contrary appears. Beck v. Beck, 6 Mont. 318.

2. See supra, XIV. New Trial; infra, XVI. 2. c. Transmission of Exceptions and Evidence; and further as to the proper practice, Armstrong v. Armstrong, 3 Myl. & K. 45.

3. Alabama. — In an early case it was stated that although it was not competent to revise on error a question of law reserved by bill of exceptions upon the trial of an issue out of chancery, yet as the question was a novel one in the courts of Alabama, it was regarded as sufficiently substantial to authorize the appellate court to look into and vary a decree as to costs, if incorrect. Alexander v. Alexander, 5 Ala. 517. In the later cases it is expressly held that the submission of issues being discretionary, and the verdict thereon advisory, a bill of exceptions, being unknown to chancery practice, could not reserve questions of erroneous rulings of the judge on the trial for revision of an appellate court, and that the only remedy for such erroneous rulings, whether the issue was tried at law or before the chancellor, was an application to the chancery court for a new trial. Barnett v. Montgomery, etc., R. Co., 51 Ala. 555; Matthews v. Forniss, 91 Ala. 157.

Maryland. — Upon the trial of issues by a jury ordered by the Circuit Court of Baltimore City, by virtue of art. 29, § 58 of the code, bills of exception to the rulings of the court will not lie. Barth v. Rosenfeld, 36 Md. 604.

In the Federal Courts a bill of exceptions as such has no part in proceedings to review the findings of fact on issues to the jury in an equity case; or, if taken, can only be used on a motion for a new trial. The verdict is to be presented for reconsideration and re-examination only on a motion for a new trial, based not on mere errors of the judge, but upon a review of the whole case as submitted to the jury. Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 590; Brockett v. Brockett, 3 How. (U. S.) 692; Johnson v. Harmon, 94 U. S. 371; Watt v. Starke, 101 U. S. 247.

application is not universal, for by practice and statutes in some of the states, or where the verdict is taken as conclusive and not merely advisory, bills of exceptions may be resorted to.¹

1. In Massachusetts, though the ruling is recognized that in the practice of most courts of chancery a bill of exceptions is unknown, and the rulings of a judge presiding at the trial by jury of issues out of chancery can be revised only upon motion for a new trial in the court which ordered the issues, yet bills of exceptions have long been allowable in cases in equity as well as in actions at law, and the authority to revise, upon bills of exceptions, rulings in matters of law at the trial of issues in equity before a jury, is established. Dorr v. Tremont Nat. Bank, 128 Mass. 349. See Crittenden v. Field, 8 Gray (Mass.) 621; Brooks v. Tarbell, 103 Mass. 496; Cobb v. Boston, 112 Mass. 181; Stockbridge Iron Co. v. Hudson Iron Co., 107 Mass. 290. In the latter case exceptions were allowed; and it was said in Dorr v. Tremont Nat. Bank, 128 Mass. 349, referring to this case, that they were not allowed in the form of a bill of exceptions, merely because other questions in the cause, which could be more appropriately presented in the form of a report, were reserved for the determination of the full court, and the exceptions were therefore incorporated in the report.

Virginia — Bill of Exceptions for Dissatisfaction of Judge at Trial. — In Stannard v. Graves, 2 Call (Va.) 369, it was held that if the court before which the chancery issues were tried was dissatisfied with the verdict, the dissatisfaction must be certified on the record by the court; or if refused, it should be put upon the record by bill of exceptions.

Truth of Allegations in Bill. — In Ford v. Gardner, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 72, the decision was that when the verdict on the issues is certified to the court sitting in chancery and a new trial refused, allegations as to what passed at the trial, stated in a bill of exceptions to the opinion of the court in refusing a new trial, are not to be taken as admitted to be the truth by the court's signature and seal if no proof of the truth of these allegations appears on the record.

Case Considered as on Motion for New Trial. — In Watkins v. Carlton, 10 Leigh (Va.) 586, a bill of exceptions was taken, but it appears that the case was considered as upon a motion for a new trial. This is in accordance with the usual practice.

Issue of Usury of Right and Verdict Conclusive. — By statute in this state, the issue of usury, on a bill not requiring discovery, is triable by jury as of right, and the verdict is conclusive. A bill of exceptions was properly taken, in which all the evidence given on the trial was set forth. Brockenbrough v. Spindle, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 22.

West Virginia — Duty of Court to Issue Bills of Exceptions. — In this state, in the trial of an issue out of chancery, it is the duty of the judge presiding to issue and send bills of exceptions to its opinion, as in trials of law issues before a jury. Henry v. Davis, 13 W. Va. 230.

Compelling Signature by Mandamus. — And the judge, in such case, may be compelled by mandamus from the Supreme Court of Appeals to sign the bill of exceptions, if it states fairly the truth of the case involved therein. Henry v. Davis, 13 W. Va. 230.

Failure to Apply for Mandamus. — If, however, the judge refuses to sign the bill, and the defendant appeals from the decree and fails to apply for a mandamus to compel the signature, but proceeds to have the cause heard and determined by the appellate court on the record without such bill of exceptions, and the decree is affirmed, the defendant has waived the benefit of such exceptions, and will not be heard to complain of the action of the judge in refusing to sign the bill. Henry v. Davis, 13 W. Va. 230.

Georgia — Record and Not Bill of Exceptions Governs. — Where, in the bill of exceptions, the judge certifies that he granted a new trial upon a special ground, while the order directing it is general and specifies no particular ground as it appears in the transcript of the record, the appellate court will be governed by the latter. Poullain v. Poullain, 72 Ga. 418.

Mississippi — Verdict on Same Footing as if Rendered at Law. — In this state a verdict upon an issue sent to a jury is, by statute, placed on the same footing with verdicts rendered in courts of law,

(3) Writs of Error. — According to the weight of authority, it is believed that a writ of error does not lie to review a verdict or judgment on issues in an equity case, or proceedings at the trial thereof.¹

(4) Where No Steps Are Taken to Avoid Verdict or Decree. — If the party dissatisfied with the verdict of the jury or the findings of the court makes no objection thereto, and takes no steps in the lower court to get rid of the decisions, the matter will not be reopened by the appellate court.²

b. REVIEW OF GRANT OR REFUSAL OF NEW TRIAL. — In some of the courts it has been held that the grant or refusal of a new trial of the issues is so much a matter of discretion in the court below as to render its action neither appealable nor reviewable.³ On the other hand, there are authorities holding that such action is reviewable on appeal.⁴

and if a motion for a new trial be made, there must be made a bill of exceptions embodying the evidence to enable the appellate court to determine as to the propriety of the action of the chancellor's court on that motion. State v. Farish, 23 Miss. 483.

1. In England it was held, in an early case, that the courts, on the waiver of the parties, might allow the verdict on the issues to be made the subject of a proceeding in error, as if a bill of exceptions had been regularly taken. Clayton v. Nugent, 8 Jur. 867.

In Pennsylvania, though the decisions are in a deplorably uncertain and conflicting condition, yet it seems that the general rule is that a writ of error does not lie to a judgment on issues submitted in an equity proceeding; but that where the proceeding is an action at law, or in the nature of a common-law proceeding, a writ of error is applicable. See Baker v. Williamson, 2 Pa. St. 116; Ingraham v. Caricabura, 5 Pa. St. 177; Com. v. Judges, 4 Pa. St. 301; Brown v. Parkinson, 56 Pa. St. 347; Vansant v. Boileau, 1 Binn. Issues from Probate Court in California. — In Matter of Bowen, 34 Cal. 687, it was said that an appeal must lie from the order of the District Court granting or refusing a new trial of issues sent from the Probate Court, since, otherwise, any error therein would be beyond the reach of correction.

Affirmance of Order Granting New Trial.

— In the bill of exceptions, the judge of the lower court certified that he granted a new trial of the issues upon a special ground, while the order directing it was general and specified no particular ground, as it appeared in the transcript of the record. The appellate court was governed by the latter, and there being much conflicting evidence, a considerable degree of irregularity in the proceedings on the trial, and no small amount of confusion in the jury's findings, the action of the court in ordering another hearing was held to be without error. Poullain v. Poullain, 72 Ga. 418.

c. TRANSMISSION OF EXCEPTIONS AND EVIDENCE. — As a general rule, the exceptions and objections taken and the evidence used on the trial of the issues should be certified to the appellate court.¹ If this be not done the appellate court, in some cases, will presume that the proper proceedings were had and the correct decisions made,² while in other cases it will consider itself incompetent to declare that entire justice was done and no injury caused.³

Abandonment of Appeal. — On appeal from the order of the judge denying a motion for a new trial on his minutes, in a case in New York, where issues had been submitted, it appeared that an order had been made at special term declaring the appeal to have been abandoned. It was held that, although no notice of the settlement of this order had been given the appellant, yet it was nevertheless in force, and that therefore, as the appeal had been declared to be abandoned, and the appellant's right to make a case gone, a motion to dismiss the appeal must be granted. Keck v. Werder, 37 N. Y. Super. Ct. 219.

In Jennings v. Durham, 101 Ind. 391, where issues in an equity case were submitted to a jury, and the court overruled a motion for a new trial, from which an appeal was taken, the appellate court held that since the question as to whether the decision was right or wrong depended upon the evidence, the ruling denying the motion could not be reviewed in the absence of the evidence.

Proper Judge to Certify Statement of Facts. — Where a suit is begun before a judge having charge of the equity cases arising in a county, and during its progress is transferred by him to another judge having charge of the jury cases, for the purpose of submitting certain questions of fact to a jury, the second judge acquires no jurisdiction of the suit, and, on appeal, the only judge authorized to certify a statement of the facts is the one who originally assumed jurisdiction. Hill v. Young, 7 Wash. 33.

2. Reading v. Ford, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 339.

Presumption as to Proper Issue and Evidence. — Thus, the record not containing all of the evidence submitted to the jury, the Supreme Court of Iowa presumed that the issue was properly made under the direction of the chancellor, and that none but the proper evidence was permitted to go to the jury. Chamberlain v. Juppiers, 11 Iowa 513.

Presumption as to the Decree Non Obstante Verdicto. — So, where no certified exceptions were brought before the chancellor in Alabama, and the record did not show what evidence was adduced on the trial before the jury, the appellate court could not declare that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree non obstante verdicto because the findings of the jury were not sustained by the depositions on file in the cause. Adams v. Munter, 74 Ala. 339.

Certification of Evidence but Not Facts Proved. — In Virginia and West Virginia, where a motion is made to set aside a verdict or grant a new trial of the issue out of chancery, and the motion is overruled by the court, and the bill of exceptions certifies the evidence but not the facts proved on the trial, the appellate court will not reverse the judgment and grant a new trial of the issues, unless, by rejecting the parol evidence of the exceptor and giving full force and credit to that of the adverse party, the decision of the court in overruling the motion for a new trial still appears to be wrong. Lamberts v. Cooper, 29 Gratt. (Va.) 61; Henry v. Davis, 7 W. Va. 715; Nease v. Capehart, 15 W. Va. 299.

3. See Sibert v. McAvoy, 15 Ill. 108; Johnson v. Johnson, 4 Wis. 140.

In George v. Pilcher, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 299, the appellate court reversed the decree of the court below, on the ground that the latter erred in not ordering a new trial of the issue, because of the improper exclusion of evidence offered at the trial. In the cases cited, the evidence introduced was not certified in the record, but some of the evidence was shown by bills of exceptions, from which it appeared that

d. SCOPE OF REVIEW. — On appeal, in an equity case where issues have been submitted to a jury, the correctness of the court's final decision, rather than the verdict, is the question for consideration.¹ The case, being an equitable one, comes before the appellate court as a rule upon the facts as well as the law.² Oftentimes the whole case will be reviewed, the record and evidence carefully examined, and the proper disposition of the case arrived at in this way.³

e. GENERAL EFFECT OF VERDICT AND ACTION OF COURT. — In an appellate court, as in the lower court, the verdict of the jury on the issues submitted is as a rule not conclusive, but merely advisory, and may be adopted, disregarded, or set aside, and the facts found differently or a new trial granted.⁴ The other evidence was given, though it did not appear what that evidence was. The appellate court considered it impossible to say that the party complaining was not injured by the exclusion of the aforesaid evidence. See Stephoe v. Pollard, 30 Gratt. (Va.) 705.

1. Still v. Saunders, 8 Cal. 287; Johnson v. Harmon, 94 U. S. 371; Dunn v. Dunn, 11 Mich. 284.

Review of Findings by the Court and Jury. — Under the practice in New York, the interlocutory and final decrees rest upon the court's findings without regard to those made by the jury, which latter are merely advisory, and are not matters of review except so far as included in the court's findings. Schneider v. Quosbarth, 19 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 527; Wallace v. American Linen Thread Co., 16 Hun (N. Y.) 404.

Case Reviewed as Though No Issues Submitted. — And so, in New York, when the case comes up on appeal, it is to be reviewed on the findings and decisions of the court, as if there had been no submission of any facts to the jury. Carroll v. Deimel, 95 N. Y. 252; Wallace v. American Linen Thread Co., 16 Hun (N. Y.) 404.

2. Whittemore v. Stout, 3 Dana (Ky.) 427; Gill v. Rice, 13 Wis. 549; Dearborn Foundry Co. v. Augustine, 5 Wash. 67.

In New York this point is involved in some doubt. In Miaghan v. Hartford F. Ins. Co., 12 Hun (N. Y.) 321, it was held that the case, when appealed, comes before the appellate court as an equity case on the facts. And in Matter of Smith, 19 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 252, it was held that if the Code of Civ. Pro., § 2588, as to framing issues for a jury trial after reversal of a decree in probate proceedings, applied to the Court of Appeals, it had no application to a reversal on questions of law, but only to a reversal upon a question of fact. In Vermilyea v. Palmer, 52 N. Y. 473, the court of appeals, after referring to the difference of opinion among judges and lawyers on this point, held that it possessed no power to review the facts. In Bradley v. Aldrich, 40 N. Y. 504, it was held that, under the laws of 1859, amended by the laws of 1860, the Court of Appeals could not deem the judgment of the special term of the Supreme Court to have been reversed by the general term of the Supreme Court upon questions of fact, unless it was so stated in the judgment of reversal; that, if the judgment of the Supreme Court did not show the reversal to have been on matters of fact, the Court of Appeals was compelled to treat it as having been ordered for errors in law, and would have to review the case upon that assumption. The court considered that, as a question of law, the appellate court might review the question as to whether or not the case should have been tried by the court, or on issues submitted to a jury.

verdict or decree is, however, entitled to much influence, and generally will not be set aside or disregarded unless clearly wrong.¹ And neither the verdict of the jury nor the decision of the lower court thereon will be disturbed when they concur in their findings, and are right upon the whole.²

f. WHERE VERDICT SHOULD HAVE BEEN DISREGARDED OR SET ASIDE. — Where it is apparent that the court below should have disregarded or set aside the verdict, but has not done so, the appellate court will grant relief and do what the lower court should have done, either decreeing on the facts or granting a new trial.³

Desaus. (S. Car.) 505; Pleasants v. Ross, 1 Wash. (Va.) 156; Garsed v. Beall, 92 U. S. 684. But see, for variations of this doctrine, Rucker v. Howard, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 166; O'Bryan v. O'Bryan, 13 Mo. 15; Setzer v. Beale, 19 W. Va. 289.

Equitable Case Treated as Action at Law. — Where the case, though an equitable one, has been treated as an action at law, the verdict is not merely advisory and it is not within the power or duty of the appellate court to disregard such a verdict and endeavor to find the facts from the evidence, and to render its decree in accordance with such facts. Carr v. Haskett, 110 Ind. 152.

The Effect of a Finding by the Court will be given to the verdict of the jury. Law v. Grant, 37 Wis. 548.

The Control of the Appellate Court over the Decree, in an equity case, is not taken away or limited by the submission of an issue and the rendition of a verdict upon which the decree of the chancellor was based. Freeman v. Staats, 9 N. J. Eq. 816.

1. Cox v. Cox, 91 Mo. 78; Swegle v. Wells, 7 Oregon 223; Morris v. Swaney, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 591; Garsed v. Beall, 92 U. S. 684.

In Illinois the rule is adopted, that where the court trying the issues saw and heard the witnesses, having the opportunity of observing them while they were testifying, the appellate court will attach much weight to the finding of the court, and will not reverse upon mere questions of fact, unless such finding is palpably erroneous. Hoobler v. Hoobler, 128 Ill. 645; Baker v. Rockabrand, 118 Ill. 370. But, where the evidence is in the form of depositions, the reason of the rule fails; the appellate court in such case, having the same facility of determining the truth or falsity of the testimony, should determine from the record the questions of fact as shall appear just and right. Baker v. Rockabrand, 118 Ill. 370; Farin v. Cox, 47 Ill. App. 273.

Disturbing Verdict on Affidavit of Jurors. — It is the general rule in ordinary trials that a verdict of the jury will not be disturbed by an appellate court upon the affidavits of jurors, and this rule is applied in the case of an issue out of chancery. Steptoe v. Flood, 31 Gratt. (Va.) 323.

2. Page v. Dixon, 59 Mo. 43; Gadsden v. Whaley, 14 S. Car. 217; Prestley v. Kemp, 16 S. Car. 342; Timmons v. Garrison, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 148; Almond v. Wilson, 75 Va. 626; McCully v. McCully, 78 Va. 159; Snouffer v. Hansbrough, 79 Va. 177; Prout v. Roby, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 471; Garsed v. Beall, 92 U. S. 684.

3. Arnold v. Sinclair, 12 Mont. 248; Will's Appeal, 22 Pa. St. 325.

Where Issue Improperly Awarded. — In Virginia and West Virginia where an issue has been improperly awarded, according to the proofs as they appear at the time of the submission, the chancery court, at the final hearing, should disregard the verdict and enter the appropriate decree on the facts; and if it does not do this the appellate court will correct the error. Wise v. Lamb, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 294; Vangilder v. Hoffman, 22 W. Va. 1; Mahnke v. Neale, 23 W. Va. 57.

Verdict Unresponsive. — So, in West Virginia, where the evidence is so conflicting that it is the duty of the chancery court to order an issue, and the verdict of the jury is not responsive thereto, the chancery court should set it aside and order a new trial. If instead of doing this it enters a decree on the verdict, the appellate court will reverse the decree, set aside the verdict,

g. VERDICT GENERAL INSTEAD OF SPECIAL. — Where a general verdict has been rendered in a case in which special issues were or should have been submitted, instead of distinct findings on each issue, and the judgment or decree of the lower court was based on this general verdict, the appellate court may reverse and remand the cause for this error.¹ If, however, the general verdict was taken and received without objection, or the court, after the coming in thereof, treated it as merely advisory and made its own findings on the facts, the error will not usually be regarded as sufficiently material to call for a reversal.²

h. VERDICT OR DECREE AGAINST EVIDENCE OR WEIGHT THEREOF. — In some cases it has been held that where the verdict or findings are unsupported by the evidence, or are against the weight thereof, the appellate court, considering that the conscience of the court below should not have been satisfied, may set aside the verdict and reverse the decree, either rendering its own decree on the facts as they appear, or remanding the cause for a new trial, as the case may be.³ In other cases it is held that, where there was a substantial conflict in the evidence on which the verdict of the jury and the action of the court were founded, the appellate court will not set aside the verdict or reverse the decree, unless the evidence clearly preponderated against the findings.⁴ Therefore, according to this doctrine, if the findings of and direct a new trial upon the issues. Marshall v. Marshall, 18 W. Va. 395.

Setting Aside Prior Verdict. — In Kerr v. South Park Com'rs, 117 U. S. 379, the Supreme Court was asked to disregard the verdict recited in the decree, and to reverse the decree itself, because, as alleged, there was a prior verdict rendered on the same issues, which had never been regularly or lawfully set aside. No such verdict appeared in the record otherwise than by a recital in an order of the court by which it was set aside and a new trial awarded. It was objected that this proceeding was on the law side of the court, and that the verdict was never certified to the chancery side, where alone proceedings to set it aside could have been properly taken. The Supreme Court remarked that it was difficult to keep entirely separate proceedings in the same case, taking place part on the law side and part on the chancery side of the court, all conducted by the same judge; but held that no confusion resulted in the case under consideration, because whatever was done on the law side was approved and adopted by the chancellor, who in framing his decree on the basis of the last verdict necessarily confirmed the action of the circuit judge in setting aside the previous verdict. The decree was affirmed.

Where the Issues Are of Right, the verdict is not merely advisory, and the question whether it should be set aside as contrary to the evidence must be determined by the appellate court upon the same principles as are applicable to trials at law. Richmond v. Richmond, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 343.

4. Wakefield v. Bouton, 55 Cal. 109; Stockman v. Riverside Land, etc., Co., 64 Cal. 57; Sweetser v. Dobbins, 65 Cal. 529; Macon v. Harris, 75 Ga. 761; Hoobler v. Hoobler, 128 Ill. 651;

the jury, or the action of the court thereon, are not contrary to the weight of evidence, or are sufficiently sustained thereby, the court, on appeal, will not disturb them, but will enter an affirmance.¹ Indeed, some cases have gone so far as to hold that the appellate court will not review the testimony, or disturb the findings and judgment if any proof at all sustains them.²

2. WHERE ERRORS OR IRREGULARITIES OCCURRED AT THE TRIAL — In General. — Neither the lower court which, in its discretion, has submitted issues to a jury, nor the appellate court, is bound by the verdict. They may adopt it, but it is equally within their power to set it aside, or disregard it and revert to the cause as it was before the issues were considered. Therefore, if it appears to the appellate court that substantial justice has been done, and that on the whole the verdict and decree thereon is right, it may overlook and disregard any errors, irregularities, or illegalities which may have occurred at the trial.³

In Instructions or Directions. — Since ordinarily the court is not bound to instruct the jury trying issues in an equity case, its

In Reed v. Axtell, 84 Va. 231, the evidence, though brief, fully sustained, in the opinion of the appellate court, the action of the lower court in setting aside or disregarding the verdict, and refusing a new trial.

In Virginia the rule is well settled that where, because of a conflict of testimony, an issue is directed, the solution of which depends on the weight of evidence, and the verdict is sanctioned by the trial court, the appellate court will consider not merely whether the evidence warrants the verdict, but also whether, upon the whole, further investigation is necessary to attain the ends of justice; and, if not, no new trial will be granted. In Virginia the settled rule is that where the evidence is conflicting and the verdict is approved by the court submitting the issues, the appellate court will consider not merely whether the verdict is warranted by the evidence, but also whether further investigation is necessary for the purposes of justice; and will not grant a new trial if the verdict and decision appear to be right, though errors occurred at the trial, in the rulings or directions of the judge. Appellate Decision on Decree and Whole Case. — In the federal courts a decree in equity, when appealed from, does not stand or fall according to the legality or illegality of the proceedings on the trial of an issue in the cause; for the verdict may or may not have been the basis of the decree. It is the duty of the court in the first instance to decide upon the whole case, pleadings, evidence, and verdict, giving to the latter so much effect as it is worth. An appeal from the decree must be decided in the same way, namely, upon the whole case, and cannot be made to turn upon the correctness or incorrectness of the judge's rulings upon the trial of refusal to instruct or charge them does not constitute reversible error, the appellate court considering no injury to have been caused.¹ The correctness of the final decision of the court upon the advisory verdict of a jury upon the issues submitted is the question for the consideration of an appellate court, and if that decision is right and just on the whole, any errors in the instructions or directions of the trial court become immaterial, and on appeal need not be reviewed nor noticed, and afford no cause for reversal.² the issue. Johnson v. Harmon, 94 U. S. 371. See Wilson v. Riddle, 123 U. S. 615.

Inquiry as to Summoning or Impaneling Jury. — A jury having been ordered by the Circuit Court of Baltimore City, in virtue of statutory provisions, and the sheriff having made return that he had summoned twenty lawful jurors, the Court of Appeals held that it could not inquire whether they were a part of the panel summoned, nor whether or not they were in attendance on some other court. Barth v. Rosenfeld, 36 Md. 605.

Verdict Annulled by Law Side of Court — No Certification to Chancery Side. — The setting aside of a prior verdict or issues by the law side of a court, with no certification thereof to the chancery side for the proper proceedings, is confirmed by the chancery side, when it accepts a subsequent verdict on the same issues, and bases its decree on it. For such informalities or irregularity the decree will not be reversed. Kerr v. South Park Com'rs, 117 U. S. 379.

Certification that Verdict Is Against Evidence. — Where the judge submitting an issue on the chancery side of the court is the one who tries it on the law side, his order setting aside the verdict as contrary to the evidence will not be reversed because of the failure of the judge on the law side to certify to himself on the chancery side that the verdict was against the evidence, though it might have been more formal to do so. Lavell v. Gold, 25 Gratt. (Va.) 473.

If Judgment Be Entered by the Trial Court, on a verdict on issues sent from another court, this is error usually sufficient to cause a reversal and setting aside of such judgment. Finney v. Moore, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 345.

If Any Error of Law is committed on the trial of issues, it has been held that the objection that the verdict is against evidence cannot be made available for a new trial in an appellate court. McKinley v. Lamb, 64 Barb. (N. Y.) 199.

In Admission or Rejection of Evidence. — On the foregoing principles, error in the admission of improper or in the rejection of proper evidence, on the trial of equitable issues, will not be regarded as material on appeal, unless the verdict of the jury or the court's decision thereon be unduly affected. Notwithstanding any such errors, if it can be seen that the verdict or the decision of the court on it is right, no cause for reversal is shown, and the appellate court will not hesitate to enter an affirmance.¹

The Omission to Read Papers filed in the cause will not be ground for reversing the proceedings where no directions were given respecting them and the court of chancery refuses a new trial. Ford v. Gardner, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 72.

If a Serious Error as to the Admission or Rejection of Evidence is committed by a judge on the trial of the equitable issues, and the verdict is incorporated into a final decree, a party considering himself aggrieved may except to that decree on the ground of error in the trial of the issues, since, if such error were committed, it would attach to all the subsequent proceedings and affect the final result. Woolfolk v. Graniteville Mfg. Co., 22 S. Car. 332.

Where the Excluded Evidence Has Not Been Certified to the appellate court, it may not be able to say that no injury has been caused, and may reverse and remand the case on the ground of exclusion of corroborating evidence. George v. Pilcher, 28 Gratt. (Va.) 319.

Where Issues Are of Right and are not dependent for their submission on the discretion of the court, the verdict is not advisory but conclusive, and exceptions taken at the trial to the admissibility of the evidence may be considered on appeal. Jones v. Jones, 120 N. Y. 589.

But even where a party is given a right to demand a jury in an equity case this does not preclude the court, on its own motion, from ordering a jury to try issues of fact; and the verdict in such case is advisory, and error cannot be urged in the appellate court in respect to the evidence received or rejected in the court below. Huse v. Washburn, 59 Wis. 414.

2. Objections to Form, Settlement, Methods of Submission, etc. — If no objections are made in the court below to the form of the issues, their settlement and framing, or the method of their submission, such objection cannot be taken and will not be considered in the appellate court. Barth v. Rosenfeld, 36 Md. 605; Chamberlain v. Juppiers, 11 Iowa 513; Smith v. Smith, 21 Ala. 761; Madison University v. White, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 490.

Objections to Testimony. — The testimony given on the trial of the issues which is not objected to at the time is competent, and will not be considered on appeal. Minton v. Pickens, 24 S. Car. 592.

4. Direction of Issue by Appellate Court. — As previously seen, the appellate court in reversing and remanding a cause to the lower court frequently directs the latter to make up and submit to a jury appropriate issues.¹ So where an appellate court is investigating a cause on its merits, and questions of fact arise which render a jury trial desirable, the court may send issues therefrom or direct a lower court to submit them.²

5. Decree on Merits or Remand of Case. — Whether the appeal be from an interlocutory order directing the issues,³ or from a verdict and decree thereon, the appellate court may, in many cases, have a retrial and enter a proper decree on the merits without remanding the cause.⁴ Frequently, however, the case will

If No Objection Is Made to the Verdict or Findings thereon in the court below, the objection cannot be made to them in the appellate court, and they will be regarded as established facts of the case. *Paul v. Objections to General Verdict. — If a general verdict, instead of a special, is rendered on the issues, yet if no objection was raised to this course of proceedings, the irregularity will not be considered in the determination of the appeal. Lestrade v. Barth, 19 Cal. 660.

Exceptions and Objections Brought to Notice of Court Ordering Issues. — According to approved chancery practice, exceptions taken or objections made to the verdict or proceedings on the trial at law of issues from chancery must be brought to the notice of the court of chancery, else they cannot be urged in an appellate court. Brockett v. Brockett, 3 How. (U. S.) 691.

Conflict in Depositions Transmitted to Supreme Court. — In North Carolina, under the early practice, when the depositions of witnesses in an equity suit transmitted to the Supreme Court for hearing were in such direct conflict with each other that it was evident that perjury had been committed, but the court, could not tell on which side the guilt lay, it would direct feigned issues to be made up and tried in the superior court, where the witnesses might be personally examined in open court, instead of impaneling a jury before the Supreme Court, under the special authority conferred upon it for that purpose, where such personal examination could not be had. Witherspoon v. Dula, 2 Dev. & B. Eq (N. Car.) 279.

Issues on Appeal from Probate Judges. — In New Hampshire, by virtue of statutory authority, the appellate court may, in its discretion, send any questions of fact to a jury that it deems proper on appeals from judges of probate. Patrick v. Cowles, 45 N. H. 553.

Improper Direction of Issue. — In reviewing a decree founded on the verdict of a jury on issues, if the appellate court is satisfied that the chancellor improperly exercised his discretion in directing an issue, it will, in many cases, render a decree notwithstanding the verdict, according to the merits as disclosed by the proofs at the time the issue was ordered. Jarrett v. Jarrett, 11 W. Va. 585; Smith v. Betty, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 752. See Atwood v. Smith, 11 Ala. 894.

be remanded for proper proceedings or a new trial,¹ and in some instances such a course must be pursued.²

XVII. ACTION DIRECTED INSTEAD OF ISSUE — 1. In General. — Instead of directing an issue a court of equity may retain the bill and direct an action at law to be brought and prosecuted.³ But

1. Williams v. Bishop, 15 Ill. 553.

2. Where Issues Are Set Aside for Being Improperly Ordered, in the actual state of the case, but there was evidence which, if regularly taken, would have rendered the order for the issue proper, it was held in Virginia that the appellate court so setting aside the order for the issue should, under the circumstances, remand the cause to the court of chancery, where the evidence may be regularly taken and thereupon the issues ordered anew. Watkins v. Carlton, 10 Leigh (Va.) 586.

Where Issues Are of Right. — In Tennessee the submission of issues is a matter of right with the parties, and by the code any errors in the proceedings on such issues can only be corrected as errors are corrected in actions at law; therefore, if a material issue has been submitted and the findings thereon are unsatisfactory to the appellate court, the decree of judgment must be reversed and the case remanded for a new trial. James v. Brooks, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 150; Memphis First Nat. Bank v. Oldham, 6 Lea (Tenn.) 729. Where, however, the issue decided was not a material issue in the cause, and the appellate court is satisfied that if the proper issue had been submitted it should have been differently found, it will regard the cause upon its facts as if the chancellor had determined them for himself, and will reverse the decree and grant full relief without remanding the cause for a proper issue. Gass v. Mason, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 497.

Equitable Cause Tried as Action at Law. — Although the case is one of exclusive equitable jurisdiction, yet where the court did not exercise its equitable powers in this regard, but had the entire cause tried by a jury and rendered judgment in accordance with the verdict, the Supreme Court, on appeal, has no power to disregard the verdict, and, looking to the evidence, render such a judgment as the facts may warrant. If in such case the verdict is against the evidence, the Supreme Court will reverse the judgment and remand the cause for a new trial. Carr v. Haskett, 110 Ind. 152.

The power of the court of chancery to order an issue instead of allowing an action at law to be brought, is indisputable where an issue is applied for or assented to by the parties. The general rule is that the court of equity has no jurisdiction to establish by its decree the title to lands, its jurisdiction being limited to an interposition to quiet the possession of a party after his title has been determined by a court of law. American Dock, etc., Co. v. Public Schools, 37 N. J. Eq. 266.

General Principles Pertaining to Action and Order Therefor — New Jersey. — Questions of law and fact (as to the existence or validity of deeds, etc.) may be investigated and tried under the direction of the court of chancery either by feigned issue or by action at law brought and prosecuted under an order of the court to which resort is frequently had on proper occasions. The proceeding by action in the case cited below being, in the opinion of the chancellor, more convenient and eligible than a feigned issue, it was directed by an interlocutory order "that an action at law in ejectment be brought and prosecuted in the Supreme Court by the complainant, in the name of John Den, as his lessee; that in this action the

the court is in general under no obligation to pursue this course, and may decline to direct an action.¹ The principles and procedure pertaining to issues are oftentimes applicable where an action is directed, but there are in many cases radical differences.²

2. Object and Grounds. — In directing an action the court does not, as in directing an issue, seek the aid of a court of law for its own satisfaction; but it directs an action to be brought upon the ground that the matter in controversy, being a legal right, ought to be determined by the judgment of a court of law.³

plaintiff declare for nine undivided tenth parts of the premises in question; that the defendants in this cause, excepting the administrators and heirs of William Caskey, do appear thereto, and be made defendants therein upon the exchange of the consent rules; that the issue to be joined be tried in the circuit court in and for the county of Sussex; and upon the trial, besides the ordinary confession of lease, entry and ouster, the defendants do admit themselves to have been in possession of the premises demanded at the commencement of the action of ejectment; and also that on and before the first day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixteen, the said John Caskey was seized in his demesnes as of fee and possessed of the premises in question; that upon the return of the posse in the said action into the Supreme Court, the same be duly certified into this court; that either party be at liberty pending the said action to apply to this court for directions therein if need be; and that all further equity and the matter of costs be reserved for a further hearing, and for the final decree of the court of chancery in this cause." Decker v. Caskey, 1 N. J. Eq. 427.

Determining Whether Order Is for Issue or Action. — Whether an order is for an action at law or an issue out of chancery, does not depend upon the form in which the issue is framed, but the order of the chancellor directing the issue must be looked to in order to decide whether the issue is one out of chancery or an ordinary action at law. American Dock, etc., Co. v. Public Schools, 37 N. J. Eq. 266.

2. The differences between an action and an issue will be shown in this section. For questions where the principle and procedure in the two cases are the same, the preceding sections of this article are to be consulted.

3. Fisher v. Carroll, 1 Jones L. (N. Car.) 27.

Action Directed with View to New Trial. — In Farnsworth v. Arnold, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 255, it was said that it may be laid down as a general rule, that whenever the foundation of a claim is a legal demand, and the question whether a new trial should or should not be had can be discussed with more satisfaction in a court of law, the court of equity will adopt the course of directing an action.

Where Defendant's Rights May Be Embarrassed by Statute of Limitations. — Where litigation is pending in the chancery court, and the defendant apprehends that his rights may be embarrassed if not defeated by the running of the statute of limitations, if the bill should ultimately be dismissed, he may be allowed for his protection to try the title to the lands in controversy by an action of ejectment at law. American Dock, etc., Co. v. Public Schools, 36 N. J. Eq. 16.

Case Proper for Action at Law. — Where equity is based on a disputed legal right, but the trial of such right at law is prevented by some impediment, e. g., where ejectment cannot be brought because of an outstanding term; or where a defense set up in equity involved a legal right, e. g., a bill for partition between tenants in common, the defendant setting up a claim in severalty; a court of equity instead of deciding upon the legal right may direct an action at law and retain the cause for further directions, contenting itself with merely removing the impediments and requiring the parties to make all necessary admissions, for the purpose of having the right determined according to the course of the courts at law, by directing that the outstanding term in the first case shall not be insisted upon,

3. The Trial. — Where a cause is allowed to stand over with leave to bring an action, or directing an action at law, the action is prosecuted and the trial had in compliance with the practice and proceedings in ordinary actions at law.¹

4. New Trial. — Where a new trial of an action is desired, the motion therefor is to be made, not as in the case of an issue in the equity court which directed it, but in the court of law in which the action was tried; the latter court alone having the authority to grant the motion, as a rule.² Consequently the question whether or not a new trial of the action is to be granted is regulated by the rules pertaining to new trials of ordinary actions at law.³

and in the other that the defendant shall admit an actual ouster. Fisher v. Carroll, 1 Jones L. (N. Car.) 27.

Time of Bringing Action and Going to Trial. — Where a plaintiff's bill is retained with liberty to prosecute an action at law, it is held that he is bound to proceed with all reasonable diligence and is not entitled to wait till the forms of common-law procedure compel him to go on. Arnold v. Thompson, 32 L. J. Ch. 40.

Usually the order directing the action should limit the time within which it is to be brought, or the trial had, and further direct that the bill will be dismissed if the proceedings be not had within the time limited. Wood v. Rowcliffe, 2 Phil. 382, 11 Jur. 915; O'Grady v. Kinsale, 5 Bro. P. C. 456; Farina v. Silverlock, 1 De G. & J. 434; Swanger v. Gardner, 3 De G. & Sm. 696; Stevens v. Praed, 2 Cox 374, 2 Ves. Jr. 519.

If the plaintiff does not try the action within the time limited by the order, it has been decided that the bill is not ipso facto out of court, but the defendant must either set down the cause for further directions, or move to dismiss the bill. Stevens v. Praed, 2 Cox 374, 2 Ves. Jr. 519. The court may thereupon dismiss the bill with costs. O'Grady v. Kinsale, 5 Bro. P. C. 456. Or upon the plaintiff's application it may enlarge the time. Swanger v.

Judgment at Law is to be entered as in ordinary actions. American Dock, etc., Co. v. Public Schools, 37 N. J. Eq. 266. And if there is no judgment of the law court, an appeal will be dismissed and the proceedings certified back, to the end that the action may be proceeded with and tried as instituted. *Fisher v. Power of Chancery Court to Order New Trial. — In Farnsworth v. Arnold, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 257, the rule as announced in the text was recognized and adopted, but it was said that sometimes, upon a proper application and on a proper case made, the court of chancery might set aside the verdict, and grant a new trial at law.

The proper course is not to set down the cause on the postea, or as on the equity reserved, but to set it down for further directions, and give the verdict

b. EFFECT OF VERDICT AND JUDGMENT. — The verdict and judgment rendered on an action are not merely advisory, but are, in general, conclusive, and will be accepted in the equity court as finalities.¹

6. Costs. — The principles and proceedings relative to the question of costs in case of an issue are in the main applicable where the substitute of an action is adopted, with such changes and modifications as may be called for by reason of the difference between the natures of the two proceedings.²

7. Appellate Review. — The proceedings on the action are reviewable by rule to show cause, and writ of error in the usual manner, by certiorari and appeal, according to the applicability of these remedies, and bills of exceptions may present error for the consideration of the appellate court. In short, the review may be had in the same manner as if the suit were an independent one instituted without the intervention of a court of equity.³

and judgment at law in evidence. Wing v. Murrell, McClel. & Y. 620.

Errors and Mistakes at Law cannot usually be corrected by the equity court after the cause has come on for further directions. Farnsworth v. Arnold, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 256. See Luscombe v. Callaghan, 1 Moll. 204; Hope v. Hope, 10 Beav. 581.

The Action Will Be Directed in Such Form that the result will be regarded as conclusive. Farnsworth v. Arnold, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 255.

The Judgment in the Action Is Final and Conclusive, the equity court reserving no equity and exercising no discretion as in ordinary suits; and a party complaining that by the rules of pleading and the form of the trial at law his equitable case was excluded, can only have the benefit of it in the suit by having a rehearing, to show that the case was not fit to be sent to law, but exclusively for the consideration of a court of equity; or he may file a bill which, although it does not stay the payment out of money to the defendant who has succeeded in the action, yet is not prejudiced by it. Luscombe v. Callaghan, 1 Moll. 204.

Rendering a Decree Contrary to the Verdict is a power applicable in case of issues, but not where leave is granted to bring an action, and relief is made dependent on its success. At the same time, the court of equity is not bound by the amount of damages awarded by the jury, but will give the full relief to which the plaintiff is entitled in equity. M'Rea v. Holdsworth, 18 W. R. 489.

2. See supra, XV. Costs.

Costs Paid by Losing Defendant. — Where, on a bill of interpleader, an action at law has been directed, the costs of all parties to the bill must be paid by the defendant who fails, even although the failure was owing to his adopting or submitting to a course of trial in which he could not have the benefit of his equity; the rule that the losing defendant pays all costs being general, though not universal. Luscombe v. Callaghan, 1 Moll. 204.

Costs of Petition and Action. — Where a party petitions against the decision of commissioners, and an action is directed to be brought, the result of which is in his favor, he is not entitled to the costs of the petition, but only to the costs of the action. Ex p. Millington, 3 Dea. & Ch. 307. 1 Mont. & A. 114.

Motion for Security for Costs Where Plaintiff Is Nonresident. — Where an action is directed to be brought in a court of law, and the plaintiff resides abroad, the motion for security for costs is to be made in the court of equity. Desprez v. Mitchell, 5 Madd. 87.

It was said in Fisher v. Carroll, 1 Jones L. (N. Car.) 27, that where an action is directed out of chancery, the transcript should be returned to the law side of the appellate court, and be considered as a distinct case in that court.

JEOFAILS.

Origin of the Term.—Certain English statutes of amendment and jeofails were so called because when a pleader perceived any slip in the form of his proceedings, and acknowledged such error (jéo faile, I have failed), he was at liberty by those statutes to amend it.¹

Distinction Between Amendment and Jeofails.—In practice, where any distinction is made, the term "amendment" is usually confined to such corrections as are actually made in the process pleadings or other proceedings,² and the term "jeofails" is used to denote those statutory provisions under which certain imperfections or omissions are cured by the mere force of the statute.³

Scope of Statutes, and Treatment of Subject in This Work.—At common law certain defects in pleadings in civil and in criminal cases⁴ are cured by verdict.⁵ The English statutes of jeofails did not extend to criminal cases.⁶ In the United States there have been enacted in every jurisdiction statutes providing either that judgments in civil cases shall not be reversed or impaired by reason of certain enumerated imperfections or defects in the pleadings and proceedings, or that the court may in every stage of the action disregard errors or defects not affecting the substantial rights of the parties. Statutes of a similar nature applicable to the pleadings in criminal proceedings have been enacted in most of the states. In accordance with the universal custom in modern treatises and compilations the subject of jeofails in this work is merged in the titles treating of the various pleadings and proceedings which may be affected by the operation of the statutes.⁷

I. ACTIONS AND SUITS INTER SESE — 1. Account at Common Law.

— By the Ancient Common Law no action ex contractu would lie by one tenant in common against his companion for profits or income of the common property unless he had been appointed bailiff by his cotenant, this condition of the law following from the nature of the tenant's title.¹ But this old doctrine of the common law

"If one joint tenant, or tenant in common of land," says Coke, "maketh his companion his bailiff of his part, he shall have an action of account against him, as hath been said. But although one tenant in common, or joint tenant, without being made bailiff, take the whole profits, no action of account lieth against him; for in an action of account he must charge either as a guardian, bailiff, or receiver, as hath been said before; which he cannot do in this case, unless his companion constitute him his bailiff. And therefore, all those books which affirm that an action of account lieth by one tenant in common or joint tenant against another must be intended, when the one maketh the other his bailiff, for otherwise never his bailiff to render an account is a good plea." 1 Tho. Coke, 787 marg., quoted in Early v. Friend, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 42.

Destruction of Tenancy by Sale. — But if a personal chattel were sold by a joint tenant an action of account would lie against the other for his share of the money, or an action on the case for money had and received, because the sale destroyed the joint interest and was changed by a statute which made the tenant who received more than his just share ipso facto bailiff of his cotenant for such excess.¹ The liability thus created has become the law of this country or the foundation for other statutory provisions changing the original right or creating a remedy.²

Account Only for Actual Receipts. — But the action of account given by the statute of Anne is for actual receipts of profits, and not for a mere use or occupation by the cotenant who offers no hindrance to a like enjoyment by his companion, and in the absence of contract between them.³

Necessary Allegations. — In order to entitle the plaintiff to the benefit of the statute, where the liability is regulated thereby, he must allege specifically in his declaration the facts necessary to bring the case within the statute, viz., the joint tenancy or each had a separate interest in the money. Chambers v. Chambers, 3 Hawks (N. Car.) 233; Blanton v. Vanzant, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 276; Miller v. Miller, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 34; Sherman v. Ballou, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 304; Martyn v. Knowllys, 8 T. R. 145; Wheeler v. Horne, Willes 209.

As to Liability of Joint Tenants and Tenants in Common generally, see article Joint Tenants and Tenants in Common, Am. and Eng. Encyc. of Law.

Profits from Distinct Shares. — Where one tenant in common rents a distinct share, and the other is not prevented from using his proportionate share of the property, the latter cannot maintain an action for any part of the rent received by the former. Scantlin v. Allison, 32 Kan. 376.

Rent Under Contract. — Tenants in common of real estate may contract with each other for the exclusive right to the use and occupancy of the same, and those acquiring rights by renting from the others are liable to an action for the rent due upon such contract. Cahoon v. Kinen, 42 Ohio St. 190, wherein it is said that the right to maintain such an action grows out of the contract relations of the parties, and not out of their relations as tenants in common. See also article LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Abandoning Contract for Case. — Where the law, from a given statement of facts, raises an obligation to do a particular act, and there is a breach of that obligation, and consequent damage, an action on the case, founded on the tort, is the proper action. Bond v. Hilton, Busb. L. (N. Car.) 308.

tenancy in common of the plaintiff and defendant, the proportions in which they severally hold, and that the defendant has received more than his just share or proportion.¹

2. Assumpsit. — The early cases held that a tenant in common cannot in general sue his cotenant in assumpsit when the latter has received the rents, etc., but that he must proceed by action of account, or bill in equity.² But assumpsit was soon regarded the more appropriate form of action, avoiding the prolixity of the old action of account, and the latter has been very generally superseded by assumpsit, or by a civil action for money in the nature thereof under the statutory or code practice prevailing.³

1. Action on Statute. — It is said that under the statute of Anne it is not the action of account, but an action upon the statute, or upon the particular circumstances which give the action, that ought to be brought, and that this was determined in the case of Wheeler v. Horne, Willes 208. Hayden v. Merrill, 44 Vt. 336; Sargent v. Parsons, 12 Mass. 152.

If the Liability as Bailiff at Common Law is sought to be enforced, a complaint is fatally defective in not averring that the defendant occupied the premises upon any agreement with the plaintiff as receiver or bailiff of his share of the rents and profits. It is not only essential to a recovery that this circumstance exist, but the complaint must allege it. Pico v. Columbet, 12 Cal. 414.

To charge a cotenant as bailiff it is not necessary to allege a receipt of more than his share, as this is not material to the common-law liability to account. Barnum v. Landon, 25 Conn. 137.

Pennsylvania. — Winton Coal Co. v. Pancoast Coal Co., 170 Pa. St. 437; Borrell v. Borrell, 33 Pa. St. 492 (wherein the court casts some pleasant ridicule upon the old action of account for its "cumbrous machinery and want of speed," and announces the determination "to allow common sense another triumph" by holding the action of assumpsit maintainable in such cases); Gillis v. M'Kinney, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 78.

Tennessee. — Blanton v. Vanzant, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 276.

In Williams v. Chadbourne, 6 Cal. 559, it was held that where one tenant in common appropriates the proceeds of the property to his own use, the remedy is by an action in trover or for money had and received, and a declaration for goods sold and delivered will not support a judgment in such a cause.

Under Express Statutes this form of action is often appropriate, Dyer v. Wilbur, 48 Me. 287; Hudson v. Coe, 79 Me. 83; Richardson v. Richardson, 72 Me. 406; Kean v. Connolly, 25 Minn. 222; though, independently of the provisions of such statutes, the right of one tenant in common to maintain an action of assumpsit against a cotenant who had received in money more than his share of the income of the estate is

On the other hand, assumpsit has been held to be inappropriate unless there has been a final balance of all accounts between the tenants and a particular sum found due from one to the other.¹

3. Action for Repairs and Improvements. — At common law there was a writ to compel cotenants to join in making necessary repairs.² But it seems there was no action by which one tenant could recover from the other a share of expense incurred for repairs already made.³ This view has been adopted in the United States in the absence of any change in the common law,⁴ though the authorities are not uniform, it being also held that assumpsit will lie to recover a share of necessary expense for repairs.⁵ And while there is some disagreement in the cases upon such question, it seems to be well settled that a recovery for such repairs can be had in equity in a suit for partition,⁶ as well as in other cases wherein the question has been rather upon the liability than recognized, Richardson v. Richardson, 72 Me. 406.

In New Hampshire, construing a statute providing that "if any cotenant of any real estate shall hold the exclusive possession and income thereof against the will and without the consent of his cotenant, the cotenant so excluded may, in action of assumpsit, recover of the person holding such possession the full amount of all damages he may have sustained thereby," it was held that by this provision it was intended to provide a more simple and direct remedy for the cotenant who had been excluded or ousted of the possession of the common land; that it could not have been intended to change the whole common law in regard to the nature of tenancies in common, but rather that this new remedy should be confined to the case stated in the statute where the holding by one tenant was without the consent and against the will of the cotenant. Webster v. Calef, 47 N. H. 294.

1. Hamilton v. Conine, 28 Md. 635, wherein it is said that the rules of law governing actions between partners apply with equal force to tenants in common.

2. Writ De Reparationes. — At common law, where one of the tenants in common was willing to repair, but the other was not, he that was willing might have had a writ de reparatione facienda, which writ ran ad reparationem et sustentationem ejusdem domus tenetur, whereby it appeared that owners were bound pro bono publico to maintain houses and mills which were for the habitation and use of man. Co. Litt. 200b, 54b, cited in Dech's Appeal, 57

Pa. St. 467; Calvert v. Aldrich, 99 Mass. 74.

3. Calvert v. Aldrich, 99 Mass. 74.

This old writ was not for the purpose of requiring contribution for repairs already made, but to force a cotenant to join in making such repairs as were proper. McDearman v. McClure, 31 Ark. 562; Calvert v. Aldrich, 99 Mass. 74, disapproving what is said obiter to the contrary in Mumford v. Brown, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 475, and Coffin v. Heath, 6 Met. upon the form of action in which the liability should be fixed;¹ but, of course, persons who stand in such relations to each other may modify their relative common-law rights by express agreement, under which an action will lie independently of their other relations.²

4. Replevin and Detinue. — One tenant in common or joint tenant having an equal right to the possession with his companion, no action can be brought by the one to disturb the other in such possession;³ and, it being the rule that in order to maintain replevin the plaintiff must have the right of possession, a tenant in common or joint tenant cannot maintain such action against his cotenant, each having an equal right of possession,⁴ but must

Reimbursement in Ejectment. — In ejectment by one tenant in common against his cotenant, who had been in possession of the entire premises, holding adversely and in good faith on a deed which was adjudged to be void, the defendant was allowed to be reimbursed for one-half the values of repairs and improvements made by him. Stewart v. Stewart, 90 Wis. 516.

But in an action of ejectment by one tenant in common against another for the possession of an equal undivided part of the estate, such a claim cannot be set up to defeat the right of possession. Young v. Gammel, 4 Greene (Iowa) 211, wherein it is said. "Whatever may be the equitable rights and remedy of the defendant, they cannot be maintained as set up here, in set-off of the claim of the plaintiffs to possession of the land as tenants in common. To permit it would be to furnish an easy mode for one tenant in common to encumber the estate of his cotenants who are minors, and hold them dispossessed, and work at his own option a privation of their right."

Defalked Against Mesne Profits. — Improvements may be had by defalk against a claim for mesne profits. Walker v. Humbert, 55 Pa. St. 408; Ewalt v. Gray, 6 Watts (Pa.) 428; Morrison v. Robinson, 31 Pa. St. 456; Davis v. Louk, 30 Wis. 308.

Accounting. — Where one tenant is called upon in an action or suit for an accounting, he may have credit for repairs. Dech's Appeal, 57 Pa. St. 467; Anderson v. Greble, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 136; Pickering v. Pickering, 63 N. H. 468.

Divisible Property. — It is held that one tenant in common of grain, as under a contract to farm on shares, may maintain an action of replevin against his cotenant who unlawfully withholds his share. Freese v. Arnold, 99 Mich. 13 [citing Crapo v. Seybold, 36 Mich. 444; Sutherland v. Carter, 52 Mich. 471; Wattles v. Dubois, 67 Mich. 313]. But see infra, I. 6. b. Property of Divisible Nature.

In Schwartz v. Skinner, 47 Cal. 6, which was under a statute providing that tenants in common "may jointly or severally bring or defend any civil action for the enforcement or protection of the rights of such party," the action was replevin for seventeen-thirtieths of the furniture used in a hotel. The complaint contained all the allegations essential in trover, which were sustained by the findings, and the findings expressed all the facts in the case. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the District Court, which was for the defendant, "with directions to render judgment for the plaintiff on the findings." This case is said to be distinguishable from the line of authorities which hold that an action of replevin cannot be brought by tenants in common against each other, but is unsatisfactory in any view, especially if read in the light of Hewlett v. Owens, 50 Cal. 474, wherein it was said: "Being tenants in common, neither could, under the circumstances appearing in this case, maintain replevin against the other." This is said to be in harmony with the almost unbroken current of authority and not inconsistent with the California statute. Hill v. Seager, 3 Utah 379.

Trespass Quare Clausum Fregit. — In Anders v. Meredith, 4 Dev. & B. L. (N. Car.) 199, it was said that one tenant in common might have an action on the case against his cotenant for an act done on the land amounting to waste or destruction, but that in no event could he have an action of trespass quare clausum fregit against him.

In Vermont it was held that trespass quare clausum fregit could not be maintained by one tenant in common against another who entered upon the common property claiming the exclusive ownership thereof and cut all the timber there standing. Reviewing the language of the judge in Kirby v. Mayo, 13 Vt. 103, the court said: "He announced in general terms a very old and well established doctrine, that 'the possession of a tenant in common, as well as that of a tenant at will, may become adverse, so that his cotenant or the landlord may treat him as a trespasser, and maintain an action against him as such.' And in consequence of such adverse possession by the defendant in that case, the court held that the plaintiff had lost his right in common to the property in question. We think it clear that the learned judge did not intend, by using the term 'trespasser,' to convey the idea that the party might be pursued by a

by one joint tenant or tenant in common against his cotenant depends upon the determination whether there has been an ouster or a complete destruction of the subject of the tenancy,¹ and when there has been such destruction or actual ouster trespass is the appropriate remedy.² technical action of trespass; and that he did not so mean in saying that an action might be maintained against him as such trespasser. In our opinion, all that he meant was that a tenant in common might be transcending his right as such tenant, by the character of the possession he was holding, and therein, in the generic and untechnical sense of the term, be trespassing upon the right of his cotenant, as would be true in the case of an ouster. In such case the party whose right was thus trespassed upon might maintain an action against his cotenant, on account of such transcending of legal right. But we think it was not designed to indicate the form of action which would be proper, under the rules of the law, in such case." Wait v. Richardson, 33 Vt. 190.

1. Rule Stated by Lord Kenyon. — "As applicable to remedies of this character between tenants in common, the true principle is stated by Kenyon, C. J., in Martyn v. Knowllys, 8 T. R. 145, that 'if one tenant in common misuse that which is in common with another, he is answerable to the other in an action as for misfeasance.' That was an action on the case by one tenant in common against his cotenant for cutting certain trees upon the common land. The right to maintain the action was fully recognized if the facts showed that the trees were not proper to be cut; but the plaintiff failed to recover solely on the ground that it appeared that the trees in question were of proper age, and in other respects fit and proper to be cut. Whether one tenant in common is to be regarded as a wrongdoer so that an action of tort lies against him by his cotenant, depends on the kind of property, the implied authority of tenants in common as between each other, the nature, tendency, and effect of the act done." McLellan v. Jenness, 43 Vt. 188.

Appropriation of Products of Common Land. — It is said that one tenant is not liable in trespass for appropriating to his own use the products of the common land. Van Orman v. Phelps, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 500; King v. Phillips, 1

Lans. (N. Y.) 434; Symonds v. Harris, 51 Me. 19.

St. 97; Trauger v. Sassaman, 14 Pa. St. 514; Dubois v. Beaver, 25 N. Y. 123; Booth v. Adams, 11 Vt. 156; Cubitt v. Porter, 8 B. & C. 257, 15 E. C. L. 211.

Without a Destruction or Ouster, trespass will not lie. Erwin v. Olmsted, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 230; Booth v. Adams, 11 Vt. 156; Wait v. Richardson, 33 Vt. 190; Kenniston v. Leighton, 43 N. H. 312; Wright v. Chandler, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 422.

Occupation of a Particular Part by One Tenant. — When one tenant in common occupies a particular part of the property by the consent of his cotenants, he may maintain trespass against them equally as against a stranger, and for the same acts. O'Hear v. De Goesbriand, 33 Vt. 612.

Quare Clausum Fregit. — One tenant in common has no right to enter upon his cotenant and oust him from possession. If he do so, trespass quare clausum fregit will lie for the injury. Erwin v. Olmsted, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 229; King v. Phillips, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 434; Dubois v. Beaver, 25 N. Y. 123; Silloyway v. Brown, 12 Allen (Mass.) 30; Maddox v. Goddard, 15 Me. 218; McGill v. Ash, 7 Pa. St. 397.

If one of two tenants in common permits an animal to run at large so as to damage crops in the joint possession of the tenants, trespass quare clausum fregit will not lie, but the remedy is by an action on the case. McGehee v. Peterson, 57 Ala. 333 [citing Bennet v. Bullock, 35 Pa. St. 364; Booth v. Adams, 11 Vt. 156; Duncan v. Sylvester, 13 Me. 417]. Such an injury is neither an ouster nor a destruction of the entirety, and it is said that to permit an action of trespass by one tenant against another for a partial damage to the common property would be an attempt to sue a man for trespass committed against himself. Wells v. Hollenbeck, 37 Mich. 505.

An Action on the Case seems to be the proper remedy by one tenant against his cotenant for any misuse of the common property resulting in an injury to his rights which does not amount to a destruction of the subject of the tenancy or an ouster of the plaintiff.¹

6. Action for Conversion — a. GENERAL RULES. — When, and for what cause, one of two or more tenants in common of personal property may maintain trover against those retaining its possession, seems to be sufficiently clear on principle, but not always of easy application to confused and varying facts.²

Mere Detention. — One tenant in common of a chattel cannot maintain trover against his cotenant for the mere detention of the article. The reason for this rule is that the right of possession lies at the foundation of the action, and where two are equally entitled to possession he who has it cannot be guilty of a conversion by retaining it.³

1. Total and Partial Destruction. — In Cubitt v. Porter, 8 B. & C. 257, 15 E. C. L. 211, Littledale, J., says that if two persons are tenants in common of a tract of land on which there is a wall, and one refuses to repair, and the other pulls it down and sells the materials and builds a better wall, it may be said that there is a total destruction of the old wall, and an action of trespass will lie. But if he sold the old materials for the purpose of building a new one, an action of trespass will not lie. "Such an act is more properly the subject-matter of an action on the case, because it is in the nature of a partial injury, and not of a total destruction of the subject-matter of the tenancy in common." And in the same opinion it was said that when there has not been a total destruction of the subject-matter of the tenancy in common, "but only a partial injury to it, an action on the case will lie by one tenant against the other." Bond v. Hilton, Busb. L. (N. Car.) 308. See also Blanchard v. Baker, 8 Me. 253; Duncan v. Sylvester, 13 Me. 417; Pillsbury v. Moore, 44 Me. 154; Booth v. Sherwood, 12 Minn. 429; *Chesle v. 2. Osborn v. Schenck, 83 N. Y. 203.

Any act less than the destruction of the interest of the cotenant has been held not sufficient to justify trover. Hurd v. Darling, 14 Vt. 214; Jones v. Childs, 8 Dana (K.) 163.

Destruction or Removal Out of State. —

In North Carolina it is held that a tenant cannot support the action unless the property has been destroyed or carried beyond the limits of the state. Grim v. Wicker, 80 N. Car. 343; Strauss v. Crawford, 89 N. Car. 150.

Consumption by Use. — A tenant in common can maintain trover against his cotenant for using hay owned jointly by both, but not for selling it. Lewis v. Clark, 59 Vt. 363.

Waste. — An action for conversion is sometimes appropriate where the facts constitute waste, as for cutting standing trees. Shepard v. Pettit, 30 Minn. 119; Duff v. Bindley, 16 Fed. Rep. 178.

If a Tenant Convert the Chattels by Actual Destruction, or so appropriate them to his own use as to render any future enjoyment of them by his cotenant impossible, the latter may maintain an action of trover or tort in the nature of trover against him.¹

Conversion by Sale. — As above shown, neither cotenant, both having a right to the possession, can be sued by the other part owner, unless there has been a conversion of the property; and the old authorities, as well as some later ones, hold that a sale by one cotenant of the entire property does not amount to a conversion; but upon this question the authorities are not uniform.²

b. PROPERTY OF DIVISIBLE NATURE. — There is sometimes an exception to the rule that trover will not lie for a mere detention, where the property is separable in respect to quantity and quality by weight or measure, in which event it is held that each tenant may demand his share of the cotenant having possession, and upon refusal to deliver may bring suit therefor.³ And some-

Where the tenant in possession of personal chattels withholds the common property from his cotenant, or wrests it from him and exercises a dominion over it, either in direct denial of or inconsistently with the rights of the latter, an action will lie for conversion. Benjamin v. Strempel, 13 Ill. 469; Hall v. Page, 4 Ga. 428; Waller v. Bowling, 108 N. Car. 294 [citing Shearin v. Riggsbee, 97 N. Car. 221; State University v. State Nat. Bank, 96 N. Car. 284; *Grove v. Y.) 449, it was held that the act of one tenant in locking up the property and claiming exclusive ownership in it would not support the action against him.

Dispossessing Cotenant. — One tenant in common of a chattel cannot bring trover against his cotenant for dispossessing him; if the chattel be destroyed, or sold, which is constructively a destruction, the action lies. Farr v. Smith, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 338.

times by express statute one tenant in common may recover from his cotenant his share of divisible personal property or the value thereof, if the cotenant withholds it from him.¹

7. Trespass to Try Title. — One tenant in common cannot maintain an action for trespass to try title against his cotenant unless there has been an ouster of the plaintiff.²

8. Waste. — Under a statute in England, provision was made for a remedy by one tenant in common against another for waste.³ And in this country, independently of what has been said of the remedy for the misuse or destruction of common property, an action for waste is often provided by statute.⁴

9. Ejectment. — The possession of one tenant in common is the possession of his cotenants, and is consistent with the seizure of the latter; but one may oust the other either by actual disseizin or by exclusion from occupation, using the estate inconsistently with the rights of his cotenant, and in such event, and in that event only, the tenant ousted may bring ejectment or that form of action appropriate under reformed procedure to recover possession of an undivided part of the land.⁵

Stowell, 37 How. Pr. (Chenango County Ct.) 88, 51 N. Y. 70.

Waiver of Tort—Assumpsit. — It is also held that in such a case the tenant may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit for the part of the divisible property withheld from him. Loomis v. O'Neal, 73 Mich. 582. Though in the cases in which this is done there is an element of contract involved under which the parties are entitled to a division of the property. Ripley v. Davis, 15 Mich. 79; Webb v. Mann, 3 Mich. 139; McLaughlin v. Salley, 46 Mich. 221, referring to Watson v. Stever, 25 Mich. 386, and Tolan v. Hodgeboom, 38 Mich. 624.

3. "If land be given to two for life, and to the heirs of one of them, and tenant for life do waste, he that hath the fee cannot have an action of waste on the statute of Gloucester, but he may have one on Westm. 2, c. 22, which enacts that if there be two tenants in common of a wood, turbary, piscary, etc., and one do waste, the other shall have a writ of waste, and the waster shall have election before judgment, either to have his part in certain assigned to him by the oath of twelve men (and then the place wasted shall be assigned for part thereof), or to grant that he will take no more for the future than his companion shall approve of; and this act by construction has been held to extend to joint tenants, but not to parceners, because they might have the writ de partitione facienda at common law. A statute giving an action of trespass for strip and waste against a cotenant and relieving the complaining tenant of the necessity of stating in his declaration his cotenants other than the defendant, does not require proof as to who his other cotenants are or the establishment of their title. *Hubbard v. Connecticut. — Cross v. Robinson, 21 Conn. 385.

10. Mesne Profits. — An action for mesne profits is substantially a continuation of the action of ejectment, and when a party is allowed to maintain ejectment against his cotenant he may also have an action of trespass for mesne profits.¹

11. Parties. — The rule requiring a joinder of tenants in common, in personal actions for wrong done by a stranger,² does not apply where the injury is done by a cotenant, because the shares and rights of the tenants are entirely distinct as between themselves, and neither has any right to complain except of an injury done to himself.³ It is said that while each of several tenants in common may bring his separate action, two cannot join against a third in an action of account, because in such a case the interests are not joint.⁴

Equity Jurisdiction. — In Vermont it was held that where there are several tenants in common of land, an action of account at law cannot be maintained by one against another, but he must resort to a court of equity; but that if the interest of one tenant in common were separate and that of the others joint, then there would be but two parties, and the action of account might be brought. Wiswell v. Wilkins, 4 Vt. 137.

12. Equitable Jurisdiction and Remedies. — The common-law rule, as hereinbefore shown, not permitting one joint tenant or tenant in common to have an action ex contractu against his companion unless as bailiff, his only remedy was by bill in equity;¹ but the change in the rule, giving an action, did not abridge the remedy in equity in proper cases, and where a case is presented involving a variety of adjustments, limitations, cross-claims, or other complications, a court of equity will afford the parties superior facilities for effecting distributive justice between them;² as well as in other cases where the relief sought is peculiar to a court of equity.³

In May v. Parker, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 34, it was said, in sustaining the equitable jurisdiction of the court: "Here there are several different plaintiffs claiming interests as tenants in common, in this mill, some of whom are minors. If obliged to sue jointly, on account of the interest being joint, then the defendant, being one of the parties in such joint interest, cannot be sued, and no action lies. If they may sue severally, then each of the plaintiffs must bring his several action for his proportion of the damage, the plaintiffs together having no joint interest except with the defendant. Graham v. Robertson, 2 T. R. 282. This would give rise to a burdensome multiplicity of suits, so that the remedy at law, if it could be enforced, would be wholly inadequate."

Assumpsit on Express Promise. — In Steele v. McGill, 172 Pa. St. 100, which was assumpsit by three cotenants jointly against a fourth upon an express promise, it was said that, when tenants in common sever, each can recover only for his or her individual interest in that which is the subject of the action, but where they join in seeking redress for an injury to the property held in common, the trespasser will not be heard to object to the joinder; and that for the same reason, where one of several tenants in common promises his cotenants to indemnify them if they will risk the common property for his benefit, he ought not to object if they sue upon the promise as it was made.

For Use and Occupation. — Where assumpsit is proper by one tenant in common against his cotenant, for mere use and occupation, and one of several tenants in common is in the use and occupation of land, all his cotenants must join in an action against him to recover rent; one cannot sue alone for his interest. Blanton v. Vanzant, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 276.

1. See supra, I. 2. Assumpsit.

2. Hamilton v. Conine, 28 Md. 635; Dyckman v. Valiente, 42 N. Y. 549; Early v. Friend, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 41; Smith v. King, 50 Ga. 192.

Where the Account Is Simple and all upon one side, and can be fully and readily adjusted by a judgment in an action of assumpsit, and no discovery is sought, the necessity for entertaining equity jurisdiction is said not to exist, and the court will decline it. Carter v. Bailey, 64 Me. 465 [citing Gloninger v. Hazard, 42 Pa. St. 401; Blood v. Blood, 110 Mass. 545].

If the exact interest of the plaintiff could be ascertained and determined without an accounting, as, for instance, if he owned one-half or one-fourth of the property, there would be no difficulty, and the remedy would be at law in an action of trover, unless there were charges upon it remaining unpaid, or other complications, in which event the rights of parties could be justly determined only in a suit in equity. Dyckman v. Valiente, 42 N. Y. 549.

3. Partition of Personality. — Tenants in common of personal estate cannot have partition at common law, and therefore a court of equity is a proper tribunal to decree such partition. Smith v. Smith, 4 Rand. (Va.) 95. See also, to the same effect, Tinney v. Stebbins, 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 291, wherein it was said that the case was treated below as a common-law action and was rightly disposed of on that ground, but that the plaintiff's case was one for equitable relief, and as his prayer was adapted to such relief he was clearly,

Injunction. — There are no doubt special cases in which an injunction will be granted between tenants in common,¹ as to stay destruction or waste, but the cases are rare and the jurisdiction is sparingly exercised.²

Receiver. — A court of equity has jurisdiction to appoint a receiver at the instance of one tenant in common against his insolvent upon the proofs, entitled to a decree in rem in respect to the subject of the tenancy involved. See also article PARTITION.

Relief from Fraud. — In an action commenced in the Court of Common Pleas in South Carolina for the purpose of canceling a deed made by a cotenant upon the ground that such deed was fraudulent and void, having been executed, as it was alleged, for the purpose of defeating a trust, and that the same was a cloud upon the title of the complainants to a tract of land described in the complaint, the title to which was alleged to be vested in the plaintiffs and defendants in certain proportions set forth, it was held that if the land was owned by the parties as tenants in common the action complained of was an act of wrong and entitled the parties to seek relief in equity from the alleged fraud upon their rights. Sires v. Sires, 43 S. Car. 266.

1. Thus, where the plaintiff and defendant were tenants in common of a mill on one side of a stream, and of the milldam and water power, and occupied the mill alternately, in pursuance of a verbal agreement, it was held that such alternate use of the common property was an equitable and legal division so long as the parol agreement should remain in force, and that each cotenant, during his turn, had a right to use the whole of the water in such a manner as he pleased, doing no injury to the common property; and the court enjoined the defendant from drawing water during the plaintiff's turn. Bliss v. Rice, 17 Pick. (Mass.) 23.

2. Insolvency of a tenant in common in exclusive possession is sufficient ground for granting an injunction to restrain the commission of waste by him. Stout v. Curry, 110 Ind. 514.

For allegation of insolvency, see article INJUNCTIONS, vol. 10, p. 869.

In Twort v. Twort, 16 Ves. Jr. 128, Lord Eldon said that his experience did not furnish him with a single instance of an injunction between tenants in common, and that he had refused injunctions between tenants in common except in special cases. The case before him, he said, was a special case — one of the tenants in common having become the occupying tenant, and the other having by that contract engaged as to one moiety to treat the land as an occupying tenant should treat it; and on this ground he granted an injunction, stating expressly in the order that the defendant was occupying tenant to the plaintiff, and restraining him from committing any waste upon the premises which he held as such occupying tenant. This, he said, was a safe principle, and would, by its necessary operation, prevent the defendant from committing any waste. This ground and that of destruction or insolvency seem to be the special grounds on which the jurisdiction has been exercised. Obert v. Obert, 5 N. J. Eq. 408; Hawley v. Clowe, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 122; Kennedy v. Scovil, 12 Conn. 317; Ballou v. Wood, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 48.

Malicious Waste may be sufficient ground for injunction, but not pure equitable waste. Hole v. Thomas, 7 Ves. Jr. 589.

Under a Statute providing that if any person shall assume and exercise exclusive ownership over, or take away, destroy, lessen in value, or otherwise injure or abuse, any property held in joint tenancy or tenancy in common, the party shall have his action for the injury in the same manner as he would have if such joint tenancy or tenancy in common did not exist, it was held that for such acts an injunction would be granted. Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. Butte, etc., Min. Co., 17 Mont. 524. This was in relation to mining lands. In the absence of such a statute as the one above set out it is held that an injunction will not lie against one tenant in common at the instance of another to restrain the former from working a mine in the usual way, without excluding the other owners. McCord v. Oakland Quicksilver Min. Co., 64 Cal. 134.

Necessary Allegations. — Pending an action at law an injunction against commission of waste may be issued cotenants who are in possession of undivided valuable property, receiving the whole of the rents and profits and excluding their companion from the receipt of any portion thereof.¹

II. ACTIONS AGAINST THIRD PERSONS — 1. Joinder of Parties —

a. GENERAL RULES — Nature of Interest. — The general rule as to joinder of parties in actions by tenants in common and joint tenants is, in the absence of statute, founded upon the nature of the interest in the particular matter in controversy.²

Real Actions. — The title of tenants in common being several, they must sue separately in real actions.³

In Personal Actions they must join where the right to the redress sought is joint, although it arises out of the several titles,⁴ as in upon an application made in due form and containing proper averments, one of which is the belief or fear of the plaintiff that the defendant is doing or is about to do the acts which the court is asked to restrain. Adams v. Palmer, 6 Gray (Mass.) 336; Hihn v. Peck, 18 Cal. 640.

Continuing and Permanent Injury. — A tenant in common may resort to a court of equity for an injunction to restrain the commission of a continuing and permanent injury. Woods v. Early, (Va. 1897) 28 S. E. Rep. 374.

1. Williams v. Jenkins, 11 Ga. 595 [citing Street v. Anderton, 4 Bro. C. C. 415; Milbank v. Revett, 2 Meriv. 405, wherein a motion for a receiver by a tenant in common was denied because the facts did not make out a case of exclusion].

2. De Johnson v. Sepulbeda, 5 Cal. 149.

Joint Tenants, being seized per mie et per tout and deriving by one and the same title, must jointly implead and be jointly impleaded by others. 5 Bac. Abr., tit. Joint Tenants (K); Webster v. Vandeventer, 6 Gray (Mass.) 429.

3. Throckmorton v. Burr, 5 Cal. 400; De Johnson v. Sepulbeda, 5 Cal. 149; Briscoe v. McGee, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 370; Rand v. Dodge, 12 N. H. 67; Hills v. Doe, 6 N. H. 330; Stevenson v. Cofferin, 20 N. H. 151; Minter v. Dunham, 13 Oregon 481.

The Reason assigned for requiring tenants in common to sever in real actions is that "tenants in common are of several titles, and therefore the freehold is several; and if they are disseized, they shall be put to their several actions; as, therefore, the lands of tenants in common are to be considered as different estates, depending on different titles, the plaintiff shall not recover, because that were to allow the plaintiff to try two several and different titles in one issue at the same time." May v. Slade, 24 Tex. 207; 5 Bac. Abr., tit. Joint Tenants (K).

4. Bullock v. Hayward, 10 Allen (Mass.) 462; May v. Parker, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 39; Daniels v. Daniels, 7 Mass. 137; Lane v. Dobyns, 11 Mo. 106; Little v. Harrington, 71 Mo. 390; Odiorne v. Lyford, 9 N. H. 512; Wilson v. Gamble, 9 N. H. 75; Murray v. Webster, 5 N. H. 391; Low v. Mumford, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 426; Decker v. Livingston, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 479; Penfield v. Rich, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 386; Austin v. Hall, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 286; May v. Slade, 24 Tex. 205; George v. McGovern, 83 Miss. 558; Co. Litt. 197 b.

In Indiana it was said that tenants in common of personality may sue jointly for damages caused by the destruction of the property before the common interests are severed. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hart, 119 Ind. 273.

Suit for Use of Property. — Tenants in common of personal property have a single claim and not separate claims for the use of the common property, and must join in an action therefor. Stinson v. Fernald, 77 Me. 576.

So, where the plaintiffs and other persons were joint owners of a steamboat, and entered into a contract with one of the defendants by which the latter hired the boat and agreed to pay to the owners $100 per day for the use thereof, in an action to recover such compensation all the others should join. Coster v. New York, etc., R. Co., 6 Duer (N. Y.) 46.

But in Merritt v. Walsh, 32 N. Y. 685, it was held that though the several owners of a vessel should join in an action for the recovery of freight, the nonjoinder is waived by an answer to actions of trespass for damages to the common land, and the like.¹ And as a general rule tenants in common must join in personal actions in which all the parties are jointly interested, whether the action arises ex contractu or ex delicto.² But when the interests are separate, it is said that the tenants must sue separately, even in personal actions.³

Assumpsit on Waiver of Tort. — As tenants in common must in general join in an action of tort for an injury to the common property, so they must join in an action of assumpsit when the tort is waived.⁴

the merits. See also Mitchell v. Chambers, 43 Mich. 164.

Suit for Purchase Money and Chattel. — If two or more tenants in common of a chattel unite in a sale of it, the right of action for the consideration money is joint, and they cannot sue the purchaser in separate actions unless it be upon an agreement by the purchaser to pay to each of them his particular share. Suydam v. Combs, 15 N. J. L. 133.

Where the agent of the plaintiffs, who were tenants in common with others of certain lands, having no authority from the other tenants, sold to the defendant a quantity of timber standing upon the lands, which he cut and converted to his use, it was held that an action of general indebitatus assumpsit would lie to recover the value of their interest in the timber. Kenniston v. Ham, 29 N. H. 501. See also Lyman v. Boston etc., R. Co., 58 N. H. 384.

(N. Y.) 286; Hill v. Gibbs, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 56; Decker v. Livingston, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 479]; McCreary v. Ross, 7 Watts (Pa.) 485; Coryton v. Lithebye, 2 Saund. 115. See infra, II. 5. Trespass to Land.

2. Hill v. Gibbs, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 56; Clapp v. Pawtucket Sav. Inst., 15 R. I. 489.

"May" or "Must" Join — English and American Expressions. — The English cases say they may join, while the American cases generally say they must join. Clapp v. Pawtucket Sav. Inst., 15 R. I. 489 [citing Litt., §§ 311, 312, 315, 317; Chamier v. Chingo, 5 M. & S. 64; Kitchin v. Buckley, T. Raym. 80, 1 Lev. 109]. See the American cases cited in this section.

But in May v. Parker, 12 Pick.

(Mass.) 38, it is said that though the phrase "may join" is used, yet the reason given brings the case within the rule of law that where a personal claim is joint and the right survives, all must join.

3. Lothrop v. Ambrose, 25 Me. 140; Melville v. Brown, 15 Mass. 82; McCreary v. Ross, 7 Watts (Pa.) 485; Odiorne v. Lyford, 9 N. H. 512, citing Cutting v. Derby, 2 W. Bl. 1077.

A Several Tort against two or more persons, as a false and fraudulent affirmation made by the vendor of an estate to two or more purchasers, must not be the subject of joint action. Baker v. Jewell, 6 Mass. 460. See also article PARTIES.

Severance of Claim. — The reason of the rule requiring joinder of tenants in common in personal actions is said to be for the purpose of preventing a multiplicity of suits, and the rule itself is said to apply unless there has been a severance of the claim; as, for instance, where the defendant has previously to the suit promised to settle or has settled with one of the claimants for his share. Clapp v. Pawtucket Sav. Inst., 15 R. I. 489 [citing Austin v. Walsh, 2 Mass. 405; Baker v. Jewell, 6 Mass. 461; Beach v. Hotchkiss, 2 Conn. 697; Stedman v. Shelton, 1 Ala. 88; Parker v. Elder, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 547]. Or where the share of one tenant has been sold under execution. Hopkins v. Forsyth, 14 Pa. St. 34.

Trover. — In Bleaden v. Hancock, 4 C. & P. 152, 19 E. C. L. 317, it was held that two persons jointly interested in a chattel could maintain separate actions of trover against a person who unjustly retained the chattel.

4. Gilmore v. Wilbur, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 120; White v. Brooks, 43 N. H. 402; Putnam v. Wise, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 235; Clapp v. Pawtucket Sav. Inst., 15 R. I. 489.

In Irwin v. Brown, 35 Pa. St. 331, it

b. EXCEPTION TO RULE REQUIRING JOINDER. — There is sometimes an exception to the rule requiring a joinder of cotenants when the interests are joint, as where one tenant refuses to join in the action, in which case it has been said that the reason for the exception is stronger than that for the rule.¹

is said: "Now, whether we treat the defendant's wrong as waste or trespass, his legal liability for it was to the tenants in common jointly; and if the tort be waived and a constructive contract substituted, it must be a joint one. One cannot, by his election of a substitute, destroy the primary action to which his cotenants were entitled with him."

In Alabama it was held that where there is a conversion of property owned by several tenants in common, they may waive the tort and join in assumpsit, or each may bring a separate action of assumpsit without joining the others. Tankersley v. Childers, 23 Ala. 783; Smith v. Wiley, 22 Ala. 396; Smyth v. Tankersley, 20 Ala. 212.

Nonjoinder — Waiver of Objection. — In New Hampshire it was said that tenants in common, while the tenancy continues, should join in trespass or trover for injuries to personal property thus owned in common, or in assumpsit for money received from the sale of their common property, but in such case the nonjoinder could only be taken advantage of by plea in abatement. White v. Brooks, 43 N. H. 402.

1. Peck v. McLean, 36 Minn. 228, wherein it is said: "Chitty states the rule as 'in general,' implying that there may be exceptions to it; and unless there may be exceptions, it is apparent that what is only a rule of practice, affecting only the mode of proceeding to redress a wrong, will sometimes operate to altogether prevent a remedy. The reason for the rule — to protect defendants against multiplicity of suits — is good. But if, adhered to, it will in a particular case cause a failure of justice, the reason for departing from it is stronger than that for the rule. It is better that a defendant should be put to the danger and inconvenience of several suits than that a plaintiff should be deprived of a remedy. So, where a third person concluded with a partner in a firm to injure the other partners, they might, without joining their partner, maintain an action against the third person. Longman v. Pole, M. & M. 223, 22 E. C. L. 297. An instance of an exception allowed of necessity to the general rule as to parties was in the case of femes covert. Thus, the wife was permitted to sue alone where the husband was in exile (1 Co. Litt. 132 a), or had abjured the realm (Wilmut's Case, Moo. 851; Dubois v. Hole, 2 Vern. 614), or where he was an alien enemy (Derry v. Mazarine, 1 Ld. Raym. 147); or where he, a foreigner, never in the United States, had deserted her in a foreign country (Gregory v. Paul, 15 Mass. 31)."

Statutory Provisions have sometimes been enacted for the purpose of relieving a tenant from the effects of the refusal of a cotenant to join him in an action, as by permitting the refusing tenant to be made a defendant. Gock v. Keneda, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 120.

A statutory provision that all or any tenants in common, etc., may join or sever in personal actions for injuries done to their lands, setting forth in the declaration the names of all the cotenants, if known, etc., and that the court shall enter judgment for the whole amount of the injury proved, but award execution only for the proportion thereof sustained by the plaintiff, and that the remaining cotenants may afterwards jointly or severally issue a scire facias on such judgment and have execution for their proportion of the damages, was said to be intended to prevent a plaintiff from being deprived of redress by plea in abatement by reason of the refusal of his cotenants to join in his suit. Hobbs v. Hatch, 48 Me. 55.

Summons and Severance — Coparceners. — The common law rigidly required coparceners to join in real actions for the recovery of their estate. But because it sometimes became impracticable, either from the refusal of some of the parties or from other causes, for all to prosecute a joint action, provision was made by summons and severance for such as chose to prosecute, by which they were enabled to proceed without the defaulting parcener. Stevenson v. Cofferin, 20 N. H. 151.

2. Objections for Nonjoinder — Waiver. — In Actions Ex Delicto the nonjoinder of a cotenant must, in the absence of a statute making the objection available in some other way, be pleaded in abatement or it will avail only for the purpose of apportionment of damages at the trial according to the real interest of the plaintiff.¹

In Actions Ex Contractu a different rule prevails in the absence of statutory regulations otherwise controlling, and a nonjoinder of a cotenant as plaintiff in such cases need not be pleaded in abatement, but is available under the general issue.²

3. In Replevin or Detinue. — While it is true, as above stated, that where there is a want of proper joinder of a cotenant as plaintiff in personal actions ex delicto the objection must be taken by

Branch v. Doane, 17 Conn. 415; Starnes v. Quin, 6 Ga. 86, which case, however, is disapproved in Howard v. Snelling, 28 Ga. 473, in so far as it seems to hold that a plea in abatement will be good in any event, the latter case holding that one tenant in common has the right to sue for his share; Rolette v. Parker, 1 Ill. 350; Frazier v. Spear, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 385; Holmes v. Sprowl, 31 Me. 73; Lothrop v. Arnold, 25 Me. 140; Jones v. Lowell, 35 Me. 538; Phillips v. Cummings, 11 Cush. Harmless Error — Action for Whole Damage. — If one cotenant recovers only his share of the whole damages to realty, there is no error, although he sues for the whole damage. Jones v. De Coursey, 12 N. Y. App. Div. 164.

A tenant not joined in an action by his cotenant may recover from the same defendant his interest in a chattel, and in this second action the defendant is precluded from interposing a plea in abatement. Harker v. Dement, 9 Gill (Md.) 16; Brizendine v. Frankfort Bridge Co., 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 33; Sedgworth v. Overend, 7 T. R. 229.

Code and Statutory Provisions. — The manner of objecting for a misjoinder or a defect of parties must also be considered under code and statutory regulations. (See the article PARTIES.) Thus, as a modification of the rule stated in the text, under code provisions, a defendant may have his remedy for a nonjoinder of a cotenant as plaintiff by demurrer if the defect appears on the face of the complaint, or by answer if it does not, each method under the circumstances prescribed being exclusive. De Puy v. Strong, 37 N. Y. 372; Patchin v. Peck, 38 N. Y. 39; Fisher v. Hall, 41 N. Y. 416; Zimmerman v. Schoenfeldt, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 692. And while the provisions may be as to parties generally, they apply to cotenants as parties. De Puy v. Strong, 37 N. Y. 372; Williams v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 110 Cal. 457; Foley v. Bullard, 99 Cal. 516; Wendt v. Ross, 33 Cal. 650; Alvarez v. Brannan, 7 Cal. 510.

Under the Missouri Code, if the plaintiff sues as the sole owner of goods, the objection for the nonjoinder of a joint owner, if not available upon demurrer, can be taken by answer, and such answer may unite this objection with matter in bar of the action. Little v. Harrington, 71 Mo. 390.

Recovery of the Whole Damage by One Part Owner. — In New Jersey it was held that a part owner in possession of goods might recover all the damages resulting from a trespass upon the goods. Hasbrouck v. Winkler, 48 N. J. L. 431.

The same rule is announced where the tenants are joint tenants and the nonjoinder of one of the joint tenants is not pleaded in abatement. Zabriskie v. Smith, 13 N. Y. 337.

2. Clapp v. Pawtucket Sav. Inst., 15 R. I. 489; Hill v. Gibbs, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 56; Hart v. Fitzgerald, 2 Mass. 510; Jones v. Lowell, 35 Me. 538.

plea in abatement, and that, in the absence of such a plea, the defendant will be confined to giving in evidence the ownership of the others in mitigation of damages, yet in actions of replevin and detinue, though in form ex delicto,¹ one of several tenants in common or joint tenants of a chattel cannot succeed even though the defendant should fail to plead the nonjoinder of the others in abatement, and the objection may be taken by demurrer, under the general issue, or whenever the nonjoinder appears.² Where this defect appears, the court may abate the writ ex officio.³

4. Actions for Recovery of Real Property. — The common-law rule does not permit tenants in common to join in an action for the recovery of the common estate, but each must have a separate action for his share;⁴ but joint tenants cannot sue separately.⁵ But, by reason of statutory changes upon the subject of parties or in the system of pleading, these common-law rules do not now generally prevail.⁶ In ejectment it is sometimes stated that a

In Michigan it has been held that a tenant in common who is entitled to the possession of an undivided interest in personal property can maintain replevin against a wrongdoer who is a stranger to the title. McArthur v. Oliver, 60 Mich. 605.

In D'Wolf v. Harris, 4 Mason (U. S.) 515, the court said: "The doctrine is undoubtedly true that where a personal chattel is owned by several persons, all ought to join in a writ of replevin for it; and one part owner has no right to bring such suit severally for his own share. * * * If he sues for a moiety only in his writ, the court will, ex officio, abate it. But I am clearly of opinion that where the action is brought for the whole chattel, the exception is pleadable in abatement only, and is not a plea to the merits; and that pleading over to the merits is a waiver of it."

6. Where the fiction of the common law which encumbered the action of ejectment has been abolished, it is held that tenants in common may unite. Corbin v. Cannon, 31 Miss. 570. See also Alford v. Dewin, 1 Nev. 211; Poole v. Fleeger, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 185; and article EJECTMENT, vol. 7, p. 260.

While tenants in common have several freeholds, and, if disseized, cannot join at common law in a writ of entry, under an early statute in Maine the joinder was permissible, though not necessary, and it was decided that if they did join the joinder did not change the nature of the estate and the tenancy. Swett v. Patrick, 11 Me. 180: See also Poor v. Robinson, 10 Mass. 131; Oxnard v. Kennebec Purchase, 10 Mass. 179; Chandler v. Simmons, 97 Mass. 508; Harrelson v. Sarvis, 39 S. Car. 14, wherein it is said: "Indulgence is extended in allowing tenants in common to join in an action against a stranger, but they are not required to do so. Dorn v. Beasley, 6 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 408; Bannister v. Bull, 16 S. Car. 229; Reams v. Spann, 28 S. Car. 530."

tenant in common may sue separately and recover his share from a mere trespasser,¹ but there appears to be no reason for so phrasing the rule when originally they must have severed, unless the phraseology has reference to the right of one to recover the whole as sometimes decided.²

Unlawful Detainer. — One joint tenant or tenant in common may, in an action of unlawful detainer, recover the possession of the whole land without joining his cotenant in the action.³

Trespass to Try Title. — It is said to be well settled by adjudicated cases and by the elementary authorities that one joint tenant or tenant in common may maintain trespass to try title or ejectment against a mere trespasser or wrongdoer.⁴

bell v. Wallace, 12 N. H. 362, it was said that the parties who take together by descent under the statute in New Hampshire may join in an action for the recovery of land as coparceners, or they may elect to pursue their remedies as tenants in common, in which case they should bring several actions; but that if tenants in common join in a real action, the objection must, in general, be taken in abatement or by a motion for a nonsuit at the trial, and it is too late to take it after verdict, unless the matter appears upon the face of the record.

Amendment. — Where two join in a writ of entry, the court may authorize one to be stricken out. Rehoboth v. Hunt, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 224. But see Rand v. Dodge, 12 N. H. 67.

Waiver of Objection. — If tenants in common join as plaintiffs in ejectment, the defect will be waived if the defendant pleads without objecting. Minter v. Durham, 13 Oregon 470; Craig v. Taylor, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 457.

Joinder of More than One and Less than All. — In Nevada it was said that it was not disputed that one tenant in common might sue for his undivided fraction, but that more than one and less than all could not unite in such an action. Bullion Min. Co. v. Croesus Gold, etc., Min. Co., 2 Nev. 175.

Failure of Title in One Joint Tenant. —

If one of the plaintiffs has no title, the coplaintiffs cannot recover though they may be vested with the whole title, because the joinder of too many plaintiffs is ground for nonsuit on the trial, whether the action be for tort or on contract. *De Vaughn v. Summary Proceeding for Nonpayment of Rent. — Where premises owned by two persons are let by them jointly to a tenant, reserving rent to both, and subsequently one of them becomes the sole owner of the property and of the rents, by purchase of the other's interest, he may demand the whole rent, and upon refusal to pay may dispossess the tenant, by proceedings in his own name, under the statute relative to summary proceedings to recover the possession of land. *Griffin v. 5. Trespass to Land. — In an action of trespass for injury to lands held in common the tenants should join,¹ but the law is equally clear that in this, as well as in an action of tort to a chattel, one of two persons jointly injured may alone maintain an action for the injury unless the nonjoinder of the other is pleaded in abatement; and that, under the general issue, evidence of such nonjoinder will not defeat the action, but will merely restrict the plaintiff to a recovery of a moiety of the damage.² But when the cotenants are not jointly interested in the damages, the Tenants in common may maintain separate actions of trespass to try title for their separate interests. Boyleston v. Cordes, 4 McCord L. (S. Character of Title. — A tenant in common, though holding by the title bond merely, may recover the severed part of the freehold from a mere trespasser. Against such trespasser the plaintiff need not prove a compliance with the conditions which would entitle him to a specific performance. Hooper v. Hall, 30 Tex. 154.

Partition After Suit Begun. — It cannot be objected, in a suit by a tenant in common, where there has been a partition since the commencement of the suit, that he seeks to recover on a title acquired after the commencement of the suit. Croft v. Rains, 10 Tex. 520.

Effect of Death of Party. — One tenant in common having a right to maintain an action of trespass to try title against a stranger, an action by more than one of such tenants jointly will not abate by the death of one, and therefore there is no necessity to make the heirs of the deceased parties to the suit. Waste. — Real actions of waste to recover the place wasted must be brought by tenants in common separately, but in a personal action in the nature of waste they must all join. Bullock v. Hayward, 10 Allen (Mass.) 462.

Misjoinder. — In Murray v. Webster, 5 N. H. 392, it was said that if the plaintiff had no title to the land as tenant in common she might maintain trespass quare domum fregit for pulling down the house; but that, whatever cause of action she had, it was a fatal objection to recovery that she had joined in the action with another who had no cause of action.

Amendable Defect under Statute. — In Bullock v. Hayward, 10 Allen (Mass.) 462, it was said that a misjoinder need not be pleaded at common law, but might be given in evidence under the general issue or taken advantage of at any stage of the case at which it appeared; but that, since the statutes had authorized amendments by striking out or inserting the names of joint parties to an action, and abolished the general issue, and required the grounds of defenses to be precisely stated, the court was unwilling to say that a defendant was not required by law to specify this defense in his answer to the merits instead of merely denying all the plaintiff's allegations.

Continuing Damage.—In Tucker v. Campbell, 36 Me. 347, it was held that in a complaint for flowing land owned by tenants in common all the cotenants must join. This decision was reached in construing a statute providing that any person sustaining damage in his lands by their being overflowed by a milldam might obtain compensation, and that the damage, having been ascertained, should continue to be the measure of the yearly damages until the owner of the land or dam should, by new process, apply for an increase or decrease. In applying the provisions of this statute to suits by tenants in common it was said: "If several tenants in common may maintain several complaints, there may be several and contradictory decisions upon each of these matters. * * * Should different measures of damages be found for the different tenants in common, their several shares might become united in one sole owner, and there would be no one measure of damages on which a new complaint could be founded by either party. Such sole owner might by conveyances create other and different tenancies in common than those existing when the damages were ascertained; or tenants without any union of shares might entirely change their respective proportions, and under such circumstances no new process could be maintained by either party for the increase or decrease of any ascertained annual damages."

Recovery of Whole Damage by One Tenant.—If one tenant in common sues for the entire damage to realty, and the defendant fails to interpose an objection on the ground of the nonjoinder of the other owners, such judgment is not a bar to an action by the others to the extent of their damage. Gillum v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 4

Tex. Civ. App. 622. But it is error to refuse a charge limiting the right to recovery to such damages as resulted to the interest shown to have been in the plaintiff. Rowland v. Murphy, 66 Tex. 534; Lee v. Turner, 71 Tex. 264. And it has been held that if the defendant fails to ask an instruction limiting the recovery to the share of the tenant suing, he cannot assign as error an omission so to charge. Winters v. McGhee, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 128. On the other hand, a judgment was reversed where it appeared that one tenant in common had recovered the entire damage. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Stockton, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 38 S. W. Rep. 647.

Mesne Profits.—In an action for mesne profits, one tenant can recover only for the injury done to his own interest in the land, and the addition of "John Doe" will not avail to change the rule, as the statute makes real parties necessary. Masterson v. Hagan, 17 B. Mon. (Ky.) 325.

Recovery of Whole in Ejectment.—But in Vermont, where mesne profits are recovered in the ejectment suit, it was said that in real and possessory actions one tenant in common may always recover the damage due his cotenant as against a mere stranger. Hibbard v. Foster, 24 Vt. 546, distinguishing Chandler v. Spear, 22 Vt. 388, in that that case was trespas de bonis, which action is merely personal, although it was said that the same rule was thought to be applicable when the action was in that form notwithstanding the damage grew out of an injury to land.

1. Lowery v. Rowland, 104 Ala. 426 [citing Pruitt v. Ellington, 59 Ala. 454; Lothrop v. Arnold, 25 Me. 136].

Tenants in Possession of Distinct Parts by Agreement.—If, by agreement between tenants in common, one is permitted to have the exclusive use and possession of a part of the land which they own together, while the other has such use and possession of other lands so owned, either may recover for an injury done to that which he has the right to use and possess exclusively. Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. Wheat, 68 Tex. 133; Milner v. Milner, 101 Ala. 599.

But, conversely, tenants in common

6. Action for Rent. — One tenant in common or joint tenant cannot by himself maintain a suit for rent, where the contract is joint and the rent is reserved to the tenants jointly.¹

may, by agreement, occupy distinct portions of their common land in severalty without affecting their rights as tenants in common, and in such case, in an action for an injury to the portion occupied by one, all may join. Johnson v. Goodwin, 27 Vt. 288.

Trespass Qu. Cl. Fr. by a Tenant Out of Possession for Injury to Personalty. — One tenant in common of a pasture field may maintain an action against the owner of a domestic animal which breaks into the field and injures the live stock of such tenant rightfully grazing therein, and the other tenants are not necessary parties to such action. "If the conclusion just stated is justified — and we think it is — the only question remaining is as to the right of one of several tenants in possession, holding by separate contracts, to maintain an action in trespass, where the damage for which he seeks to recover is to his own individual property rightfully in the close, by virtue of his rental contract. That the damage is to personalty will not, according to the authorities, stand in the way of a recovery. True, such damage is treated by many authorities as an incident, and in the nature of aggravation. But this distinction seems to have arisen from a desire to preserve the common-law form of action, and at the same time not deny the injured party a remedy. The old action for trespass quare clausum fregit was strictly an action for damages to the land following an unlawful entry, and hence could not be resorted to for the purpose of a recovery for damages to personalty only. But forms of action not being important in this state, since the adoption of the code, we need not be embarrassed by any such distinction. The question in every case is, not what is the proper form of action, but, has the party a right of action? Upon this phase of the inquiry we do not find authorities. But, upon principle, why should not one of several tenants in common have such an action? Had he been in exclusive possession, no doubt would exist. Why should the mere fact that others are interested in the growing herbage bar a recovery?" Morgan v. Hudnell, 52 Ohio St. 552.

This question, as well as others relating to the subject of landlord and tenant when tenants in common or joint tenants are involved, will be fully treated in the article LANDLORD AND TENANT.

I. IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS BEFORE A COURT. — Proceedings in the impeachment of a judge before a court of justice are criminal in their nature, and are governed by the rules of law applicable to criminal causes.¹

II. INDICTMENT. — Where a judge has been indicted for neglect or misconduct the same rules apply as in the case of other criminal prosecutions, with regard to charging the offense, and the indictment will be vitiated by the same defects.²

III. PRACTICE WHERE JUDGE IS DISQUALIFIED — 1. Recusation on Judge's Motion. — Where a judge is satisfied that he is legally disqualified to act in a case he should not wait until an objection to him is raised by the parties, but should refuse to hear the cause by an entry on the docket that he does not sit in the case.³ This indeed is the usual practice,⁴ and the judge's decision in such cases Proceedings by Information. — Impeachment proceedings may be commenced by information. State v. Robinson, 111 Ala. 482.

Accused Not Entitled to Jury Trial. — In Alabama it is held that impeachment, while a criminal prosecution, is not one in which the accused has a constitutional right to a jury trial. State v. Buckley, 54 Ala. 599.

Receiving Illegal Compensation. — An indictment charging the defendant (a county judge) with having received two hundred and fifty dollars feloniously for the payment of the amount of salary due him should state the length of time the salary was unpaid, or otherwise designate the service or duty charged for. State v. Perham, 4 Oregon 189.

Charging Two Offenses in Same Count. — A charge in an indictment that the defendant, as judge of the County Court, did wilfully and unlawfully draw and issue warrants against the county, etc., is bad, because it charges two or more offenses in the same count. The drawing of each warrant was a separate and substantial transaction, and a criminal prosecution would lie for each if the drawing was wilfully and illegally done. State v. Ferriss, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 700.

Y. 547; Hibbard v. Odell, 16 Wis. 633; Great Charte v. Kennington, 2 Stra. 1173.

Recusation on Judge's Own Motion. — In Nugent v. Stark, 34 La. Ann. 628, it was held that the recusation of a judge proprio motu when such judge is petitioned for an appeal from a judgment rendered in a case in which he acted as counsel for the application is proper and legal.

A judge can legally recuse himself only where a party to the case has a right to recuse him. State v. Judges, 41 La. Ann. 319.

In Missouri it is provided by statute that whenever it shall be within the knowledge of the judge in a criminal case "that any of the causes enumerated which disqualify him to sit in any case exists, he shall, without any application on the part of the defendant, proceed to order the election of a special judge," etc. Rev. Stat. Mo. (1889), § 4177.

Duty to Suspend Proceedings. — Where that he is incompetent through interest is not reversible except for manifest error.¹

2. Objection by Parties — a. GENERALLY. — Since, however, it is not only possible, but very probable, that a judge may be ignorant of the disqualification, the party desiring to object to his hearing the case may and should request that such judge shall not sit.²

b. HOW RAISED. — Such request should be in the form of a petition or an affidavit setting out the facts which are claimed by the petitioner to operate as a disqualification.³ An affidavit asking for a change of judge must be made and sworn to by the party himself.⁴ He need not, however, appear in person and a justice finds that he has proceeded in an action wherein one of the parties is his relative by consanguinity or affinity, he must suspend further proceedings; he cannot render judgment of nonsuit. If he does, such judgment will be reversed. Edwards v. Russell, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 63.

Mandamus to Compel Special Judge to Proceed. — In Texas it is held that upon refusal of a special judge to act, on the ground that the regular judge was in fact not disqualified, he may be compelled by mandamus to proceed with the trial of the case. Schultze v. McLeary, 73 Tex. 92.

2. Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 52.

3. Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 52; State v. Brownfield, 83 Mo. 448; State v. Greenwade, 72 Mo. 298. See also Firestone v. Hershberger, 121 Ind. 201; Wiltfong v. Schafer, 121 Ind. 264; German Ins. Co. v. Landram, 88 Ky. 433; Russell v. Russell, (Ky. 1889) 12 S. W. Rep. 709; Powers v. Reynolds, 89 Ky. 259; State v. Palmer, 4 S. Dak. 543; State v. Rodway, 1 S. Dak. 575; State v. Chapman, 1 S. Dak. 414; Rev. Stat. Ind. (1896), §§ 412, 1769.

Under the Kentucky Statute an affidavit that the regular judge will not give the affiant a fair and impartial trial must set out the grounds of such belief, and the personal integrity of the judge must be affected thereby. German Ins. Co. v. Landram, 88 Ky. 433.

"Reason to Believe and Do Believe," etc. — In State v. Palmer, 4 S. Dak. 543, the accused, in setting out his grounds for believing that the presiding judge would not give him a fair and impartial trial on account of bias, used the following language: "I have reason to believe, and do believe, and therefore charge the truth to be, that I cannot have a fair and impartial trial." The affidavit was held sufficient.

Prejudice Must Be Shown to Satisfaction of Court. — Affidavits making the naked allegation of the bias and prejudice of the judge do not necessarily make it "appear to the satisfaction of the court" that the judge is so biased or prejudiced. The clear intimation of the expression "to the satisfaction of the court" is that the court shall judicially consider and pass upon the sufficiency of the affidavits presented, or other testimony, to prove the fact of bias or prejudice. It is the judgment of the court, and not that of the affiant, that is to be satisfied. State v. Chapman, 1 S. Dak. 414; State v. Rodway, 1 S. Dak. 575.

In Missouri, in a criminal prosecution, the defendant's application must be supported by his own affidavit and the affidavits of two or more reputable persons not of kin to or counsel for him, that the judge of the court in which the case is pending will not afford him a fair trial. Rev. Stat. Mo. (1889), § 4174; State v. Greenwade, 72 Mo. 298; State v. Brownfield, 83 Mo. 448.

Should Allege Statutory Grounds of Disqualification. — In Jones v. State, 61 Ark. 88, the application, based upon the grounds of prejudice of the judge and that he was a material witness, failed to set out any of the grounds of disqualification mentioned in the constitution (Ark. Const., art. 7, § 20). The judge stated that he knew no material facts in the case, nor was he called as a witness. It was held that the application was properly denied.

make application, nor need he personally file his affidavit. Both of these offices may be performed by his attorney.¹

c. DECISION. — If the facts alleged by the petitioner are unquestioned, the judge may have the entry made that he does not sit.² If, however, the allegations are not admitted by the judge, or are denied by the other party, the petitioner must lay before the court proof of their truth. As to the sufficiency of such proof the judge himself, if alone, or the other judges, if present, shall decide.³

d. WAIVER — Effect of Statutes. — In many of the states it is held that where disqualified judges are forbidden by statute to act, such disqualification cannot be waived by the consent of the parties.⁴ In other states, however, it is expressly provided that

1. Firestone v. Hershberger, 121 Ind. 201; Wiltfong v. Shafer, 121 Ind. 264.

In Firestone v. Hershberger, 121 Ind. 201, the court, distinguishing Stevens v. Burr, 61 Ind. 464, said: "We now hold that the only point authoritatively decided in that case is that the party must himself make the affidavit, and that it cannot be made for him by another."

2. Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 52.

Should Not Withdraw upon Mere Suggestion. — "A judge ought not to withdraw upon a mere suggestion, unless the cause of recusation is true in fact and sufficient in law; because the office of judge is one necessary for the administration of justice, and from which a judge should not be permitted to withdraw without sufficient grounds." Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 52.

Regular Judge Must Be Actually Disqualified. — In Ex p. State Bar Assoc., 92 Ala. 113, it is held that the refusal of the regular judge to act must be justified, and if he is not in fact disqualified, proceedings before an attorney selected by the clerk are coram non judice and void.

3. Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 52. See also Waterhouse v. Martin, Peck (Tenn.) 374; Trustees Internal Imp. Fund v. Bailey, 10 Fla. 238.

Must Call upon Another Judge. — In Louisiana it is held that the judge recused may not say that the recusation is groundless, but that it is his duty to stand aside and at once call upon a judge ad hoc to pass upon the validity of the recusation. State v. Judge, 39 La. Ann. 994. See also State v. Judge, 33 La. Ann. 1293; Roman Catholic Church v. Pierche, 36 La. Ann. 160; State v. Judge, 37 La. Ann. 253; State v. Judge, 38 La. Ann. 247; Amacker v.

Varnado, 19 La. Ann. 381; Hunter v. Blackman, 32 La. Ann. 403. These decisions do not refer to motions which upon their face, and admitting all their allegations to be true, afford no legal ground for recusation. Such pleas the judge may treat as frivolous and set aside without motion. State v. Chantlain, 42 La. Ann. 718.

Statutes Mandatory. — In some states the appointment of a special judge, or the calling in of a neighboring judge, on affidavit being filed as to the regular official's bias, has been declared by statute to be mandatory. Burkett v. Holman, 104 Ind. 6; Krutz v. Griffith, 68 Ind. 444; Shoemaker v. Smith, 74 Ind. 71; Heshion v. Presley, 80 Ind. 490; State v. Shipman, 93 Mo. 147; State v. Bacon, 107 Mo. 627; State v. Gilmore, 110 Mo. 1; Barnes v. McMullins, 78 Mo. 265; State v. Palmer, 4 S. Dak. 543. See also State v. Judge, 37 La. Ann. 253; State v. Judge, 39 La. Ann. 994; Hunter v. Blackman, Mann. Unrep. Cas. (La.) 427.

In Kentucky such a statute was condemned as lowering the dignity of the bench, and rigid construction was held proper. Byram v. Holliday, 84 Ky. 18.

Applies Only to Regular Judge. — In Missouri it is held that the statute providing that in a criminal case the judge shall be incompetent to try the case if the defendant files his affidavit, properly supported, that the judge will not afford him a fair trial, applies only to the regular judge. After the regular judge has been thus disqualified, and the judge of another circuit has been called in to try the case, he cannot be disqualified in the same way. State v. Greenwade, 72 Mo. 298.

the parties may, by consent, waive such objection to the judge;¹ and a formal waiver of objection in writing, entered of record, is not necessary² unless specifically required by the statute.³

Hodges*, 23 Tex. 104; Dallas v. Peacock, 89 Tex. 58; Hibbard v. Odell, 16 Wis. 635.

This Rule Is Based on Public Policy. — Oakley v. Aspinwall, 3 N. Y. 547, where the Court of Appeals said: "It is of great importance that the courts should be free from reproach or the suspicion of unfairness. The party may be interested only that his particular suit should be justly determined; but the state, the community, is concerned not only for that, but that the judiciary shall enjoy an elevated rank in the estimation of mankind. The party who desired it might be permitted to take the hazard of a biased decision if he alone were to suffer for his folly; but the state cannot endure the scandal and reproach which would be visited upon its judiciary in consequence. Although the party consent, he will invariably murmur if he do not gain his cause; and the very man who induced the judge to act when he should have forbore, will be the first to arraign his decision as biased and unjust." Approved in Matter of White, 37 Cal. 192; Newcome v. Light, 58 Tex. 141.

In Chambers v. Hodges, 23 Tex. 104, the court said: "We conclude that the presiding judge, being interested, was absolutely incapacitated to take cognizance of or sit in the case. The consent of parties could not remove his incapacity, or restore his competency, against the prohibitions of the law, which was designed not merely for the protection of the party to the suit, but for the general interests of justice. And, consequently, the judgment rendered by him was a nullity, and left the case remaining undisposed of as completely as if the judge had not been present at the court."

In Chase v. Weston, 75 Iowa 159, where it was held that a judge who is an uncle of the plaintiff is disqualified from trying the case, and that such irregularity is not waived by any conduct on the plaintiff's part, the court said: "Nothing but the mutual consent of both parties, or that which would in law amount to such consent, would remove the disability imposed by statute, nor do we think it was necessary for plaintiff to do more than to make the fact of the relationship a matter of record to preserve his rights, if the consent required by statute is not given."

In Georgia it is held that the grant of a rule for a new trial by an interested judge allows argument before a qualified substitute to whose hearing the parties consent. Thomas v. Jones, 64 Ga. 139.

Not Applicable Where Judge Is Party of Record. — In Missouri it is held that the provision authorizing a judge "who is interested in any suit" to try it, if the parties consent, does not apply where the judge is a party to the record. Kansas City v. Knotts, 78 Mo. 356.

2. Hine v. Hussey, 45 Ala. 496; Groton v. Hurlburt, 22 Conn. 178; McMillan v. Nichols, 62 Ga. 36; Ellsworth v. Moore, 5 Iowa 486; Stearns v. Wright, 51 N. H. 610; Baldwin v. Calkins, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 167.

3. In Tennessee it was formerly held that the waiver of incompetency could be by parol, or might be implied, Wroe v. Greer, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 172; but under the code (§ 4098) the waiver must be in writing if before a court which is not a court of record, or if a court of record, must be entered of record. Hilton v. Miller, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 395; Smith v. Pearce, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 72; Reams v. Kearns, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 217.

Need Not Be in Express Words. — In Hilton v. Miller, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 395, it is held that the waiver of record or in writing need not be in express words, but may be implied, and that a confession in writing or of record of a judge

Before Issue Joined. — Where waiver by consent is permitted, objection to the judge for disqualification should be made before issue joined.¹

Application of Common-law Principles. — Even without the provisions above mentioned, it would seem that unless the statute has the force of a prohibition, the common-law rule which distinguishes between acts which are in themselves void and those merely voidable would apply.²

IV. SPECIAL AND SUBSTITUTE JUDGES — 1. Definition. — A special judge is a member of the bar presiding in the place of the regular judge, on account of the absence or disqualification of the latter; or he is a judge of another court, called in for similar reasons. In the latter instance he is, strictly speaking, more properly termed a substitute judge.³

2. Constitutional Limitations Regarding. — In some states the statutory provisions for the election or appointment of special judges have been held unconstitutional,⁴ while in others it is held that the constitutional provision for the substitution of a judge from another court forbids a statutory provision for the appointment of attorneys as special judges; yet even in these states such ment is a waiver, under section 4098 of the code, of all objection to the competency of the judge.

"After a trial has been commenced, no attempt to recuse a judge will be listened to unless it is shown affirmatively that the party was not aware of the objection and was in no fault for not knowing it." Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 52. See also Peebles v. Rand, 43 N. H. 342.

In Wyoming it was held that where an application was not made until after both parties had consented in open court that the trial of the case should be set down for a day certain, such application came too late, and that the moving party had waived his rights. Dolan v. Church, 1 Wyoming 187.

"If the facts are known to the party recusing, he is bound to make his objection before issue joined, and before the trial is commenced; otherwise he will be deemed to have waived the objection, in cases where a statute does not make the proceedings void." Moses v. Julian, 45 N. H. 52. See also Adams v. State, 11 Ark. 466; Shropshire v. State, 12 Ark. 190.

4. Winchester v. Ayres, 4 Greene (Iowa) 104; Hoagland v. Creed, 81 Ill. 506; Ex p. Amos, 51 Ala. 57.

In Alabama the construction of the constitutional provisions was formerly very liberal. There the court alluded to the rule that constitutional provisions relating to legislative power are not grants, but limitations to be strictly construed, and held that the implied restriction upon the legislative power to erect and regulate courts, contained in the declaration that the judicial power shall consist of a Supreme Court, a Circuit Court, etc., and that judges of such Circuit Courts should be elected, did not extend to the case of trials in such Circuit Courts which the regular judge should decline, or be incompetent, to try. As to such emergencies, the innate power of the legislature continued unrestrained. Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Burkett, 42 Ala. 83. See also Holly v. Carson, 39 Ala. 345.

Attorney May Act as Arbitrator. — In Ex p. Amos, 51 Ala. 57, it was held that if both parties consented to the appointment of an attorney, he might act constitutional provision is held not to apply in the case of inferior tribunals created by the legislature.¹

3. When Necessary.—As to the occasions demanding the appointment or election of a special judge, the statutes of each state must be consulted, but, generally speaking, such election or appointment is proper in case of the unavoidable absence of the regular judge, or where he is disqualified by prejudice or interest.² When the court of which a disqualified judge is an officer is also represented in the same district by another judge of concurrent powers who is not disqualified, it is not necessary to appoint a special judge.³

4. When May Act.—A party may ordinarily, upon proper application, obtain a change of judge in all civil actions, such as proceedings by an administrator for the sale of real estate,⁴ proceedings supplementary to execution,⁵ divorce proceed-as a quasi court of arbitration, and that an appeal would lie from his award or judgment.

1. Harper v. Jacobs, 51 Mo. 296; Smith v. Haworth, 53 Mo. 88.

The fact that as to one grade of courts, viz., the Circuit Courts, the constitution had provided in case of temporary inability of the regular incumbent did not create the inference that its silence respecting inferior courts showed intent to deny similar provision for them; for the legislative power to establish inferior courts was enough. Brown v. Buzan, 24 Ind. 194.

In Mississippi the court intimated very strongly that the constitutional provision for calling in the judge of another circuit would prevent the passage of any statute allowing agreement for selection of an attorney as special judge. Peter v. State, 6 How. (Miss.) 326.

Reference to Master or Referee.—

Reference may be made to a master or referee. Underwood v. McDuffee, 15 Mich. 361; Hards v. Burton, 79 Ill. 504. But the referee shall not have power of final decision. Johnson v. Wallace, 7 Ohio, pt. ii. 62; King v. Hopkins, 57 N. H. 334; St. Paul, etc., R. Co. v. Gardner, 19 Minn. 132, 18 Am. Rep. 334.

2. Death of Judge.—In State v. Lewis, 107 N. Car. 967, it is held that the death of a judge is an "unavoidable accident," such as will authorize the governor to assign another judge to preside instead of the regular judge, unable to preside.

Sickness of Judge.—When the judge at a trial becomes sick and unable to proceed, after the evidence is all in, and the instructions are given to the jury, the trial should proceed under a special judge before the same jury, and without rehearing the testimony. Bullock v. Neal, 42 Ark. 278.

In State v. Punshon, 133 Mo. 44, it is held that where the regular judge is indisposed by illness he need make no effort to procure another judge, but that the members of the bar may at once elect a special judge under the statute providing for such election where the judge is unable to hold term and fails to procure another judge.

Delay of Substitute Judge.—The fact that a judge, who has been called to try a criminal case in which the regular judge is disqualified by the defendant's oath of prejudice, states that he will not be able to be present until a date later than that to which the case has been adjourned, does not require the calling of another judge, but the judge first selected is authorized to try the case. State v. Noland, 111 Mo. 473.

Detention by Other Judicial Duties.—The absence of a judge at the time appointed for an adjourned session, caused by judicial duties in another county, is not such inability to hold court as will authorize an election of a special judge. Butler v. Williams, 48 Ark. 227.

Pronouncing Sentence Merely Ministerial. — In State v. Shea, 95 Mo. 85, it is held that the act of pronouncing sentence is merely ministerial, and can be done by a judge who was attorney for the state on the trial. He may not call in the judge of another circuit merely for such purpose. In the same case it was also held that although such sentence by the substitute judge is error, and will be reversed, the reversal is to be confined to the judgment and sentence. It does not invalidate or overthrow the steps antecedent to the judgment and sentence.

In Mississippi the exercise of his right to pronounce sentence in such cases is in the discretion of the regular judge. Thomas v. State, 5 How. (Miss.) 20.

7. In Cooke v. Cooke, 41 Md. 362, it is held that the provision in the Maryland Constitution for the transfer to a different court in case of local prejudice, or of the disqualification of the regular judge, does not apply to equity cases. The provision is to provide against an evil which cannot exist in equity, first, because of the right to have an issue awarded for jury trial; second, because appeals in equity are as to facts as well as to law.

Contra. — In Kentucky provision is made for the election of chancellors pro tem. from time to time, as emergencies may require. Rudd v. Woolfolk, 4 Bush (Ky.) 555.

5. Selection — Statutory Mode Exclusive and Jurisdictional. — Where a mode of selection of special or substitute judges is prescribed by the constitution, and the causes for such selection are indicated, other modes and other causes are thereby excluded.¹ Parties cannot, independently of constitutional or statutory provisions, confer judicial authority, and where this is attempted a judgment by the appointee is a nullity;² nor will the parties be estopped, by their consent, from denying the jurisdiction.³

Mode of Selection. — The provisions for the selection of special judges vary in the different states. Thus in some jurisdictions the parties may, by agreement, select the judge from the attorneys of the court;⁴ or, in case of their failure to do so, the attorneys of the court who are present and not interested or employed in the case may elect an attorney of the court then in attendance.⁵

A provision that a recused judge who is not personally interested may appoint a lawyer in his stead, and when interested may call on a district or parish judge, excludes the idea of a sick judge so doing. State v. Fritz, 27 La. Ann. 689; State v. Phillips, 27 La. Ann. 663.

It was held in Georgia that a provision authorizing substitution in the Superior Court did not prevent legislation authorizing litigants to select an attorney in place of the disqualified judge. Henderson v. Pope, 39 Ga. 361. See also State v. Williams, 14 W. Va. 851.

A provision that the legislature may provide for special judges authorizes a statute allowing selection by the bar, Ligan v. State, 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 159; State v. Williams, 14 W. Va. 851; or by the governor, Kennedy v. Com., 78 Ky. 447. And a statute allowing election by the bar is applicable although one of the parties does not consent to the choice. *Smith v. In other states it is provided that special judges must be elected, and cannot be selected by agreement of the parties.¹ Still another method is in use in a few states, where, by statutory provision, the regular judge, when unable to preside, may appoint an attorney to act as special judge.² Where a special judge who has been chosen for a term is disqualified to preside in a certain action, another should be selected for such trial, in the same manner as prescribed for the selection of the first.³ In those states allowing the selection of special judges in criminal cases, the manner of such selection is usually the same as in civil cases,⁴

Appointment by Clerk.—In Alabama, where the parties fail to select a special judge from the attorneys present, the clerk must nominate the attorney who shall preside over and try the cause at that term. Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Burkett, 42 Ala. 83. See also Beck v. Henderson, 76 Ga. 360.

A special judge must be elected by the attorneys of the court, as provided by the constitution, and not by agreement of parties to the cause to be tried. State*, 44 Tex. 523; Early v. State, 9 Tex. App. 476; Thompson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 649; State v. Sachs, 3 Wash. 691.

In Missouri the power of the members of the bar to elect a special judge under section 3323, Rev. Stat. 1889, depends solely on the failure of the regular judge to procure another in his stead, and the fact that he made no effort to do so is immaterial. State v. Punshon, 133 Mo. 44.

Order for Election.—"Whenever in any cause the defendant shall make application * * * for a change of

but in at least one state the right of the parties to select a judge by consent is limited to civil cases.¹

Request and Notice to Substitute Judge. — Where a regular judge is incompetent to sit in the trial of a case he may call on the judge of another court of like jurisdiction to preside.² In such case the regular judge should fix the time for trial and notify the judge whom he wishes to preside.³

6. Proof of Authority — a. NECESSITY AND SUFFICIENCY OF. — The selection or appointment of a special judge should be affirmatively shown by the record.⁴ In some states the appointment of venue for any of the reasons stated, * * * it shall be lawful for the judge to hear such application, and immediately thereafter, by an order of record, to empower the members of the bar present * * * to proceed to the election of a special judge for the trial of the particular cause pending," etc. Rev. Stat. Mo. (1889), § 4175; State v. Thomas, 32 Mo. App. 159; State v. Daniels, 66 Mo. 192; State v. Bulling, 105 Mo. 204.

When Unnecessary. — Where a special judge is chosen by agreement, no order for an election is necessary. State v. Bishop, 22 Mo. App. 435.

Selection by District Attorney and Defendant. — In holding that the district attorney may agree with the defendant upon a special judge, the court in Davis v. State, 44 Tex. 523, said: "In such a case the state is a party litigant, and speaks and acts through its appropriate district attorney the same as any other party does through an attorney." See also Early v. State, 9 Tex. App. 476.

2. Rev. Stat. Mo., § 4178; Acts Va. (1884), p. 748; Va. Code, § 3049; Sess. Laws S. Dak. (1890), c. 78, § 20; Benjamin v. Evansville, etc., R. Co., 28 Ind. 416; State v. Newsum, 129 Mo. 154; State v. In Missouri it is provided by statute that "if the case in which the judge shall be incompetent to sit * * * be a felony, and no suitable person to try the case will serve when elected as such special judge, or if, in the opinion of the judge of said court, no competent or suitable person can or will be elected as such special judge, he need not order such election, but may, in either case, set the cause down for trial on some day of the term, or on some day as early as practicable in vacation, and notify and request the judge of some other circuit to try the cause," etc. Rev. Stat. Mo. (1897), § 1881; Rev. Stat. Mo. (1889), § 4178; State v. Shea, 95 Mo. 85. See also State v. Wear, 129 Mo. 619.

Notice Not Part of Record. — The object of the notice in such case is simply to secure the attendance of a competent judge, and the notice is not part of the record. Benjamin v. Evansville, etc., R. Co., 28 Ind. 416.

4. Wall v. Looney, 52 Ark. 113; Dansby v. Beard, 39 Ark. 254; Worsham v. Murchison, 66 Ga. 715; Smith v. Haworth, 53 Mo. 88; McMurry v. State, 9 Tex. App. 207; Brinkley v. Harkins, 48 Tex. 225; Bailey v. State, (Tex. App. 1890) 15 S. W. Rep. 117.

An Appeal Will Be Dismissed where the record fails to show that the special judge who presided at the trial of the cause was elected for that purpose. Wall v. Looney, 52 Ark. 113.

Must Be Entered on Order Book. — The appointment of a special judge must be entered on the order book. Kennedy v. State, 53 Ind. 542; Taylor v. Bosworth, 1 Ind. App. 54. See also Rudd v. Woolfolk, 4 Bush (Ky.) 555; Slone v. Slone, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 339.

Record Must Show Manner of Selection. — Where a case is tried before a special judge the record must show the reasons for his selection and the manner of such selection. Smith v. State, 24 Tex. App. 290; Bailey v. State, (Tex. App. 1890) 15 S. W. Rep. 117; Brinkley v. Harkins, 48 Tex. 225; Thompson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 649.

Order of Appointment Should Be Entered of Record. — When a cause is tried by a a special judge or the agreement of the parties by which he is chosen must be in writing.¹ The record need not recite the facts special judge appointed for that purpose, the transcript should show that the order of appointment was entered of record. Smith v. Haworth, 53 Mo. 88. In this case the court said: "The entry of record in such a case constitutes at once both the authority of the special judge and the evidence of that authority, without which he is utterly powerless to act."

Necessity of Oath.—An attorney who has been chosen to act as a special judge must be sworn. Kennedy v. State, 53 Ind. 542; Herbster v. State, 80 Ind. 484; Rudd v. Woolfolk, 4 Bush (Ky.) 555; Slone v. Slone, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 339; Thompson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 649.

"It would be monstrous to hold that an attorney, where the objection is made, may sit in judgment upon the life, liberty, character, and property of a citizen, without having taken the oath prescribed by the constitution and the statute." Kennedy v. State, 53 Ind. 546.

Contra.—In Georgia it is held that there is no need of a judge pro hac vice being sworn. "The law does not require it, probably because the oath taken by all attorneys at law, when admitted to practice, was deemed by the legislature sufficient to bind their conscience in the discharge of all duties devolved by law on those officers of court. * * * The statute does not require a special oath." Reeves v. Graffing, 67 Ga. 512.

Oath Must Appear of Record.—In Texas it is held that the fact that the oath was administered to a special judge must appear of record. Bailey v. State, (Tex. App. 1890) 15 S. W. Rep. 117; Smith v. State, 24 Tex. App. 290; Ford v. Cameron First Nat. Bank, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 34 S. W. Rep. 684; Thompson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 649.

Contra.—In Kentucky it is held that the reasons for the election of a special judge and the fact of taking the required oath must be entered on the order book. On appeal, this order need not be copied in the record, but will be presumed to be correct; but when it is copied, and thereby no qualification appears, the presumption of correctness is rebutted. Rudd v.

Woolfolk, 4 Bush (Ky.) 555; Slone v. Slone, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 339.

Sufficient Recital of Oath.—Where the record recited that a special judge "appeared at the bar of this court, and duly qualified to act as judge," it was held that, in the absence of any recitals to the contrary, the fact that the special judge was properly sworn was sufficiently shown by such recital. Ford v. Cameron First Nat. Bank, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 34 S. W. Rep. 684.

Waiver of Oath.—In Ford v. Cameron First Nat. Bank, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 34 S. W. Rep. 684, it is held that the failure of the special judge to take the oath may be waived by the parties. See also on this point, Vandever v. Vandever, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 137; Salter v. Salter, 6 Bush (Ky.) 624; State v. Van Wye, 136 Mo. 227.

1, Necessity for Written Appointment.—In Indiana the appointment of a special judge must be in writing; and where the record does not show such written appointment, and objection is seasonably made to the court below, a reversal may follow on appeal. Littleton v. Smith, 119 Ind. 230; Kennedy v. State, 53 Ind. 542; Evans v. State, 56 Ind. 459; Greenwood v. State, 116 Ind. 485; McClure v. State, 77 Ind. 287; Herbster v. State, 80 Ind. 484; Smith v. State, 145 Ind. 176.

Not Necessary for Substitute Judge.—Where the judge of another court is called in no written appointment is necessary. Wood v. Franklin, 97 Ind. 117.

Written Agreement of Parties.—In Thompson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 649, it is held that an agreement of counsel to appoint a special judge to try a cause should be perpetuated in writing, and such writing filed among the papers and made a part of the record.

Presumption as to Written Stipulation.—In State v. Sachs, 3 Wash. 691, it was held that where the attorneys for the parties to an action agree upon a member of the bar as a judge pro tem., and such agreement is approved by the judge of the court, and the approval entered upon the journal, and the judge pro tem. properly sworn to try the case, the presumption arising from the journal entries is that a written stipulation, as required by law, was en-disqualifying the regular judge,¹ though, according to some decisions, where a substitute judge is called in the disability of the regular judge should be set forth.² Nor need the record show the qualifications of the special judge for the office.³

b. PRESUMPTION OF AUTHORITY. — According to some decisions it will be presumed on appeal that all prerequisites were duly performed by the special judge.⁴ Where a special judge continues to act during a term subsequent to that for which he was elected, it will be presumed on appeal, the record being silent, tered into for the appointment of such judge.

1. State v. Hosmer, 85 Mo. 553; Rudd v. Woolfolk, 4 Bush (Ky.) 555.

"The disqualifying facts are not issuable when the judge himself declares their existence. He alone determines, in such case, his own disqualification, and there is no necessity for stating more in the order than the one under consideration contains." State v. Hosmer, 85 Mo. 553.

Disqualification Shown by the Agreement. — Where the agreement as to the selection of a special judge discloses the disqualification of the regular judge, there is no need for such regular judge to have it entered of record. State v. Bishop, 22 Mo. App. 435.

Where Cause Is Transferred. — In Bates v. Casey, 61 Tex. 592, it is held that where a county judge declines to hear a cause and transfers the same to the District Court, because he is disqualified to hear and determine it, the grounds of his disqualification need not be stated unless their existence be questioned.

Contra. — In Roberts v. State, 27 Fla. 244, it is held that it will not be sufficient for the judge transferring the case merely to state that he is "disqualified to hear and determine" it, but the cause of disqualification must be stated.

2. Where a substitute judge is called in by the president judge, it is necessary that a proper certificate, setting forth the disqualification, etc., and the call on the president substituted to hold the regular term — signed by the proper president — should be filed of record and entered on the minutes of the court, as the evidence of the authority to hold the courts and of title to the compensation. President Judges' Application, 64 Pa. St. 33. See also Matter of Rhinebeck, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 346; People v. Petty, 32 Hun (N. Y.) 443.

3. State v. Gamble, 108 Mo. 500; Matter of Loehr, 11 Mo. App. 53. See also Garvin v. Jennerson, 20 Kan. 371; Hunter v. Ferguson, 13 Kan. 462.

The order of appointment need not recite that the one appointed "was a disinterested person, learned in the law" in the terms in which the statute defines the qualifications of the person to be appointed. Lawler v. Lyness, 112 Ala. 386.

Record Must Show Him to Be an Attorney. — In Horton v. Pool, 40 Ala. 629, it is held that where an attorney is appointed by consent of parties to preside instead of the regular judge, the record must affirmatively show that the person so appointed is an attorney of the court.

4. Harper v. Jacobs, 51 Mo. 296.

Manner of Appointment Need Not Be Shown. — In Indiana it is held that where no objections were made to the special judge or judge pro tem., and no questions were made below as to the regularity of his appointment, the record upon appeal need not show the manner of his appointment. The record being silent, the court will presume that the appointment was properly and legally made. Bartley v. Phillips, 114 Ind. 189.

Presumption as to a Second Appointment. — In Fassinow v. State, 89 Ind. 235, a judge pro tem., duly appointed, held court on the first day of the term; on the second day another judge pro tem., appointed on that day, appeared and held the court, and did so for several days, the record during those days being silent as to the one first appointed. It was held that it would be presumed that the second appointee had due authority. See also Cincinnati, etc., R. Co. v. Rowe, 17 Ind. 568; Hutts v. Hutts, 51 Ind. 581; Glenn v. State, 46 Ind. 368; Singleton v. Pidgeon, 21 Ind. 118.

that the reappointment, if such was necessary, was duly made.¹ The record of the court is conclusive and unimpeachable, and cannot be denied by proof aliunde showing that in fact the bench was occupied by a stranger,² or that the commission of the special judge was defective.³ If, however, the record is not silent, but shows that a special judge sat illegally, the error must be declared fatal on appeal.⁴

7. Objections to Authority.—A party to an action which a special judge has been selected to try has the right to question the authority of such judge to try the case,⁵ and, if the objection is overruled, the grounds of the objection and the authority of the judge may be spread upon the record by a bill of exceptions, in order to enable the court on appeal to determine his right to exercise the powers of special judge in the case.⁶

Waiver of Objection.—Where, however, no objection is made below, all objections to the authority of the special judge will be assumed by the appellate court to have been waived.⁷ This rule, however, applies only to the original parties to the record, before the court on actual service of process, and who are under no disabilities.⁸

2. Winchester v. Ayres, 4 Greene (Iowa) 104.

3. Kennedy v. Com., 78 Ky. 447.

4. Haverly Invincible Min. Co. v. Howcutt, 6 Colo. 574; Winchester v. Ayres, 4 Greene (Iowa) 104.

In Rudd v. Woolfolk, 4 Bush (Ky.) 555, it is held that while the order stating the reasons for electing a special judge and the fact of his taking the oath need not be copied in the record, but will be presumed to be correct, yet if such order is copied, and thereby no qualification appears, the presumption of correctness is rebutted.

5. White v. Reagan, 25 Ark. 622; Kennedy v. State, 53 Ind. 542; Greenwood v. State, 116 Ind. 485; Schlunger v. State, 113 Ind. 295; Herbst v. State, 80 Ind. 484; Bowen v. "The refusal of the court to hear evidence or pass on the objections raised to the authority of the special judge, pro or con, was manifest error." White v. Reagan, 25 Ark. 622.

Parties Only May Object.—It is for the parties to a cause, and not the judge, to object, on the ground of disqualification, to a person elected special judge. Lacy v. Barrett, 75 Mo. 469.

To Be Made to Clerk.—In those states where the election of the special judge is held by the clerk, the objection to a person elected special judge must be made to the clerk. Lacy v. Barrett, 75 Mo. 469.

6. White v. Reagan, 25 Ark. 622. See also Rives v. Pettit, 4 Ark. 582; Adams v. State, 11 Ark. 466; Sweeptzer v. Gaines, 19 Ark. 96.

8. "Consent cannot be presumed

8. Powers and Duties. — A special judge possesses all the powers of and is subject to the same restrictions as the regular judge during the hearing of the cause which he has been elected to try or during the term for which he has been elected,¹ and his powers continue until the final determination of the cause for which he was chosen.² He has the right to hear and determine all motions,³ grant appeals,⁴ sign bills of exceptions,⁵ and, in general, to make against one only constructively before the court, nor against minors nor married women; much less can it be presumed against purchasers who are not parties to the original record." Rudd v. Woolfolk, 4 Bush (Ky.) 555.

Nebraska. — Nebraska Mfg. Co. v. Maxon, 23 Neb. 224.

Texas. — Harris v. Musgrave, 72 Tex. 18; Powers v. State, 23 Tex. App. 42.

Jurisdiction Over Consolidated Causes. — Where a special judge has been appointed in a cause with which others have been consolidated, he will have jurisdiction over each consolidated cause. Mills v. Paul, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. Rep. 242.

Termination of Powers. — The powers of a special judge terminate when the occasion for his existence ceases. Coles v. Thompson, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 666. In this case it was held that when the judge by reason of whose disqualification the special judge came to be appointed has gone out of office, and another has been elected who is not disqualified, the powers of the special judge are thereby terminated.

In Arkansas it is held that the judicial power of a special judge elected by the bar under the provisions of the constitution (art. 7, § 21, Const. of 1874), where there is a vacancy in the office, or where the regular judge fails to appear, terminates when the regular judge appears and takes the bench; and he has no power after that to try a cause even by consent, and though the regular judge be disqualified. But where the regular judge is disqualified in a cause, or during the term falls ill or dies, or becomes unable from any cause to hold the court, the authority of the special judge elected in his place continues for the remainder of the term of his election. Hyllis v. State, 45 Ark. 478.

2. Beitman v. Hopkins, 109 Ind. 177; Small v. Reeves, (Ky. 1896) 37 S. W. Rep. 682; State v. Davidson, 69 Mo. 509; Holliday v. Mansker, 44 Mo. App. 465; Dawson v. Dawson, 29 Mo. App. 521; Nebraska Mfg. Co. v. Maxon, 23 Neb. 224.

A continuance of the cause to a subsequent term does not abate the powers of a special judge. State v. Davidson, 69 Mo. 509.

The fact that the regular judge has adjourned the term of court does not deprive the special judge of his authority to proceed in the trial of the case for which he was appointed. Perkins v. Hayward, 124 Ind. 445.

3. State v. Wofford, 111 Mo. 526; Bremen Bank v. Umrath, 55 Mo. App. 43.

Motion for Nunc Pro Tunc Entry. — A special judge appointed to try a cause is the proper person to consider motions therein for a nunc pro tunc entry of judgment and for a new trial. Mayer v. Haggerty, 138 Ind. 628.

4. State v. Wofford, 111 Mo. 526.

5. State v. Wofford, 111 Mo. 526; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Bowles, 71 Miss. 994.

Signing After Term Time. — Special as

all orders and hear all matters that come before him in the trial and disposition of the case.¹ A writ of error may run to the court in which a special judge sat, as his judgment is the judgment of that court.² Since a judge pro tem. is only a substitute, and not a duplicate judge,³ in jurisdictions where the law intends that only one judge shall sit at a time in a county the regular and the special judge cannot hold courts at the same time in the same county.⁴

well as regular judges may sign bills of exceptions after term time. Watkins v. State, 37 Ark. 370; Cowall v. Althul, 40 Ark. 172; Bacon v. State, 22 Fla. 46; Lerch v. Emmett, 44 Ind. 331; Shugart v. Miles, 125 Ind. 445; Holliday v. Mansker, 44 Mo. App. 465.

Signature in Vacation Not Having Heard Evidence. — Where a motion for a new trial is heard by one acting as judge pro tem. who did not hear the evidence, and a bill of exceptions is signed by him in vacation, no reason being shown why the regular judge who heard the evidence did not sign the same, the bill of exceptions will be disregarded. Travellers' Ins. Co. v. Leeds, 38 Ind. 444.

1. State v. Wofford, 111 Mo. 526.

Illustrations. — May settle bill of exceptions. Holliday v. Mansker, 44 Mo. App. 465. May decide a motion for a new trial. Staser v. Hogan, 120 Ind. 207. May determine defendant's right to a change of venue. State v. Higgeson, 110 Mo. 213. Has jurisdiction to order a change of venue and to try the cause in the county to which it is sent. State v. Higgeson, 110 Mo. 213. When reversed on appeal, he may hear the case upon the new trial. State v. Sneed, 91 Mo. 552. May try a subsequent action to vacate the judgment in the first. Harris v. Musgrave, 72 Tex. 18. May suspend the trial. Powers v. State, 23 Tex. App. 42. May adjourn court till next regular term. State v. Ross, 118 Mo. 23.

4. Clark v. Rugg, 20 Fla. 861; In re Millington, 24 Kan. 214; Tarpenning v. Cannon, 28 Kan. 665; Bear v. Cohen, 65 N. Car. 511; Baisley v. Baisley, 15 Oregon 183; Williams v. Strauss, 4 Okla. 160. But see Paducah Land, etc., Co. v. Cochran, (Ky. 1896) 37 S. W. Rep. 67, in which it is held that it is no objection to the correctness of the judgment that the special judge sat at the same time as the regular judge.

Proceedings Before Special Judge at Chambers. — In Arkansas it is held that while the regular judge is occupying the bench a special judge is without judicial power to proceed with the trial of an action at chambers, or to appoint a guardian ad litem therein. Such proceedings will not be cured by a nunc pro tunc order, made afterwards in court by the special judge, entering them of record as of the day on which they were had. Cox v. Gress, 51 Ark. 224.

I. INTRODUCTORY. — The Scope of This Article is limited by the plan of this work in several obvious particulars. In the first place, it is not intended to treat specifically of the judgments in the various forms of actions or in actions for various kinds of particular relief. This matter will be found in the articles which treat specifically of such actions.¹ In the second place, matters peculiar to judgments in actions upon particular contracts, torts, or crimes are excluded, because they are treated of in the articles on the different kinds of contracts, torts, and crimes.² In the third place, judgments as affected by the status of parties belong more properly to the law of persons. This matter will accordingly be found in the articles dealing with the various classes of persons and their status.³ In the fourth place, this article does not treat of decrees in equity or of judgments under the codes for equitable relief. This subject is treated of under the various equitable titles of this work.⁴

The exclusion of these various matters limits the scope of this article to the general principles of the law of judgments in actions where only a money judgment is sought. In illustration of these principles, cases must, of course, be cited from all of the above enumerated classes of cases, but the detailed treatment of judgments in each particular class must be sought elsewhere.

II. DEFINITION, NATURE, AND VARIOUS KINDS OF JUDGMENTS—

1. Definition.—In Its Broadest Sense a judgment is the decision or sentence of the law given by a court of justice or other competent tribunal as the result of proceedings instituted therein.¹

1. Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 117. See also Davidson v. Smith, 1 Biss. (U. S.) 351; Blaikie v. Griswold, 10 Wis. 293; Cooper v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 3 Colo. 321; Zeigler v. Vance, 3 Iowa 530.

A finding that in a former action a "decision" was rendered was held not to be equivalent to a finding that a "judgment" was rendered. Gray v. Noon, 66 Cal. 186. The term "judgment" may be used as synonymous with "award." Richards v. Griffin, 5 Ala. 196.

Other Definitions.—A judgment is the conclusion of law upon facts found, or admitted by the parties, or upon their default in the course of the suit. Boiv. Law Dict.; Tidd Pr. 930; Thompson v. People, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 587; Fraser v. Willey, 2 Fla. 123; Truett v. Legg, 32 Md. 147.

A judgment is "the very voyce of law and right." Co. Litt. 39a.

A judgment is the decision or sentence of the law, given by a court of justice or other competent tribunal, as the result of proceedings instituted therein for the redress of an injury. 3 Black. Com. 395; Blood v. Bates, 31 Vt. 150.

A judgment is the conclusion that naturally and regularly follows from the premises of law and fact, and depends not, therefore, on the arbitrary caprice of the judge, but on the settled and invariable principles of justice. In re Sedgely Ave., 88 Pa. St. 513.

A judgment in its legal acceptation is the determination of some judicial tribunal created by law for the administration of public justice according to law, and is in strictness the determination of the law. Blood v. Bates, 31 Vt. 150.

A judgment is the decision of a controversy, given by a court of justice, between parties who do not agree. Union Bank v. Marin, 3 La. Ann. 35.

Every final or definitive sentence or decision of the Supreme Court by which the merits of a cause are settled or determined, although such sentence is not technically a judgment or the proceedings are not capable of being enrolled so as to constitute what is technically called a record, is a judgment. Matter of Negus, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 44.

A judgment is the decision or sentence of a court on the main question in a proceeding, or on one of the questions, if there are several. Rap. & L. Law Dict.

A judgment is the decision or sentence of the law, pronounced by a court or other competent tribunal, upon the matter contained in the record. Jac. Law Dict.; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Swift, 12 Minn. 437.

A judgment is a final decision, entered of record, in a book of judgments, under the signature of a judge. Evans v. Adams, 15 N. J. L. 383.

A judgment is a settled adjudication of an existing debt. It is also a power by means of which a creditor may enforce his claims by the sale of the debtor's property. Nichols v. Dissler, 31 N. J. L. 473.

A judgment is the end of the law. Blystone v. Blystone, 51 Pa. St. 373.

A judgment or decree is the end for which the jurisdiction of a court is exercised; it is only through its judgments and the execution of them that the power of the court is made efficacious. A law which restricts the power of a court to render a judgment is therefore a limitation upon the exercise of its jurisdiction. Fordyce v. Beecher, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 29.

A judgment is an adjudication of the rights of the parties in respect to the claim involved. McNulty v. Hurd, 72 N. Y. 521.

"In its ordinary legal sense a judgment is the decision or sentence of the law, given by a court of justice, or other competent tribunal, as the result of proceedings instituted therein, to enforce a right or redress an injury. 1 Bouv. Law Dict. 676, title Judgment." Smith v. Shawhan, 37 Iowa 533.

A judgment is the final consideration and determination of a court of competent jurisdiction upon the matters submitted to it. Whitwell v. Emory, 3 Mich. 84.

A judgment is the decision of the law, pronounced by the court or other competent tribunal, upon the matter

Decision of Any Court a Judgment. — In the broad sense as here defined, a decision of any court is a judgment,¹ and therefore the term "judgment" includes decrees in equity.²

Definitions under Codes. — Under most of the modern codes of procedure, judgments are defined in substance as the final determination of the rights of the parties in an action or proceeding.³ Under the codes the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity is very generally abolished, and in such states, therefore, it does not admit of question that the term "judgment" includes all that is meant by the term "decree."⁴ contained in the record. Eppright v. Kauffman, 90 Mo. 25.

Judgment Means Determination. — The word "judgment," as used in sections 11, 245, 268, and 348 of the code, relating to appeals, means determination. It is used in a general sense. Lawrence v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 15 How. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 57. And see Holister Bank v. Vail, 15 N. Y. 593.

Judgment of His Peers means a trial by a jury of twelve men, according to the course of the common law. Knight v. Campbell, 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 34; Wright v. Wright, 2 Md. 453; State v. Simons, 2 Spears L. (S. Car.) 768. See also Fetter v. Wilt, 46 Pa. St. 460; State v. Beswick, 13 R. I. 217; Sevier v. Justices, Peck. (Tenn.) 339; Jelly v. Dils, 27 W. Va. 274; Lincoln v. Smith, 27 Vt. 362.

1. Patterson v. Scott, 33 Ill. App. 348.

The word "judgment" includes all that is meant by the words "order, decision, decree, or judgment." Halbert v. Alford, (Tex. 1891) 16 S. W. Rep. 814.

2. Forsythe v. Richardson, 1 Idaho 459; U. S. v. Wonson, 1 Gall. (U. S.) 7.

A decree rendered in an equity cause is the judgment of the court, and no other is necessary. Loyd v. Hicks, 31 Ga. 140.

Decrees rank as judgments in the administration of the estates of decedents, provided they are definitive. Ex p. Farrars, 13 S. Car. 254.

Decrees in chancery, of other states, are embraced within the spirit and meaning of the constitutional provision giving the same effect to a judgment in other states which it has in the state where rendered. Green v. Foley, 2 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 441. See also cases cited in second succeeding note for decrees in equitable causes under modern codes.

3. Statutory Definitions. — Iowa Code

(1873), § 2849, declares: "Every final adjudication of the rights of the parties in an action is a judgment." Dullard v. Phelan, 83 Iowa 471; Walker v. Walker, 93 Iowa 643; Smith v. Shawhan, 37 Iowa 533; Taylor v. Runyon, 3 Iowa 474.

California Code of Civil Procedure, section 577, defines a judgment as a "final determination of the rights of the parties." Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 478.

New York Code, section 245, defines a judgment as "the final determination of the rights of the parties in the action." And see Clason v. Shotwell, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 31.

In Wisconsin, under Rev. Stat. 1878, section 2882, a judgment is the final determination by a court of justice of the rights of the parties in an action.

4. Under Codes "Judgments" Include "Decrees." — Croghan v. Livingston, 17 N. Y. 226; State v. McArthur, 5 Kan. 280.

In Kansas the old systems of practice are by the code abolished; it furnishes the facilities in the civil action for all that could be accomplished by former systems. A decree or a judgment, or a compound of both, may be rendered therein. Kimball v. Connor, 3 Kan. 415.

In Kentucky a decree is a judgment within the meaning of the term as defined in code, section 397, and consequently the provisions of the code concerning judgments apply also to decrees. Hughes v. Shreve, 3 Metc. (Ky.) 547.

In Virginia, by express provisions of the Code of 1873, c. 182, § 1, a decree for specific property or the payment of money has the effect of a judgment. Hutcheson v. Grubbs, 80 Va. 251.

Even in Iowa, although the code did not abolish the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity, a

In a More Narrow Sense, the term "judgment" is limited to a decision of a court of law.¹

2. Essential Elements — a. RENDITION BY DULY CONSTITUTED COURT — (1) In General. — From the definitions collated in the preceding section may be gathered the essential elements of every judgment. The first of these is that the decision must be that of a duly constituted court.² The rendition of a judgment is a judicial act,³ and must be performed by a judicial and not by a ministerial officer of the court.⁴ Thus the decision must be rendered by the judge and not by the clerk of the court, in order to constitute it a judgment.⁵ So the auditing and allowance or final adjudication in chancery was held to be a judgment in the meaning of the term as used in the code. Kramer v. Rebman, 9 Iowa 114.

Judgment at Law — Decree in Equity. — In Ward v. Kenner, (Tenn. 1896) 37 S. W. Rep. 707, it was held, construing the code, sections 2970, 2971, that the word "judgment" is usually applied to a determination of the rights of the parties in an action at law, and the word "decree" to a similar determination in equity, but that the words were interchangeable under the code.

1. Patterson v. Scott, 33 Ill. App. 348; Ward v. Kenner, (Tenn. 1896) 37 S. W. Rep. 707.

2. Campbell v. Carroll, 35 Mo. App. 640; Clark v. Melton, 19 S. Car. 509; Blakie v. Griswold, 10 Wis. 293.

Rendition in Absence of Quorum. — The judgment by the County Court in Arkansas in the absence of a quorum is an absolute nullity. Ferguson v. Crittenden County, 6 Ark. 479.

Presumption. — In the summary process jurisdiction of South Carolina, a decree, appearing on the records of the court as entered by the judge, must be considered as the judgment of the court. Foster v. Chapman, 4 McCord L. (S. Car.) 291.

Suspension of Court by Statute. — A judgment, rendered after a statute went in force suspending the court in which it was rendered for a period named in the act, is void. Mallory v. Hiles, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 54.

Allowance of Claim by Administrator. — The filing of a note as a claim against an estate, and the allowance thereof by the executor or administrator, in writing, on the appearance docket, is not such a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction as will merge the note therein so that no action can thereafter be maintained on such note. The admission of a claim by the executor or administrator is not final as a judgment would be. Fiscus v. Robbins, 60 Ind. 100.

3. Peck v. Courtis, 31 Cal. 209; Sieber v. Frink, 7 Colo. 148; Hall v. Marks, 34 Ill. 358; Taylor v. Runyon, 3 Iowa 474; California State Tel. Co. v. Patterson, 1 Nev. 150; Mathews v. Moore, 2 Murph. (N. Car.) 181; Godard v. Coffin, Davies (U. S.) 381, 2 Ware (U. S.) 382. See also Fitzsimmons v. Johnson, 90 Tenn. 416.

Remedy by Writ of Error. — The objection to a judgment that it was rendered by persons having no judicial authority cannot be taken advantage of by writ of error. Adams v. Wheeler, 1 D. Chip. (Vt.) 417.

4. Hall v. Marks, 34 Ill. 358.

5. Clerk Cannot Render Judgment. — Hinson v. Wall, 20 Ala. 298; Tombeckbee Bank v. Godbold, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 240; Campbell v. Carroll, 35 Mo. App. 640.

A judgment at the rules in the clerk's office by default must be confirmed in the court, otherwise it cannot be pleaded as the judgment of the court, nor will it warrant an execution. Nicholas v. Caldwell, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 545.

An agreement by the parties to a foreclosure suit, empowering the clerk to render as well as enter judgment in the suit, will not render invalid a judgment which is in fact rendered by the court. Cumnor v. Sedgwick, 67 Conn. 66.

An entry by the clerk that judgment was confessed in open court, and that the amount was liquidated by the clerk at a certain sum, is not a judgment of the court on which a recovery can be had. Hill v. Tiernan, 4 Mo. 316.

A decree that execution shall issue unless a certain sum shall be paid by a certain day is erroneous in that it rejection of demands against a county by a county court is not a judgment because the proceedings are not judicial.¹

Judgments by Administrative Officers. — Judicial powers are, however, sometimes conferred upon tribunals not technically courts, and decisions by such tribunals, in the exercise of powers thus conferred, are considered as judgments.² Thus the allowance of a claim by an assignee for the benefit of creditors has been held to constitute a judgment.³

leaves a matter proper for a judicial decision to the determination of the clerk. Donalds v. Plumb, 8 Conn. 458; Sherwood v. Sherwood, 32 Conn. 14.

In Thompson v. Cook, 21 Iowa 472, a demurrer on the ground that the record showed that the judgment was rendered by the clerk, and not by the court, was held to have been properly overruled.

Dismissal Must Be by Court, Not Clerk or Parties. — The dismissal of a civil action is in the nature of a judgment, and necessarily requires an order of the court. Smith-Frazer Boot, etc., Co. v. Derse, 41 Kan. 150.

"We are informed that a practice has grown up in this state sanctioning the dismissal of suits in vacation, by the plaintiffs' filing a memorandum to that effect with the clerk, but such memorandum necessarily goes for naught except as evidence of an estoppel by matter in pais, or of abandonment, unless the court by some appropriate entry of record at a succeeding term gives effect to it as a judgment. The court alone is competent to order a judgment, and not the parties litigant or the clerk." Campbell v. Carroll, 35 Mo. App. 640.

A Judgment Confessed Before a Clerk is not a judgment upon which an execution can issue, unless judgment is entered thereon by the court at the next term. Holmes v. Carr, 1 Mo. 56; Phelps v. Hawkins, 6 Mo. 197.

The statute authorizing confessions of judgment does not give judicial powers to the clerk of the court. The judgment entered is to be treated as one entered by the court itself. Grattan v. Matteson, 54 Iowa 229.

1. Auditing Demands by County Court. — Phelps County v. Bishop, 46 Mo. 68. But see State v. Hiekman, 84 Mo. 74, wherein it was held that the orders of a county court in its settlement with the clerk by which the amount of fees to be retained by the clerk and the amount to be paid into the treasury are determined, partake of the nature of judgments. See also Kelly v. Wimberly, 61 Miss. 548, holding that where a claim is for a certain and ascertained amount its auditing and allowance by the town council is equivalent to a judgment at law, and mandamus will lie to enforce its payment. Compare State Board of Education v. West Point, 50 Miss. 638.

2. Road Commissioners in Adjudicating upon the Necessity of a Road, and in locating and making assessments for the same, act judicially. The records of their proceedings and judgments are entitled to the same respect as the records and judgments of other tribunals, so long as they act within their jurisdiction, and cannot be attacked collaterally. Certiorari is the proper remedy to review the legality of the acts of road commissioners. Longfellow v. Quimby, 29 Me. 196, 48 Am. Dec. 525.

3. Allowance of Claim by Assignee. — Nanson v. Jacob, 93 Mo. 331.

"These statutory provisions are too plain to require extended comment. When the assignee passes on a claim and allows it, the question involved therein becomes res judicata, and the decision of the assignee becomes final — in a word, a judgment, having all the force, effect, and conclusive attributes of any other judgment. If the statute is not meaningless, then its provisions bring the allowed claim of the plaintiff fully within the definition of a judgment given by Mr. Freeman. He says: 'A judgment * * * is defined as being the decision or sentence of the law pronounced by a court or other competent tribunal upon the matter contained in the record.' 'Every definite sentence or decision by which the merits of a cause are determined, although it be not technically a judgment, or although the proceedings are not capable of being technically enrolled so as to constitute what is technically called a record, is a judgment within the meaning of the law.' 'A large number of persons and tribunals not

Summary Judgments, or what is equivalent thereto, the issue of an execution,¹ are sometimes authorized by statute upon a determination of a ministerial officer as in the case of forfeited bonds, recognizances, etc. Such decisions are regarded as valid judgments.²

(2) At Unauthorized Time or Place — (a) Statement of Rule. — It is absolutely essential to the validity of a judgment, according to some authorities, that it be rendered by a court sitting at the time and in the place authorized by law, the tribunal not being otherwise regarded as a court in any legal sense.³ In some cases it is held that the fact that a term of court at which a judgment was rendered was held at a time other than that prescribed or authorized by law, while not rendering the judgment absolutely ordinarily spoken of as "judges" nor as "courts" are nevertheless authorized to investigate and determine certain questions. Their authority in this respect is judicial, and their determinations are conclusive unless set aside by some competent authority.' Freeman on Judgments, §§ 2, 16, 531." Eppright v. Kauffman, 90 Mo. 25.

3. Norwood v. Kenfield, 34 Cal. 329; Wicks v. Ludwig, 9 Cal. 173; Cooper v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 3 Colo. 318; State v. Roberts, 8 Nev. 239; Dalton v. Libby, 9 Nev. 192; Herndon v. Hawkins, 65 Mo. 265.

"A judgment is the sentence of the law, pronounced by a court of competent jurisdiction, as the result of proceedings instituted. It is a judicial act, and to be valid must be pronounced by the court, at a time and place appointed by law, and in the form it requires." Cooper v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 3 Colo. 318.

Proceedings Otherwise Are Void. —

"The holding of a court at a time or place other than that prescribed or authorized by law, and all proceedings thereunder, are coram non jure and void." Grimmer v. Askew, 48 Ark. 151. And see Dunn v. State, 2 Ark. 229; Brumley v. State, 20 Ark. 77; Ex p. Jones, 27 Ark. 349.

Mistake in Time of Holding Court. —

Where court is held at the accustomed time, but, owing to a change by statute enacted on the eve of the term, at a time not fixed by law, a judgment in a cause heard and decided is void, the proceedings being coram non jure. Goodsell v. Boynton, 2 Ill. 555, followed by Galusha v. Butterfield, 3 Ill. 227.

Judgment at Special Term. — An order or judgment imports to itself verity so far as its recitals go; but this rule will not raise a presumption of regularity of a judgment of a special term of a court, where the record of the proceeding does not show that such special term was called according to law. Territory v. Delinquent Tax-List, (Arizona 1889) 21 Pac. Rep. 888.

Judgment Rendered at Temporary County Seat. — If it appears by record of the judgment that the court which pronounced it had jurisdiction of the person of the defendant and of the subject-matter of the suit, such judgment will not, in a collateral proceeding, be held void upon proof that it was rendered at a place other than the established seat of justice of the county, when it is shown that all the houses at the latter place had, at the rendition of the judgment, been destroyed by fire, and that the County Court had accepted as a temporary seat of justice the place at which the judgment was rendered. Herndon v. Hawkins, 65 Mo. 265.

Trial at Chambers by Consent. — Where a cause, of which the court has jurisdiction, is tried at chambers, by consent of the parties, the judgment rendered therein is not necessarily void, in the absolute sense, for want of trial in open court. Ex p. Bennett, 44 Cal. 84; Beach v. Beckwith, 13 Wis. 21. See also article CHAMBERS AND VACATION, vol. 4, p. 336.

The judgment is presumed, in the absence of anything to the contrary, to have been rendered in open court. Christian v. Lebeschultz, 18 S. Car. 602.

void constitutes a ground for its reversal.¹ So also it has been held that the mere fact that the court was held at a place other than that directed by law, will not of itself render the judgment a nullity.²

(b) After Expiration of Term. — Where regular terms are provided by law, judgments can properly be rendered only during such terms.³ A judgment rendered by the court after the time appointed by

1. Smithson v. Dillon, 16 Ind. 169. And see in general article TERMS OF COURT.

Innocent Mistake as to Time Fixed by Law. — In Venable v. Curd, 2 Head (Tenn.) 582, the time of the sitting of the court was changed by law, but such change was not known to the officers of the court, the act having been passed but a short time before the term of said court was to be held. The court was held by the presiding judge at the time before fixed by law, but at a different time from that required by the law then in force. A judgment was rendered by the court thus sitting, the justice of which was not controverted. It was held that the judgment was valid; that the judgments and decrees of the judge regularly in office are valid, if he holds his court under color of law, although the law may be repealed, or invalid. But see, contra, Goodsell v. Boynton, 2 Ill. 555, followed by Galusha v. Butterfield, 3 Ill. 227.

Time Changed During Term. — In the case of Clare v. Clare, 4 Greene (Iowa) 411, it was held that where the February term of the court was commenced under an act in force at the time, but a new act took effect on the third day of the term, changing the time of holding the court, a decree rendered at that term of court, after the new act took effect, was valid. In this case the court said: "The new law effected no change or abatement of any term commenced under the old law. A term legally commenced could be continued to its close in the absence of any law to the contrary. The new law did not repeal the old; it only changed the time of holding court. It could produce no such change till after it took effect."

2. Le Grange v. Ward, 11 Ohio 257. In this case the court said: "Suppose * * * that the judges were required by law to do all official business at the county-seat, it by no means follows that the acts of the court or of the associate judges are void. If a court have jurisdiction over the subject-matter, its solemn acts and adjudications, although erroneous, are not void."

Mistake in Place of Holding Court. — The judgments of the court are not rendered void by the holding of the court at a place not the county-seat, under an erroneous opinion as to where the county-seat is. Robinson v. Moore, 25 Ill. 135.

Presumption that Entire Term Was Held at Same Place. — The entire term of a court of record is in contemplation of law but one day, and therefore, when the caption of an indictment shows that on the first day of the term court was opened by the clerk at the time and place prescribed by law, and adjourned by him from day to day till the appearance of the judge, it will be presumed that it was held the balance of the term at the same place. Smith v. State, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 9. See also article TERMS OF COURT.

Conflicting Terms.—It is error to receive a verdict and render a judgment after the term of a court, as designated by law, has expired, and on a day fixed for a term of the court in another county. Grable v. State, 2 Greene (Iowa) 559.

See, however, State v. Knight, 19 Iowa 94, in which it is held that where a trial of a cause is commenced in a term with the bona fide expectation and belief that it will be concluded before the day shall arrive when the judge is directed but not imperatively required by law to hold court in another county, he may remain, conclude the trial of that cause, receive the verdict and pass judgment, even though this may happen to be done on a day or at a time when regularly he would be opening or holding court in another county.

Judgment Ordered During Term.—If a judgment be ordered and terms prescribed by the court during the term, it is a judgment rendered in term-time, although the entry thereof be not in fact prepared and transcribed on the journal until after the close of the term. Iliff v. Arnott, 31 Kan. 672.

Indefinite Adjournment by a Justice.—In Wisconsin it is held that where a justice of the peace adjourns a cause without specifying the hour of the day or the place to which it is adjourned, he loses jurisdiction and the judgment is void. Crandall v. Bacon, 20 Wis. 639.

Judgment by Justice After Statutory Time.—In Nebraska, it is held that where a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the parties, the judgment rendered by him after expiration of the time fixed by statute must be corrected by a direct proceeding for that purpose, and will not be enjoined upon that ground alone. Implied Assent.—Where a party to an action fails at the time to interpose an objection, he waives his right, which amounts to implied assent, and the judgment concludes him. Molyneux v. Huey, 81 N. Car. 106. See also Hervey v. Edmunds, 68 N. Car. 243.

Judgment Continued to Hear Argument.—In Thorpe v. Corwin, 20 N. J. L. 311, it is held that if a judgment be continued after verdict, to hear argument, and it be not given until the term succeeding that at which the verdict was rendered, the judgment must be entered and signed as of such succeeding term.

"The judge of the court below had no power to render any judgment or decree in vacation. The statute provides for regular terms of the court to this effect are based upon the proposition that the authority to hear and determine is vested by law in the court, sitting at stated times and places, and not in the judge.¹

Rendition in Vacation by Consent. — In states where the rendition of judgments in vacation is not authorized, judgments rendered at such a time have been held void, although the parties had expressly consented to such rendition.² In a number of states, however, it is provided that where the parties to the action consent, a judgment may be rendered during vacation.³ Where this be held for the trial of causes, and it does not provide for the rendering of judgments or decrees at any time except during the term. It is, perhaps, true that a judgment or decree rendered during the term may be entered afterward; but that is not this case. The judgment or decree in this case was not rendered during the term of the court, but was actually rendered and entered in vacation." Earls v. Earls, 27 Kan. 538.

In Mississippi, under the Code of 1880, § 1707, authorizing cases to be taken under advisement, a judgment cannot be rendered in vacation, but must be given by the court upon the delivery of the judge's opinion in writing at the next term, after the submission of the case. Wilson v. Rodewald, 61 Miss. 228.

In Illinois the court, after hearing a chancery case in term time, may take it under advisement and announce the decree thereon to be rendered in vacation; but under the statute (Rev. Stat. 1874, c. 37, § 47), the decree may not become final until after the expiration of the next term (thereafter), and then only as modified and approved, if modified at all. Hook v. Richeson, 115 Ill. 431.

1. Reason for Rule. — "The distinction between the act of a judge and the act of a court is well understood. * * * In vacation the judge is not clothed with the character of a court. Hence, in this interval between the terms fixed or authorized by law, he has no power to hear and determine. In other words, in his character as judge, acting in vacation, he has no jurisdiction, which is but the power to hear and determine." Filley v. Cody, 4 Colo. 109.

Jurisdiction Not Conferred by Consent.

— "As the objection, then, to such a judgment is jurisdictional in its character, it is obvious that it cannot be removed by stipulation. It is a well settled principle that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent. There was no authority of law for the hearing and judgment in vacation, and the judgment was absolutely void. The agreement by the litigant parties that the judgment so rendered should be treated (contrary to the fact) as having been rendered and entered as of the trial term, is substantially, notwithstanding the terms in which it is couched, an attempt to confer by consent a jurisdiction which the law did not authorize or afford." Filley v. Cody, 4 Colo. 109. See generally article JURISDICTION, vol. 12, p. 114.

"There can be no question as to the authority of the court to hear the cause and render the decree in vacation, the parties consenting thereto." O'Hagen v. O'Hagen, 14 Iowa 264.

In Morrison v. Citizens' Bank, 27 La. Ann. 401, the Supreme Court held: "As to the rendition and signature of the judgment out of term time, it was agreed that the judge who tried the case should take it under advisement and render judgment and sign it after is the case a judgment so rendered by consent is not only binding upon the parties, but is valid even as to third persons in the absence of proof of fraud or collusion.¹

(d) At Premature Term. — Where a judgment is rendered in term time, but prematurely, as when it is rendered at the return term of the writ when the law provides that it shall not be rendered until a succeeding term, the decision is the act of a court, and therefore a judgment although an erroneous one.²

(3) Disqualification of Judge. — Where a judge is forbidden to act in a case in which he is interested, any judgment rendered by him in such case is void.³ According to the decisions in some

the court should have adjourned. The parties were competent to make the agreement, and the judgment having been rendered in conformity therewith is good. The cases of Culver v. Leovy, 21 La. Ann. 306, and Hernandez v. James, 23 La. Ann. 483, are not authority for the defendants. In neither of them had the judgment been rendered and signed in vacation by consent."

In Sigourney v. Sibley, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 101, a judge of probate had a valid claim against the estate of a deceased person, but had determined in his own mind not to enforce his claim. He exercised jurisdiction of the estate by granting letters of administration. It was held that he nevertheless was interested as a creditor of the estate, and that the grant of administration was therefore void for want of jurisdiction.

Judge Disqualified by Having Been of Counsel. — A judge who has been of counsel in a former suit is disqualified to render judgment in a second suit between the same parties, and a judgment so rendered is not conclusive. Newcome v. Light, 58 Tex. 141.

At Common Law such judgments were not void, but merely voidable. Gorrill v. Whittier, 3 N. H. 268.

Disqualified Judge Sitting Pro Forma to Constitute Quorum. — In Walker v. Rogan, 1 Wis. 597, a curious state of facts arose. It appeared on appeal that two out of three judges constituting the Supreme Court were disqualified by reason of having been of counsel in the case below. There was, therefore, no quorum competent to decide the appeal. The obvious consequence was that the cause must remain undetermined until the constituent members of the court should be changed or until the legislature should provide for the contingency, unless the parties might by stipulation avoid the difficulty. It was held that the sitting upon the bench of the two justices who had been of counsel, pro forma, to make a quorum merely, in pursuance of a stipulation to that effect, was neither improper, irregular, nor unlawful. See also Reg. v. Justices, 18 Q. B. 421, note, 83 E. C. L. 421, note, holding that the mere presence on the bench of states, a judgment attempted to be rendered by a judge disqualified by reason of his relationship with one of the parties is void.¹ But where there is no absolute prohibition of his acting, the mere fact that the judge was interested or related to a party does not render the judgment void, although it may render it voidable or reversible.²

(4) De Facto Judges. — A judgment rendered by a judge de facto is valid and not liable to collateral attack.³

Rendition After Expiration of Judge's Term. — In accordance with the rule just stated, that a judgment rendered by a de facto judge is an interested magistrate during part of the hearing of an appeal is not sufficient ground for setting aside an order of sessions made on such hearing, if it be expressly shown that he took no part in the hearing, came into court for a different purpose, and did not in any manner influence the decision. Mr. Freeman, in his work on Judgments (§ 147), questions the correctness of the decision in the Wisconsin case, on the ground that it is a general rule that if a judge is disqualified he shall not sit, and that a court in which he, with other judges, participates, is not properly constituted and its judgments ought not to stand; citing in support of this doctrine, Oakley v. Aspinwall, 3 N. Y. 547; Gorrill v. Whittier, 3 N. H. 268; Hesketh v. Braddock, 3 Burr. 1847; Reg. v. Justices, 6 Q. B. 753, 51 E. C. L. 753. In all of these cases last cited, however, the interested person participated in the decision. In Reg. v. Justices, 6 Q. B. 753, 51 E. C. L. 753, it was held that if any one of the magistrates hearing the case at sessions be interested in the result, the court is improperly constituted, and an order made in the case will be quashed on certiorari. It is no answer to the objection, that there was a majority in favor of the decision without reckoning the vote of the interested party, nor that the interested party withdrew before the decision, if he appears to have joined in discussing the matter with the other magistrates.

Rendition Before Commencement of Judge's Term. — Where a judge was properly elected, and, believing that his term commenced immediately, proceeded to hold court, it was held that although the term of his predecessor had not then expired, he was a judge de facto, and his judgments were as valid and binding as if he had been a judge de jure. McCraw v. Williams, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 510.

valid, it is held that a judgment rendered by a judge after the expiration of his term is valid.¹

b. PARTIES.—A second essential element implied in all the definitions of a judgment which have been given is that there must be parties whose rights are determined by the adjudication.² Thus the response of a court to a question asked by a governor or legislature under constitutional or statutory provisions is not a judgment.³ And an opinion so rendered is advisory only and does not determine the right of any one.⁴ In the case of ex

Judgment rendered by a retiring superior judge on the first Monday of January next after election of his successor is not coram non judice and void for want of jurisdiction where it appears that both the outgoing and incoming judges were of the opinion that the term of the incoming judge did not commence until the following day, and the outgoing judge was in fact holding court on that day, and the superior judge-elect was before him as an attorney. Under such circumstances the outgoing judge was clearly a judge de facto. Merced Bank v. Rosenthal, 99 Cal. 39.

In Cromer v. Boinest, 27 S. Car. 436, the circuit judge, during his term of office, heard a case, and wrote, signed, and dated his decree, but did not file it until his term had expired, he and all parties concerned being at the time ignorant of that fact. A few days afterwards he was re-elected for another term, and at a special court subsequently convened he called this case for the purpose of resigning his decree as of that date, as he did in other cases, but upon objection of the plaintiff to his considering the case then, he did not change the date, but returned the decree to the clerk. It was held that this was a valid decree of the court, since the judge was a judge de facto when the decree was first filed.

Contra.—In Mace v. O'Reilly, 70 Cal. 231, it was held that where the term of office of the judge who tried the case expires after the order for judgment has been entered, but before the findings have been filed, no valid judgment can be entered in the action without a new trial being had, unless agreed findings are filed or waived by both sides.

2. A judgment is the final determination by a court of justice of the right of the parties in an action. Blaikie v. Griswold, 10 Wis. 293. See also the definitions collated supra, II. 1. Definition.

"In every court there must be at least three constituent parts, the actor, reus, and judex; the actor, or plaintiff, who complains of any injury done; the reus, or defendant, who is called upon to make satisfaction for it; and the judex, or judicial power, which is to examine the truth of the fact, to determine the law arising upon that fact, and, if any injury appears to have been done, to ascertain and apply the remedy. 3 Bl. Com. 25." 4 Minor's Institutes, pt. 1, p. 160.

3. Advisory Judicial Opinions.—See In re Chapter 6, Session Laws of 1890, 8 S. Dak. 274, wherein the Supreme Court replied to a request of the governor as to the construction of the above statute in the form of a simple letter, and not in the usual form of an opinion and judgment. In this case the court declined to answer on the ground that persons whose rights would be affected were not before it. See also Reply of Judges, 33 Conn. 586.

4. Force and Effect of Advisory Opinions.—In Connecticut the judges of the Supreme Court, in declining to answer a question as to the validity of proposed legislation, said: "Such action on our part would be clearly extrajudicial. It would be a case purely of advice and not of judgment. There are no parties before us, and nothing for us to adjudicate in any sense of the term. Our action being extrajudicial, and really rather our individual than official action, it cannot be of any binding character whatever. No judge of the Supreme or Superior Court, in any parte proceedings there are parties upon only one side.¹ And in the case of proceedings in rem the parties on one side, at least, consist merely in the personification of a res or thing.² But the determinations in this class of cases are nevertheless judgments. The general rules relating to parties are treated in a succeeding section of this article.³

c. FORMAL PROCEEDINGS. — A third essential element of a judgment to be gathered from the definitions which have been given is that the decision must have been rendered in a proceeding before the court, and by this is meant some form of proceeding known to the law.⁴ Unless the legislature has provided another remedy than those which had previous existence, a party cannot adopt for himself a new mode before unknown to the law, by which he can obtain from a court of common law a binding judgment, which can be enforced, as by an execution duly issued upon a judgment recognized by the common law.⁵

case hereafter before him, would be bound by our opinion. We ourselves should not be bound by it. Being merely advice, it would be in contemplation of law, and probably in fact, of no more authority than the opinion of any other five judicious lawyers, except perhaps as we ourselves, if sitting upon any such case, might be inclined to adhere to an opinion which we had expressed." Reply of Judges, 33 Conn. 586. See also Matter of Senate Bill No. 65, 12 Colo. 469; In re Board of Sinking Fund Com'rs, (Ky. 1895) 32 S. W. Rep. 414.

It is usual for the court to decline to give an opinion in response to such questions when it might affect private rights or prejudice private interests. In re Fire, etc., Com'rs, 19 Colo. 482; In re Penitentiary Com'rs, 19 Colo. 409; In re Fire, etc., Com'rs, 21 Colo. 14.

"But Colorado has gone further than the states referred to, in this doubtful and perilous experiment, by adding two peculiar features, one of which, at least, seriously increases the danger. By the express words of the corresponding provisions in each of the other states the questions are limited to questions of law, and the justices, not the court, are to respond. These officers appear to be merely legal advisers, occupying much the same relation in this regard to their respective general assemblies as does the attorney-general of Colorado to the state legislature. Their written responses, when questioned, are not always published in the reports. They are not pronounced by the court, and hence are not technically judicial decisions, nor do they necessarily constitute judicial precedents. In this state, on the other hand, the interrogatories are not expressly limited to questions of law, and it is the court, not the justices, that must answer. For obvious reasons, we hold that the intent could not have been to authorize questions of fact; but our responses must be reported as are other opinions, and they have all the force and effect of judicial precedents." Matter of Senate Bill No. 65, 12 Colo. 469, approved in In re Legislative Appropriations, 19 Colo. 58. Further as to advisory judicial opinions, see article Constitutional Law, 6 Am. and Eng. Encyc. of Law (2d ed.), p. 1065 et seq.

5. Established Modes of Procedure Must Be Followed. — In Ex p. Davis, 41 Me. 58, the court said: "The remedy by forms of proceedings which are of themselves legal and in common use will fail, unless they are appropriate to the injury alleged. Much more certainly must they fail when they are entirely novel, and not provided for in any code of binding authority upon the

d. DEFINITIVENESS. — The fourth and last essential element of a judgment is that it must be definitive.¹ By this is meant that the decision itself must purport to decide finally the rights of the courts. For the recovery of damages arising from the nonfulfilment of certain classes of promises the actions of debt and assumpsit may either be proper; but in other cases, where assumpsit is a suitable remedy, a suit in a plea of debt could not be maintained. An action of resspass de bonis asportatis when the injury designed to be proved was merely that of a breach of the close would be regarded an absurdity. An action of trover would be improper and ineffectual for a tortious invasion of the plaintiff's chattels without a conversion."

In this case a judge of the Supreme Court, who had been removed from office by the governor and legislature, memorialized the court to pass upon his right to sit as a member thereof. This the court refused to do, upon the ground that the proceeding by memorial was wholly unauthorized and unknown to the law. "When a case shall come before this tribunal, involving these important inquiries, whether between a judge of this court, attempted to be removed, and the state, or the branches of the government which made the attempt, under a writ of quo warranto or other process recognized by law which will confer jurisdiction, or in the more usual forms of law between private parties, where the removal of such an officer of the government is a matter at issue, it is believed that the court will, as it should do in the discharge of all its official duties, have a single eye to discern the right as it exists, and when seen satisfactorily, to make declaration thereof in its final judgment."

Illustrations. — Where a decree ascertained that certain moneys were in defendant's hands and applicable to a debt admitted in the pleadings, but made no statement nor directed payment, it was held not to constitute a final money decree, and as execution could not have issued thereon it is not entitled to rank as a judgment in the administration of a decedent's estate. Ex p. Farrars, 13 S. Car. 254.

The mere investigation and computation of the amount due upon a claim presented against an estate is not a final judgment, from which an appeal may be taken. There is no judgment until an order is entered allowing such amount as a claim against the estate, and classifying the same. Cohen v. Atkins, 73 Mo. 163.

A written memorandum by the judge, of certain conclusions of fact, with a formal order for more evidence on certain points, is not a judgment. Putnam v. Crombie, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 232.

For One of Two Alternatives. — In Battell v. Lowery, 46 Iowa 49, the Circuit Court found a garnishee to be liable for one of two amounts to be determined by a future contingency, and decreed that the plaintiff should recover against the garnishee one or the other of such amounts, according to the event of such contingency. This was held not to constitute a judgment. The court said: "A judgment has been said to be 'the conclusion of the law upon the facts found or admitted by the parties.' Truett v. Legg, 32 Md. 147. In the case at bar there was an alternative finding of facts. We are of opinion that such finding has no validity. The finding that one of two things must be true is not a finding that either is true. No one fact is found absolutely. Yet we think that that is necessary for the rendition of a judgment. If the finding is alternative, conditional, or contingent, the judgment necessarily partakes of the same character. Such a judgment would be an anomaly, and serve no useful purpose. It would not be available until it had become absolute. Further action of the court would be necessary. When that action was had there would be two judgments as in this case; first the alternative, conditional, or contingent judgment, and afterwards the absolute judgment. For both the clerk should be allowed to tax costs. It is sufficient to say that we think that there is no law for it. There is a sense, it is true, in which parties upon the issue submitted, by specifically denying or granting the remedy sought by the action.¹ The converse of this proposition is also true, and therefore every definitive determination of the rights of the parties in a proceeding before a competent tribunal is a judgment.²

there may be a conditional judgment against a garnishee. Where the plaintiff has not obtained judgment against the principal debtor at the time the judgment is rendered against the garnishee it is necessarily conditional. But in such case the adjudication with respect to the indebtedness of the garnishee is absolute. No further adjudication against him is necessary or possible. In the present case the action of the court does not purport to be the rendering of a present judgment. The language is: 'It is decreed that in the event such litigation shall result, etc., the plaintiffs have and recover,' etc. The event was in the future. As the recovery was dependent on it, that was in the future. If there was a present judgment it was at most a judgment that there should be a judgment. But we cannot sanction such an anomalous proceeding."

Judgment Subject to Unascertained Credit. — A judgment ought not to be entered on a bond for a sum of money "subject only to a credit for one hoghead of tobacco" without ascertaining its value; but the amount of such credit should in the first place be ascertained by a writ of inquiry, and judgment should be rendered for the balance. Early v. Moore, 4 Munf. (Va.) 262.

An entry, upon the rendition of a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, that "the defendant is entitled to a credit to be ascertained by M. F. and J. H. S., and the clerk is then authorized to enter a remittitur; judgment of the court accordingly, and for costs, is not a judgment then rendered, because the balance for which judgment ought to be rendered had not been ascertained, but an agreement for a judgment to be rendered subsequently upon the ascertainment by the referees of the credit to which the defendant is entitled. Dunns v. Batchelor, 3 Dev. & B. L. (N. Car.) 52.

Other Illustrations. — "When we speak of a judgment under our law, in its broadest sense, we mean all final adjudications of civil actions. Code, § 1814. At common law this judgment is the sentence of the law, pronounced by the court, upon the matters contained in the record of an action before it. When we speak of a final judgment, therefore, we understand it to be the application of the law by the court to the particular case before it, and specifically granting or denying the remedy sought by the action." Taylor v. Runyon, 3 Iowa 474, citing 3 Bl. Com. 395.

In Bowen v. Lanier, Term (N. Car.) 241, it was held that an order of the County Court for the sale of lands after a constable's levy under a judgment of a justice of the peace, accompanied with the return of no chattels, is not a judgment, although it may have the quality of one in attaching a lien upon the land.

Mere Memorandum Insufficient. — In Putnam v. Crombie, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 232, it was held that a judge who has merely made a memorandum of certain conclusions of fact has the right to change his opinion from that expressed in that memorandum. A successor cannot, therefore, treat it as a decision pro tanto, and proceed to decide the other points and give judgment on the whole.

An Order for a Judgment is not a judgment, because it does not purport of itself to determine the rights of the parties.¹ It is not enough that the judge concludes to render judgment, but he must declare it by an official act.²

Order for an Execution. — An order of a judge to the clerk to issue execution for a specific sum with costs has been held equivalent to a judgment.³

And see Potter v. Eaton, 26 Wis. 382.

An entry upon verdict, "whereupon the court enters judgment upon the verdict," is not a judgment; it is a bare recognition of the finding of the jury. Faulk v. Kellums, 54 Ill. 188.

Incipitur. — The incipitur is not itself the judgment, but merely instructions for entering the judgment. King v. Birch, 2 G. & D. 513, 3 Q. B. 425, 43 E. C. L. 803.

Contra. — "We are of the opinion that the order of the judge of the Superior Court, in the case of Keaton v. Vason, allowing the plaintiff's attorney to enter up judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant, was itself a sufficient judgment. Construing this order with the pleadings in the case, it was a judgment for the plaintiff for the amount sued for in the declaration, and was sufficient for that purpose." Tift v. Keaton, 78 Ga. 237.

In Young v. Dearborn, 27 N. H. 324, the court held that an order of the Superior Court, after verdict, that judgment be rendered on the verdict, would be deemed the judgment so far as to give the attorney a lien for his fees and disbursements. In that case the court says that such an order is a final determination of the case, the end of all litigation and controversy as to the merits of the case; that the time when the judgment is entered up in form is immaterial; that time must ordinarily elapse between the making of such orders and the actual entry of judgment, but that the delay ought not to affect the rights of the parties or their attorneys; that, for the purpose of ascertaining their rights in this respect, the order of the court for judgment should be deemed the judgment itself. But see Stark v. Billings, 15 Fla. 318, where this entry in the minutes, "Verdict for plaintiff; let writ issue," was held not to constitute a judgment, and the execution thereon was declared void.

in the various codes of procedure all limit the term to final determinations.¹ Accordingly in code states there can be no such thing technically as a final judgment.² Under the code orders have taken the place of judgments formerly called interlocutory.³ But even under the common-law definitions of a judgment that have been given, it is doubtful if interlocutory judgments are included. The finality of the determination as to the rights of the parties enters as an express or implied element into them all.⁴ The phrase "interlocutory judgment" is a convenient one, however, to indicate the determination of steps or proceedings in an action preliminary to final judgment, and is not necessarily misleading. Standing alone, however, the term "judgment" would be intended to mean final judgment.⁵ This subject is treated more specifically in a succeeding section of this article.⁶

e. APPLICATION OF PRINCIPLES — ILLUSTRATIONS. — Applying the foregoing principles, it has been held that the dismissal of an action at plaintiff's costs,⁷ a judgment by confession,⁸ a decree allowing alimony,⁹ a record of the naturalization of an alien,¹⁰ a judgment on sci. fa. against special bail,¹¹ an allowance to a commissioner made by the chancellor,¹² and the disposition of a writ of habeas corpus¹³ constitute judgments.

Probate Orders and Judgments. — It has been held that the settlement of a conservator's account in a County Court, upon which execution cannot issue, is not a judgment.¹ So it has been held that the allowance of a claim against an estate in a Probate Court, on which execution cannot issue, is not a judgment.² But the contrary has also been distinctly held.³ An order of distribution, however, enforceable by execution, is a judgment.⁴

holding that a writ of habeas corpus is a special proceeding in the nature of an action, the disposition of the writ is a judgment, and the relator a plaintiff within the meaning of Code of Civil Procedure, section 495, allowing costs to the plaintiff upon a judgment in his favor in special proceedings in the nature of an action.

1. Spalding v. Butts, 5 Conn. 427. In this case it was contended that the record produced was insufficient as a judgment to support an action of debt, because inter alia it wanted the form of a judgment, there being only a finding that a certain sum was due from the conservator's estate; secondly, because it wanted proper parties, the proceeding being altogether ex parte. The court said: "If the County Court had jurisdiction, they rendered no judgment. The sentence of law pronounced by a court upon the matter contained in the record is a judgment of incontrovertible verity (3 Black. Com. 395), and must not be confounded with the adjustment of a conservator's account by the County Court, ex parte and summarily, without the usual form of adjudication, and not admitting of the issuing of an execution. The statute speaks of it as being the liquidation and adjustment of an account, and the only measure the court has authority to take, on finding a balance, is to authorize the sale of real estate." See also Clark v. Clark, 2 N. J. L. 104. But see Garton v. Botts, 73 Mo. 274, where it is said that the final settlement of a curator in the Probate Court is to all intents and purposes on the same footing as the judgment of any other court of competent jurisdiction.

2. Smith v. Shawhan, 37 Iowa 533; Hays v. Horine, 12 Iowa 61, holding that the order of a County Court allowing, approving, and ordering the payment of a claim against an estate is not a judgment in such sense as to deprive the plaintiff of his right to a vendor's lien.

"One of the necessary incidents of every judgment is its means of enforcement by execution. An order of the County Court allowing a claim against an estate and ordering the payment of such claim cannot be thus enforced. The County Court has no power to issue execution upon such an order. We are of opinion that the filing and allowance of the plaintiff's claim in the County Court did not constitute a 'judgment,' in the sense in which that term is used in the clause of the statute of limitations which we have been considering, and consequently that the claim of the plaintiff is not barred as a judgment of a court of record." Smith v. Shawhan, 37 Iowa 533.

3. Propst v. Meadows, 13 Ill. 157; May v. People, 72 Ill. 343; Mitchell v. Mayo, 16 Ill. 83; Wilks v. Murphy, 19 Mo. App. 221.

The allowance by the County Court of a claim against an estate is to all intents and purposes a judgment of record, except that an execution cannot be issued thereon. Jameson v. Barber, 56 Wis. 630.

"It is true that no execution could be issued upon the judgment, but in this respect it is like a judgment of the Circuit Court against an administrator. Upon such a judgment as this no execution is awarded, but the judgment is ordered to be paid in the due course of administration. The effect of the order, adjudication, or judgment is precisely the same in the one case as in the other." Mitchell v. Mayo, 16 Ill. 83.

Rejection of Claim Constitutes a Judgment. — Where an administrator in his accounts makes a claim against the estate of his decedent, an order that "having taken the matter under advisement the court this day, after due deliberation, rejects the claim," is a judgment. Johnson v. Gillett, 52 Ill. 358.

4. Whaley v. Cape, 4 Mo. 233, holding that an amount due under an order of distribution may be set off as a judgment in an action by the executor or administrator against the distributees.

3. General Nature — a. THE DETERMINATION OF A PROCEEDING. — A judgment is neither an action nor a special proceeding, but is the determination of an action or proceeding.¹

b. SENTENCE OF LAW, NOT OF COURT. — A judgment should be a simple sentence of the law upon the ultimate facts admitted by the pleadings or proved by the evidence.² It is not a resolve or decree of the court, but the sentence of the law pronounced by the court upon the action or question before it.³

c. REASONS FOR JUDGMENT. — Although it has been said that every court should state on the record the legal grounds for its judgment,⁴ the reasons assigned by the court for the judgment rendered do not constitute a part of the judgment.⁵ Therefore a judgment or decree of the court controls the written opinion, and if they are at variance, the former prevails and determines the rights of the parties.⁶ So, also, if the judgment given be

Such a judgment is entitled to full faith and credit under Const. U. S., art. 4, § 1. Fitzsimmons v. Johnson, 90 Tenn. 416.

2. Gregory v. Nelson, 41 Cal. 278.

3. Baker v. State, 3 Ark. 491; Zeigler v. Vance, 3 Iowa 528.

The judgment is the conclusion of the law from the facts which the court will draw and pronounce, though not prayed in the pleadings. Kerley v. Hume, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 183.

"When we speak of a judgment under our law, in its broadest sense, we mean all final adjudications of civil actions. Code, § 1814. At common law this judgment is the sentence of the law, pronounced by the court, upon the matters contained in the record of an action before it. When we speak of a final judgment, therefore, we understand it to be the application of the law by the court to the particular case before it, and specifically granting or denying the remedy sought by the action. 3 Black. Com. 395. And the same author speaks of the judgment as 'the remedy prescribed by the law for the redress of injuries, and the suit or action is the vehicle or means of administering it. What that remedy may be is indeed the result of deliberation and study to point out, and therefore the style of the judgment is not that it is decreed or resolved by the court, for then the judgment might appear to be their own; but "it is considered," — consideratum est per curiam — that the plaintiff do recover his damages, his debt, his possession, and the like, which implies that this judgment is none of their own; but the act of law, pronounced and declared by the court, after due deliberation and inquiry.' In general, the nature of the judgment is intimated or stated by the court, and the clerk enters it on the minutes in due form." Taylor v. Runyon, 3 Iowa 474. See also infra, IV. Form of Judgment.

5. Burke v. Table Mountain Water Co., 12 Cal. 403; Sharkey v. Evans, 46 Ind. 472; Carr v. Carr, 6 Ind. App. 377; Butt v. Herndon, 36 Kan. 370; Davidson v. Carroll, 23 La. Ann. 108; Ex p. Dial, 14 S. Car. 586; Sheffield v. Goff, 65 Tex. 354; Watkins v. Junker, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 629.

The point decided is the thing fixed by the judgment. Burke v. Table Mountain Water Co., 12 Cal. 403.

The argument and process of reasoning, or the method by which the court reaches a certain conclusion, is no part of the judgment, and does not constitute a precedent, Carr v. Carr, 6 Ind. App. 377; Ex p. Dial, 14 S. Car. 586; and therefore the judge of a lower court is not bound by any expressions used by the appellate court beyond the decree. Davidson v. Carroll, 23 La. Ann. 108.

A party is bound by the judgments but not by the logic of the courts. Sheffield v. Goff, 65 Tex. 354.

6. Goodenow v. Litchfield, 59 Iowa 226.

The decree alone indicates the decision; and where, in an action for an account of tutorship, the decree, without correct, it is immaterial whether the reasons adduced for giving such a judgment are correct.¹

In Louisiana, by constitutional provision, the court is required to state its reasons for the judgment rendered, and if this is not done the judgment must be reversed.²

d. ENTIRETY OF JUDGMENT — (1) Statement of Rule. — The cases are very numerous in which it is declared that a judgment is an entirety.³ By this is meant that a judgment cannot be bad in part and good in part, but must stand or fall as a whole.⁴

allowing or disallowing any particular items, simply remands the cause for a new trial, with leave to defendant to amend his pleadings in certain respects, the whole account will be open, whatever views in remanding the case may have been expressed on some of the items. Fuselier v. Benevolent Soc., 23 S. Car. 602; Clark v. Schipman, 24 S. Car. 597; Swift v. Trotti, 52 Tex. 498.

It is not ground for an appellate court to reverse a correct judgment simply because the judge below gave wrong reasons for such judgment. Seyburn v. Deyris, 25 La. Ann. 486, and cases cited supra, this note.

2. Block v. McGuire, 18 La. Ann. 417; Jacobs v. Levy, 12 La. Ann. 410; Police Jury v. Bozman, 11 La. Ann. 94.

No statement of the judge's reasons are necessary in an order of seizure and sale, which for some purposes and to a certain extent has the effect of a judgment. Garrish v. Hyman, 29 La. Ann. 28.

Oral or Written Reasons. — Whenever practicable the reasons upon which a judgment is founded should be reduced to writing, but if orally assigned they will be sufficient. Beard v. Simon, 18 La. Ann. 271.

Sufficiency of Reason. — A reason for judgment in these words, "when the court, considering the law and the evidence," it is ordered, etc., is as much a reason for rendering judgment in favor of plaintiff as for the defendant, and is not a sufficient compliance with the constitutional requirement. Dorr v. Jouet, 20 La. Ann. 27; Emanuel v. Hatcher, 19 La. Ann. 525; Gallot v. McCluskey, 18 La. Ann. 260; Police Jury v. Bozman, 11 La. Ann. 94.

It is a sufficient compliance with the constitution for the judge to state in the decree that "after hearing evidence and argument of counsel, for the reasons assigned in open court, it is adjudged" and decreed, etc. Jacobs v. Levy, 12 La. Ann. 410.

The absence of exception or answer is a sufficient reason for judgment, Hemken v. Farmer, 3 Rob. (La.) 156; and the phrase, "by reason of the law and the evidence," necessarily refers to the law and evidence adduced by plaintiff. Powell v. O'Neil, 24 La. Ann. 523.

3. See infra, III. 4. Parties.

A Judgment Is an Entire Cause of Action, and cannot be split so as to permit the maintenance of several suits thereon. Hopkins v. Stockdale, 117 Pa. St. 365; Pinney v. Barnes, 17 Conn. 420; Camp v. Morgan, 21 Ill. 255. And see generally, infra, XVIII. Actions on Judgments.

A Judgment for Debt and Costs is an entirety. Waterman v. Curtis, 30 Conn. 138; Camp v. Morgan, 21 Ill. 255.

A judgment without relief is an entirety comprising both the debt and the costs. Martindale v. Tibbetts, 16 Ind. 200. But see Dixon v. Pierce, 1 Root (Conn.) 138.

4. Void in Part, Void in Toto. — Taaffe v. Josephson, 7 Cal. 352; Barth v. State, 18 Conn. 442.

Where one portion of a judgment under which the prisoner is held is without the jurisdiction of the court which rendered the judgment, the whole is void and the prisoner must be discharged on habeas corpus. Ex p. Kelly, 65 Cal. 154.

A judgment cannot be void in part and good in part; and where fraud attaches to a part only the whole is a

Separable and Inseparable Error.—This rule applies, however, only where the error is an inseparable part of the judgment.¹ Where the error is severable, as where the judgment consists of several independent parts, it does not vitiate the whole judgment, but it may be reversed or vacated as to the erroneous part and sustained as to the remainder.² Thus where a judgment declares a personal liability, and also enforces a lien upon or adjudges the recovery of certain property, the judgment may be good as a personal judgment although bad in so far as it affects the property.³ Or it may be good as to the property involved and void as a personal judgment.⁴ nullity; Hutchins v. Lockett, 39 Tex. 165.

If entire judgment be composed of several elements and one or more of them is illegal, the whole judgment is void as against creditors. Taaffe v. Josephson, 7 Cal. 352.

1. In Van Bokkelen v. Ingersoll, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 315, it was held, in a case where the special verdict stated the several items of damage and assessed the whole at a gross sum, for which sum the court below gave judgment, that the whole judgment must be reversed for one erroneous item. This was upon the declared principle that when distinct judgments are given by the court below, e. g., one for damages and one for costs, one may be reversed and the other affirmed; but where the judgment is entire there must be a total affirmance or reversal. See Parker v. Van Houten, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 145; Smith v. Jansen, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 111; Bradshaw v. Callaghan, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 558; Anonymous, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 340; Richards v. Walton, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 434; Bronson v. Mann, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 460; Arnold v. Sandford, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 417. See also infra, XIV. Judgments on Appeal.

In Barth v. State, 18 Conn. 442, the defendant was sentenced to pay a fine of thirty dollars, "which is to be paid to the treasury of New Haven county," whereas by law the fine belonged to the town of New Haven. It was held that the judgment might be construed as directing the payment to be made into the county treasury, not by the defendant, but by the officer to whom he should pay it, and was therefore valid; since thus considered it was divisible, and the clause giving this direction might be directed as surplusage and void, leaving the remainder to stand in full force, the direction as to payment not being a requisite part of the judgment, a disposal of the fine being fixed by statute.

2. Tyler v. Waddingham, 58 Conn. 375; Selleck v. Rusco, 46 Conn. 370; Taff v. State, 39 Conn. 84; Dixon v. Pierce, 1 Root (Conn.) 138; Totten v. Cooke, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 280; Eames v. Stevens, 26 N. H. 117; Edes v. Boardman, 58 N. H. 580; Satterwhite v. Carson, 3 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 549; Moore v. Ingram, 91 N. Car. 376.

In all legal proceedings which are good in part and bad in part, the law corrects that which is erroneous and preserves that which is good whenever practicable. Per Doe, C. J., in Edes v. Boardman, 58 N. H. 580.

Where Two Causes of Action Are Set Out in the same petition, and a trial is had and separate verdict and judgment on each, and one is found on appeal to be correct and the other erroneous, that which is right will be affirmed and the other reversed. Totten v. Cooke, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 280.

3. A Judgment Foreclosing a Mortgage may be void for failure to describe the property, without affecting the validity of the judgment for the debt. Seguin v. Maverick, 24 Tex. 526.

A Judgment by Default, directing the sale of a tract of land in general terms without describing it, is void to that extent, but this does not impair a money judgment rendered in the same action, nor is it an error of which the defendant can complain. Gear v. Hart, 31 Tex. 135.

Where a complaint in an action for a balance due for cutting logs does not ask for the statutory lien, a judgment by default for the amount claimed and also declaring a lien is good as a personal judgment, though void as to the part declaring a lien. McKenzie v. Peck, 74 Wis. 208.

4. Barelli v. Wagner, 5 Tex. Civ.

(2) Joint Parties. — The doctrine of the entirety of judgments is most frequently invoked in cases where the judgment is rendered for or against joint parties, and its validity as to all is assailed upon the ground of its invalidity as to one or more. The cases are very numerous and are in irreconcilable conflict. They will be found collated in a succeeding section of this article, where judgments as affected by joinder of parties are considered.¹

e. DECISIONS AND FINDINGS DISTINGUISHED FROM JUDGMENTS. — The decisions or findings of a court,² referee,³ or committee⁴ do not constitute a judgment, but merely form the basis upon which the judgment is subsequently to be rendered.⁵ The decision or findings is the determination made by a court upon a trial of issues without a jury, and corresponds to the report of a referee, or the verdict of a jury.⁶

f. RULES AND ORDERS DISTINGUISHED FROM JUDGMENTS. — The term "rule" is the common-law name for what is known under the codes as an "order."⁷ An order is a decision made during the

App. 445, wherein it was held that a personal judgment in attachment against a nonresident who was not served was void, but that this did not invalidate the judgment in so far as the attached property was concerned.

In Shean v. Cunningham, 6 Bush (Ky.) 126, it was held that in a suit for the recovery of land and damages for its detention, a judgment for the land and for rents was as distinct as if separate judgments had been rendered in different suits; the one is enforced by a hab. fa., the other by a fi. fa. The judgment for rents depends on the recovery of the land; but if the judgment for the land is right, an error as to the rents alone is no reason for disturbing the judgment for the land.

"The findings of the court amount to nothing more than an order for judgment, and are not in themselves the judgment of the court." Andrews v. Welch, 47 Wis. 134.

3. "The cause was tried by a referee. His 'decision,' as it is styled by him, is, after giving the style of the cause, as follows: 'I find for the plaintiff, and assess his damages at eight hundred and nine dollars and eighty-eight cents ($809.88). Aug. 3, 1888.' This is not a final judgment, it is simply the referee's finding. The statute (McClell. Dig., §§ 4, 5, p. 858) contemplates both findings and a judgment in cases at law, and findings and decree in cases in equity. The term 'decis-sion' is used in the statute at least once as convertible with that of 'findings.'" Demens v. Poyntz, 25 Fla. 654.

4. Cothren v. Olmsted, 57 Conn. 329.

5. In bastardy proceedings an appeal cannot be taken from the following before a justice: "The court * * * does now find the defendant not guilty." There was no judgment on the finding. "In the case before us there was no judgment. There was a finding; but a finding is not a judgment any more than is the verdict of a jury. As well might an appeal be taken from a verdict as from a finding without judgment. The case was not disposed of before the justice when the appeal was taken, judgment being necessary to a final disposition." State v. Brown, 44 Ind. 329.

The findings of a court are no more a judgment than the verdict of a jury. Alvord v. McGaughey, 5 Colo. 244.

6. See articles DECISIONS, vol. 5, p. 936; and FINDINGS OF COURT, vol. 8, p. 931.

7. "Rule" and "order" are practically synonymous. Craft Refrigerating Mach. Co. v. Quinpiac Brewing Co., 63 Conn. 570.

Judgment Nisi. — "What is called a judgment nisi is nothing more than a rule to show cause why judgment should not be rendered." Per Pennington, J., in Young v. M'Pherson, 3 N. J. L. 455.

Rule Absolute Distinguished from Judgment. — In Wakefield v. Moore, 65 Ga. 268, the court, in discussing the nature progress of the cause, either prior or subsequent to final judgment, settling some point of practice or some question collateral to the main issue presented by the pleadings, and necessary to be disposed of before such issue can be passed upon by the court, or necessary to be determined in carrying into execution the final judgment; ¹ while, as has been seen, a judgment is the determination of the court upon the issue presented by the pleadings which ascertains and fixes absolutely and finally the rights of the parties in the particular suit in relation to the subject-matter in litigation, and puts an end to the suit.² According to these principles, a of a rule absolute or summary judgment against one of its officers, said: "Such judgments are not final and conclusive, as are those rendered between parties litigant; they are but the dealings of the court with one of its defaulting officers, and for whose neglect of duty is ordered to pay over to the plaintiff in fi. fa. the amount of his actual injury. This being the character of the proceeding, the court may review and annul its order absolute against a sheriff at the same or at a subsequent term upon motion, when it is made to appear that he was not in contempt. This principle was ruled as early as the 2d Georgia Reports, and may be found in the case of Chipman v. Barron, 2 Ga. 220. It was reaffirmed in the case of Davis v. Dempsey, 15 Ga. 182, where it was held that there was no question but that the court had power to grant the motion. And so, too, in Holcombe v. Dupree, 50 Ga. 335. it was held that orders absolute do not operate as estoppels, but the court, upon a proper case made, will go behind the order and look into the truth of the case, and in its discretion re-examine the same."

1. Per Bennett, J., in Loring v. Illsley, 1 Cal. 28. "The question then is, what is an order? It may be defined to be the judgment or conclusion of the court upon any motion or proceeding. It means cases where a court or judge grants affirmative relief, and cases where relief is denied." Gilman v. Contra Costa County, 8 Cal. 52.

See generally article ORDERS.

Under the code, an order is defined as the direction of a court or judge made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment. See, for example, N. Y. Code of Procedure, § 400.

2. Loring v. Illsley, 1 Cal. 28. See also supra, II. 1. Definition; and supra, II. 2. d. Definitiveness.

"The distinguishing characteristic of a judgment is that it is final, while that of an order, when it relates to proceedings in an action, is that it is interlocutory." Nolton v. Western R. Corp., 10 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 97.

The word "rule" may be construed to mean "judgment" where that meaning is clear from the context, as where the defendant is ruled to show cause why an award of arbitrators should not be made a rule of court. Jacobs v. Moffatt, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 398.

"Our statute distinguishes between 'judgments' and 'orders.' The latter is defined to be 'every direction of a court or judge, made or entered in writing, and not included in a judgment' (Rev. Stat., § 3427); hence the statute of limitations must be interpreted in the light of this distinction, and the term 'judgment,' as there used, must be held to mean not 'orders' made by a court and entered in writing, as orders by the County Court allowing and approving claims against the estate of a deceased person and the like, but final judgments adjudicating the rights of parties in actions pending in the courts." Smith v. Shawhan, 37 Iowa 533.

The Words "Rule" or "Order" in the Code in no case mean a judgment, and therefore a motion to strike out the answer in the case on the ground of frivolousness, "and for such other or further order as the said justice shall deem proper to grant," does not authorize a judgment on account of the frivolousness of the answer. Darrow v. Miller, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 247.

Order of Reversal. — An order of the general term of the Marine Court, reversing an order of the special term of that court denying a motion for a perpetual stay of execution on the judgment in the action and granting the decision sustaining or overruling a demurrer is not a judgment under the code, but is an order.¹ But a decision of a cause upon motion, is an order and not a judgment. Bamberg v. Stern, 76 N. Y. 555, citing Monroe v. Upton, 50 N. Y. 593.

Payment of Money into Court to Await Further Order. — In Gray v. Cook, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 432, it was insisted that a decision in the case was an order and not a judgment, because it required the defendant to pay certain moneys into court to await the further order of the court, and to be distributed according to law. But Bosworth, C. J., held the decision to be a judgment. "It is the final determination of the rights of the parties in this action. (Code, § 245.) No questions, as between them, are reserved for further consideration or left open. * * * The decision made allows to the defendant his commissions on the moneys received, and he has no right in reference to the moneys to be paid, nor any duty to perform, except to pay the amount for which judgment is ordered. There is nothing in the allegation or proofs before me suggesting any matter affecting these moneys which can become a subject of litigation between these parties. The judgment itself neither in terms nor by the import of its provisions suggests the existence of any matter of further litigation. I therefore regard it a judgment within the meaning of the code."

An Order on a Rule Is a Judgment. — Mauldin v. Gossett, 15 S. Car. 565

Reference to Take an Account. — When an action is tried before the court, without a jury, and a decision is made disposing of the case, except that a reference is directed to take an account, and an order is entered in conformity to the decision, an appeal from such order, to review decisions made at the trial, will be dismissed; they can only be reviewed on an appeal from the judgment, which appeal cannot be brought until the account has been taken, and all questions arising upon it have been disposed of at special term. Until then the order entered on the final decision made after the trial does not become a judgment, within the meaning of that word as defined by the code. The "judgment" from which an appeal may be taken to the general term means the same thing as a judgment from which an appeal may be taken to the court of appeals. Lawrence v.

Farmers' L. & T. Co., 15 How. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 57.

1. Decision on Demurrer Is an Order. — Phipps v. Van Cott, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 90; Ford v. David, 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 385; Nolton v. Western R. Corp., 10 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 97; Cook v. Pomeroy, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 105; Bauman v. New York Cent. R. Co., 10 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 218; Elwell v. Johnson, 74 N. Y. 80; Bode v. New England Invest. Co., 1 N. Dak. 121, holding that an order sustaining a demurrer and dismissing the action with cost unless the plaintiff should amend within the time limited was not a final judgment in presenti, but an order for a judgment to be entered in futuro upon a contingency. Gage v. Eich, 56 Ill. 297.

Where a demurrer to part only of a pleading is sustained or overruled, the order is clearly not a judgment. Drummond v. Husson, 1 Duer (N. Y.) 633. See also Johnson v. Union Switch, etc., Co., 125 N. Y. 720, 35 N. Y. St. Rep. 282.

In Nolton v. Western R. Corp., 10 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 97, the court, speaking of an order sustaining or overruling a demurrer, said: "The most that can be said of such a decision is that it is a conditional judgment. It is analogous to the old rule for judgment interlocutory. In my judgment, therefore, it is no very great misnomer to call such a decision an order."

A decision of the court, sustaining or overruling a demurrer, is an order, not an interlocutory judgment. Cambridge Valley Nat. Bank v. Lynch, 76 N. Y. 514.

Contrary View. — In Bentley v. Jones, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 335, it was held that a decision upon a demurrer was a judgment; the court reasoned thus: "In the language of the code the argument of the demurrer was a trial. A trial is the judicial examination of issues, whether they be of law or of fact (§§ 252, 255). And issues of law must be first tried unless the court otherwise direct (§ 251). The adjudication on the demurrer was final, and after the expiration of the time for amending, if no amendment was made it would authorize the entry and perfecting of judgment. The dis-

the pleadings because of frivolousness is a judgment and not an order.¹

g. NATURE OF RELIEF AWARDED. — With few exceptions,² specific or equitable relief could not be recovered in an action at common law,³ but the sole remedy the court was competent to give was a judgment for money damages as a recompense for injury suffered.⁴

h. JUDGMENTS AS CONTRACTS — (1) In General. — Under the old classification of all obligations into two classes, viz., those arising ex contractu and those arising ex delicto, and the further division of obligations ex contractu into simple contracts, contracts under seal or specialties, and contracts of record, it has been usual to classify judgment obligations as contracts of record.⁵

inction clearly made in the code is this: An order is the decision of a motion. A judgment is the decision of a trial. It is plain, therefore, that the decision in question was a judgment and not an order, and that an appeal from it as an order could not be made." See also Lewis v. Acker, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 414; King v. Stafford, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 30. This reasoning does not seem very satisfactory, and the weight of authority is against it. See cases cited supra, this note.

1. Judgment on Pleadings for Frivolousness. — "Where there is a direction for a judgment by reason of the frivolousness of a pleading, there is a final determination of the rights of the parties within the meaning of the code, and it is nowhere reduced to the class of orders. This court was therefore right in characterizing the determination, in such cases, as a judgment, and not an order. Bruce v. Pinckney, 8 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 397." Phipps v. Van Cott, 4 Abb., Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 90.

2. Specific Relief at Law. — Replevin, detinue, ejectment, common-law real actions, proceedings to recover dower, abatement of nuisances, quo warranto, mandamus, prohibition, habeas corpus, estrepment, and the obsolete brevia anticipantia are instances of specific relief at law.

3. Thus in an action for breach of a contract to deliver a certain number of shares of corporate stock, a court of law can only award damages for the failure to deliver such stock, and cannot render a judgment that the defendant shall deliver to plaintiff so many shares of stock. Orange, etc., R. Co. v. Fulvey, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 366.

In an action on the case for flooding plaintiff's land with water from defendant's millpond, it is not competent for the court to grant an order for the survey of the pond and adjacent lands, and that the defendant shall draw off the water from his pond to facilitate such survey. Speer v. Duval, 5 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 13.

Where a note is filed in set-off, the judgment cannot require it to be delivered up to the plaintiff. Baird v. Foreman, 3 N. J. L. 116.

Judgment at Law Adjusting Equities. — A judgment in an action at law, pure and simple, which undertakes to adjust the equities of the creditors of the judgment debtor by postponing the payment of the judgment to their claims, is erroneous. Wilson v. Benedict, 90 Mo. 208.

In an action under modern codes of procedure either legal or equitable relief may be granted, as forms of action and the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity are generally abolished. Kirkwood v. Hastings First Nat. Bank, 40 Neb. 484. See also article ACTIONS, vol. 1, p. 108.

4. Hale on Damages, p. 2.

5. M'Guire v. Gallagher, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 402; Gebhard v. Garnier, 12 Bush (Ky.) 324; Henry v. Henry, 11 Ind. 236.

Judgment Not a Specialty. — Tyler v. Winslow, 15 Ohio St. 364 (within the statute of limitations); Kimball v. Whitney, 15 Ind. 280. But see Burnes v. Simpson, 9 Kan. 658; and Morse v. Toppan, 3 Gray (Mass.) 411, wherein the court said: "A judgment is in the nature of a contract; it is a specialty and creates a debt; and to have that effect it must be taken against one capable of contracting a debt."

The cases are very numerous in which judgments have been declared to be contracts,¹ or debts of record.²

It is Only by a Legal Fiction, however, and for the purpose of enforcing the obligation by contractual remedies, that judgments can be considered as contracts.³ The essential elements of every true contract, such as competent parties and assent, are often wanting in judgments which perhaps usually are rendered in invitum, and often against infants, lunatics, or married women.⁴ Accordingly

Contract as Distinguished from Tort. —

A judgment is not a contract, in a narrow sense, and is not synonymous with agreement; but, in a broad sense, it is a contract as distinguished from a tort. Johnson v. Butler, 2 Iowa 535. See also Moore v. Nowell, 94 N. Car. 265; McDonald v. Dickson, 87 N. Car. 404.

1. Judgments Are Contracts. — See generally the cases cited more specifically throughout this section. And see Weaver v. Lapsley, 43 Ala. 224; Reed v. Eldredge, 27 Cal. 348; Farmers', etc., Bank v. Mather, 30 Iowa 283; Morse v. Toppan, 3 Gray (Mass.) 411; Humphrey v. Persons, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 313; M'Guire v. Gallagher, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 402; Sawyer v. Vilas, 19 Vt. 43; Childs v. Harris Mfg. Co., 68 Wis. 231.

2. Adams v. Hackett, 7 Cal. 187; Hubbell v. Coudrey, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 132; Burnes v. Simpson, 9 Kan. 664; Turner v. Wilson, 49 Ind. 581; State v. Hamilton, 33 Ind. 502; Ex p. Teague, 41 Ind. 278; Lower v. Wallick, 25 Ind. 68.

A judgment rendered upon an unassignable cause of action for a tort is a debt. Lawrence v. Martin, 22 Cal. 173.

A judgment for costs in a criminal prosecution is a debt. Gray v. Ferreby, 36 Iowa 146.

A Verdict in a cause of action resting in tort does not convert the tort into a debt, but it must first be merged into a judgment. Stauffer v. Remick, 37 Kan. 456; Thayer v. Southwick, 8 Gray (Mass.) 229.

A Judgment in a Bastardy Proceeding is not a debt within a constitutional provision against imprisonment for debt. Turner v. Wilson, 49 Ind. 581; State v. Hamilton, 33 Ind. 502; Ex p. Teague, 41 Ind. 278; Lower v. Wallick, 25 Ind. 68.

Character as Evidence of Indebtedness.

— A judgment of a court of record is an evidence of indebtedness, in writing, of the highest dignity known to the law, but not of the same character, nature, or grade with notes, bonds, bills, or written contracts. Ambler v. Whipple, 139 Ill. 311.

3. "A judgment for damages, estimated in money, is sometimes called by text writers a specialty or contract of record, because it establishes a legal obligation to pay the amount recovered; and, by a fiction of law, a promise to pay is implied where such legal obligation exists. It is on this principle that an action ex contractu will lie upon a judgment. Chitty on Contracts (Perkins's ed.) 87. But this fiction cannot convert a transaction wanting the assent of parties into one which necessarily implies it. Judgments for torts are usually the result of violent contests, and, as observed by a court below, are imposed upon the losing party by a higher authority, against his will and protest." Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 288.

An Action on a Judgment is an action on a contract, irrespective of the nature of the original transaction on which the judgment was founded. Mallory v. Leach, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 507; Crane v. Crane (City Ct.) 19 N. Y. Supp. 691; Johnson v. Butler, 2 Iowa 535; Taylor v. Root, 4 Keyes (N. Y.) 335.

Provisional Remedies. — A judgment is deemed a contract; and in an action on a binding judgment, whether foreign or domestic, plaintiff is entitled to the same provisional remedies as an action on an express contract. Gutta Percha, etc., Co. v. Houston, 20 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Ct. App.) 218, 108 N. Y. 276, 14 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 19, reversing 46 Hun (N. Y.) 237.

4. Judicium redditur in invitum. Jordan v. Robinson, 15 Me. 168.

As to the validity of judgments against incompetent persons, see articles HUSBAND AND WIFE, vol. 10, p. 191; INFANTS, vol. 10, p. 981; INSANE PERSONS, vol. 10, p. 1169.

"In considering this question I have not overlooked the case of Morse v. Toppan, 3 Gray (Mass.) 411, in a great number of cases have very properly declared that judgments are not contracts.¹

The True View is that judgment obligations occupy the middle ground between contracts and torts, which is now becoming known as quasi-contracts.²

(2) Within Constitutional and Statutory Provisions. — The question as to whether or not a judgment may be regarded as a contract, most frequently arises as a question of statutory construction. In such case the question is not whether a judgment is a contract in any sense of the term, but whether it is a contract within the meaning of that term as used in the statutory or constitutional provision under consideration.³

which the court says that 'a judgment is in the nature of a contract; it is a specialty, and creates a debt, and to have that effect it must be taken against one capable of contracting a debt.' A judgment is a contract in the sense that it may be sued upon in another judicial tribunal, but it is not a contract in that it can only be rendered against a party then capable of contracting a specialty debt. It is not true that a judgment rests either upon the will or the capacity to contract of the party against whom it is rendered. Freem. Judgm., § 4. If a judgment is a contract, and can only be rendered against one who is then capable of contracting, by the laws of the forum there could not be a judgment on a contract made in another state, unless by the law of the forum that contract would be valid. This would destroy the rule of comity and international law which makes the validity of a contract and the capacity of the contractor depend on the place where the contract is made or is to be performed, or the domicil of the contractor, as the case may be, and not upon the law of the forum. The doctrine, as announced in Morse v. Toppan, 3 Gray (Mass.) 411, has been ignored in Milliken v. Pratt, 125 Mass. 374, where the court sustained a judgment against a married woman living in Massachusetts on a contract made in Maine, although at the time of making the contract she could not have made a similar one at the place of her domicil." Wadsworth v. Henderson, 16 Fed. Rep. 451.

Impairing Obligation. — It has been held that a judgment is a contract within the constitutional provision prohibiting statutes impairing the obligation of contracts.¹ But the contrary has also been held,² and this view would seem to be undoubtedly the correct one where the judgment was founded upon a tort.³

Statutes Conferring or Limiting Jurisdiction. — A judgment is a contract within the meaning of a statute conferring⁴ or limiting⁵ the jurisdiction of a court in actions on contracts.

Statute of Limitations. — It has been held that judgments are contracts within the meaning of the statute of limitations.⁶ But more often it is held that judgments are not contracts within that clause of the statute of limitations limiting actions upon contracts; special provision being usually made with regard to judgments.⁷

Statute Requiring Real Party in Interest to Sue. — A judgment is not a contract within a statute requiring actions upon contracts to be brought in the name of the real party in interest.⁸

Assignment of Choses in Action Ex Delicto. — Under a statute prohibiting the assignment of choses in action not arising out of contract, a judgment is considered as a contract, and therefore assignable.⁹

In Scarborough v. Dugan, 10 Cal. 305, it is said to be well settled that a judgment in one state and upon which suit is instituted in another state is a contract in the sense of the constitution.

2. "The prohibition of the Federal Constitution was intended to secure the observance of good faith in the stipulation of parties against any state action. Where a transaction is not based upon any assent of parties, it cannot be said that any faith is pledged with respect to it; and no case arises for the operation of the prohibition. Garrison v. New York, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 203." Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 288.

In Sprott v. Reid, 3 Greene (Iowa) 489, it was held that a judgment is not within the terms of a constitutional provision prohibiting legislation that impairs the obligation of contracts in such a sense that the statute requiring appraisement on an execution sale cannot be made applicable to judgments for costs already in existence.

3. McAfee v. Covington, 71 Ga. 272; Freeland v. Williams, 131 U. S. 405; Garrison v. New York, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 196; Louisiana v. New Orleans, 109 U. S. 285.

7. Keith v. Estill, 9 Port. (Ala.) 669; Niblack v. Goodman, 67 Ind. 174; Burnes v. Simpson, 9 Kan. 658; U. S. Bank v. Dallam, 4 Dana (Ky.) 574; Dudley v. Lindsey, 9 B. Mon. In Sheehan, etc., Transp. Co. v. Sims, 28 Mo. App. 69, it was held that the word "contract" in the statute of limitations might or might not include judgments, according to the evident intent of the statute.

8. Smith v. Harrison, 33 Ala. 706.

Therefore an action upon a judgment must be brought in the name of the original plaintiff. Lovins v. Humphries, 67 Ala. 437; Masterson v. Gibson, 56 Ala. 56; Wolfe v. Eberlein, 74 Ala. 99; Smith v. Harrison, 33 Ala. 706. See also infra, XVIII. Actions on Judgments.

9. Moore v. Nowell, 94 N. Car. 265; McDonald v. Dickson, 87 N. Car. 404.

an action of tort is a contract within the provisions of the code allowing counterclaims.¹

Joinder of Parties. — A statute making joint contracts joint and several does not apply to judgments.²

Joinder of Actions. — A judgment is a contract within the rules as to joining causes of action.³

Contracts Express or Implied. — A statute referring generally to contracts express or implied for the payment of money does not apply to judgments.⁴

Execution Against Body. — Where process against the body cannot issue in an action upon a contract, it cannot issue in an action upon a judgment.⁵

Statutory Liability of Officers and Stockholders. — A judgment is not a debt by contract within the scope of a statute making trustees or stockholders of a corporation liable for its debt.⁶

i. JUDGMENTS AS CONVEYANCES. — A judgment is not effectual to pass the title to land if the decree fails to declare that it shall be regarded as a deed of conveyance.⁷

j. JUDGMENTS AS ASSIGNMENTS. — A judgment is not an assignment, even though it is entered by confession and has the same practical effect.⁸

k. QUOD SIT IN MISERICORDIA. — At common law it seems that regularly there was a fine or amercement in all actions, for if the plaintiff or demandant did not prevail it was thought reasonable that he should be punished for his unjust vexation, and therefore there was a judgment against him quod sit in misericordia pro falso clamore.⁹

1. Taylor v. Root, 4 Keyes (N. Y.) 335. But see Rae v. Hulbert, 17 Ill. 572, holding that a judgment is a contract within the meaning of the statute of set-offs.

2. A judgment is not a contract within the meaning of the statutory provision that all contracts which at common law are joint only shall be construed to be joint and several. Sheehan, etc., Transp. Co. v. Sims, 28 Mo. App. 64.

3. Barnes v. Smith, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 420; Mahaney v. Penman, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 603.

4. Smith v. Harrison, 33 Ala. 706.

A judgment is not included within the terms "a specialty or any agreement, contract, or promise in writing." Kimball v. Whitney, 15 Ind. 280.

5. An action on a judgment is founded on a "contract, express or implied," within Vermont Rev. Stat., c. 28, § 63, in force in 1846, and process against the body cannot issue therein, except on affidavit, etc. Sawyer v. Vilas, 19 Vt. 43.

The liability incurred by one who becomes bail for a defendant on mesne process, by indorsing his name upon the back of the writ, is a liability upon contract, within the meaning of section 63 of chapter 28 of the Revised Statutes; and an execution issued against the body of such bail, upon a judgment against him on scire facias, will be set aside on audita querela. Stoughton v. Barrett, 20 Vt. 385.

6. Chase v. Curtis, 113 U. S. 452; Larrabee v. Baldwin, 35 Cal. 156.

7. Morris v. White, 96 N. Car. 91, (under N. Car. Code, § 427).

8. Breeding v. Boggs, 20 Pa. St. 33, wherein the court said: "A judgment is not an assignment. One is the act of the party, the other the act of the law; in the one case the debtor surrenders the dominion to another; in the other he submits without opposition to the course prescribed by law."

9. Hence, when the plaintiff took out a writ, the sheriff, before the return of it, was obliged to take pledges of prosecution, which, when fines and amerce-

1. CAPIATUR PRO FINE. — In all cases where the judgment was against the defendant it was to be entered with a miseri-cordia or a capiatur, that is, the defendant was either amerced for his wilful delay of justice in not immediately obeying the king's writ by rendering the plaintiff his due, or he was taken up, capiatur, until he paid a fine to the king for the public misdemeanor which is coupled with the private injury in all cases of force, falsehood in denying his own deed, unjustly claiming property in replevin, or contempt by disobeying the command of the king's writ.¹

4. Classification and Terminology — a. IN GENERAL. — Three learned commentators upon the law of judgments have adopted different classifications of the various kinds of judgments.² The subject is not one of prime importance, the object being merely to secure an orderly enumeration of the various kinds of judgments.

ments were considerable, were real and responsible persons and answerable for those amercements, but being now so very inconsiderable that they are never levied, there are only formal pledges entered, viz., John Doe and Richard Roe. Bacon's Abr., tit. Fines and Amercements. See also 3 Black. Com. 399, also pp. 274, 275.

If the action was debt or founded on a contract, the entry was ideo in miseri-cordia, without asserting any sum in certain, which was afterwards affeered by the coroners in the proper county; but if it were in an action of trespass, the court set the fine and levied it by a capiatur. And therefore in all actions quare vi et armis the defendant was fined. Bacon's Abr., tit. Fines and Amercements, C., and cases there cited.

Fines and Amercements Distinguished. — Anciently there was an important distinction between an "amercement" and a fine. A fine was a certain punishment, growing expressly out of some statute, and was always imposed and assessed by the court; an amercement was imposed by the court in general terms (quod sit in miseri-cordia, that the party be in mercy), and was afterwards assessed or affeered (that is, moderated, and reduced to a certain sum) by the peers or equals of the party, who were hence called "affeerors." Brook v. Hustler, 1 Salk. 56, 3 Salk. 33. The term "amercement" was also applied more particularly to pecuniary punishments imposed upon the officers of courts, as sheriffs and coroners, and the word is still used in this sense. See article SHERIFFS. In other respects, however, no essential distinction remains between an amercement and a fine. Amercements, in their ancient technical sense, are entirely disused in modern practice. Burrill's Law Dict., sub voce.

2. Blackstone's Classification. — "Judgments are the sentence of the law pronounced by the court upon the matter contained in the record, and are of four sorts: first, where the facts are confessed by the parties and the law determined by the court, as in case of judgment upon demurrer; secondly, where the law is admitted by the parties and the facts disputed, as in case of judgment on a verdict; thirdly, where both the fact and the law arising thereon are admitted by the defendant, which is the case of judgments by confession or default; or, lastly, where the plaintiff is convinced that either fact or law, or both, are insufficient to support his action, and therefore abandons or withdraws his prosecution, which is the case in judgments upon a nonsuit or retrahit." 3 Black. Com. 395.

This classification has been stated and approved in Derby v. Jacques, 1 Cliff. (U. S.) 432, and in Blaikie v. Griswold, 10 Wis. 293. It has been criticised by Mr. Freeman as being neither accurately expressed nor correctly illustrated. Freeman on Judgments, § 5. Blackstone's classification will nevertheless be adopted here, as his distinctions are founded in substance and his meaning clear. It will be endeavored, however, both to express them accurately and to illustrate them correctly. Indeed, Mr. Freeman's own classification admittedly does not differ materially from Blackstone's, it

b. CLASSIFICATION WITH REFERENCE TO STATE OF PLEADINGS — (1) Judgment on Issue of Law. — When the pleadings terminate in a demurrer upon either side, an issue of law is presented, a judgment upon which comprises the first class of judgments under the classification here adopted. The various judgments which may be rendered upon issues of law, with their technical names, are explained below.¹

being merely an attempt to express the same ideas more simply and clearly. See Freeman on Judgments, § 6.

Freeman's Classification. — Mr. Freeman arranges the various kinds of judgments into four classes, as follows: "(1) The judgment rendered where the pleadings presented no other issue than an issue of law; (2) the judgment rendered upon the decision of a court or a jury upon the issue or issues of fact made by the pleadings; (3) the judgment given where no issue has been made by the party required to plead; (4) where, before or after the joining of an issue of law or of fact, the plaintiff abandons or withdraws his prosecution." Freeman on Judgments, § 6.

Black's Classification. — Mr. Black, in his recent treatise on judgments, abandoning Blackstone's classification as being too unwieldy, classifies judgments under four heads: (1) Judgments on an issue of law. (2) Judgments upon a verdict. (3) Judgments without a verdict. (4) Judgments against a verdict.

1. This is Blackstone's first class. See preceding note.

Quod Recuperet. — A judgment quod recuperet (i. e., that he do recover) is the ordinary form of judgment for the plaintiff. Anderson's Law Dict., tit. Recuperare.

The judgment for plaintiff upon a demurrer to his declaration is quod recuperet. Silver v. Rhodes, 2 Harr. (Del.) 369.

"When the demurrer is joined on any of the pleadings in chief, as on the declaration, plea in bar, or other pleading which goes to the action, the judgment is final, i. e., if for the plaintiff it is quod recuperet, if for the defendant it is quod eat sine die. So that on demurrer to any of the pleadings which go to the action, the judgment for either party is the same as it would have been on an issue in fact joined upon the same pleading, and found in favor of the same party." Hale v.

Lawrence, 22 N. J. L. 80, citing Gould's Pl. 477, § 42. See also Ferrers v. Arden, Cro. Eliz. 668, 6 Coke 7; Hitchin v. Campbell, 2 W. Bl. 831; Bac. Abr., Pleas and Pleadings, I. 13; 2 Arch. Pr. 36; Arch. Prec. 298-9; Silver v. Rhodes, 2 Harr. (Del.) 369.

A judgment by default on sustaining a demurrer to a plea is error. If no leave be given to amend the plea, or to plead anew, there should be final judgment on the demurrer (i. e., quod recuperet). Pettys v. Marsh, 24 Fla. 44.

Plaintiff laid his damages at thirteen thousand dollars in his writ and at fourteen thousand in his declaration, for which variance the defendant pleaded in abatement. The plaintiff demurred to the plea, and, pending the demurrer, obtained leave to amend by making the damages laid in the writ and declaration correspond, whereupon the demurrer was overruled, and judgment of quod recuperet rendered. It was held that the judgment was erroneous, and should have been respondeat ouster. Walker v. Walker, 6 How. (Miss.) 500.

Quod Eat Sine Die. — A judgment for defendant upon a demurrer to any of the pleadings in chief. Hale v. Lawrence, 22 N. J. L. 72; Silver v. Rhodes, 2 Harr. (Del.) 369.

Where a demurrer to a replication is sustained, the judgment should be final (i. e., quod eat sine die) and not respondeat ouster. Ross v. Sims, 27 Miss. 359; Memphis, etc., R. Co. v. Orr, 52 Miss. 542.

But where leave to amend is asked, final judgment should not be entered. Scharff v. Lisso, 63 Miss. 213.

Generally where a demurrer is decided in favor of defendant it is now almost a matter of course to give plaintiff leave to amend, and therefore a judgment quod eat sine die should not be entered, unless plaintiff fails or refuses to amend. See article DEMURRERS, vol. 6, p. 353.

Respondeat Ouster is the name of a judgment upon demurrer to a dilatory plea where the demurrer is determined

(2) Judgment on Issue of Fact. — Where the pleadings do not terminate in a demurrer, they must regularly terminate in a joinder upon an issue of fact, and the judgment must be given for one party or the other according to the determination of this issue,¹ except where issue is joined upon an immaterial question of fact, in which case no judgment is given, but a replender is awarded, which means that the parties must recast their pleadings in favor of the plaintiff. It requires the defendant to put in a better plea or answer, and is therefore not final. Anderson's Law Dict., tit. Respondeat.

"The authorities are clear, distinct, and uniform that the judgment for the plaintiff, in an issue of law, upon a demurrer to a plea in abatement, must be that the defendant answer over, and not that the plaintiff recover damages and costs. The reason is because every man shall not be presumed to know the matter of law, which he leaves to the judgment of the court." Trow v. Messer, 32 N. H. 362 [citing Howe's Practice 215; Foxwist v. Tremaine, 2 Saund. 210, g, note 3; Eichorn v. Le'maitre, 2 Wils. 367; Onslow v. Smith, 2 B. & P. 388]. See also article DEMURRERS, vol. 6, p. 354, note 4.

"The proper judgment upon a demurrer to a plea in abatement, when the demurrer is sustained, is one of respondeat ouster, but in point of practice with us, no formal judgment is, in general, entered; the mode generally is to notice the sustaining of the demurrer upon the judgment entry, as in this case. If the defendant wishes to plead over, he does so; if otherwise, there is no injury done. Here no formal judgment is rendered on the demurrer; the final judgment in this cause is only rendered upon the failure to plead further." Massey v. Walker, 8 Ala. 170.

When a demurrer to a plea has been overruled, the judgment of the court, instead of being final, must be respondeat ouster; and when entered final below, it will be reversed and remanded. Randolph v. Singleton, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 439; Heyfron v. Mississippi Union Bank, 7 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 434.

In modern practice it is almost a matter of course to permit a defendant to answer over after his demurrer to the declaration is overruled. Therefore the judgment under such circumstances is respondeat ouster, instead of quod recuperet, as indicated above. See article DEMURRERS, vol. 6, p. 361. See also Cooke v. Crawford, 1 Tex. 9, 46 Am. Dec. 93.

Quod Billa, or Breve, Cassetur is the judgment for the defendant where a dilatory plea has been determined sufficient in law. It means that the writ or declaration be quashed. See Anderson's Law Dict., tit. Abatement.

1. This corresponds to Blackstone's second division of judgments, disregarding however his limitation of it to cases where the "law is admitted," which is inaccurate. This was probably due to his love of a neat classification, and its inaccuracy is corrected by his illustration of the class as being judgments entered on a verdict.

Quod Recuperet. — A judgment for plaintiff upon an issue of fact is quod recuperet. See supra, this section, p. 837.

"The plaintiff in error here claims that, upon its plea in abatement being overruled, it was entitled to plead over to the merits. This is not in accordance with the well-settled rule of law in that regard. Where a plea in abatement has been filed which raises an issue of fact, and the issue thus formed is tried by a jury, or, as in this case, by the court, trial by jury being waived, if the verdict is against the truth of the plea, the proper judgment is quod recuperet, and not respondeat ouster." Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Saxton, 3 N. Mex. 282.

Nil Capiat Per Billam or Per Breve. — This is the name of a judgment for the defendant upon an issue of fact taken upon a declaration or peremptory plea, and means that the plaintiff take nothing by his writ or declaration. See Rap. & L. Law Dict., tit. Nihil Capiat Per Breve.

Cassetur Breve or Billa. — Where an issue of fact upon a plea in abatement is found in favor of the defendant, the judgment must be cassetur breve or billa, as where a demurrer to such a plea is decided in his favor. The judgment cannot be nil capiat, because the plea is not in bar of the action.

so as to form a material issue.¹

(3) Judgment Where Pleadings Raise No Issue.—The third class of judgments includes cases where judgment is given for one party or the other because of the failure of his adversary to interpose a proper or sufficient pleading or demurrer at the proper time, thus failing to raise an issue,² or where, instead of taking issue with his adversary upon a question of law or fact, he confesses the case made against him.³

(4) Judgment on Abandonment of Suit by Plaintiff.—The fourth and last class of judgments includes cases where the plaintiff either voluntarily or involuntarily abandons the prosecution of his suit.⁴

1. See 3 Black. Com. (Cooley's ed.) 395. And see article REPLEADER.

2. This corresponds to Blackstone's third class. See supra, p. 839.

Default and Nil Dicit Distinguished.—Under the code there is no substantial difference between judgments by default and judgments nil dicit. Lattimer v. Ryan, 20 Cal. 628.

"Bouvier says a 'judgment by default is a judgment rendered in consequence of the nonappearance of the defendant.' He also says: 'Judgment by nil dicit is one rendered against a defendant for want of a plea. * * * The name of a judgment rendered against a defendant who fails to put in a plea or answer to the plaintiff's declaration by the day assigned—in such a case, judgment is given against the defendant of course, as he says nothing why it should not. We are of opinion, however, that no distinction exists under the Civil Code between a judgment nil dicit and by default. Of the two the latter only is mentioned in the code, and the term default is applied as well to judgments rendered after appearance as to those rendered in cases wherein there had been no appearance.'" Wilbur v. Maynard, 6 Colo. 485.

3. See infra, IX. Judgments by Confession; X. Judgments by Agreement or Consent. See also article COGNOVIT, vol. 4, p. 560.

Relicta Verificatio.—This is a judgment entered against defendant, where, after pleading and before trial, he both confesses the plaintiff's cause of action to be just and true and withdraws his plea or other allegations. Upon this judgment is entered against him without proceeding to trial. Bouv. Law Dict., tit. Judgments.

Non Obstante Veredicto.—See infra, III. 10, b. Non Obstante Veredicto.

4. Non Pros.—"An abbreviation of non prosequitur, he does not pursue. Where the plaintiff at any stage of the proceedings fails to prosecute his action, or any part of it, in due time, the defendant enters non prosequitur, and signs final judgment, and obtains costs against the plaintiff, who is said to be non pros'd. 2 Archb. Pr. (Chitty ed.) 1409; 3 Black. Com. 296; 1 Tidd Pr. 458; 3 Chitty Pr. 10; Caines Pr. 102. The name non pros. is applied to the judgment so rendered against the plaintiff. 1 Sell. Pr., and authorities above cited." Bouvier's Law Dict., tit. Non Pros.

"'Judgment of non pros.' or non prosequitur is a judgment of the court on motion of the defendant in a civil action in case the plaintiff does not file his declaration or replication in due time, and is not to be confounded with a nol. pros. or nolle prosequi, by which the plaintiff or the attorney for the state voluntarily declares that he will not further prosecute a suit or indictment, or a particular count in either." Com. v. Casey, 12 Allen (Mass.) 218 [citing 1 Steph. Pl. (1st Am. ed.) 130, 131; Tidd's Pr. 458 et seq.; Philpot v. Muller, 1 Doug. 169, note; Com. v. Tuck, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 365].

Nolle Prosequi—In Civil Practice.—An acknowledgment or undertaking entered on record by the plaintiff in an action to forbear to proceed in the action, either wholly or partially. It has been superseded in most cases by the modern practice of discontinuance, but it seems to be still applicable in some cases. Arch. Pr. 1201; 2 Rap. & L. Law Dict., tit. Nolle Prosequi.

In Criminal Prosecutions.—See article

III. REQUISITES OF A VALID JUDGMENT — 1. What Law Governs. — The validity, force, and effect of a judgment must be determined by the laws in force at the time¹ and in the state² where it was rendered.

2. Maturity of Demand — a. STATEMENT OF RULE. — It is essential to the validity of a judgment that the demand whereon it is rendered shall have existed as a matured cause of action at the time the action was commenced,³ it being a general rule that

INDICTMENTS, INFORMATIONS, AND COMPLAINTS, vol. 10, p. 556.

Stet Processus. — Let the process stand; let proceeding be stayed. An entry on a record, by leave of court, by which a plaintiff agreed that no further proceeding should be had. It prevented a defendant who became insolvent pending the action from obtaining a judgment as in case of nonsuit. Anderson's Law Dict., tit. Stet Processus.

Cassatur Billa. — An entry made on the record in a proceeding in the mayor's court when the plaintiff withdraws his action before the defendant demands the declaration or bill. Brand. For. Att. 109. It is so called from being a prayer by the plaintiff that the bill may be quashed. The proceeding was also used in actions in the superior courts commenced by bill, when the plaintiff found that his action was misconceived, and wished to commence a fresh one. Rap. & L. Law Dict., tit. Cassatur Billa, citing Tidd's Pr. 683.

Cassatur Breve. — Let the writ be quashed. In the old common-law practice, when the defendant in an action pleaded a sufficient plea in abatement, and the plaintiff could not deny it or demur, and did not wish to amend his declaration, he might enter on the roll a judgment that the writ be quashed, in order that he might be enabled to commence a new action. In practice the prayer of judgment that the writ be quashed, and award that it be so, were copied on paper and delivered to the defendant's attorney or agent, the same as pleading, and very often no entry was made on the roll or judgment signed. Chit. Pr. 1487; 1 Rapalje & Lawrence's L. Dict.

Nonsuit. — As to voluntary and involuntary nonsuits, see article DISMISSAL, DISCONTINUANCE, AND NONSUIT, vol. 6, p. 823.

An action to recover a judgment in personam cannot be maintained on a note till its maturity. Evans v. Thornburg, 77 Ind. 106; Collins v. Nelson, 81 Ind. 75; Joseph v. Kronenberger, 120 Ind. 495.

Declaring Future Rights. — In England the former practice of the court in refusing to declare the future rights of parties is altered in a case where the rights are vested, where all parties who can become interested are represented at the hearing, and when the number of classes of persons who can possibly become interested may be diminished, but cannot be increased. Curtis v. Sheffield, 21 Ch. Div. 1, 51 L. J. Ch. 535, 46 L. T. 177, 30 W. R. 581.

In an Attachment on an Unmatured Demand judgment cannot be rendered until the demand has matured. Hamilton v. McClelland, 33 Mo. 315.

In an action for a demand not due wherein property is attached, under c. 223, L. 1880, the proceedings are to be as in personal actions for matured demands, and the judgment may be for the whole amount which has matured. Rollins v. Kahn, 66 Wis. 658.

Where a garnishee answers that he a party must recover according to his legal rights at the commencement of the action.¹

6. DEMANDS DUE IN INSTALMENTS. — Where an action is based on a contract for the payment of money in instalments, it has been held that judgment may be given for all instalments due at the time of trial, although some of them became due after the action was brought.² It has also been held that the judgment should be rendered for the whole amount, but with a stay of execution upon the undue instalments until the time when they respectively become due.³

owes a debt to defendant in attachment, judgment ought to be rendered for the debt with a stay of execution until the day its payment is due. Fayette v. Buckner, 1 Litt. (Ky.) 127.

Determination of Rights as of Time of Rendition. — "While a decree in equity generally operates upon the parties and subject-matter as they stood at the commencement of the proceedings, it only does so to subserve the ends of justice. When, as here, a radical change in the status has been brought about by the passing of time, under the very terms of the agreement, and knowledge of this change is, as here, judicially before the court, or is brought in by appropriate pleading, its decree should be addressed to the rights existing, not at the commencement, but at the time of the determination, of the action." Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Allen (Cal. 1895) 40 Pac. Rep. 752.

A decree must be rendered in accordance with the rights of the parties as they stand at that time, and not as they stood at any preceding time. Randel v. Brown, 2 How. (U. S.) 406.

Recovery on Cause Alleged in Petition, Not in Reply. — A plaintiff must recover, if at all, on the cause of action stated in his petition, and not upon one which first appears in the reply. But if his recovery is based upon facts which have developed since the commencement of the suit, and are set up in the reply, and which are within the general scope of the petition and the relief prayed for, there need be no reversal on account of the stage at which such facts were pleaded. In such a case the plaintiff's recovery of costs should be limited to those arising subsequently to the pleading of the new matter. Crawford v. Spencer, 36 Mo. App. 78.

2. Butler v. Mutual Aid, etc., Co., 94 Ga. 562. Provided, of course, they are embraced in the pleading and prayer for judgment, and subject to defenses raised by the answer.

3. Outen v. Mitchels, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 360, holding that upon a judgment so entered execution may, issue without suing out a sci. fa. upon each instalment as it becomes due.

In an action upon a bond conditioned for the payment of money by instalments, if the verdict be rendered before all the instalments are payable the jury should find how much was due upon each instalment, and when it is payable, or will become payable; and judgment should be entered for the whole amount, to be released upon payment of the amounts, and at the times as found by the jury. Davidson v. Brown, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 250.

Foreclosing Lien for Undue Instalments of Purchase-money. — A judgment for the sale of the whole of the land for undue instalments of the purchase-money, which were secured by a lien thereon, is erroneous, and even an allegation that a sale at once of the entire tract is necessary to prevent loss to the creditor will not authorize a sale to pay undue instalments, or require the debtor to anticipate payment before the agreed time. Burton v. McKinney, 6 Bush (Ky.) 428. See also Emison v. Risque, 9 Bush (Ky.) 24, holding that the decree should simply direct the sale of enough land to pay the amount due and the costs adjudged, leaving a second note for the remainder of the purchase-money to its lien on the remaining portion of the land.

In Kentucky, under the Civil Code, § 135, a plaintiff holding both matured and unmatured demands against a defendant, secured by a lien on property, may state both claims in his petition, and if the unmatured claims become due pendente lite he may suggest that fact on the record, where-

3. Jurisdiction — Statement of Rule. — It is absolutely essential to the validity of a judgment that the court wherein it was rendered had jurisdiction both of the subject-matter and of the person. In the absence of such jurisdiction the judgment is absolutely void, and may be attacked either directly or collaterally.¹

Error in Exercise of Jurisdiction. — Want of jurisdiction, however, must be carefully distinguished from error in the exercise of jurisdiction. Where jurisdiction has once attached, mere errors or irregularities in the proceedings, however grave, although they may render the judgment erroneous and subject to be set aside in a proper proceeding for that purpose, will not render the judgment void, and until set aside it is valid and binding for all purposes and cannot be collaterally attacked.²

4. Parties — a. IN GENERAL. — It is a requisite of a valid final judgment that it must dispose of the case as to all of the parties.³ The court should pass on the cause as to all defendants, and it is error to render final judgment without rendering a judgment either against or in favor of one of the defendants.⁴

b. JUDGMENT AGAINST OR IN FAVOR OF ONE NOT A PARTY — Against One Not a Party. — It is a rule of universal application that the rights of no one shall be concluded by a judgment rendered in a suit to which he is not a party,⁵ and that a party can-upon judgment may be rendered for a sale of the property to pay such demands. This statute only applies, however, where there is a lien on property to secure such demands, and in other cases a party cannot have a judgment for demands becoming due pendente lite. Dant v. Head, 90 Ky. 255.

In Whitaker v. Gee, 61 Tex. 217, it was held that when suit is instituted against two or more, in which judgment is rendered in favor of all the defendants except one, who is not referred to in the judgment, the judgment is not a final judgment from which an appeal may be taken, no order having been entered dismissing the cause as to the defendant not mentioned in the judgment. Judgment Against One Not a Party a Mere Nullity. — In Overstreet v. Davis, 24 Miss. 393, it was held that the court below had no power to enter a judgment against one not a party to the suit, and that such judgment was therefore a mere nullity.

In Cheek v. Pugh, 19 Ark. 574, which was a suit upon a bond given by the defendant in attachment to obtain a return of the property attached, it appearing that the judgment in the original action was rendered against the sureties in the bond, who were not parties, as well as against the defendant in attachment, it was held that the judgment was a mere nullity as to the sureties, but that it was not void as to the defendants.

not be bound by a judgment without being allowed a day in court.¹ He must be cited or have made himself a party in order to authorize a personal judgment against him.² A judgment rendered against a party who is brought in by motion as a defendant after the trial is concluded is erroneous as to such party.³

In Favor of One Not a Party. — A court cannot render a valid judgment in favor of a party who is not before the court and is not represented in any manner in the action.⁴

c. DEATH OF PARTY — JUDGMENT FOR OR AGAINST A DECEASED PARTY — (1) Generally. — As to the validity of a judgment rendered for or against a party after his death the authorities seem to be hopelessly irreconcilable. Thus, according to numerous decisions, such judgments are utterly void and may be collaterally attacked.⁵ The decided weight of authority, however,

A judgment against a defendant named in the writ, but not made a party either by service, public notice, or attaching his estate, is merely void, and should be disregarded when produced on nul tiel record. Armstrong v. Harshaw, 1 Dev. L. (N. Car.) 187.

Mere Service of Citation. — Judgment cannot be rendered against a party who is not mentioned in the proceeding and who has not joined issue or made himself a party. A mere citation served on such party does not compel appearance or justify judgment in default. Bracey v. Calderwood, 36 La. Ann. 796.

If Persons Are Served with Summons Who Are Not Named in the Complaint, either by real or fictitious names, it is error to render judgment against them by default. Lamping v. Hyatt, 27 Cal. 102.

"A judgment rendered against a person not before the court would be void, and it is not perceived that a judgment against a defendant in court at the suit of named plaintiffs, upon a cause of action accruing to them alone, in favor of a person in no manner a party to the action, can stand upon any higher ground. Courts have no more power, until their action is called into exercise by some kind of pleading, to render a judgment in favor of any person than they have to render judgment against a person until he has been brought within the jurisdiction of the court in some method recognized by law as sufficient; and it never will be presumed, in the face of a record which shows that certain named plaintiffs were seeking and entitled to a judgment, that the court rendered a judgment in favor of some person not shown to be before it seeking relief." Dunlap v. Southerlin, 63 Tex. 38.

Not Validated by Lapse of Time. — In Dunlap v. Southerlin, 63 Tex. 38, it was held that no lapse of time can make that a judgment in favor of a person not a party to a suit which was not a judgment at the time it was entered.

seems to be that if a court of general jurisdiction, or a court which has acquired full jurisdiction over the cause and over the parties, renders a judgment for or against a party after his death, the judgment is not for that reason void.¹ Such a judgment,

"As a general rule, it is undoubtedly true that a judgment for or against a dead man is a nullity." Per Gibbons, J., in Ex p. Swan, 23 Ala. 192.

In Life Assoc. of America v. Fassett, 102 Ill. 315, the court said: "A careful examination of the authorities clearly shows that a judgment by the common law, in the absence of any statutory provisions on the subject, against a dead person, either natural or artificial, is absolutely void, and the fact that service may have been obtained or the suit commenced before the death of the party makes no difference in this respect; and this was unquestionably the rule from the earliest period of the common law down to the seventeenth year of the reign of Charles II., when the British Parliament passed the first act somewhat modifying the common law on the subject. Randal's Case, 2 Mod. 308; 1 Salk. 8; 2 Saund. 72, note m. The rule of the civil law was the same. * * * Where a suit is being prosecuted in the name of a dead plaintiff, the defendant may well plead the fact in abatement, and there is no great hardship in holding that if he does not so take advantage of it, the judgment shall bind him when collaterally drawn in question. In the nature of things the deceased defendant cannot plead in abatement, or otherwise interpose, the fact of his own death, and his legal representatives, until brought into court by the plaintiff, as contemplated by the statute, are not supposed to be present or to know anything about the pendency of the suit; and to hold a judgment obtained under such circumstances binding upon them would seem not only inconsistent with well-settled principles, but would probably lead to the perpetration of great frauds. We are, therefore, clearly of opinion such judgments are, as already stated, absolutely void."

Extinct Corporation. — Upon the expiration of the term of the existence of a corporation as limited by its charter it becomes extinct. No formal decree of dissolution is necessary, and a judgment thereafter rendered in an action then pending is void, unless the action be continued by order of the court. Sturges v. Vanderbilt, 73 N. Y. 384.

In District Tp. v. Independent Dist., 63 Iowa 188, it was held that where a district township was dissolved by its sub-districts organizing as independent districts, a judgment obtained in an action begun against the original township after its dissolution was void for want of jurisdiction of the court to render it.

Void Though Executor Was Also Defendant. — A judgment rendered against a party at the time deceased is void even though his sole executor was a defendant in the same action, but in his individual capacity. Bragg v. Thompson, 19 S. Car. 576.

Death of Party After Obtaining Order of Appeal. — An order or judgment rescinding an order of appeal previously obtained by a party to the suit will be annulled and set aside if it appears that the rescinding order was rendered after the death of the party who had obtained the appeal. Hoggatt's Succession, 36 La. "We think the better rule to be that when a court has acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter and the person during his lifetime, and a hearing is had and judgment rendered, and the judgment roll does not disclose the death of either party to the controversy, then such a judgment is not void because one of the parties may have died prior to its rendition. Such judgment, while erroneous, is not void." Per King, J., in Elliott v. Bastian, 11 Utah 452.

In Jennings v. Simpson, 12 Neb. 558, the court said: "While the authorities applicable to this point are by no means uniform or free from conflict, yet we consider the weight of authority to be as laid down by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in Yaple v. Titus, 41 Pa. St. 195, in the following words: 'A judgment rendered against a person (and equally so of one rendered in his favor) after his death is reversible, if the fact and time of death appear on the record, or in error coram nobis, if the fact must be shown aliunde; it is voidable, and not void, and cannot be impeached collaterally.'"

"The court, having acquired jurisdiction of the parties, possesses the power to proceed to the final disposition of the action; and while the court ought to cease to exercise its jurisdiction over a party at his death, the neglect to do so is an error to be corrected by some proceeding in the action in which the error occurs, and the judgment, though erroneous, is not on that account to be attacked in a collateral action. In other words, the judgment is voidable when properly assailed, but not void." Hayes v. Shaw, 20 Minn. 405. See also Stocking v. Hanson, 22 Minn. 542.

Jurisdiction Must Be Acquired Before the Death of the party against whom the judgment is rendered, for a judgment rendered in an action originally proceeding for that purpose,¹ is valid until reversed by some appropriate proceeding, and may not be collaterally attacked.² Where the death of the plaintiff occurs after the verdict, judgment may nevertheless be properly entered in his favor,³ but such judgment should be entered as of the term in which the verdict was returned.⁴

brought against a person already dead is void, since in such case the court never acquired jurisdiction. Loring v. Folger, 7 Gray (Mass.) 505; Reid v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 327; Jochumsen v. Suffolk Sav. Bank, 3 Allen (Mass.) 87; Clafin v. Dunne, 129 Ill. 241; Crosley v. Hutton, 98 Mo. 196.

Representative Must Have Opportunity to Resist Recovery. — In Lynn v. Lowe, 88 N. Car. 478, it was held that judgment rendered against a party after his death is irregular where there was service of process on attorneys, but no suggestion of the death; and the same will be set aside in a direct proceeding for that purpose, so that the representative may have an opportunity to resist a recovery. The court said: "It is the clear right of every person to be heard before any action is invoked and had before a judicial tribunal affecting his rights of person or property. If no opportunity has been offered, and such prejudicial action has been taken, as well when he was never made a party as when by death he has ceased to be, in either case, the severance being equally effectual and absolute, the court will at once, when judicially informed of the error, correct it, and relieve him and his estate from the wrong, not because injustice is done in the particular case, but because it may have been done. * * * In such case the court does not investigate the merits of the matter in dispute, but sets aside the judgment, and reopens the otherwise concluded matter, to afford the representative the opportunity, not open to his intestate and which the law accords to all, of being heard in opposition."

2. Case v. Ribelin, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 29; Stocking v. Hanson, 22 Minn. 542; Mitchell v. Schoonover, 16 Oregon 211; Mills v. Alexander, 21 Tex. 154; Beard v. Roth, 35 Fed. Rep. 397.

A judgment cannot be impeached in a collateral action by proof that the person for or against whom it was rendered died before its rendition. Mills v. Alexander, 21 Tex. 154.

In Beard v. Roth, 35 Fed. Rep. 397, it was held that a judgment of the court fixing the amount due from an administrator on his settlement, which was rendered after his death, was not void for that reason where the accounts were filed during the administrator's lifetime, since the court had thereby acquired jurisdiction of his person during his lifetime.

Error to Be Corrected by Court Rendering Judgment. — In Case v. Ribelin, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 29, the Court of Appeals of Kentucky, in holding that the rendition of judgment for or against a dead person is error in fact, only to be corrected by writ of error coram vobis, said: "If, for instance, a judgment be rendered in favor of or against a feme covert suing or defending as a feme sole, or in favor of or against a dead man, which would be manifestly erroneous as soon as the fact shall appear, the error could be corrected only by the court which rendered the judgment."

4. Goddard v. Bolster, 6 Me. 427; Horner v. Nicholson, 56 Mo. 220, where the court said: "As to rendering judgment on a verdict found before the death of the plaintiff, our statute (Wagn. Stat. 1050, § 7) expressly authorizes it, notwithstanding his subsequent death." See also, as to the application of this rule where the plaintiff dies between the trial by the court and the judgment, Webber v. Stanton, 1 Mich. N. P. 97; Gilman v. Donovan, 53 Iowa 362.

Entry as of Actual Date of Rendition. — Although the proper procedure is as indicated in the text, it would seem that a judgment entered after the death of the plaintiff as of the actual

(2) Error, How Corrected. — The manner in which the error of rendering a judgment for or against a party after his death is to be corrected depends upon whether the fact and time of death appear on the record or whether they must be shown aliunde.¹ In the first case, the judgment is reversible on error.² If, however, the fact of death must be shown dehors the record, the remedy is by writ of error coram nobis.³

d. JOINDER OF PARTIES—EFFECT ON JUDGMENT—(1) Against Joint Defendants — (a) Common-law Rule — aa. ON CONTRACT — General Rule. — At common law, where several defendants are sued jointly in an action ex contractu, the plaintiff must have judgment against date when rendered is not void, and a suit by the personal representatives of the deceased plaintiff may be brought on it, and it will be held as conclusive as though it had been entered nunc pro tunc as of the date of the trial. Webber v. Stanton, 1 Mich. N. P. 97.

In Broas v. Mersereau, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 653, the court, in holding that a verdict may be taken after the death of a sole plaintiff where the death happens on the first day of a circuit, said: "The statute * * * allows the entry of judgment within two terms from the verdict, though either party may die in the intermediate time. The whole time of the circuit relates to the first day, so that if the party die on any day during the circuit, though before the trial, this is regarded as a death after verdict, and may be followed by a judgment within the two terms. It is not denied that such would be the law of this case were it not for section 5, which forbids the entry of judgment on a verdict against any party who dies before a verdict actually rendered. The verdict here is not against, but in favor of, the party deceased. It is plain, to my mind, that the statute intended to qualify the old rule of relation no farther than it respected the party against whom the verdict passed, but to leave it entirely operative in a case like this."

Remedy by Petition in Nature of Bill of Review. — Where the parties are both dead at the rendition of the judgment, and the record does not show such fact, relief can only be had by petition in the nature of a bill of review, or for a new trial, or by motion to set aside the judgment. McClelland v. Moore, 48 Tex. 355, where the court said: "The error in the judgment, however, is not exhibited by the record. It is an error in fact, and not in law. It could not, therefore, be corrected, under our system of judicature, on appeal or writ of error to this court. Relief must be sought in such case by a petition in the nature of a bill of review, or for a new trial, or by a motion in the court in which it is rendered to set aside the judgment; which seems to have been recognized by this court, in cases of this kind, as a substitute in modern practice for writ of error coram nobis." Remedy by Motion. — In Clafin v. Dunne, 129 Ill. 241, it is held that a judgment rendered against a person after his death "may be reversed on error, if the fact of the defendant's death appears from the record; if not, the judgment may be vacated by motion in the court where the judgment was rendered. It is an error of fact, which may now be reached by motion, but which was formerly reached by writ of error coram nobis. * * * When the motion is made under the statute, the question does not arise collaterally, as is supposed, but the motion to vacate, like a writ of error in a proper case, is a direct proceeding, and calls in ques-

all of the defendants who are before the court, either by service of process or by appearance, or he can have judgment against none.¹ Under a declaration against two charging a joint liability tion the legality of the judgment." See also, to the same effect, McClelland v. Moore, 48 Tex. 355.

Contra — As to Joint and Several Contracts. — In at least one state it has been held that in a suit on a joint and several contract the plaintiff may enter a nolle prosequi as to some of the defendants and proceed to judgment against others. Peyton v. Scott, 2 How. (Miss.) 870, where the court said: "It is urged for the plaintiffs in error that the court erred in permitting the nolle prosequi to be entered as to Hall and in afterwards proceeding to judgment against the others on the ground that the nolle prosequi was a discontinuance as to all the defendants. This appears to be the settled law when the contract on which the action is founded is joint, but there is a marked difference when the contract is joint and several; for in such cases any or either of the obligors may be sued separately and no advantage can be taken of the nonjoinder of the co-obligors, whereas if the contract were purely joint the nonjoinder would be fatal on a plea in abatement. If a party can sue the makers of a note separately, there can be no reason why he may not discontinue as to part of them after suit brought." See also Minor v. Mechanics' Bank, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 46.

In Actions Before a Justice of the Peace. — The rule laid down in the text applies in actions begun before a justice of the peace as well as in other courts. Briggs v. Adams, 31 Ill. 486.

Confession by One Joint Defendant After Action Brought. — "Where all the joint defendants are before the court, and the action as to any of them is not barred by any defense personal to any of such defendants, and one of such joint defendants in court confesses judgment in the action, and the action is further proceeded in against the other joint defendants, the court cannot enter a final judgment upon such confession, and if it does in fact enter up a formal judgment thereon, such formal judgment entered under such circumstances is a nullity; nor does such formal entry of such judgment acquire any validity because the plaintiff agreed to accept the same, unless at the same time he discontinues his action against the other defendants. As such cognovit actionem has none of the force or effect of a judgment while the action is waiting the trial of the issues as to the other joint defendants, it is wholly immaterial whether the issues be tried at the same term at which such confession of judgment is entered, or at any subsequent term, for until the trial of the issues as to the other defendants the confession awaits the final judgment upon the verdict, jointly against all the defendants, or none, notwithstanding such cognovit actionem and the formal judgment thereon against the defendant who confessed said judgment. When such confession has been made and the issues are tried as to the other defendants, it is the duty of the court to enter judgment upon the verdict jointly against all the defendants or against admission of the liability of one defendant will not entitle the plaintiff to a verdict and judgment against him alone.¹

Exception to the Rule. — Although the foregoing rule has been long and well established, it is not, however, universal; a notable exception thereto being that whenever a defendant pleads matter which goes to his personal discharge, or any matter that does not go to the nature of the writ, or pleads or gives in evidence a matter which is a bar to the action against himself only, and of which the others could not take advantage, judgment may be for such defendant and against the rest.² Thus, for instance, the defend-none of them." Hoffman v. Bircher, 22 W. Va. 537.

1. Barker v. Ayers, 5 Md. 202.

Administrators and Executors Sued as Such. — The general rule which requires a plaintiff in an action ex contractu against several to show the liability of all the defendants, to entitle him to a judgment against a less number, does not apply where the defendants are sued as executors or administrators upon a contract made with their testator or intestate; in such case the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment against such of the defendants as may be shown to sustain the character, in relation to the estate of the deceased, in which they are charged. Gray v. White, 5 Ala. 490. See also Ivey v. Gamble, 7 Port. (Ala.) 545.

Reason for Exception. — In Hathaway v. Crocker, 7 Met. (Mass.) 262, the court, in commenting on this exception to the general common-law rule, said: "Formerly the rule undoubtedly was, that in assumpsit on a joint promise, if there was a verdict on the general issue in favor of one, it falsified the averment of a joint promise, and no judgment could be had against the others, though defaulted. Tuttle v. Cooper, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 281. But that rule was always adopted with this exception: that when one defendant pleaded in his discharge some matter personal to himself, as a discharge under a bankrupt act or insolvent law, and upon such plea had a verdict, the other defendants were still liable. * * * The reason of the distinction is obvious, and it is this: that such a special personal defense does not falsify the averment of an original joint promise, but admitting it, avoids it by the averment of matter subsequent. And now, by the law (Stat. 1836, c. 273) discontinuing the use of special pleading, the general issue with notice of the special matter of avoidance must have the same effect."

Effect of Failure to Discontinue. — Where one of several defendants pleads a personal defense, the plaintiff may discontinue or enter a nolle prosequi as to such defendant, and may proceed against the others. Woodward v. Newhall, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 500. But according to Beekman v. Sylvester, (Mich. 1896) 66 N. W. Rep. 1093, where the action is against three joint defendants, and two of such defendants show ant may plead bankruptcy,¹ or inability to contract, as infancy,² coverture,³ lunacy, and the like.⁴ It is essential, however, to the operation of this exception, that a defense insisted upon by one of several joint debtors be personal to him, and it should not go to the discharge of all.⁵

Default by Some, Successful Defense by Others. — Where, in an action ex contractu, one of several defendants makes default, and his co-defendants interpose pleas in bar to the whole action, a finding in their favor inures to the benefit of such defaulted defendant;⁶ and a final judgment by default against a portion of the defend-a valid discharge, if the plaintiff does not take a discontinuance as to them a judgment in his favor against the third defendant will not be sustained.

Illustrations. — Where A, B, and C are sued on a joint contract, and a general verdict is returned for A on his pleading the general issue and giving in evidence a discharge under the insolvent law, and B is defaulted, and a verdict is returned against C, the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment against B and C. Hathaway v. Crocker, 7 Met. (Mass.) 262.

A finding by the court that one of several defendants has been adjudged a bankrupt, and rendering judgment against the other defendants and not against him, is virtually a judgment in his favor. Robinson v. Brown, 82 Ill. 279.

"Where several are sued upon an obligation, a successful plea by one discharges the other defendants, unless the nature of the plea is of a character going to the personal discharge of the pleader, of which the others could take no advantage, as infancy, bankruptcy, etc. This, we believe, is a universal principle, recognized and acted upon in the administration of the law in all courts where the practice of the English common-law courts is pursued or adhered to." Per Hanly, J., in State v. Williams, 17 Ark. 371. See also Bruton v. Gregory, 8 Ark. 180, note.

Defenses Held Not Personal. — A plea by one that he and another contracted as sureties, and that the payee has without their consent and by the valid contract extended the time, is not a personal defense within the meaning of the doctrine. Ritchie v. Gibbs, 7 Ill. App. 149.

Effect of Recovery Against One Without Embracing the Others. — As to the effect of a recovery against one of the several makers of a note without embracing the others in the proceeding, the court, in Mitchell v. Brewster, 28 Ill. 163, said: "It has been repeatedly held by this court that a recovery against one of the several persons jointly liable releases the others and forms a complete bar to a recovery against them." See also, to the same effect, Wann v. McNulty, 7 Ill. 355; Thompson v. Emmert, 15 Ill. 415; Moore v. Rogers, 19 Ill. 347.

ants on a joint obligation, coupled with a judgment in favor of the defendants who answer, is reversible on appeal.¹

bb. ON TORTS. — The common-law rule laid down in the preceding section, that final judgment against part of the defendants, without disposing of the case, is error, applies only to actions ex contractu, and has no application to actions arising out of a tort,² since there is no contribution among wrongdoers.³ In an action for tort against several defendants the plaintiff may recover against so many of the defendants as the proof shows were guilty of the wrong,⁴ but the proof failing as to any of the defendants, those against whom there is no evidence are entitled to a

In Davis v. Taylor, 41 Ill. 405, the court said: "It was held in Dow v. Rattle, 12 Ill. 373, which was an action of assumpsit, to be error to render final judgment against part of the defendants without disposing of the case as to the others. On the authority of this case the same thing was said in an action of replevin in the case of Barbour v. White, 37 Ill. 164. There were, however, other grounds for reversing the last-named case, and on further considering this point we are of opinion that the rule should not be applied to actions of tort. There is no reason for thus applying it, because there is no contribution among wrongdoers. Taking a judgment against a portion of the defendants amounts to a dismissal of the case as to the residue, and in actions ex delicto this may be done. If the mode of doing it is irregular, it is an irregularity which works no prejudice to those defendants against whom the judgment is taken. They should not, therefore, be permitted to assign it for error." See also Vieths v. Skinner, 47 Ill. App. 325, in which the above opinion is quoted.

"The rule undoubtedly is that where a verdict for damages for tort is rendered against one defendant only, judgment may be rendered thereon although other persons may have been joined as defendants under an averment that the tort was committed by all the defendants jointly." Boswell v. Gates, 56 Iowa 143.

In Jones v. Grimmet, 4 W. Va. 104, which was an action of trespass for false imprisonment against eleven persons, all of the defendants pleaded the statute of limitation and not guilty. Upon issue being joined eight were found guilty jointly, two not guilty, but verdict.¹ In actions of tort against several defendants, a judgment by default may be taken against a portion of the defendants though the rest make sufficient plea.² And the court may, after the verdict, grant a new trial to one or more of several defendants if satisfied that they were wrongly convicted, and may render judgment upon the verdict as to the remainder.³

(b) Under Statute. — The common-law rule in respect of judgments in actions ex contractu against joint defendants⁴ has been no verdict was found as to the other; and joint judgment was rendered against the eight for damages according to the verdict. It was held that as the defendants against whom the verdict was rendered were not prejudiced by the omission as to one against whom no verdict was found, the verdict and entry of judgment thereon were right.

In an action of replevin against joint defendants judgment may be rendered against one although the plaintiff be not entitled to judgment against the other. Carothers v. Van Hagan, 2 Greene (Iowa) 481, where it was held error to instruct the jury that if either of the defendants was not guilty they must find for both; that one alone could not be found guilty, since replevin is founded in tort.

Judgment Against Some a Dismissal As to Others. — In Davis v. Taylor, 41 Ill. 405, it was held that a judgment against a portion of the defendants in actions ex delicto amounts to a dismissal of the cause as to the others.

Recovery as to One No Bar as to Others. — In Blann v. Crocheron, 19 Ala. 647, it was held that the mere recovery of a judgment against one of several joint trespassers will not preclude the plaintiff from proceeding to judgment against the others. "The liability of all must continue until there has been a satisfaction, and judgment without payment cannot be a satisfaction."

1. Jansen v. Varnum, 89 Ill. 100; Hambleton v. McGee, 19 Md. 43.

Acquittal at Conclusion of Plaintiff's Case. — "In actions for tort against several defendants, if, at the conclusion of the plaintiff's case, there is no evidence against one of the defendants, he is entitled to be acquitted, so that all defendants not fixed by the plaintiff's evidence are to be acquitted before any part of the defense is gone into." Hambleton v. McGee, 19 Md. 43, quoting Parke, J., in Child v. Chamberlain, 6 C. & P. 213, 25 E. C. L. 362, and holding that such practice is conformable to reason and necessary for the furtherance of justice; for otherwise it would be in the power of a plaintiff to deprive a defendant of the benefit of material and competent witnesses by joining them in the action [citing Brown v. Howard, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 119; Van Deusen v. Van Slyck, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 223; Beasley v. Bradley, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 180].

The rule on this subject, as stated by Thompson, C. J., in Brown v. Howard, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 119, is, that if there is even the slightest evidence against a party defendant he cannot be discharged as a party and received as a witness. "The want of evidence against a party in order to entitle him to be a witness should be so glaring and obvious as to afford strong grounds of belief that he was arbitrarily made a defendant to prevent his testimony."

"In actions of tort, it is competent for the jury to find one of the parties guilty and another not guilty. It may turn out also that there may be no evidence conducing to show the guilt of one of the codefendants, while as to the others there may be a strong case made out. In all such cases, should the jury find a verdict of not guilty as to all, and the court should think a new trial ought to be granted, it would be doing great injustice to the innocent party, as against whom there was no evidence, to order a new trial as to him. Indeed, it would have been regular, if the plaintiff had introduced no proof whatever of the guilt of one of the defendants, to have directed his acquittal before the jury passed upon the guilt of the others, had any reason appeared for ordering such discharge, as that the other defendants desired to examine him as a witness." Pounds v. Richards, 21 Ala. 424.

changed by statute in most, if not all, of the states, so that in actions against several upon contract, the plaintiff may have judgment against one or more of the defendants if he shall make out a good cause of action against them, although he may fail as to the others,¹ whether the contract be joint or several, or joint

In Hempy v. Ransom, 33 Ohio St. 312, it was held that, in an action against two defendants to recover a sum of money alleged to be due from them on account, where it appears either from the pleadings or during the progress of the case that a several judgment is proper against one, the court may, in its discretion, render a judgment against him for the amount for which he is liable, leaving the action to proceed against his codefendant. The effect of such severance and judgment is to leave the action to be founded on contract the same rule with regard to the right of recovery against a part of the defendants which prevails at common law in the case of actions founded on torts.¹

(c) Judgment When Joint. — Where a joint action is brought against several defendants who plead jointly, a joint judgment is proper.²

tried as a several action against the remaining defendant upon the issues joined, as fully as if he had been sued separately on the same cause of action. On the trial of these issues, judgment may be rendered for or against the remaining defendant as if he had been sued alone, without regard to the amount of the former judgment against his codefendant.

In Smith v. Coopers, 9 Iowa 376, it was held that a judgment may be rendered against one of the makers of a joint and several promissory note, and the cause continued as to the others, against whom the plaintiff may still recover when the cause is ripe for disposition as to them.

Limitation of Rule. — In an action against several upon a joint obligation, where all of the defendants have been served, judgment may be had against any or either of them severally, where the plaintiff would be entitled to such judgment, if such defendant or defendants had been sued alone. But the rule does not authorize a recovery against a part of the defendants in such case where the others are also liable. Fisk v. Henarie, 14 Oregon 29. See also, to the same effect, Wilson v. Blakeslee, 16 Oregon 43.

Judgment Ignoring One Defendant Bad on Objection. — A judgment against one defendant only, ignoring the other, in an action against two defendants jointly, cannot be upheld against the objection of the judgment defendant. Miller v. Bryden, 34 Mo. App. 602. See also Schweickhardt v. St. Louis, 2 Mo. App. 571; Eichelmann v. Weiss, 7 Mo. App. 87.

Test as to Whether Several Judgment Is Proper. — The true test as to whether a separate judgment may be had is, whether a separate action could have been maintained.

In an action of tort against several defendants, if the jury return a joint verdict against them, judgment should be rendered against them jointly.¹ Where it is clear that two or more defendants are not jointly liable, a joint judgment against both cannot be sustained although each may be severally liable,² nor can a joint judgment be rendered in favor of several defendants where there is no community of interest or ownership in the property in question.³

(d) Judgment When Several. — Where an action is upon a contract joint and several, a several judgment is proper,⁴ since the defendants might have been sued severally,⁵ and judgment may be rendered against one or more without awaiting the final trial.⁶

United States. — Gilman v. Rives, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 298.

England. — Max v. Roberts, 2 B. & P. N. R. 454.

The right to take judgment against one defendant on default before the other has answered or made default applies only to cases where a several judgment is proper, and cannot authorize a judgment against both defendants, even so far as to affect only partnership property. But where the liability is only a joint liability there can be only a joint recovery and judgment, and no judgment can be entered up until all the parties served have had the full time to answer. Jacques v. Greenwood, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 230.

Entry of Separate Judgment Against Each Partner. — In Judd Linseed, etc., Oil Co. v. Hubbell, 76 N. Y. 543, it was held that in an action against a partnership, the entry of a separate judgment against each partnership, instead of a joint one against all, is an irregularity only, since it does not change the partner's liability, and such judgment cannot be set aside on a motion unless made within a year.

Judgment Against Joint Trespassers. — In a suit against joint trespassers, the damages must be assessed jointly against all who are found guilty; they cannot be severally assessed, as a satisfaction to one is a satisfaction to all. Perine v. Deans, Tappan (Ohio) 236. See also Fields v. Williams, 91 Ala. 502; Thompson v. Albright, (Tex. App. 1889) 14 S. W. Rep. 1020.

Each Must Be Liable to Extent of Verdict. — Where the items of damage are distinct, joint judgment cannot be entered against several defendants unless each is liable to the full extent of the verdict. Chambers v. Upton, 34 Fed. Rep. 473.

2. Thus in an action by a lessor against two subtenants of his lessee, a joint judgment was held improper where it appeared that the subtenants did not occupy any portion of the premises jointly. Pierce v. Minturn, 1 Cal. 470; Farmers' Bank v. Bayliss, 41 Mo. 274.

When the foundation of an action is joint and several, it is not error to enter one judgment against one defendant on default and another against other defendants on a verdict. Peyton v. Scott, 2 How. (Miss.) 870.

Joint Judgment Not Void. — In Decker v. Trilling, 24 Wis. 610, it was held that in an action against part of the defendants jointly and severally liable on the same instrument, while strictly there should be several judgments, a joint judgment will not be void.

6. Smith v. Coopers, 9 Iowa 378; Bank of Commerce v. Smith, 57 Minn.

(e) Judgment as an Entirety — aa. GENERALLY. — On the ground that a judgment against two or more parties jointly is an entirety, it is held in a number of decisions that if the court rendering such judgment has not jurisdiction over one of the defendants the judgment as to all will be merely a nullity,¹ as, for instance, where one party was not served,² or where one defendant dies

374; Peyton v. Scott, 2 How. (Miss.) 870; Ely v. Clute, 19 Hun (N. Y.) 35; Hempy v. Ransom, 33 Ohio St. 313; Sears v. McGrew, 10 Oregon 48.

Against Maker and Guarantor of Note. — In an action on a note against its maker and the guarantors thereon, the plaintiff may enter several judgments on a verdict against the maker, and need not await the trial of the issues against the other. Bank of Commerce v. Smith, 57 Minn. 374.

Against Heirs. — In Ransdell v. Threlkeld, 4 Bush (Ky.) 347, it was held that in a suit to subject assets descended to several heirs, it was error to render a joint judgment against them. The Circuit Court should have ascertained the amount each heir had received by descent, and a several judgment should have been rendered against each one for an amount not exceeding the amount so received, and not exceeding the amount to which the plaintiff was entitled.

In Low v. Felton, 84 Tex. 378, it was held that a judgment against heirs which makes each one liable for the entire sum due from an ancestor's estates will not be sustained on a finding that they jointly received sufficient assets to pay it.

Against Defendants Liable in Different Capacities. — Where one defendant is liable individually and the other in a representative character, judgment against them should be not joint, but several. Gray v. M'Dowell, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 501.

Judgment Itself a Joint and Several Obligation. — A personal judgment against two parties is a joint and several obligation, and an action can be maintained upon it against either of the judgment debtors separately, and it can in like manner be used as a set-off against either. Read v. Jeffries, 16 Kan. 534. See also Turner v. Crawford, 14 Kan. 499.

before the rendition of the judgment.¹ According to other decisions such a judgment, while void against one defendant, may be, at the most, only voidable as against the others, and not liable to collateral attack;² and where this is the case a judgment against a party deceased at the time of its rendition is not void against the other defendants, but merely voidable.³

bb. REVERSAL AS AN ENTIRETY. — According to the weight of authority it seems that whether a judgment void for want of jurisdiction over one of several defendants is void against all or is merely voidable, yet upon appeal such a judgment is an entirety, and must be reversed as to all or none, whether it be in favor of or against such joint defendants.⁴ There are, however, several

In Virginia it has been held that where the judgment against one joint defendant was not merely erroneous, but a void judgment and a nullity, the joint judgment need not be reversed as to all. Gray v. Stuart, 33 Gratt. (Va.) 351, where the court said: "Where * * * a judgment is erroneous as to one and is reversed as to one, when the judgment is joint it must be reversed as to all. * * * This is undoubtedly the common-law rule. * * * There is a manifest distinction between an erroneous judgment and a void judgment. The first is a valid judgment, though erroneous, until reversed, provided it is the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction. The latter is no judgment at all; it is a mere nullity. The first cannot be assailed in any other court but an appellate court. The latter may be assailed in any court, anywhere, whenever any claim is made or rights asserted under it."

Reversal Only as to Party Appealing. — In California it was held that where only one of several defendants against whom a judgment has been rendered appeals to the Supreme Court, the appellate court, if it reverses a judgment, the rights between plaintiffs and defendants, but also those between defendants as among themselves, when required by the answer of one of them.¹

Causes of Action Must Be Connected. — The right of a defendant to have a controversy between himself and a codefendant settled applies only to causes of action connected with the one upon which the action is brought.²

Service of Answer on Codefendant. — In order that one defendant may obtain relief against a codefendant, he must serve a copy of his answer upon such codefendant and give him notice of trial.³

5. Pleadings and Issues — a. IN GENERAL. — A judgment in a court of record must be based upon certain definite and regular proceedings, which the record must disclose.⁴

b. DECLARATION, PETITION, OR COMPLAINT — (1) Necessity. — A declaration, petition, or complaint is essential to the regularity of a judgment in a court of record,⁵ but its absence will render the judgment merely voidable, and not void.⁶

may reverse or modify it as to any or all of the parties defendant. Where in such case the error assigned affects only the party appealing, the court will not presume error as to parties not appealing, and will reverse the judgment only as to the party appealing. Ricketson v. Richardson, 26 Cal. 149.

2. Rafferty v. Williams, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 544; Smith v. Hilton, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 236.

The relief which the defendants may have as against each other must be based upon the facts involved in the litigation of the plaintiff's claim and as a part of the adjustment of that claim, and not upon claims with which the plaintiff has nothing to do, and which are properly the subject of an independent litigation between such defendants. Kay v. Whittaker, 44 N. Y. 565; Smart v. Bement, 4 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 253.

3. Edwards v. Woodruff, 90 N. Y. 396.

4. Ayres v. Dobson, 5 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 441.

Where Pleadings Are Lost, judgment should not be rendered until they have been restored. Grimison v. Russell, 11

Neb. 469. See also Halliburton v. Jackson, 11 Lea (Tenn.) 471.

5. Ringgold v. Elliot, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 462, holding that a judgment for a defendant in replevin without a declaration is irregular, and will on motion be set aside, even at a subsequent term; Beckett v. Cuenin, 15 Colo. 281, holding that a judgment of a court of record will be set aside where there is no complaint or written statement of the cause of action.

Filing. — The declaration must be filed before judgment. Gallup v. Wilder, 1 Colo. 264; Haskins v. Tucker, 1 Colo. 263.

A Judgment Without Formal Pleadings may be rendered by confession, agreement, or consent. Peoples v. Norwood, 94 N. Car. 167; Stancill v. Gay, 92 N. Car. 455; Gay v. Grant, 101 N. Car. 206. See also infra, IX. Judgments by Confession; X. Judgments by Agreement or Consent.

6. Leach v. Western North Carolina R. Co., 65 N. Car. 486.

The judgment is not void though no declaration was filed in the cause, and can only be avoided by the proper proceedings taken in due season in the court which rendered the judgment. Terry v. Dickinson, 75 Va. 475.

On Appeal, it will not be presumed that a judgment, though rendered without any complaint, was irregular. Stancill v. Gay, 92 N. Car. 455, stating the reason as follows: "No complaint appears in the record, nor is it certain one was filed. The clerk finds as a fact that there was one, and that it was lost. The judge finds that the only evidence of this was the recitals in the judgment. These recitals were evidence, but not conclusive. But if there was no complaint filed, this fault alone did not render the judgment void. The court having jurisdiction of the subject of the action and the parties to it, the latter might consent to the entry of a judgment by express agreement, or, one having been entered, they might assent to it. There is a presumption in favor of the regularity of the judgment — that the court gave it in the course of procedure, or that the parties consented to it. Vick v. Pope, 81 N. Car. 22, reaffirmed in Gay v. Grant, 101 N. Car. 206.

(2) Sufficiency. — Where the declaration upon which a judgment is rendered does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, a judgment for the plaintiff cannot be supported; ¹ and such defect may be taken advantage of by a motion in arrest of judgment. ²

Under the Colorado Code, § 60, the claim after judgment that a complaint is insufficient can only be sustained on the ground that the facts contained therein, even if well stated, constitute no cause of action. Rhodes v. Hutchins, 10 Colo. 258.

A court is not authorized to stay the execution of a judgment rendered upon default, upon the ground of an infirmity in the judgment by reason of a defective complaint, as the remedy of the party against whom the judgment is rendered in such case is by appeal. Edwards v. Hellings, 103 Cal. 204. See generally article STAY OF PROCEEDINGS.

Collateral Attack. — A judgment cannot be collaterally attacked on the ground that the petition did not state a cause of action. Marion County v. Welch, 40 Kan. 767; Head v. Daniels, 38 Kan. 1.

Making New Parties Defendant — Amending Complaint. — Where a complaint is filed against a defendant, and afterwards other defendants are brought in, the complaint must be amended or another complaint filed as to them, unless they waive it by answering to the original complaint; and a judgment for want of an answer will be irregular if entered when no such new or amended complaint has been filed. Vass v. People's Bldg., etc., Assoc., 91 N. Car. 55.

The Omission of a Plaintiff's Christian Name in a complaint will not render the judgment void for uncertainty. Boyd v. Platner, 5 Mont. 226, disapproving a contrary dictum in Wiebold v. Hermann, 2 Mont. 609.

The Objection Is Waived if not taken until after answer, as the defendant thereby recognizes the plaintiff by the name in which the action is brought. Nichols v. Dobbins, 2 Mont. 540.

Where the Verification of a Petition, required by statute, is made by a wrong party, the judgment is not void. Castleman v. Relfe, 50 Mo. 583.

A Default Judgment will not cure a defective declaration in an action on the case. Hoyt v. Macon, 2 Colo. 113.

In cases of judgment by default, the plaintiff is bound to see to the regularity of his judgment, and that his declaration and pleadings are correct at law, so as to entitle him to such judgment upon an inspection of the record. Wood v. Georgia Bank, 1 Fla. 424. See generally article DEFAULTS, vol. 6, p. 1.

Waiver or Loss of Right to Object. — "Having demurred generally below, the plaintiff in error was, it seems, precluded from moving in arrest of judgment for defects in the declaration. Freeman v. Camden, 7 Mo. 298; 2 Tidd's Pr. 740, 918; Rouse v. Peoria County, 7 Ill. 106; Graham's Pr. 641. And having pleaded matter of fact after the overruling of his demurrer, he is precluded now from assigning error upon

Where the Complaint Contains Several Counts or paragraphs, if one of such counts is sufficient to sustain the judgment it will not be reversed because of insufficiency of the other paragraphs.¹ But the rule at common law was that where the verdict was general, and one of the counts was bad, the judgment must be arrested or reversed.²

that decision. We have searched in vain for authority which will relieve from this absurd dilemma. The declaration, whatever it may contain, is, so far as any inquisition of error is concerned, a sealed book. The plaintiff in error, by the inconsiderate course pursued in pleading in the court below, has rendered it impossible for us to entertain the interesting questions which were principally discussed at the bar." Freas v. Engelbrecht, 3 Colo. 377.

An objection to a pleading that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, presented for the first time on appeal, is good only when there is a total failure to allege some matter essential to the relief sought, and is not good when the allegations are simply indefinite or statements of legal conclusion. Laithe v. McDonald, 7 Kan. 254; Moody v. Arthur, 16 Kan. 419. See also Rhodes v. Hutchins, 10 Colo. 258.

The fact that the complaint in a foreclosure suit does not set out, as is usual, the conditions of the mortgage, is a mere irregularity, which is waived if not objected to, and does not render the decree void where the court has jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter. Berry v. King, 15 Oregon 165.

Three Insufficient Petitions — Judgment on Merits. — Missouri Rev. Stat. (1889), § 2068, providing that when three petitions have been adjudged insufficient, judgment shall be rendered for treble costs, applies to a will contest proceeding, but authorizes judgment only for such costs, and not a judgment on the merits. Gordon v. Burris, 125 Mo. 39.

See also Wisner v. Rohnert, 46 La. Ann. 1234. See generally article COUNTS, PARAGRAPHS, AND SEPARATE STATEMENTS, vol. 5, p. 302.

A judgment cannot be arrested for bad counts in the declaration if there is any good count in it. Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, 51 Ill. App. 512, affirmed in 151 Ill. 472.

If all the counts disclose a good cause of action, but it results from the evidence that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover on some of them, a general verdict and judgment are good. Stuart v. Blum, 28 Pa. St. 225.

But One Recovery Can Be Had where the same cause of action is set out in the different counts in the complaint. Spurlock v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 93 Mo. 530. Compare Swift v. Applebone, 23 Mich. 252, where upon a construction of the complaint it was held that the several counts were not for the same cause of action.

In Mississippi this rule of the common law has been changed by a statute providing that where there are several counts, one of which is faulty, and entire damages are given, the verdict shall be good. Scott v. Peebles, 2 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 546.

What Record Must Show on Appeal. —

If a complaint contains two paragraphs, one of which is fatally defective, and a demurrer to the defective paragraph is overruled and an exception saved, a judgment for the plaintiff must be reversed on appeal, where the record does not show upon which paragraph it was rendered. Cook v. Hopkins, 66 Ind. 208; Evansville, etc., Steam Packet Co. v. Wildman, 63 Ind. 370.

c. ISSUES. — The pleadings in a cause must evolve an issue of law or fact before a judgment can be rendered; ¹ and a judgment rendered without issue joined is at least erroneous, if not void. ²

6. Verdict or Findings. — The issues raised by the pleadings, whether of law or fact, must be determined in favor of one party or the other before judgment can be entered. In other words, there must be either findings by the court ³ or the verdict of a

Thus it is irregular to render final judgment against a defendant while the plea remains unanswered; but by going to trial the defendant waives the objection. Robinson v. Brown, 82 Ill. 279. Compare Richeson v. Ryan, 15 Ill. 13; Bunker v. Green, 48 Ill. 243.

A judgment for the plaintiff must be rendered either upon plea, default, or nihil dicit. Boardman v. Stewart, 1 Root (Conn.) 474.

In Doyle v. Smith, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 15, it was distinctly held that a judgment without issue joined was erroneous, but not void. But in several Mississippi cases it is said that judgments without issue joined are nullities. See Porterfield v. Butler, 47 Miss. 165; Armstrong v. Barton, 42 Miss. 506; Steele v. Palmer, 41 Miss. 88. Mr. Freeman, in his work on judgments, argues with much reason that such judgments are voidable, but not void. Freeman on Judgments, § 135 a. Mr. Black, in his work on judgments, intimates a contrary view. Black on Judgments, § 184.

Similiter. — The omission to enter the similiter is informal and not error. Adams v. Bradshaw, Hard. (Ky.) 564.

Immaterial Issue. — A judgment for the defendant on an affirmative plea where the issue is immaterial cannot be sustained. Stucker v. Miller, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 236.

If the issue joined to the court be immaterial, judgment may be given according to the right of the cause on the whole record, in view of what has been alleged on the one side and not denied on the other. Barber v. Gordon, 2 Root (Conn.) 97. See also Osborne v. Johnson, 35 Minn. 300, wherein the complaint stated no cause of action, and the answer stated no counterclaim, and neither party introduced any evidence, and it was held that the action should have been dismissed with costs, but that a judgment for the defendant for nominal damages on the counterclaim attempted to be set up was harmless error.

Agreed Case. — Cases are often submitted to the court upon an agreed statement of facts, and without any other pleading than the declaration. Issues are seldom or never framed in such submissions, except so far as they arise out of the statement of the case. Judgments so rendered are perfectly valid and may be pleaded in bar of a new action for the same cause. Derby v. Jacques, 1 Cliff. (U. S.) 433.

3. Findings Necessary — California. — McKeon v. McDermott, 22 Cal. 667; Mace v. O'Reilly, 70 Cal. 231.

Oregon. — Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Pope, 19 Oregon 35.

Wisconsin. — Stahl v. Gotzenberger, 45 Wis. 121.

In Texas, under Hart's Dig., art. 782, the failure of the court to make out and incorporate with the record of the case the statement of the facts proved therein constitutes reversible error. Pierpont v. Pierpont, 19 Tex. 227; Chrisman v. Miller, 15 Tex. 159.

jury,¹ and a judgment rendered without either verdict or findings is fatally erroneous,² though not absolutely void.³ A finding by the court has the same effect as the verdict of a jury,⁴ and therefore findings are unnecessary where there is a verdict.⁵

7. Determination of All Issues. — A judgment without a trial and determination of all the issues properly raised is erroneous.⁶

Vacating Judgment. — Where the term of office of the judge who tried the case expires after an order for judgment has been entered, but before the findings have been filed, no valid judgment can be entered in the action without a new trial being had, unless agreed findings are filed or waived by both sides. If no agreed findings are filed or waived, a judgment entered in conformity with the order after the expiration of the term of office of the trial judge may be set aside for want of findings on the motion of the party in whose favor the judgment is entered, without notice to the opposite party, notwithstanding the latter offers to waive findings, or to have them made by the successor of the judge who tried the case, and tenders to the prevailing party the amount of the judgment. Such a motion may be made after the expiration of six months from the date of the order for judgment, and after the termination of the session of the court at which it was made. Mace v. O'Reilly, 70 Cal. 231.

Immaterial Findings. — The decree is not necessarily erroneous because predicated on a finding in which some matter is inserted which is immaterial. Treat v. Richardson, 47 Conn. 588.

1. Haxton v. McClaren, 132 Ind. 235.

Where issue of fact has been joined, a verdict is essential to a judgment, and if the record does not properly show a verdict, the judgment will be erroneous. Gray v. Thomas, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 111.

A judgment rendered in an action triable by jury, which was not waived, is invalid, where the court directed a verdict but upon the jury being polled two of the jurors refused to follow the directions of the court, since there was no verdict upon which to predicate a judgment. Bowman v. Wheaton, 2 Kan. App. 581. See generally article DIRECTING VERDICT, vol. 6, p. 667.

Judgment on Void Verdict. — A judgment purporting to be founded on a verdict may be good although the verdict is void, provided it is a case where the law requires no verdict. Lockett v. Usry, 28 Ga. 345.

Informal Issue. — It is error to render judgment against a defendant without trying the issue, where he has a plea filed and an issue formed thereon, though the issue be informal, if it be not immaterial. Thomas v. Commonwealth Bank, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 666.

And it is a general rule that the verdict, findings, and judgment must be as broad as the issues and must respond to all the issues.¹ Accordingly, it is error to enter a judgment against a defendant without disposing of all of his pleas,² unless the determination of the issue upon which the judgment is based is necessarily decisive of the whole case.³ So where there are several defendants the verdict and judgment should embrace and dispose of the case as to all.⁴ So also a plea of

A judgment in ejectment is not vitiated because it contains no direction as to the count for mesne profits claimed in the declaration. "The plaintiff has either waived that or may come in yet and ask for that judgment. So far as it goes, the judgment is correct." Anderson v. Tinney, 5 Mackey (D. C.) 335.

Objection Not Raised Below. — When no objection is made to the form and character of a judgment when announced, nor any motion made after the entry of judgment to correct it or set it aside, error for failure to embrace all the issues is not available on appeal. Miles v. Buchanan, 36 Ind. 490.

Where the general issue and infancy are both pleaded, a judgment for the plaintiff on a verdict on the general issue alone is erroneous, Bay v. Gunn, 1 Den. (N. 3. Where nil debet and nul tiel record are both pleaded, a finding as to the former involves a finding on the latter, and therefore mere silence as to the plea of nul tiel record is not error. Swank v. State, 3 Ohio St. 429.

When the defendant's plea goes to bar the action, if the plaintiff demurs to it, and the demurrer is determined in favor of the plea, judgment of nil capiat should be entered, notwithstanding there may be also one or more issues of fact; because, upon the whole, it appears that the plaintiff had no cause of action. Clearwater v. Meredith, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 25.

set-off,¹ or the issues raised by a cross-bill,² or by demurrers to pleadings,³ must be disposed of before or at the rendition of judgment.

A Failure to Pass upon a Motion, however, is immaterial, as the entry of judgment is in effect a final disposition of motions previously filed.⁴ lower court. Duncan v. Scott County, 64 Miss. 38.

A judgment is not erroneous which omits to dispose of the claims of a party who, as shown by the pleadings, has no interest in the proceedings. Miller v. Rogers, 49 Tex. 398.

1. Sientes v. Odier, 17 La. Ann. 153.

But the judgment need not show specifically the disposition of the defendant's set-off. "It is urged that the judgment should show specifically what disposition was made of appellant's set-offs. This is not the function of a judgment. If a party to a suit wishes the court, trying the issues without a jury, to show what evidence is acted upon and what disregarded, or to disclose the factors which enter into the finding or judgment, he may do so by properly framed propositions of law, which the court is required to mark 'held' or 'refused.' The judgment itself should give the answer to the problem, and not the process by which the answer has been obtained." Coats v. Barrett, 49 Ill. App. 275.

A failure to decide specifically on a counterclaim, where it is practically decided, is no error. Essex v. Day, 52 Conn. 499.

It is irregular to enter judgment against a defendant on whose behalf a demurrer is on file without disposing of the demurrer, and a judgment so entered will be reversed on appeal. Hestres v. Clements, 21 Cal. 425.

Where a demurrer is filed to the defendant's answer it is irregular for the plaintiff to take judgment before some disposition is made of the demurrer. And where the record on appeal dis-closes this state of facts, and nothing more from which an abandonment of the demurrer can be inferred, the judgment will be reversed. Huse v. Moore, 20 Cal. 115.

Where the general issue and two special pleas were pleaded, and the plaintiff joined issue on the first and demurred to the special pleas, and there were a verdict and judgment generally for the plaintiff, the record not showing a disposition of the demurrer, the High Court of Errors and Appeals of Mississippi, being of the opinion that the special pleas set out a good defense in bar, gave final judgment for the defendant. *Bailey v. Under a complaint for services rendered, alleging in one count a contract for a year at a fixed price per month, and claiming in another count the reasonable value of the services, it is error to find the value of the work as though there were no contract, and then deduct damages as though a contract had been made and broken by plaintiff. *Feith v. Wisconsin. — Blewett v. Gaynor, 77 Wis. 378.

A judgment in an action is founded upon the facts admitted by the pleadings and those found by the court, jury, or referee, taken together, and it is not necessary that either alone should be sufficient to sustain the judgment. Brookover v. Esterly, 12 Kan. 153.

Judgment Against Weight of Evidence.

— When the law and facts of an ordinary action are submitted to the court without a jury, the judgment cannot be set aside on the ground that it is contrary to the weight of evidence for any less reason than would authorize the setting aside of the verdict of a jury. Mulholland v. Samuels, 8 Bush (Ky.) 63; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Woolley, 12 Bush (Ky.) 451; Fraley v. Peters, 12 Bush (Ky.) 469.

The judgment will not ordinarily be set aside as being against the weight of the evidence where it is supported by any competent evidence. See article APPEALS, vol. 2, p. 391.

But where a plaintiff proves a prima facie case, and there is no evidence on the part of the defendant rebutting such prima facie case, a judgment in favor of the defendant is erroneous as being against the evidence. Root v. Topeka Water Supply Co., 46 Kan. 183.

Incompetent Evidence in Support of. —

On a motion by a principal against his deputy and securities for a failure to account for part of the revenue, an objection to evidence as incompetent to authorize judgment cannot vitiate the judgment if there is sufficient evidence to support it. Johnson v. Thompson, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 294.

Failure of Proof — Nonsuit or Judgment on Merits. — A dismissal of the complaint at the close of the plaintiff's case, in a common-law action, for failure of proof, is not a dismissal upon the merits, and should not be so stated in the clerk's minutes or in the judgment. In such actions there is no decision upon the merits unless the questions are submitted to the jury or a verdict is directed by the court. Man-nion v. Broadway, etc., R. Co., 18 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 40.

A judgment for the defendants upon the merits is erroneous where the plaintiffs produced no evidence under their complaint, and no evidence in relation thereto is offered by the defendants, and there are no findings by the jury. Gage v. Allen, 89 Wis. 98.

plaint does not state a cause of action, a judgment for the plaintiff cannot be sustained even though the allegations of the complaint be found true.¹

Amending Pleadings to Conform to Proof. — At the present day, in the case of a mere variance between the pleadings and the proof, a party would ordinarily be permitted to amend his pleading so as to conform to the proofs, unless such amendment would operate as a surprise upon the other party or would amount to setting up an entirely different cause of action from that sued upon.²

Extent of Rule. — This rule is of universal application, and whether the action or suit be at law, in equity, or under the code, the judgment must be secundum allegata et probata.³

Complaint Must State Cause of Action. — No recovery can be had on a complaint which does not state a substantial cause of action, although no demurrer is taken thereto, St. Clair County v. Smith, 112 Ala. 347; or even though a demurrer to the petition has been overruled and the defendant has answered over denying the allegations, Brown v. Cunningham, 82 Iowa 512.

In Reynolds v. Harris, 9 Cal. 338, the court did not deem it necessary to decide whether, in all cases where a judgment is based upon a complaint which does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, the judgment itself may be treated as an absolute nullity.

A judgment that the defendant is the owner in fee simple of all the land set forth in the complaint is unauthorized upon the dismissal of a complaint because it does not state a cause of action. Leinenweber v. Brown, 24 Oregon 553.

Reason for Rule. — In Taylor v. Keeler, 50 Conn. 346, the court said: "It is an elementary rule of pleading that the plaintiff must, in his declaration, give the defendant fair notice of what he claims. * * * Another reason why such certainty as this rule prescribes is required as to the declaration and the judgment is that the defendant may plead the judgment in bar to any subsequent suit for the same injury." "While the Code Is Liberal in disregarding technical defects and omissions in pleadings, and in allowing amendments, it does not permit a cause of action to be changed, either because the plaintiff fails to prove the facts necessary to sustain it or because he has mistaken his remedy and the force and effect of the allegations of his complaint." *Barnes v. (2) Limiting Relief to That Sought by Pleadings — (a) Rule in Absence of Statute. — In the absence of statute it is a general rule that the relief to be awarded by a judgment is limited to that sought by the pleadings.¹

Recovery May Be Less than Demand. — This rule, however, does not deprive a party of his right to any relief merely because he has sought more than he is entitled to, and judgment for less relief than demanded may be given when sustained by the pleadings and proof.²

(b) Statutory Changes. — In many states it is provided by statute that where the defendant appears and answers the plaintiff shall not be confined to the relief demanded, but that where there is no answer the relief granted to the plaintiff cannot exceed that demanded in the complaint.

Where Answer Is Filed. — The effect of such a statute is merely to relieve the plaintiff from any technical objection that he has not prayed for the precise relief to which, on the trial, he may seem entitled, and the relief to be granted must still conform to and be consistent with the case made by the complaint.¹

On Default. — Where, however, the defendant does not answer, but makes default, the relief granted to the plaintiff cannot exceed that which he has demanded and that necessarily incident thereto.²

Y. 108, it was held, in an action for a specified sum of money, claimed to be payable by contract, that where a jury trial is waived the plaintiff may, on prevailing at the trial of issues raised by the answer, have an interlocutory judgment for an accounting.

In Murtha v. Curley, 12 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Ct. App.) 12, it was held that one suing in equity may, after answer, have a money judgment for the amount due if an accounting is found necessary.

Right to Amend. — In Jenks v. Van Brunt, 6 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 158, it is said that where the verdict is slightly in excess of the amount claimed, the trial court may, after verdict, allow the complaint to be amended so as to support the verdict. But such amendment will not be allowed on appeal where the point was not raised in the lower court. The plaintiff will, however, be allowed on appeal in such case to remit the excess and thus save the verdict as for the amount claimed in his pleading.

In Carr v. Sterling, 114 N. Y. 558, it is said that even as against a defendant who has failed to answer, an amendment by leave, adding a new cause of action or increasing the amount claimed, does not necessarily avoid the judgment. To the same effect is Peck v. New York, etc., R. Co., 85 N. Y. 246. This dictum is criticised in a note to Reynolds v. Stockton, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (U. S. Supreme Ct.) 112, as follows: "But it is hard to reconcile this with the provision of the first clause of section 1207, the object of which is to protect defendant in making default where he is willing to allow without contest a judgment not more favorable than that demanded in the complaint. If the dictum above referred to is sound, a defendant makes default at his peril of the court subsequently increasing the burden of relief without notice to him; and a defendant is therefore not safe in any case, unless he appears formally so as to have notice of any unfavorable amendment."

United States. — Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 27 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 112.

Reason and Object of Rule. — "This is not a mere statutory restriction, but is a general principle, fundamental to the administration of justice, that the complaint must advise the defendant clearly of what is claimed. If he chooses, he may waive answering and appear on the application for judgment, and there may object that the judgment proposed is more burdensome to him than that claimed in the complaint. It is not alone the case made, but also the judgment asked for, that controls. Porter v. Lent, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 671, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 115; Simonson v. Blake, 12 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 331, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 484. If the defendant fails to answer, his rights are protected by the statute. Hall v. Hall, 38 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 97." Professional opinion given by Austin Abbott, in 20 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 434, note.

In Peck v. New York, etc., R. Co., 85 N. Y. 246, it was held that this statute was intended for the protection of defendants who suffered default; that a bondholder for whose benefit a trustee prosecuted a foreclosure suit could not invoke the section in an attack upon the judgment, and that he could not demand as a matter of right to have the judgment vacated as illegal.

Illustrations. — In Olcott v. Kohlsaat, (Supreme Ct.) 27 N. Y. St. Rep. 914, it was held that on default in an action by a pledgee to foreclose the right of redemption, and have the security sold, and a judgment for a deficiency, if the right to foreclosure and sale is not established, the plaintiff cannot take a personal judgment for the debt.

In Hurd v. Leavenworth, 1 Code Rep. N. S. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 278, the complaint asked to have notes to the amount of $5,000 delivered up and canceled, and to have a judgment for $2,000. It was held that a judgment by default for $7,000 exceeded the relief sought.

A judgment for a deficiency in a foreclosure suit where the complaint merely asked for a sale is in excess of the relief sought and should be vacated on motion. Simonson v. Blake, 12 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 331, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 484. In this case it was further held that such a judgment is not merely irregular, but is void or voidable as unauthorized, and the right to move to have it vacated is not limited to one year. Compare Jones v. Jones, 78 Wis. 446; Peck v. New York, etc., R. Co., 85 N. Y. 246, wherein the court said: "It may have been improper to allow the plaintiff, against the allegations in his complaint, to prove the large amount of bonds. But that was at most a mere irregularity. The action was properly commenced. The court had jurisdiction, and it could have allowed the complaint in respect to such allegations to have been amended ex parte before or after judgment without violating any provision of the code."

under consideration.¹ But a contrary conclusion has been reached in Wisconsin.²

(c) Under Code and in Equity. — Independently of the statute just considered, it is a general rule in equity and under the codes that any relief fairly within the issues formed by the pleadings and justified by the evidence may be given, regardless of the specific relief asked or the form of the action.³

Correction on Motion in Trial Court. —

A judgment granting relief not demanded where the defendant has not answered, or granting relief not authorized by the findings, may be corrected by a motion made to the trial court. Olcott v. Kohlsaat, (Supreme Ct.) 27 N. Y. St. Rep. 914, 8 N. Y. Supp. 117 [citing De Lavallette v. Wendt, 75 N. Y. 579; Ladd v. Stevenson, 112 N. Y. 326; Leonard v. Columbia Steam Nav. Co., 84 N. Y. 48; People v. Goff, 52 N. Y. 434; Cagger v. Lansing, 64 N. Y. 417; Cole v. Tyler, 65 N. Y. 77; Hatch v. Central Nat. Bank, 78 N. Y. 487; Dinsmore v. Adams, 48 How. Pr. (N. Y. Full Faith and Credit. — A judgment rendered in the absence of the defendant, and not responsive to the issues presented by the pleadings, is not entitled to full faith and credit in a sister state. Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 112.

(a) Affirmative Relief to Defendant. — It is a general rule that where the answer prays for no affirmative relief the defendant can have none,¹ and a judgment granting such relief is erroneous because not in conformity to the issues raised by the pleadings.² An affirmative judgment for the defendant is proper, however, where justified by the pleadings and proof.³

If the defendants' answer sets up what is merely a defense, and they succeed, and are entitled to have the complaint dismissed with costs, the court has no power to render any other judgment; and a judgment giving them affirmative relief on the evidence is wrong. Wright v. Delafield, 25 N. Y. 266.

Where New Parties Are Necessary. — The provision of section 274 of the code, that the judgment "may grant to the defendant any affirmative relief to which he may be entitled," does not apply where a complete determination of the controversy presented by the answer, and upon which the relief is demanded, cannot be had without the presence of other parties, who can only be properly brought in by the defendant by a cross-action. Smith v. Howard, 20 How. Pr. (Buffalo Super. Ct.) 151.

Illustrations of Judgments Not Responsive.—A judgment that a plea in abatement be "overruled" does not answer the issue. Gates v. Nobles, 1 Root (Conn.) 344.

"Without amendment of the pleadings, a judgment for the recovery of the possession of real estate, rendered in an action whose pleadings disclose only a claim for the possession of personal property, cannot be sustained although personal service was made upon the defendant. The invalidity of the judgment depends upon the fact that it is in no manner responsive to the issues tendered by the pleadings. This idea underlies all litigation. Its emphatic language is that a judgment, to be conclusive upon the parties to the litigation, must be responsive to the matters controverted." Reynolds v. Stockton, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (U. S. Supreme Ct.) 123.

Judgment Void. — But many cases go even further, and hold that judgments based upon issues not made by the pleadings are coram non judice and void,¹ and subject to be set aside or dis-

In an action by a ward against his guardian, where the only relief prayed was the discharge and removal of the defendant from his trust as guardian, and there was no averment nor finding that the guardian had any money for which he should account, an order removing the guardian and requiring him to report immediately and pay over assets belonging to the ward is beyond the issues made and is erroneous. *Hancock v. A judgment determining the relation between parties to be that of principal and surety, where no such issue had been formed, is void. Knopf v. Morell, 111 Ind. 570.

If the judgment decrees the existence of facts not within any issues made or tendered by the pleadings, and then pronounces the judgment of the court upon such facts, such part of the judgment is superfluous and void. Gregory v. Nelson, 41 Cal. 278.

Partial Invalidity. — A judgment of another state adjudicating a matter not presented by the pleading or within the issue may be held invalid as to such adjudication, but valid as to other matters which the judgment record shows upon its face to be easily and naturally regarded even in a collateral proceeding.¹

Reason for Rule. — These cases proceed upon the theory that a court has no jurisdiction to pass upon questions not submitted to it by the parties for decision.²

separable and within the issue. Belford v. Woodward, 158 Ill. 122.

Proceedings on the Foot of a Decree. — In an action by policy holders in which the complaint was framed to reach a fund deposited in the hands of the superintendent of insurance by an insurance company which had since become insolvent, and to have it distributed, a judgment was entered, after answer, making a final disposition of the fund in partial payment of the claims presented, and reserving leave to any party to apply for further directions on the foot of the decree, and directing also that the question of the indebtedness of the receiver of another company, which had reinsured the risks of the former, be reserved. It was held that a further decree, made on application for further directions, that such receiver pay a specified sum, was invalid, because not responsive to the issues on the pleadings. Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 112. This is a leading case, wherein a judgment for one million dollars was held void because of this defect.

The judgment of a court upon a subject of litigation within its jurisdiction, but not brought before it by any statement or claim of the parties, is null and void, and may be collaterally impeached. Thus an action to sell lands conveyed by a debtor to his wife through a third person, alleging that the conveyance was on consideration that the debtor's debts should be paid, which had not been done, will not sustain a judgment that the land should be sold as having been conveyed in fraud of creditors. Spoors v. Coen, 44 Ohio St. 497.

2. Jurisdiction Limited to Matters Submitted. — "In other words, 'in order to the validity of a judgment, the court must have jurisdiction of the persons, of the subject-matter, and of the particular question which it assumes to decide.' 'Neither can it go beyond the issues and pass upon a matter which the parties neither submitted nor intended to submit for its determination.' " Newman v. Bullock, 23 Colo. 222.

"Neither reason nor authority lends any support to the view that because suitors have submitted certain designated matters to the consideration of a court, the tribunal is thereby authorized to determine any other matter in which the parties may be interested, whether it be involved in the pending litigation or not. 'Persons by becoming suitors do not place themselves for all purposes under the control of the court, and it is only over those particular interests which they choose to draw in question that a power of judicial decision arises.' " McFadden v. Ross, 108 Ind. 516.

A judgment of a court upon a subject within its general jurisdiction, but which is not brought before it by any statement or claim of the parties, and is foreign to the issues submitted for its determination, is a nullity. Lincoln Nat. Bank v. Virgin, 36 Neb. 735.

Argument in Support of Rule — Leading Case. — "If the fact of a judgment rendered in a court of one state does not preclude inquiry in the courts of another, as to the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment over the person or the subject-matter, it certainly also does not preclude inquiry as to whether the judgment so rendered was so far responsive to the issues tendered by the pleadings as to be a proper exercise of jurisdiction on the part of the court rendering it. Take an extreme case. Given a court of general jurisdiction, over actions in ejectment as well as those in replevin; a complaint in replevin for the possession of certain specific property, personal service upon the defendant, appearance and answer denying title; could (there being no subsequent appearance of the defendant and no amendment of the complaint) a judgment thereafter rendered in such action for the recovery of the possession of certain real estate be upheld? Surely not; even in the courts of the same state. If not there, the constitutional provision quoted gives no greater force to the same record in another state." Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 112, in which case the court continued, quoting Munday v. Vail, 34 N. J. L. 418: "'The inquiry is, had the court jurisdiction to the extent claimed? Jurisdiction may be defined to be the right to adjudicate concerning the subject-matter in the given case. To constitute this there are three essentials: First, the court must have cognizance of the class of cases to which the one to be adjudged belongs; second, the proper parties must be present; and, third, the point decided must be, in substance and effect, within the issue. That a court cannot go out of its appointed sphere, and that its action is void with respect to persons who are strangers to its proceedings, are propositions established by a multitude of authorities. A defect in a judgment arising from the fact that the matter decided was not embraced within the issue has not, it would seem, received much judicial consideration. And yet I cannot doubt that, upon general principles, such a defect must avoid a judgment. It is impossible to concede that because A and B are parties to a suit that a court can decide any matter in which they are interested, whether such matter be involved in the pending litigation or not. Persons by becoming suitors do not place themselves for all purposes under the control of the court, and it is only over these particular interests which they choose to draw in question that a power of judicial decision arises. * * * For the same doctrine that in order to make a decision conclusive not only the proper parties must be present, but that the court must act upon the property according to the rights that appear upon the record, I refer to the authority of Lord Redesdale (Gifford v. Hort, 1 Sch. & Lef. 386, 408; see also Gore v. Stacpoole, 1 Dow 18; Colclough v.

Sterum, 3 Bligh 186).' Reference is made in the opinion to the case of Corwithe v. Griffing, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 9, in respect to which the court said: 'Commissioners in partition, in their distribution, embraced land other than that contained in the petition, and the court confirmed their report, and it was held that such judgment was a nullity, as the jurisdiction was confined to the subject-matter set forth and described in the petition. In this case the court had jurisdiction in cases of partition, and the decision was upon the ground that the decree was void, as it was aside from the issue which the proceedings presented.' * * * In the case of Smith v. Ontario, 18 Blatchf. (U. S.) 457, Circuit Judge Wallace observed that 'the matter in issue' has been defined in a case of leading authority, as 'that matter upon which the plaintiff proceeds by his action, and which the defendant controverts by his pleading. King v. Chase, 15 N. H. 9.' But without multiplying authorities, the proposition suggested by those referred to, and which we affirm, is that in order to give a judgment, rendered by even a court of general jurisdiction, the merit and finality of an adjudication between the parties, it must, with the limitations heretofore stated, be responsive to the issues tendered by the pleadings. In other words, that when a complaint tenders one cause of action and in that suit service on or appearance of the defendant is made, a subsequent judgment therein, rendered in the absence of the defendant, upon another and different cause of action than that stated in the complaint, is without binding force within the courts of the same state; and, of course, notwithstanding the constitutional provision heretofore quoted, has no better standing in the courts of another state."

1. Fulton v. Hanlow, 20 Cal. 450; Rice v. Rice, 50 Mich. 448.

"Whatever may be the rule where substantial amendments to the complaint are permitted and made, and the defendant responds thereto, or where it appears that he takes actual part in the litigation of the matters determined, the rule is universal that where he appears and responds only to the complaint as filed, and no amendment is made thereto, the judgment is con-

(c) Issues Broadened by Consent. — While parties to an action have a right to limit the issues to be tried to those made by the pleadings, they are not bound to do so, and may by mutual consent try any other issues. This consent may be either express or implied, and in either case the judgment will be upheld.¹ But clusive only so far as it determines matters which by the pleadings are put in issue. And this rule, which determines the conclusiveness of a judgment rendered in one court of a state as to all subsequent inquiries in the courts of the same state, enters into and limits the constitutional provision quoted as to the full faith and credit which must be given in one state to judgments rendered in the courts of another state." Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 112.

"The proposition that the judgment of a court having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter is conclusive has become a settled maxim of the law. This, however, means nothing more than that such judgment is conclusive upon all questions which were or might have been litigated and determined within the issues before the court." McFadden v. Ross, 108 Ind. 512.

Issues in Replevin. — "Primarily, the action of replevin is possessory in its character, and unless the title to property is distinctly put in issue, a judgment in such action determines nothing beyond the right of possession." McFadden v. Ross, 108 Ind. 517 [citing Entsminger v. Jackson, 73 Ind. 144; Kramer v. Matthews, 68 Ind. 172; Highnote v. White, 67 Ind. 596; Hoke v. Applegate, 92 Ind. 570; Van Gorder v. Smith, 99 Ind. 404; Wells on Replevin, § 39].

A Judgment Responsive to the Issues is res judicata. — Jonathan Mills Mfg. Co. v. Whitehurst, 72 Fed. Rep. 496, 37 U. S. App. 664; Trimmier v. Thomson, 19 S. Car. 253. See also the title Res Judicata, Am. and Eng. Encyc. of Law.

1. "The General Rule is that the issuable facts or matters upon which the plaintiff's case proceeded determine what was in issue, unless it appears from an examination of all the pleadings in a given case that other matters were brought forward and thus became necessarily involved and determined in the suit." McFadden v. Ross, 108 Ind. 517 [citing Goble v. Dillon, 86 Ind. 327, 44 Am. Rep. 308; Griffin v. Wallace, 66 Ind. 410; Davis v. Brown, 94 U. S. 423; Russell v. Place, 94 U. S. 606; Cromwell v. Sac County, 94 U. S. 351].

Where the matter determined by the judgment was not in fact put in issue by the pleadings, but it is nevertheless apparent from the record that the defeated party was present at the trial and actually litigated that matter, the appellate court will consider as done that which ought to have been done, and the amendment which ought to have been made to conform the pleadings to the evidence will be treated as having been made. Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 112.

"In the absence of amended pleading or of stipulation, the court of review must infer the consent to try issues from the evidence offered upon the one side and the absence of objections or the character of the objections, if any are made, upon the other side." Frear v. Sweet, 118 N. Y. 458 [citing Marston v. Gould, 69 N. Y. 220; Platner v. Platner, 78 N. Y. 95; Walsh v. Washington Marine Ins. Co., 32 N. Y. 443].

In Newman v. Bullock, 23 Colo. 225, it was held, following Reynolds v. Stockton, 140 U. S. 254, 27 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 112, that where it appears that the parties had an opportunity to be heard, and in fact were heard, upon the question determined, and treated such question as an issue in the case and as though it were in the pleadings, the judgment is valid.

A Judgment by Agreement will bind those by whose agreement it is entered, although the pleadings would not in a contested case support the judgment. Indiana, etc., R. Co. v. Bird, 116 Ind. 217; Hutts v. Martin, 134 Ind. 592; Lyon v. Roy, 54 Ind. 300; Fletcher v. Holmes, 25 Ind. 458; Hudson v. Allison, 54 Ind. 215; Wilson v. Panne, 1 Kan. App. 721. Compare Campbell v. Consalus, 25 N. Y. 616, wherein it is said: "Even an agreement between the parties that matters foreign to the pleadings shall be given in evidence and decided by the verdict of a jury will not, it seems, enlarge the operation of a judgment entered on such verdict by way of estoppel." See also Wolfe mere stipulations as to the facts of a case, or the evidence of facts, cannot make a case broader than it appears by the allegations of the pleadings, and they do not entitle a party to any relief beyond that to which the averments entitle him.¹ So an agreement that a pleading shall be amended in a certain particular does not alter the issues until the amendment is in fact made.²

b. APPLICATIONS OF RULES—(1) General Illustrations.—The rule that judgments must conform to the pleadings and proof finds numerous applications.³ Thus a judgment is void for inconsistency where it grants relief both to the plaintiff and to the defendant on inconsistent grounds.⁴

All or Nothing.—So where the plaintiff is entitled to the entire amount sued for, or else to nothing at all, a judgment for a part only is erroneous.⁵

Immaterial Variance Between Pleadings and Proof.—Where the allegation in the complaint in an action for slander of title is that the plaintiff was "in the act of selling," and the proofs and finding show that the plaintiff was "in the act of trading," the variance is immaterial. May v. Anderson, 14 Ind. App. 251.

A finding that a personal injury was caused by the negligent backing of a car after a collision, and not by a second collision, is not such a variance from a charge of negligence in the petition ascribing the injury to the second collision as to prevent judgment thereon, where the evidence upon which such finding was based was adduced by the defendant, and the plaintiff asked to amend his petition to conform to the proof, and the motion was denied as unnecessary. Cincinnati St. R. Co. v. Whitcomb, 66 Fed. Rep. 915.

Immaterial Variance Between Pleadings and Judgment.—An immaterial variance between the complaint and judgment as to the name of the defendant does not avoid the judgment. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. State, 55 Ark. 200. See also Bole v. Sands, etc., Lumber Co., 77 Mich. 239; Ex p. Ah Men, 77 Cal. 198.

A recital in a judgment giving a different date for a note and mortgage sued on from that alleged in the petition is not ground for reversal, in the absence of a statement of facts or bill of exceptions supporting the alleged error. Hague v. Jackson, 71 Tex. 761.

Where the damages laid in the declaration were expressed in pounds and the judgment was for dollars, the variance was held immaterial. Blanton v. Luckett, Sneed (Ky.) 307.

It is no cause for arresting judgment that the jury found the damages in pounds when the damages in the declaration were alleged in dollars. Butts v. Shreve, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 40.

See generally article VARIANCES.

4. A Judgment Is Void for Inconsistency which allows the plaintiff compensation for performing a contract with the defendant, and allows the defendant a counterclaim based on the plaintiff's failure to perform the contract. King v. Brockschmidt, 3 Mo. App. 571.

Where a Counterclaim Is the Only Defense set up, a judgment for the defendant must necessarily allow the counterclaim.¹

A Judgment for a Defendant Who Fails to Answer a complaint stating a cause of action is erroneous, because the default admits the case alleged.²

Where There Are Several Good Pleas in bar to the whole cause of action, the plaintiff cannot recover unless he succeeds on all the issues.³

A Judgment Affecting the Title to Property Not Described in the pleadings is at least erroneous,⁴ and such judgments have been held to be absolutely void and open to collateral attack.⁵

Reason for Rule. — In Metz v. Campbell Printing Press, etc., Co., 11 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 284, the action was for money had and received on foreclosure of a chattel mortgage held by the defendant on the plaintiff's chattels. The plaintiff claimed to recover $202.77, being the difference between the amount deducted for expenses of the sale and five per cent. of the proceeds, which the plaintiff alleged had been agreed upon as the limit of such expense. The making of such agreement was the only question litigated and submitted to the jury, who returned a verdict for the plaintiff for ninety-one dollars. It was held that such verdict and the judgment entered thereon were not secundum allegata et probata. The court said: "Obviously, the verdict and judgment transcend the rule that the recovery must be secundum allegata et probata. Fuld v. Kahn, 4 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 600, 54 N. Y. St. Rep. 134; Pionier v. Alexander, 7 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 709. Upon the pleadings and the evidence the verdict should have been either for the plaintiff, in the amount claimed, or for the defendant. The jury might well, upon the conflict of evidence which ensued upon the trial, have found either way; but they could not with consistency find both ways. A verdict which repudiated the alleged agreement, and yet awarded any recovery to the plaintiff, was manifestly unjust to the defendant."

1. Wise v. Rosenblatt, 16 Daly (N. Y.) 496, holding it to be error to give judgment for the defendant without allowing the counterclaim or costs.

2. Bouscaren v. Brown, 40 Neb. 722; Moore v. Johnson, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 694.

A judgment will be erroneous which wholly ignores the allegations of an amended petition which are not contradicted, and therefore must be taken as admitted, especially where they are supported by evidence in the case. Emison v. Walker, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 238, (Ky. 1895) 31 S. W. Rep. 461.

Reply Undisputed. — A final judgment cannot be rendered against a plaintiff while there is one good paragraph of reply, undisputed by demurrer or trial. A failure to demur to a paragraph concedes that it is a good defense to the answer. Silvers v. Junction R. Co., 43 Ind. 435; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Fenton, 52 Ind. 1; New Albany, etc., Plank Road Co. v. Stallcup, 62 Ind. 345; McCloskey v. Indianapolis Manufacturers', etc., Union, 67 Ind. 86; Dorman v. State, 56 Ind. 454.

Where the plaintiff replies a former suit, etc., to the plea of limitation, the defendant rejoins nul tiel record, and issue thereon is found for the defendant, he is entitled to final judgment, and the finding of the jury on other issues is extra-judicial. State Bank v. Sherrill, 12 Ark. 183.

5. Void as to Property Not Described. — Central Sav. Bank v. Carpenter, 97

(2) Parties. — A judgment rendered for or against persons not named as parties in the pleadings is erroneous.¹ So where the declaration shows that a person not a party has an interest in the recovery, a judgment in favor of the plaintiff is improper.²

Actions in Representative Capacity. — Where an individual cause of action is alleged, but the plaintiff describes himself as suing in a representative capacity, for example as executor or administrator, he may nevertheless recover in his individual right upon proof of the individual cause of action alleged,³ and the allegations as to

Tenn. 437, wherein it was held that a decree is coram non judice and void which, under a bill seeking to attach a specific debt or property, subjects to the complainant's claim other assets of his debtor not described or sought to be subjected by the bill. See also Randolph v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 63; Rogers v. Breen, 9 Heisk. (Tenn.) 679; Easley v. Tarkington, 5 Baxt. (Tenn.) 592.

In tax suits the court acquires jurisdiction of the property of the defendants by the filing of the petition and publication of the notice ordered to be made, and no judgment which would not be void and open to collateral attack can be rendered against property different from that described in the petition and order of publication. Milner v. Shipley, 94 Mo. 106.

A Contrary View. — A judgment erroneous for want of issues by the pleadings will be corrected on appeal, but it is not void. The extent of a decree, within the jurisdiction of the court rendering it, will be determined by its terms alone, and it cannot be restricted in a collateral attack by the pleadings, nor can the preliminary proceedings be examined to extend its effect or enlarge its meaning. Where the plaintiff sued to foreclose a mortgage on several tracts of land, including half of a third league survey, and during the progress of the case the parties submitted the matters to arbitrators, who awarded the whole of the third league survey to the plaintiff, and judgment was rendered accordingly, the decree passed the title to the land. But where the plaintiff sues in his individual capacity and the proof shows a right to recover only in a representative capacity, there is a fatal variance. McColl v. Fraser, 40 Hun (N. Y.) 111.

Where the Plaintiff Is Entitled to Recover in Either an Individual or a Representative Capacity, and sues in his individual capacity, he is entitled to recover, although the proof shows that he will be liable to account for such recovery in his representative capacity. Merritt v. Seaman, 6 N. Y. 168; Thomas v. Bennett, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 197; Davis v. Carpenter, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 287.

A plaintiff suing in a representative capacity is entitled to judgment in his favor notwithstanding a defense is established which would have been good had he sued in an individual capacity, as he might have done. Scrantom v. Farmers', etc., Bank, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 527, affirmed in 24 N. Y. 424.

Action on Individual Liability. — In an action against an administrator for failure to pay a claim as ordered by the Probate Court, the suit being based entirely on a personal liability, a judgment against the estate is void. Peckham v. O'Hara, 74 Mich. 287.

his representative character may be rejected as mere descriptio personæ.¹ But where the plaintiff alleges a cause of action accruing to him only in a representative capacity, and sues in such a capacity, proof of a cause of action belonging to him as an individual is a total variance, amounting to a failure of proof, and he cannot recover.²

Where the Pleadings Are Ambiguous as to the capacity in which the plaintiff sues, the theory upon which the case was tried controls the judgment.³

(3) Form of Action. — A judgment must be warranted by the facts and form of the action.⁴ Accordingly, where the declaration is in assumpsit⁵ or in case,⁶ a judgment in debt is erroneous. So where the declaration is in debt, a judgment in assumpsit⁷ or in damages⁸ is erroneous. But by the practice of

In Ducker v. Rapp, 67 N. Y. 464, it was held that where the plaintiffs sued to recover rents as executors, whereas they should have sued as trustees, the same persons being entitled to recover, although in a different capacity, the validity of the judgment was not affected.

Amendment. — In Risley v. Wightman, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 163, it was held that where the plaintiff erroneously describes himself as executor instead of as administrator, the defect is amendable either before or after judgment or on appeal to the general term. 4. Even Upon a Default, a judgment not warranted by the facts and the form of the action should be reversed, as it may be presumed that the defendant did not defend because he knew that he was not liable in the form of action adopted. Gervais v. Powers, 1 Minn. 45.

"Under the statutes of this state and the code practice as modified, an appeal lies from a final judgment by default, which is similar in its character to a decree pro confesso under the practice anterior to the code. Such judgment must conform to the matter of the pleadings of which defendant has notice, the plaintiff not being allowed to take such decree as he can abide by. A judgment by default inconsistent with the case made in the original complaint and conforming to a new case made by an amended and supplemental complaint, filed three months after service of summons upon the defendant, without notice to him, is not authorized by the code practice as modified by statute in this state." State v. Jacksonville, etc., R. Co., 16 Fla. 708 [citing Betton v. Williams, 4 Fla. 11; Freeman v. Timanus, 12 Fla. 393].

6. Lynch v. Freeland, Sneed (Ky.) 269, holding that where the writ and declaration were in case and the verdict and judgment are in debt the judgment will be reversed.

7. Anderson v. Sloan, 1 Colo. 484. Compare Carroll v. Meeks, 3 Port. (Ala.) 226, holding that in debt on a promissory note it is not error to render judgment in assumpsit.

perhaps the majority of states a judgment in damages upon a declaration in debt will be good, the objection being merely technical.¹ So upon a declaration in trespass, a recovery in case has been permitted.²

In Anderson v. Fetzer, 75 Wis. 562, Cassoday, J., said: "It is claimed that the trial court found a balance due the plaintiff on the counterclaim of the defendants, and not upon the plaintiff's cause of action. The complaint was for the proceeds of cedar posts, as stated. The counterclaims were for advances and payments made on account of the ties and fence posts indiscriminately. The trial court found, in effect, that the $900 was advanced upon the ties, and the $700 on ties and posts, and that the proceeds of the ties and posts received by the defendants from the plaintiff amounted, in the aggregate, to $1,773.28, or $173.28 in excess of the moneys so advanced. We cannot hold that the mere form of the issues precluded the plaintiff from recovering the true balance in his favor on account of both ties and posts, since it was considerably less than the amount claimed in the complaint."

Where Special Damages Are Sought to be recovered by the plaintiff they must be alleged. Whitney v. Levon, 34 Neb. 443; Fort Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Measles, 81 Tex. 474. See also article DAMAGES, vol. 5, p. 719.

"It is the Office of the Complaint to state in a clear, succinct, and intelligible manner the plaintiff's cause of action, and to demand judgment upon the same. The plaintiff cannot go to trial and recover upon a cause of action developed by facts stated in the answer, without alleging it himself. He must allege the cause of action in his complaint, and when the facts of the same are put in issue, prove them by competent evidence. He cannot rely upon a cause of action suggested in the pleadings by his adversary." Willis v. Branch, 94 N. Car. 147 [citing Shelton v. Davis, 69 N. Car. 324; Rand v. State Nat. Bank, 77 N. Original and Amended Complaints. — When a complaint is too uncertain, and an amended complaint is filed, it cannot purport to make the first more specific, nor to be an additional paragraph. It is error to render a judgment granting relief in a matter not averred in the latter complaint, though averred in the former. The former is out of the record. Westerman v. Foster, 57 Ind. 408.

Under the Missouri Code a party must recover upon a cause of action stated in his petition, and cannot recover upon a cause of action stated in his reply. Crawford v. Spencer, 36 Mo. App. 78.

awarded to the plaintiff must be within and justified by the case made by the declaration or complaint.¹

Recovery on Cause of Action Alleged. — In other words, a plaintiff cannot set up one cause of action in his complaint and recover upon proof of another and a different cause of action, but he must recover, if at all, upon the cause of action which he has alleged.²

22 Tex. 87; *Eib v. Facts Plead and Proved by the Defendant are available to the plaintiff to rebut a defense, but not as a basis of recovery. Thus a breach of diligence shown by the allegations and evidence of the defendant, although not referred to in the plaintiff's pleadings, may be urged by the plaintiff to defeat the defendant's justification, but not as a basis of recovery. *East Tennessee, etc., R. Illustration. — In Truesdell v. Sarles, 104 N. Y. 164, the rule that no judgment can be given in favor of a plaintiff on grounds not stated in his complaint, nor relief granted for matters not charged, although they may be apparent from some part of the pleadings or evidence, was applied in a creditor's suit to set aside a conveyance as fraudulent and without consideration, and a judgment establishing the defendants' deed as a mortgage for the amount of the consideration paid was reversed. The court cited Rome Exch. Bank v. Eames, 4 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 83; Wright v. Delafield, 25 N. Y. 266; Southwick v. Memphis First Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 420.

Collateral Attack. — In O'Reilly v. Nicholson, 45 Mo. 160, it was held that a judgment, though informal in granting relief not contemplated by the petition, was not void if the parties were before the court and the relief granted within its jurisdiction, and therefore it could not be impeached collaterally.

Exceptions and Objections. — If a complaint is sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to some kind of relief, and the court renders a judgment different from or beyond that authorized by the facts, the defendant may avail himself of error by objecting and excepting to the judgment as rendered. Wilkerson v. Rust, 57 Ind. 172.

In Ives v. Goshen, 63 Conn. 82, the court said: "The appellant had alleged one cause of action which the court finds to be groundless. He proves a new and distinct cause of action which he had not alleged. If the court, under these circumstances, had granted him the relief which he now seeks, it would have been error, because there is nothing in the pleadings to support such a judgment. It is not enough that a party proves facts constituting a cause of action; he must also have alleged them before he can recover. He can recover only secundum allegata et probata." This was quoted with approval in Sanford v. Peck, 63 Conn. 486.

There can be no recovery upon a cause of action, however meritorious or however fully proved, when it is materially variant from that pleaded. Parrish v. Pensacola, etc., R. Co., 28 Fla. 251.

Even before a justice of the peace, a plaintiff cannot sue on one cause and relover upon another. Gerrans v. George Wenger Machinery, etc., Mfg. Co., 51 Mo. App. 615.

Even though a party fails to object to proof by the plaintiff of a cause of action which he has not alleged, no judgment should be given upon a case so made, at least without an amendment of the pleadings. Gibbs v. Wall, 10 Colo. 153.

A complaint upon renewal notes whose validity is denied will not justify recovery upon the original notes. Covington First Nat. Bank v. Gaines, 87 Ky. 597, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 451.

Judgment cannot be rendered for a balance of account in a petition claiming the amount of a lost draft. Pleadings should have a reasonable certainty, and some connection should exist between the allegations and evidence. Fisk v. Mead, 18 La. 332.

"The plaintiff does not sue for the proceeds of the note, nor for any claimed negligent or wrongful conduct of the defendants in respect to the collection of the note or its proceeds; but for the loss and conversion of the instrument itself, the paper upon which Stenvers's promise was written. To that specific wrong, and to that alone, he has himself limited his proof, and for that and for that alone he has limited his right of recovery. Ives v. Goshen, 63 Conn. 79; Sanford v. Peck, 63 Conn. 486. Unless then the facts found show a conversion of the note, the plaintiff cannot recover in this suit." Gilbert v. Walker, 64 Conn. 394.

1. Variance and Failure of Proof. — A variance arises where the proofs do not sustain the cause of action alleged in the complaint. If it is immaterial, it will be disregarded; if material and misleading, the court may, in its discretion, allow an amendment upon just terms; but where the evidence relates to a cause of action entirely different from that stated in the complaint, it is not a case of variance at all, and it was never intended by the code to allow a plaintiff to prove a cause of action which he has not alleged. Willis v. Branch, 94 N. Car. 143.

A complaint seeking to set aside conveyances on the ground of fraud is not sustained by proof that they constitute a mortgage from which the plaintiff has a right to redeem. This is not a mere variance, but a failure to prove the cause of action in its entire scope and meaning, and an amendment of the proceedings to correspond with such findings, even though it could be made, would change substantially the claim, an action to set aside entirely for fraud being entirely different from one to redeem a mortgage. Patterson v. Patterson, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 262.

The cause of action alleged must be proved, or the judgment cannot be supported. Sutherland v. Heathcote, (1891) 3 Ch. 504; Lloyd v. Pine Lake Iron Co., 74 Mich. 83.

A Material Variance between facts pleaded and proved by the plaintiff is fatal to a judgment in his favor. Wilson v. Fridenberg, 22 Fla. 114; Cooper v. McNeil, etc., Co., 43 Ill. United States.—Eddy, etc., Live Stock Co. v. Blackburn, 30 U. S. App. 571, 70 Fed. Rep. 949.

Reason for Rule.—In all actions demanding damages the complaint should be such as fairly and reasonably to apprise the defendant of the grounds upon which the damages are claimed; and the plaintiff should be confined in his evidence to the grounds so stated. Accordingly, where the complaint simply alleged a conversion by the defendant of the plaintiff's goods, which had been delivered to the defendant as warehouseman for storage, it was held that the plaintiff could not recover damages for injury to the goods prior to the conversion, although attributable to the defendant's negligence. Sanford v. Peck, 63 Conn. 486.

Illustrations of Rule.—Recovery cannot be had as for a common-law trespass in an action commenced for a penalty under a statute, and barred as such by the statute of limitations. McCormick v. Kaye, 41 Mo. App. 263.

In an action to recover part of the costs of repairing a sewer, where the complaint bases the right to recover upon a contract, no recovery can be had upon a supposed obligation growing out of the enjoyment of an easement of such sewer. Sperling v. Boll, 10 N. Y. App. Div. 290.

"The code never intended that a party who had failed in the performance of a contract merely should be sued for fraud, or that a party who had committed a fraud should be sued for a breach of contract, unless the fraud was intended to be waived. The two causes of action are entirely distinct, and there can be no recovery as for a breach of contract where a fraud is the basis of the complaint. * * * Conaughy v. Nichols, 42 N. Y. 83, is the only authority cited to the contrary, and it does not sustain that position." Ross v. Mather, 51 N. Y. 108.

"This action is based upon fraud, and the plaintiff, before he can recover, must prove the complaint or substitute another in its place. Salisbury v. Howe, 87 N. Y. 128. Where fraud is alleged as the basis of the action it must be proved. The law will not permit a recovery by proof of a right of action upon contract or of some other character, and this though facts may be stated or may appear which in proper form might sustain such an action. Degraw v. Elmore, 50 N. Y. 1; Ross v. Mather, 51 N. Y. 108; Barnes v. Quigley, 59 N. Y. 265. It was the theory of the action, disclosed by the complaint, that the learned trial judge submitted to the jury." Truesdell v. Bourke, 145 N. Y. 612.

(c) Legal or Equitable Grounds. — Under the Code it is the duty of the court to grant such relief as the complaint and the proof thereunder show the plaintiff entitled to receive, without any distinction between law and equity.² But the relief granted must nevertheless be consistent with the case made by the complaint.³

bocker Ice Co., 69 N. Y. 45, hardly affects the rule, as the court below there found the fraud, and this court merely refused to disturb that finding." McMichael v. Kilmer, 76 N. Y. 40.

"The character of the action was determined by the complaint. Welsh v. Darragh, 52 N. Y. 590. Its allegations state a cause of action ex delicto, and it was not competent at the trial to convert it into one ex contractu." Neudecker v. Kohlberg, 81 N. Y. 302, citing Degraw v. Elmore, 50 N. Y. 1; Ross v. Maier, 51 N. Y. 108; Walter v. Bennett, 16 N. Y. 250.

Waiver of Tort. — If the plaintiff waive the tort and sues ex contractu, he cannot recover a judgment ex delicto, even though the evidence show a tort. Furry v. O'Connor, 1 Ind. App. 573.

Under the common counts for goods sold and delivered, without setting forth the facts constituting the cause of action, a plaintiff may recover for goods converted by the defendant, as he has the right to waive the tort. Doherty v. Shields, 86 Hun (N. Y.) 303.

Where the Gravamen of the Action Is Contract, allegations of fraud, etc., need not be proved. "Upon the trial defendant's counsel moved to dismiss the complaint, upon the ground that the complaint did not allege, and it was not proved, that the representations of defendant were made with fraudulent intent. The motion was denied. Held, no error; that the cause of action was not necessarily ex delicto because of the averments of false representations; that they were not the controlling facts, but the gravamen of the action was ex contractu." Ross v. Terry, 63 N. Y. 614 [citing Conaughty v. Nichols, 42 N. Y. 83; Ledwich v. McKim, 53 N. Y. 308; Graves v. Waite, 59 N. Y. 156; and distinguishing Barnes v. Quigley, 59 N. Y. 205].

2. Leopold v. Silverman, 7 Mont. 266.

The relief demanded in the complaint does not necessarily characterize the action or limit the plaintiff in respect to the remedy which he may have; and the fact that after the allegation of the facts relied upon the plaintiff has demanded judgment for a sum of money by way of damages does not preclude the recovery of the same amount by way of equitable relief, if the facts entitle the plaintiff to such relief. Hale v. Omaha Nat. Bank, 49 N. Y. 626.

In Iowa, under the code, § 2514, a judgment at law for the amount of a claim may be given although the proceeding was erroneously commenced in equity. Swift v. Calnan, (Iowa 1897) 71 N. W. Rep. 233.

3. Bradley v. Aldrich, 40 N. Y. 504; Hale v. Omaha Nat. Bank, 49 N. Y. 632; Sternberger v. McGovern, 56 N. Y. 20; Brinckerhoff v. Bostwick, 105 N. Y. 572. See supra, III. 9. b. (4) Basing on Grounds of Liability or Defense Alleged.

Effect of Code. — In Stevens v. New York, 84 N. Y. 304, the court said: "The names of actions no longer exist, but we retain in fact the action at law and the suit in equity. The pleader need not declare that his complaint is in either; it is only necessary that it should contain facts constituting a cause of action, and if these facts are such as at the common law his client would have been entitled to judgment, he will under the code obtain it. If, on the other hand, they establish a title to some equitable interposition or aid from the court, it will be given by judgment in the same manner as it would formerly have been granted by decree. So the complaint may be framed with a double aspect. Wheelock v. Lee, 74 N. Y. 500; Hale v. Omaha Nat. Bank, 49 N. Y. 626; Bradley v. Aldrich, 40 N. Y. 512; Sternberger v. McGovern, 56 N. Y. 12; Margraf v. Muir, 57 N. Y. 159. But in every case the judgment sought must be warranted by the facts stated. For, as was said in Dobson v. Pearce, 12 N. Y. 156, 'the question is, ought the plaintiff to recover?' or as in Crary v. Goodman, 12 N. Y. 266, 'whether, according to the whole law of the land applicable to the case, the plaintiff makes out the right which he seeks to establish.' It is only when he fails in doing this that he can be treated as one making a false clamor. But, notwithstanding the liberality of the law which permits this construction, the plaintiff can have no relief that is not 'consistent with the case made by his complaint and embraced within the issue.' Code, § 275. He must, therefore, establish his allegations (Salter v. Ham, 31 N. Y. 321; Bradley v. Aldrich, 40 N. Y. 504; Heywood v. Buffalo, 14 N. Y. 540), and if they warrant legal relief only, he cannot have equitable relief upon the evidence. He must bring his case within the allegations as well as within the proof. Bradley v. Aldrich, 40 N. Y. 504; Arnold v. Angell, 62 N. Y. 508; People's Bank v. Mitchell, 73 N. Y. 415."

Failure of Proof.—Where a case for equitable relief is alleged, and that alone, and a case for legal relief is proved, the variance amounts to a total failure of proof. Bradley v. Aldrich, 40 N. Y. 504.

"The case of Bradley v. Aldrich, 40

N. Y. 504, merely holds that an allegation of grounds in plaintiff's complaint for equitable relief, and nothing else, where proof of such grounds fails, does not permit the court to try an action for fraud without a jury. The former practice of the Court of Chancery was to dismiss the bill when all ground for equitable interposition failed, even though a cause of action at law appeared to arise out of the transaction. When a party alleges a cause of action of an equitable nature he must prove one, so far as the question of a trial by jury is concerned, and he cannot escape such tribunal by alleging an equitable cause of action, and, while wholly failing to prove it, obtain a trial by the court of a common-law action arising out of the transaction." Brinckerhoff v. Bostwick, 105 N. Y. 572.

Dismissal.—A complaint which is framed solely for equitable relief will be dismissed where it is found upon trial that the plaintiff is not entitled to such relief, as the court in such case cannot give judgment for damages or amend the complaint so as to change the action into one at law. Dalton v. Vanderveer, 8 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 484, 31 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 430, 23 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 443.

The Reason and Limitations of This Doctrine are well illustrated and explained by the case of Dudley v. Congregation, etc., 138 N. Y. 451. In this case it was held that in an action to foreclose a mortgage, when the plaintiff fails to establish its validity, he is not entitled to recover upon the bond sought to be secured by the mortgage although execution of the bond is averred in the complaint. Having failed to establish the mortgage, he fails to establish his cause of action. The court said: "The complaint in this case does not contain but a single cause of action, and that in equity, for the foreclosure of the mortgage lien. It is true that the giving of the bond is stated, but that is incidental to the main facts alleged, and only necessary, if at all, for the purpose of showing the consideration of the mortgage and the amount of the deficiency, if any. When the plaintiff

Reason for Rule. — This rule is but an application of the principle already laid down that a plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon

failed to establish the mortgage he failed to establish his cause of action in its whole scope and meaning, and he could not stand upon the incidental allegations in regard to the bond. It is not necessary to inquire how far or under what circumstances it was within the power of the court to permit him to change the form of the action to one for the enforcement of some purely legal remedy. He applied to the court for that purpose at the trial, and the permission was refused, in the exercise of that discretion which the court undoubtedly possessed. The question that we are now concerned with is whether it was legal error in the court below to hold, after the plaintiff had failed to establish his equitable cause of action, that he was not entitled, upon the same complaint, to a personal judgment against the defendant. We think not. The case, as an action in equity, was terminated by the finding of the court that the plaintiff had no valid mortgage to foreclose, and without the permission of the court in some form, the plaintiff was not entitled in the same action to a different remedy. Beck v. Allison, 56 N. Y. 366. The established rule that, when equity has obtained jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter of the action, it may adapt the relief to the exigencies of the case, even to the extent of rendering a personal judgment, in order to prevent a failure of justice, does not apply here. That rule applies when the general basis of fact upon which equitable relief was sought has been made out, but for some reason it becomes impracticable to grant such relief, or where it would be insufficient; and not to a case like this, where it appears that there never was in fact any ground for equitable relief whatever, but the sole remedy was an action at law. When facts are made out which bring the case within the general jurisdiction of equity, the court will not allow the case to fail because the specific relief prayed for is no longer practicable, but in such a case, as a substitute for the relief demanded, will award an equivalent in damages, thus ending the controversy, instead of sending the parties to a court of law for that purpose. Valentine v. Richardt, 126 N. Y. 277; Lynch v. Metropolitan El. R. Co., 129

N. Y. 274; Van Rensselaer v. Van Rensselaer, 113 N. Y. 213. In this case the plaintiff has failed because he never had any ground upon which to invoke equitable jurisdiction, and in such a case the court will not attempt to try another and purely legal cause of action. The question is not one of the right to a jury trial. That mode of trial is waived by the plaintiff when he elects to bring an action for relief, both legal and equitable in its nature, in respect to the same cause of action, and by a defendant when he omits to insist upon it in the answer by taking the proper objection, which is usually done by a distinct allegation that an adequate remedy exists at law, or by demanding it, or raising the question at the proper time in cases where he is entitled to that mode of trial according to the practice in equity cases. Cogswell v. New York, etc., R. Co., 105 N. Y. 319; Mentz v. Cook, 108 N. Y. 504; Ostrander v. Weber, 114 N. Y. 95; Truscott v. King, 6 N. Y. 147. It is the case of an action in equity where none but equitable relief was demanded or claimed, commenced and tried before the court as such, and a finding made that the plaintiff was not entitled to the relief sought, with facts appearing upon the trial that might entitle the plaintiff to a money judgment in an action at law, which he did not claim in his complaint, and the right to which he in no way suggested to the court until the whole theory of his action, as presented by the pleadings, failed. Whatever power the court may have to permit a party, by amendment or otherwise, to thus change the whole scope and nature of his action, it cannot be demanded as a right, and a refusal by the court, under such circumstances, to go on and try other questions upon the same pleadings, and administer other remedies, purely legal in their nature, which are properly the subject of another and different form of action, is not error. Bradley v. Aldrich, 40 N. Y. 504; Wheelock v. Lee, 74 N. Y. 500; Hawes v. Dobbs, 137 N. Y. 465."

Contrary View. — "Let us now recur to the question whether damages can be recovered in an equity action where the plaintiff fails to establish his right to the equitable relief demanded. The the cause of action which he has alleged in his petition.¹

(5) Amount of Recovery — (a) Conformity to Process. — It has been already seen that judgments must conform to the process served in the case.² The amount of recovery is limited by the writ.³

authorities are to the effect that such recovery may be had." Matthews v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 20 Hun (N. Y.) 437 [citing Marquat v. Marquat, 12 N. Y. 336; Phillips v. Gorham, 17 N. Y. 270; Davis v. Morris, 36 N. Y. 569; Barlow v. Scott, 24 N. Y. 40; Hudson v. Caryl, 44 N. Y. 553; Colman v. Dixon, 50 N. Y. 572]. Wheelock v. Lee, 74 N. Y. 495, which was also cited, does not support the proposition to which the court cited it; it lays down, in fact, a doctrine precisely the contrary.

In Fairchild v. Lynch, 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 265, it was held that a plaintiff suing for equitable relief and failing to establish his right thereto may, if he establishes the cause of action at law, have judgment therefor, the defendant not having objected nor demanded a trial by jury. In a note to this case the reporter says: "Of course if the facts constituting the legal cause of action are not averred in the complaint, and the defendant raises the point that although the facts proven constitute a legal cause of action, yet such cause of action is not complained upon, no recovery can be had thereon." This is undoubtedly the correct view. The case of Barlow v. Scott, 24 N. Y. 40, does not conflict with this proposition. There the complaint was framed for the specific performance of an agreement and in default thereof for compensation in damages. The opinion pronounced in that case held that on the face of the complaint there was no ground for specific performance, and the case in truth therefore presented a cause of action for damages and nothing more. The defendant therefore went to trial to meet that precise claim. Greason v. Keteltas, 17 N. Y. 491, was like Barlow v. Scott, 24 N. Y. 40, in this respect. See also Bradley v. Aldrich, 40 N. Y. 504.

1. "When a complaint is framed for equitable relief, and it appears upon the trial that the pleader is not entitled thereto, a judgment at law inconsistent with the allegations of the complaint for damages upon a breach of contract to pay a stipulated amount of money cannot be entered, and the complaint must be dismissed. It was held in Dalton v. Vanderveer, 31 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 430, 23 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 443, 8 Misc. Rep. (N. Y.) 484; "Where a complaint states a cause of action which is within the jurisdiction of equity, and is not an action at law, and the evidence given on the trial fails to sustain such equitable cause of action, but shows a cause of action at law, the complaint will nevertheless be dismissed, as a distinction between equitable and legal actions still exists, though the forms have been abolished." From the head-note in Parrish v. Pensacola, etc., R. Co., 28 Fla. 251, we quote the following: "There can be no recovery upon a cause of action, however meritorious it may be, or however satisfactorily proved, that is in substance variant from that which is pleaded by the plaintiff." To the same effect see Lewark v. Carter, 117 Ind. 206; Bradley v. Aldrich, 40 N. Y. 504; Homer v. Homer, 107 Mass. 82; Park v. Lide, 90 Ala. 246; 18 Am. and Eng. Encyc. of Law 515. The principle that plaintiff must recover, if at all, upon the cause of action alleged in his complaint, is elementary. The record discloses no error, and the judgment appealed from is affirmed." Anderson v. Chilson, 8 S. Dak. 64.

2. See supra, III. 8. Conformity to Process.

Where the Ad Damnum Is Left Blank in the Declaration, but is laid in the writ, a judgment entered that the plaintiff recover of the defendant "according to specialty, with six per cent. interest and costs," on a verdict "for the plaintiff according to specialty, with six per cent. interest," is valid. Malone v. Donnally, Minor (Ala.) 12.

3. Judgment by default in a garnishment suit is limited to the amount claimed in the affidavit and writ. Carroll v. Milner, 93 Ala. 301.

In Hughes v. Union Ins. Co., 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 294, it was held that the judgment must be responsive to the writ, and must either be given for the whole sum demanded or exhibit cause why it is given for a less sum, but that in debt a less sum may be recovered

Default. — Accordingly, where the judgment is by default the amount of recovery is limited to the sum specified in the summons or indorsed on the copy served.¹

Where Defendant Answers. — Where, however, the defendant appears and answers, the judgment is not limited to the amount indorsed on the summons.²

(b) Conformity to Pleadings. — A judgment must conform to the pleadings with respect to its amount as well as in other respects.³ Accordingly, as a general rule, the amount of a judgment is limited by the ad damnum clause of the declaration,⁴ and a judgment in excess of the sum claimed is erroneous.⁵ But a judgthan that demanded in the writ where the entire sum demanded is shown by the counts to consist of several distinct accounts, or where the precise sum demanded is diminished by extrinsic evidence. "The requisite conformity between the writ and judgment in the action of debt may be fully complied with either by the pleadings, the finding of the jury, or a remitter entered by the plaintiff either before or after verdict, or even after demurrer."

Accrued Interest May Be Added. — A judgment for an amount greater than the sum indorsed on the summons may properly be given where the excess is for interest accrued since the commencement of the suit. Elliott v. Knight, 64 Ill. App. 87.

1. Bassett v. Mitchell, (Kan. 1888) 19 Pac. Rep. 671; Lamping v. Hyatt, 27 Cal. 102; Jackson v. Hovey, 2 N. Y. Misc. Rep. (Buffalo Super Ct.) 208; Hopper v. Steelman, 3 N. J. L. 466; Carroll v. Milner, 93 Ala. 301.

In Thompson v. Turner, 22 Ill. 389, it was held that a judgment by default for an amount greater than is stated in the summons may be rendered against a defendant regularly served with process, if within the damages claimed by the declaration. Compare Basset v. Mitchell, (Kan. 1888) 19 Pac. Rep. 671, holding that a judgment by default for an amount larger than that indorsed upon the copy of the summons served upon the plaintiff is void and may be enjoined.

In Mississippi, the indorsement of the amount on the writ, required by statute, shows only the cause of action, and the damages recovered may exceed the amount claimed by the indorsement, if not greater than the damages laid in the declaration. Lynch v. Sinking Fund Com'rs, 4 How. (Miss.) 377.

2. Erck v. Omaha Nat. Bank, 43 Neb. 613.

After Striking Out an Answer for irregularity, a judgment rendered in an action on a contract in favor of the plaintiff on the complaint alone must be considered as a judgment by default, and it is therefore erroneous if rendered for a greater amount than that for which the summons stated the judgment would be taken. Lattimer v. Ryan, 20 Cal. 628.

In Attachment, where the error assigned was that the judgment exceeded the amount sworn to in the affidavit for attachment and named in the writ, but it did not exceed the ad damnum, the judgment was sustained on writ of error. Plato v. Turrill, 18 Ill. 273.

3. For Example, a judgment greater than the amount claimed in the petition less the amount of a counterclaim not denied by the plaintiff is erroneous, and the verdict for such sum should be set aside. Ashland Land, etc., Co. v. Woodford, 50 Neb. 118.

Amendment of Ad Damnum Clause. — See generally articles DAMAGES, vol. 5, p. 716; AMENDMENTS, vol. 1, p. 589.

A sum in excess of that demanded in the complaint cannot be recovered without amendment. Conant v. Barnard, 103 N. Car. 315.

A judgment in excess of the damages claimed in the declaration is erroneous, and cannot be cured by an amendment nunc pro tunc of the ad damnum clause. Kenyon v. Woodward, 16 Mich. 326.

1. Kennedy v. Young, 25 Ala. 563; Sanders v. City Nat. Bank, (Tex. 1889) 12 S. W. Rep. 110.

In Mississippi, under the Act of 1850, changing the forms of pleadings at common law and providing that the complaint thereby authorized instead of a declaration should conclude for a demand for the relief which the plaintiff claims, where the complaint conforms to this provision an averment of the amount of damages in the conclusion is to be regarded as surplusage, and hence, if the judgment exceeds the damages claimed in the complaint, it will be no ground for reversal. French v. Davis, 38 Miss. 218.

In Kentucky, where a verdict is rendered for a larger amount than the damages laid in the declaration, judgment must be entered for the latter sum. Bush v. Dyke, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 142; Baltzell v. Hickman, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 265.

Reference to Arbitrators. — Where an action together with other claims of the plaintiff against the defendant has been referred to arbitrators, under a rule of court, it is not error to render judgment for an amount of damages exceeding the ad damnum in the writ. Day v. Berkshire Woollen Co., 1 Gray (Mass.) 420.

2. Girvin v. St. Louis Refrigerator, etc., Co., 66 Mo. App. 315.

A General Allegation and demand of damages cannot contravene specific statements, in the same pleading, of the precise amount and character of damage, so as to allow recovery of damages not specifically claimed. Denison v. Lewis (D. C.) 23 Wash. L. Rep. 138.

Videlicet. — Where the damages in the body of the declaration under a videlicet are placed at $200, but in the ad damnum at $500, a verdict for $275 is not improper, no objection to the declaration being made in the trial court. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. O'Brien, 34 Ill. App. 155.

Unnecessary Bill of Particulars. — A judgment may, however, be rendered for any sum within the ad damnum notwithstanding a bill of particulars for a less sum, where no bill of particulars is necessary and the bill filed is accord-

Where the Defendant Has Appeared and Answered, the amount of the judgment may be greater than the sum demanded, should the case justify it.¹

But a Judgment by Default cannot be greater than the amount shown due by the complaint.²

Single Damages are recoverable although the declaration or complaint improperly claims treble damages under a statute.³

A Statutory Allowance as Costs may be included in the judgment though not claimed in the declaration.⁴

(c) Conformity to Proof. — A judgment for more than the proof warrants is erroneous.⁵

(d) Effect of Excessive Judgment. — A judgment which is merely excessive under the pleadings and proofs, within the rules heretofore stated, is erroneous and liable to be reversed, but it is not void,⁶

Where the Excess Is Very Small, the maxim de minimis non curat lex applies, and the judgment will not be reversed.²

(e) Remedies for Excessive Judgment. — An excessive judgment may generally be corrected by modification either in the trial court or on appeal.³

Remittitur. — Usually the party recovering an excessive judgment is permitted to remit the excess and take a judgment for the proper amount.⁴

c. MANNER OF RAISING OBJECTION. — Where the nonconformity of a judgment to the process, pleadings, or proof constitutes mere error, the proper method of raising the objection is by perfecting an appeal.⁵

d. WAIVER OF OBJECTION. — The objection that the judgment is not authorized by the pleadings is waived by a failure to object to the evidence upon which it is based or to the rendition of the judgment.⁶

10. Conformity to Verdict or Findings — a. STATEMENT OF RULE — (1) In General. — A judgment must be supported by the verdict or findings in the case,⁷ and a judgment which goes beyond

If this objection be taken on a motion, at the trial, before a referee, to dismiss the complaint upon the plaintiff's evidence, it is available on appeal from a judgment for the plaintiff upon the referee's report in his favor, although no exceptions were taken to the report upon the ground that the cause of action as found was not that set forth in the complaint. Patterson v. Patterson, 1 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 262.

On trial of questions of fact by the court, the decision of the judge should pass upon and find all the material issues presented by the pleadings. If the decision and judgment are contrary to the legal effect of the case as admitted by the pleadings, the objection may be taken without a case, and perhaps without exceptions, if the point be passed upon in the court below. Gilchrist v. Stevenson, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 273.

New Trial. — Where the judgment is broader than the facts alleged and found will justify, the proper remedy is by an appeal from the judgment on the judgment roll, and not by a motion for a new trial. Shepard v. McNeil, 38 Cal. 72. See also article NEW TRIAL.

In Ejectment, where the verdict was for the plaintiff, but contained no assessment of damages, and the court entered judgment for damages, it was held that such judgment was not sustained by the verdict. Cannon v. Davies, 33 Ark. 56.

In an Action for Damages upon a Contract, where the verdict is that both parties were guilty of fraud, and that each shall pay half the costs, the only judgment that can be rendered is a judgment for the defendant for costs. Baker v. Wofford, 9 Tex. 516.

Verdict Apportioning Damages. — In an action by the wife and child of a brakeman, killed by the concurrent negligence of two railroad companies, wherein each had cast the blame upon its codefendant, a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs against both defendants in the sum of $10,000 — $5,000 in favor of the wife and $5,000 in favor of the child, $5,000 to be paid by one defendant and $5,000 by the other — is sufficient to sustain two separate judgments for $5,000 against each of the defendants. But it will not support a joint judgment for $10,000. San Antonio, etc., R. Co. v. Bowles, (Tex. Civ. App. 1895) 30 S. W. Rep. 727. Compare Post v. Stockwell, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 373.

Criminal Law — Grade of Offense. — On an indictment for an assault with intent to commit murder, when any less grade of offense is found by the jury, the verdict must show the character of the offense so found, and the judgment must not exceed that warranted by the verdict. *People v. In fact, no other judgment but one in conformity with the true intent of the verdict would be legal." Eason v. Miller, 15 S. Car. 200.

Effect of Nonconformity. — Judgments for relief different from that authorized by the verdict, or in which a clause is inserted without authority, are not void or inoperative, but are simply irregular, and the defect may be waived or acquiesced in by delay in moving to vacate, or by taking an appeal. *Corn Exch. The court is not obliged to make a decree in conformity with the verdict of the jury, under Montana Code Civ. Pro., § 250, in an action to adjudicate and determine a controversy regarding the priority of right by appropriation to use water for irrigating purposes, it being an equitable action. *Kleinschmidt v. A verdict against one of several defendants authorizes the entry of a judgment in favor of the defendants not mentioned in it, where there have been no issues raised between the defendants, and no affirmative relief asked by them. *Missouri Pac. Judgment in Gold Coin or Its Value. — The jury assessed damages at $743 in gold coin of the United States, or $757.86 in legal tender treasury notes of the United States, the equivalent of the gold coin. Where the Verdict Is Joint the judgment must be joint.¹

Where the Verdict Is Several the judgment must be several.²

The Proper Remedy in case a judgment does not conform to the verdict is by a motion to modify the judgment.³

(2) Exceptions and Qualifications. — One Real Exception to the rule that judgments must conform to the verdict or findings consists of cases where a judgment is rendered non obstante veredicto. This will be considered in detail in a succeeding section.⁴

As a Qualification of the rule it may be stated that the judgment should conform to the real and substantial finding rather than to the literal form of expression of the verdict.⁵ Where the finding

See generally article SPECIAL FINDINGS.

A judgment should correspond with and be only the legal result of the facts found in the verdict. Bledsoe v. Wills, 22 Tex. 650.

When a court is called to rule upon a motion for judgment upon a special verdict, it is to consider what the law is, and is not bound by its instruction previously given to the jury. Baird v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 61 Iowa 359; Evans v. St. Paul Harvester Works, 63 Iowa 204.

A judgment must correspond with and be only the legal result of facts found in the verdict, and cannot be rendered in favor of a party as to whom the verdict is silent. Thompson v. Albright, (Tex. App. 1889) 14 S. W. Rep. 1020.

When a verdict is in response to special issues alone, the court will not look beyond the finding to any fact apparent in the record in aid of the judgment; the judgment must be sustained by the finding. Smith v. Warren, 60 Tex. 462.

Where there is a special verdict and there are no exceptions thereto, and no motion for further findings or for a new trial, and a judgment is rendered on the verdict, and the Supreme Court determines that the verdict is not sufficient to sustain the judgment, such court has no power to send the case back for a new trial, but must order a judgment on the verdict. McGonigle v. Gordon, 11 Kan. 167.

2. Stewart v. Pruett, 6 La. Ann. 727.

3. When the judgment fails to follow the verdict, the remedy is not by a motion for a new trial, or for a venire de novo, but by a motion to modify the judgment. Branson v. Studabaker, 133 Ind. 147; Thrash v. Starbuck, 145 Ind. 673.

The error can be saved for correction in the Supreme Court by a specific motion for a proper modification only, but not by a motion embracing more. Scotton v. Mann, 89 Ind. 404.

The objection cannot be taken on appeal in the absence of a motion in the trial court to modify the judgment. Brigg v. Hilton, 99 N. Y. 517 [citing Williams v. Thorn, 81 N. Y. 382; DeLavallette v. Wendt, 75 N. Y. 579]. See also Meredith v. Lackey, 14 Ind. 529.

reported could not possibly be arrived at without also finding another fact not expressed but necessarily included in the verdict, judgment can be rendered as if that fact had been positively found.¹ So, also, superfluous matter in a verdict may be disregarded;² and, on the other hand, the mere addition of descriptive matter not found in the verdict is surplusage and immaterial.³

Tyree, 90 Va. 719; Hardy v. Hohl, 11 Wash. 1; Downey v. Hicks, 14 How. (U. S.) 240.

Assessment of "Damages" Instead of "Value."—A party will not be deprived of a recovery merely because of a bare informality in a verdict. Thus, while a verdict by a jury in a replevin suit that they "do assess the damages of the property mentioned in the declaration at $825, and the actual damages of the defendant at six per centum per annum to be $24.75," is not well expressed, in that the word "damages" is used with reference to the property instead of the word "value," a correct judgment rendered upon it will not be set aside. Such a verdict is not objectionable for nonconformity to the law which requires the "value" of the property to be assessed. Brannin v. Bremen, 2 N. Mex. 40.

Correcting Error in Computation of Amount.—If the data which accompany the verdict indicate that the amount assessed by the jury is the result of an error in computation, the court may render a corrected judgment upon the data furnished. Dawson v. Shirk, 102 Ind. 189; Case v. Colter, 66 Ind. 336; Hall v. Harlow, 66 Ind. 448; Medler v. Hiatt, 14 Ind. 405; Sanders v. Scott, 68 Ind. 130; Houston v. Newsome, 82 Tex. 75.

In Dawson v. Shirk, 102 Ind. 189, the court said: "Before a judgment can be rendered for an amount different from that assessed by the jury, the conclusion must be irresistible, from the facts and data given, that an error in computation, or an omission, growing out of a misconception of the relation to each other of the several facts specifically found, has occurred."

Verdict Violating Instructions.—In Wells v. Cox, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 515, it was held that where there is only one issue, and the intent of the jury is manifest, the court will, in case of a mistake by them, correct their verdict by making it conform to their finding and give judgment upon it accordingly, as by reducing a finding for the whole amount claimed to a specific sum which the court had instructed them they could not exceed.

Where the jury, not following the instructions of the court, found a less sum than was proper in the case, it was held not to be error for the court to increase such amount by applying the correct rule of damages. Schweitzer v. Connor, 57 Wis. 177.

But see Rafferty v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 15 Mo. App. 559, where it was held that a verdict in disregard of the court's instruction would not support a judgment. In this case the statute fixed the damages at $5,000, and the verdict was for $2,500, and the judgment was arrested.

1. Jones v. Ford, 60 Tex. 127.

In an action on a note stipulating for an attorney's fee, where the verdict is in favor of the plaintiff for the principal and interest, but does not include the attorney's fee, the court may add such attorney's fee, because the verdict necessarily found the facts entitling the plaintiff to recover such fee. Illustrations of Immaterial Surplusage.—A judgment that the plaintiff recover of the defendant a certain sum, "being the amount of her paraphernal property received by him and in his possession," is sufficiently responsive to a verdict for the same sum, "the value of paraphernal property." De Young v. De Young, 9 La. Ann. 545.

Where a person is found guilty of unlawful detainer, and judgment is entered for forcible and unlawful detainer, the word "forcible" is surplusage and not error. Payne v. Martin, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 407.

facts admitted therein may be considered in aid of the verdict in order to support the judgment.¹

The Evidence, however, cannot be considered in aid of the verdict,² and the court cannot render a judgment on an issue not determined by the verdict, no matter how clear and undisputed the evidence may be.³

(3) In Whose Favor. — The judgment must be rendered in favor of the party indicated by the verdict, provided his pleadings are sufficient to sustain it.⁴ Accordingly, a judgment must

Rep. 292; Brient v. Bruce, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 580.

A verdict must always be read in the light of the pleadings, and when it refers to documents annexed to it they must be regarded as incorporated in it; and if not annexed, the verdict may be aided by the judge's notes, where they will suffice for that purpose. Keeler v. Robertson, 27 Mich. 116.

1. Admissions in Pleadings May Be Considered. — Carr v. Huffman, 1 Kan. App. 713; Hoefling v. Dobbin, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 40 S. W. Rep. 58; Blakeley v. El Paso Bldg., etc., Assoc., Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. Rep. 292.

The omission of the jury to find by their verdict the amount due, when the question is not in controversy, does not deprive the prevailing party of his right to a judgment for the sum admitted to be due by the pleadings. Betts v. Butler, 1 Idaho 185.

Where a cause is tried before the court, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment on motion where all the special findings of facts are in his favor, and when taken in connection with an admitted fact they entitle him to recover. Carr v. Huffman, 1 Kan. App. 713.

Oral Admissions at Trial. — In Handel v. Elliott, 60 Tex. 145, it was said that resort would be had only to the verdict and to admissions contained in the pleadings in order to support a judgment. It was therefore held that a judgment declaring a lien could not be supported where both the verdict and the pleadings of the party against whom it was adjudged were silent as to the lien, although a recital in the judgment stated that the party orally admitted the lien after the charge to the jury and before their retirement to the jury room.

The Amount of a Judgment may, it seems, be varied from the amount of the verdict, because of admissions in pleadings, on motion. Meredith v. Lackey, 14 Ind. 529.

Contrary Intimations. — The court below, in giving judgment on a special verdict, may, to a certain extent, supply its defects from the evidence. Desdunes v. Miller, 2 Martin N. S. (La.) 53.

In determining, for the purpose of judgment, the consistency of the general verdict with the special finding, the trial court may be aided by its knowledge of the facts as developed in the trial. More than a mere comparison of the language of the verdict and findings is required. Gilbert v. American Ins. Co., 30 Mich. 400.

Reference to Documents. — When the jury's special findings refer directly to documents they can be understood only by comparing them with the documents, and where such reference is made, and a court is called upon to apply the verdict, it must be treated as embodying such documents by reference. Gilbert v. American Ins. Co., 30 Mich. 400; Keeler v. Robertson, 27 Mich. 116.

4. Hawker v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., 15 W. Va. 628.

The court is not authorized, according to its own estimate of the amount of damages which the plaintiff ought to have recovered, to enter an absolute judgment for any other sum than that assessed by the jury. Per Justice Gray in Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 29. But an admission in the pleadings may perhaps justify a judgment for an amount different from the verdict. Meredith v. Lackey, 14 Ind. 529.

Illustrations.—Where a jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $51.60, subject to an offset of $26.80 if said offset had not already been paid, but if it had been paid then for $51.60 without offset, it was proper to render the judgment for $51.60 and to reject the balance as surplusage. Hawkins v. House, 65 N. Car. 615.

Reversing and Rendering. — The judgment should follow the verdict, and where the judgment was for a larger amount than the verdict this has been held an error for which it would be reversed and such judgment rendered in the Supreme Court as should have been rendered in the court below. European-American Colonization Soc. v. Reed, 25 Tex. Supp. 353.

Special Verdict. — In Mitchell v. Geisendorff, 44 Ind. 358, it was held that the judgment on a special verdict should not exceed the amount of damages found by the jury. See also Reid v. Dunklin, 5 Ala. 205.

In McCartney v. Hubbell, 52 Wis. 360, it was held that a judgment for a larger amount than that indicated by a special verdict is erroneous, unless the right of the party to the increase is clear as a matter of law.

Costs. — A judgment may include costs although not given by the verdict, where it appears from the record that costs follow as a legal incident. Levan v. Sternfeld, 55 N. J. L. 41.

In Blackwell v. Landreth, 90 Va. 748, it was held that where the verdict is for five dollars and costs, the court has no power to render a judgment for five dollars only, without costs, on the ground that the verdict is too small to authority to render judgment for an amount less than the verdict.¹

A Small Variance in Amount between the verdict and the judgment may, however, be disregarded as immaterial, under the maxim de minimis non curat lex.²

Excessive Verdict. — It is error to enter a judgment on an excessive verdict.³

(b) Increasing Damages Super Visum Vulneris. — At early common law the jury were practically the arbitrary judges of the amount of damages, cases of mayhem constituting the single exception. In such cases the court might, upon inspection of the wound — super visum vulneris — increase the amount of damages awarded.⁴ This practice is obsolete in the United States, if it ever existed.⁵

3. Dorsett v. Crew, 1 Colo. 18.

Remittitur. — Where the verdict is excessive, the court may very properly require the entry of a remittitur of the excess before entering judgment. Libby v. Scherman, 50 Ill. App. 123, affirmed in 146 Ill. 540. See also article REMITTITUR.

Where the Verdict Is Greater than the Amount Alleged, it has been held that judgment should be entered for the latter sum. Bush v. Dyke, 6 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 142; Baltzell v. Hickman, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 265.

5. In McCoy v. Lemon, 11 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 165, the action was trespass for an assault, battery, and mayhem. The jury awarded the plaintiff thirty dollars for the loss of one eye and an injury to one thumb. The plaintiff moved the court to increase the damages, invoking the old common-law cases as authority for the motion. The motion was denied, and this decision was sustained on appeal. The court said: "The battery of which the plaintiff complained had occasioned the loss of an eye, and the jury returned a verdict for thirty dollars. This appeal rests on the refusal of the judge on circuit to increase the damages, after verdict, on motion of plaintiff's counsel, super visum vulneris. This court has been urged by a very learned and ingenious argument to administer a remedy never, so far as we are informed, adopted by the courts in this country. Not a single case has been found in any book of American reports in support of the present motion, notwithstanding the great research displayed by counsel. Neither has there been for a period of more than a century any recognition of the rule by any adjudged case in England to which we have been able to procure access. It is true, modern text-writers, in brief paragraphs, allude to this peculiarity as appertaining to the action of mayhem; and Mr. Christian, in a note, 3 Black. Com. 121, states the point fully, that 'a remarkable property peculiar to the action for a mayhem is deemed to exist, viz., that the court in which the action is brought have a discretionary power to increase the damages, if they think the jury at the trial have not been sufficiently liberal to the plaintiff; but this must be done super visum vulneris, and upon proof that it is the same wound concerning which evidence was given to the jury.' The same principle is stated in Bul. N. P. 21 and Steph. N. P. 225, each deriving authority from the same sources.

b. NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO — (1) In General — (a) Definition. — In its broadest sense a judgment non obstante veredicto is a judgment given for one party notwithstanding the finding of a verdict in favor of the other party.¹

(b) When and for Whom Rendered — aa. At Common Law — When Rendered. — At common law a judgment non obstante veredicto could be entered only when the plea confessed the cause of action and set up matters in avoidance which were insufficient, although found true, to constitute either a defense or a bar to the action.²

* * * In the last case at Lent Assizes, in 1742, and referred to by Christian, Brown v. Seymour, 1 Wils. 5, the application was refused, though the judge said there was no doubt of the rule. In the case of Cook v. Beal, 1 Raym. 176, I think in 1696, the court resolved, '1st, that if a wound be apparent, though not a mayhem, an eye injured, not out, but wound visible;' 2d, 'for loss of nose, though not a mayhem;' or, 3d, 'if a grievous wound,' the court may increase the damages. In Smallpiece v. Bockingham, referred to in Buller N. P. 21a, it seems witnesses and jurymen were examined, who all said that no evidence was given that any blow had been inflicted upon the eye, or that the party had lost an eye by the battery; and for this reason the court would not increase the damages, 'for new evidence ought not to be given, for this is a censure on the first verdict and a correction of it.' * * * Damages, strictly speaking, are a compensation given by the jury for an injury or wrong sustained by the complaining party before action brought. Co. Litt. 257. The quantum of damages, being in most cases intimately blended with questions of fact, must have been generally left with the jury. Sedg. Dam. 21. But, says the same author, the limits of their power were not at first as clearly defined as they have become in later days. In this course of development we find, in Roll. Abr. 11, p. 703, it said, 'the jury are chancellors, and they can give such damages as the case requires in equity,' whilst again it is said, 'the old books are full of cases where, on judgment by default, and even on demurrer, the court themselves fix the amount of damages, and the remains of this is seen in the power exercised by the English courts in cases of mayhem.' * * * Yet, looking as we must to the long sleep into which this practice, at best not very clearly defined, has fallen in the mother country, and still more to the fact that it has never been transplanted in our soil, and is now wholly incongruous with our usages and institutions, this court has not seen its way to the conclusion urged."

1. Gould's Plead., c. 10, § 46, p. 482.

A More Narrow Definition is usually given because, as will be seen in a succeeding section, a judgment non obstante veredicto could only be rendered in favor of the plaintiff and upon one particular state of the pleadings. See infra, III. 10. b. (1) (b) aa. At Common Law.

Thus, in Williams v. Anderson, 9 Minn. 50, a judgment non obstante veredicto was defined as a judgment entered by order of the court for the plaintiff in an action at law notwithstanding a verdict for the defendant. This is the usual definition. See 2 Tidd's Pr. 922; Rap. & L. Law Dict., tit. Non Obstante Veredicto.

Confession Essential. — If matter is pleaded or replied in due form which, if found true by the jury, constitutes neither a bar nor an answer, there should be judgment non obstante veredicto in favor of the party whose plea is confessed and not avoided by the fact found by the verdict. Sullenberger v. Gest, 14 Ohio 204.

The practice of granting judgment non obstante veredicto is very restricted and is confined to cases where a plea confesses a cause of action and the matter relied upon in avoidance is insufficient. Moye v. Petway, 76 N. Car. 327.

In Pim v. Grazebrook, 2 C. B. 429, 52 E. C. L. 429, citing Gwynne v. Burnell, 6 Bing. N. Cas. 453, 37 E. C. L. 451, and distinguishing Hitchcock v.

Humfrey, 6 Scott N. R. 540, it was held that the plaintiff is never entitled to a judgment non obstante veredicto upon the ground of the insufficiency of the defendant's pleading (where such plea or rejoinder is found for the defendant, and against the plaintiff) unless the plea or rejoinder implies an admission of the plaintiff's title, which a traverse by the defendant never does.

Under the Relaxed Rule which now exists in many jurisdictions, by statute or decision, this confession or admission of the adversary's title is no longer essential. See the succeeding section.

matter how defective the plaintiff's pleadings might be.¹ Where the plaintiff's pleadings would not support a judgment upon a verdict in his favor, the defendant's sole remedy was by motion in arrest of judgment.²

bb. RELAXATION OF RULE. — It is apparent from the foregoing statement of the rule that a judgment non obstante veredicto at common law was merely one species of a judgment on the pleadings.³ Accordingly, it was an easy step to relax the rule and hold that a judgment might be rendered on the pleadings for either party entitled to it thereby, irrespective of the verdict,⁴ and this is now the rule in many jurisdictions.⁵ Such a judgment can be rendered only when the pleadings entitle the party against whom the verdict is rendered to a judgment.⁶

There is an able and interesting article in 14 Am. L. Rev. 494, wherein the right of a defendant to a judgment non obstante veredicto is considered, and upon a review of all the common-law cases the conclusion is reached that there is nothing in reason or authority to prevent such a judgment.

"In fact, the judgment non obstante veredicto appears to be only one species of judgment by confession, where the plea confesses a right of action, but sets up an avoidance bad in substance, which cannot hold good as to a material traverse, whether of the whole, or a part only, of the plea." Pim v. Grazebrook, 2 C. B. 429, 52 E. C. L. 429. See generally infra, XII. Judgments on Pleadings.

Compare Lewis v. Foard, 112 N. Car. 402, holding that where an issue raised by the answer is submitted to a jury without objection the plaintiff's right to move for a judgment on the pleadings is waived, and he cannot therefore move for judgment non obstante veredicto. See also Collier v. Jencks, (R. I. 1896) 34 Atl. Rep. 998, holding that the plaintiff waived his right to move for judgment non obstante veredicto on the ground that there was no plea filed by failure to object to evidence of facts constituting a defense.

Where a declaration is bad and the defendant pleads bad pleas thereto, a plaintiff cannot have judgment non obstante veredicto. Leigh v. Lillie, 30 L.

When Rendered for Plaintiff. — The plaintiff is entitled to a judgment non obstante veredicto where the issue determined for the defendant is immaterial,¹ provided the case is not one calling for a repleader,² and where the plea or answer sets up facts insufficient in law to constitute a defense.³ Where there is a good plea or answer filed, the plaintiff is not entitled to a judgment non obstante veredicto.⁴

When Rendered for Defendant. — The defendant is entitled to a judgment non obstante veredicto where the plaintiff's pleadings are insufficient to support a judgment in his favor, as where the declaration states no cause of action,⁵ or where the plaintiff fails Waiver of Right. — In Ambler v. Whipple, 139 Ill. 311, 32 Am. St. Rep.

213, it was held that where a demurrer to a plea in bar is overruled and the plaintiff waives error by pleading over, a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto should be overruled.

Where a General Denial Is Pleaded, it is not error to refuse to render judgment on the pleadings non obstante veredicto. Cox v. Vickers, 35 Ind. 27.

Where There Is a Plea of Payment on the record, it is error to enter judgment non obstante veredicto on a general verdict for the defendant. Conrad v. Commercial Mut. Ins. Co., 54 Pa. St. 373.

Where it is clear, from the ruling of the court upon a motion for a new trial, that the claimant can in no event be entitled to damages for the cause for which he claims them, the court will order judgment, notwithstanding the verdict, to be entered up for the respondents. Ballou v. Harris, 5 R. I. 419.

There may be a judgment for the defendant notwithstanding the verdict upon an immaterial issue, if the case will otherwise warrant it. Tyler v. Flanders, 58 N. H. 371.

Where a Cause Has Been Tried upon Several Issues, but some of them are immaterial, and a verdict is rendered for the plaintiff upon the whole case upon the merits, a judgment non obstante veredicto cannot be given for the defendant upon the ground that some of the immaterial issues should have been found in favor of the defendant. If to reply to a good plea of new matter.¹

Rule under Statutes. — In many states the right to render a judgment for either party appearing to be entitled thereto upon the pleadings, irrespective of the verdict, is expressly declared by statute.²

cc. IN EQUITY. — The verdict of a jury upon an issue of fact directed out of chancery has not the dignity of a like verdict in the verdict had been in favor of the defendant upon such immaterial issues, still the plaintiff would have been entitled to judgment non obstante. Hyer v. Vaughn, 18 Fla. 647.

Under Iowa Code, § 2859, which provides that judgment may be rendered in favor of a party appearing by the pleadings to be entitled thereto although a verdict has been found against him, where the defendant fails to answer judgment should be rendered for the plaintiff notwithstanding evidence on the part of the defendant, disproving the claim, had been erroneously received. Singer Mfg. Co. v. Billings, 39 Iowa 347.

So where the defendant pleads a tender, judgment must be rendered in the plaintiff's favor for the amount of the tender notwithstanding a verdict for the defendant. Sheriff v. Hull, 37 Iowa 174. See generally article TENDER.

"As the jury found a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for substantial damages, did the court err in rendering judgment for the defendant? We think this question must be answered in the affirmative, for the reason that, under the statute, it is only when the petition fails to show that the plaintiff is entitled to any relief that judgment on the finding of a jury in his favor can be arrested. Code, §§ 2650, 2842, 2843, 2859. When the verdict is excessive, a motion for a new trial is the only remedy." Carl v. Granger Coal Co., 69 Iowa 522.

Under Nebraska Code Civ. Pro., § 440, a judgment non obstante veredicto can be rendered only when the pleadings of the party in favor of whom the verdict was rendered confess facts entitling the other party to judgment. Manning v. Orleans, 42 Neb. 712, followed by Gibbon v. American Bldg., etc., Assoc., 43 Neb. 132. This is substantially the rule at common law. See supra, III. 10. b. (1) (b) aa. At Common Law.

Under this statute a judgment should be rendered for the defendant non ob- an action at law. As a general rule, it is advisory only, and if the court comes to a contrary conclusion upon the facts, a decree may be entered in disregard of the verdict.¹

dd. ON RECORD. — A judgment non obstante veredicto must be based solely upon matters appearing upon the record.² It cannot be granted upon affidavit.³

ee. ON EVIDENCE. — Since a judgment non obstante veredicto must be granted, if at all, upon the record, it follows that the evidence cannot be looked to in determining a motion for such judgment.⁴ Such a judgment cannot be rendered merely because the verdict is against the weight of the evidence,⁵ although there are intimations that such a judgment may be moved for upon undisputed evidence or where the verdict is not sustained by any evidence whatever.⁶

stante veredicto where the pleadings of the plaintiff confess facts entitling the defendant to judgment. Scofield v. Clark, 48 Neb. 711.

In Ohio, Rev. Stat., § 5328, providing that when, upon the statements in the pleadings, one party is entitled to judgment in his favor, the judgment shall be rendered by the court notwithstanding a verdict has been found against him, does not make the rendition of a verdict essential to a judgment on the pleadings. Humboldt Min. Co. v. Variety Iron Works Co., 22 U. S. App. 334, 47 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 242, 62 Fed. Rep.'356.

A rule for judgment non obstante veredicto ought to be drawn up "upon reading the record." Beaty v. Warren, 4 M. & G. 158, 43 E. C. L. 89, 4 Scott N. R. 725.

The court will give judgment for the plaintiff notwithstanding the verdict is for the defendant, if upon the whole record it appears that the right of the case is with the plaintiff. Fitch v. Scot, 1 Root (Conn.) 351.

3. "On a motion of this kind, the nisi prius record and postea must be produced, so that the court may be enabled to judge whether the party is entitled to his judgment notwithstanding the verdict. It is irregular to apply on affidavit." Smith v. Smith, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 624.

4. Templeman v. Gibbs, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 25 S. W. Rep. 736.

"If admissions were made by the defendant in his testimony, as alleged, the plaintiff should have asked for instructions upon that aspect of the case. He did not do so, nor did he file any exceptions to the charge. We do not understand how he can get the benefit of an objection for an omission to charge by a motion non obstante veredicto. Indeed, that motion can only be made on the face of the pleadings." Lewis v. Foard, 112 N. Car. 402, citing Walker v. Scott, 106 N. Car. 56.

On Appeal. — In passing on a ruling on a motion for a judgment non obstante, the appellate court cannot look to the evidence to determine whether or not it sustains the general verdict. Stevens v. Logansport, 76 Ind. 498; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Martin, 82 Ind. 476; Shaffer v. Ryan, 84 Ind. 140; Cox v. Ratcliffe, 105 Ind. 374; Weller v. Bectell, 2 Ind. 6. In Murray v. Blackledge, 71 N. Car. 492, it was held that where there was no evidence to support a finding,

(c) Repleader Distinguished. — A party is not entitled to a judgment non obstante veredicto in every case where the issue determined against him by the verdict is immaterial.¹ A plaintiff is entitled the court might disregard or set it aside and render judgment non obstante veredicto. So in Holland v. Kindregan, 155 Pa. St. 156, it was held in an action of ejectment, where the verdict was for the plaintiff, that the evidence in support thereof was but a mere scintilla, and judgment was therefore entered for the defendants non obstante veredicto. In Snow v. Conant, 8 Vt. 309, the court said: "It may be further remarked that a motion of this kind is necessarily founded on the record alone; as when, according to English practice, the postea is sent from nisi prius to the court in banc. It can never depend on any state of evidence which is not disclosed by the record." In the later case of Stearn v. Clifford, 62 Vt. 92, the court said: "The motion for a judgment non obstante, 'on the undisputed evidence in the case,' was properly overruled. The 'undisputed evidence' did not appear of record, and that was a sufficient answer to the motion; for such a motion is based upon the record, and reaches nothing dehors it. Snow v. Conant, 8 Vt. 301. Whether the motion could be sustained if the evidence could and did appear of record, and showed a state of facts entitling the plaintiff to the remedy he seeks, as would seem to be inferable in Snow v. Conant, 8 Vt. 301, we do not intimate, as that question is not involved."

Limits of Doctrine. — In Sheehy v. Duffy, 83 Wis. 12, the limits of this doctrine in Wisconsin are well stated. The court said: "Without setting aside the verdict, the court gave judgment for the defendants on the ground that by the uncontradicted evidence they were entitled to it, having first made a finding amending the verdict as stated, to the effect that the contract was rescinded and abandoned by the parties and no new one was expressly made in its place, and therefore the defendants were entitled to compensation for services, both before and after the termination of the contract, as on a quantum meruit. It was error to thus amend the verdict. In Schweickhart v. Stuewe, 75 Wis. 160, it was announced that 'the utmost extent to which this court has gone in authorizing the trial courts to disregard the special verdict rendered by a jury, when such verdict is wholly unsupported by the evidence, is to set aside such verdict, and then, in its discretion, and not as an absolute duty, to enter judgment in accordance with the undisputed evidence in the case, or to set aside the verdict entirely and grant a new trial.' And the previous cases on the subject were cited. There was, we think, evidence in support of the finding of the jury as made, and therefore the finding could not be amended by the court and a different one, in whole or in part, substituted in its stead. Ohlweiler v. Lohmann, 82 Wis. 203. The proper course was to grant a new trial; and where judgment of reversal is given on the ground of an erroneous amendment of a verdict in a material respect, it is the practice of this court to award a new trial, as the Circuit Court ought to have done, if the verdict was not in accordance with the merits, instead of amending the verdict. To sustain the course pursued in this case would be to place special verdicts in legal actions substantially on the footing of verdicts in equitable actions as on a feigned issue, and make them merely advisory." See also Conover v. Knight, 91 Wis. 573, holding that where there is any evidence in support of the verdict, a judgment non obstante veredicto cannot be rendered because of its insufficiency. See infra, III. 10. b. (2) On Point Reserved.

1. Repleader and Judgment Non Obstante Verdicto Compared and Distinguished. — "This brings us to the plaintiff's motion for judgment non obstante veredicto. That judgment is rendered where the defendant by his pleading confesses, without sufficiently avoiding the action. The distinction between a repleader and a judgment non obstante veredicto is accurately stated by Mr. Tidd. He says where the plea is good in form, though not in fact, or, in other words, if it contain a defective title or ground of defense, by which it appears to the court, upon the defendant's own showing, that in any way of putting it he can have no merits, and the issue joined thereupon be found for him, there, as the awarding of a repleader could not mend the to judgment non obstante veredicto where the issue is immaterial or the plea bad only where a repleader is unnecessary to do justice between the parties.¹ A judgment non obstante veredicto is always upon the merits, and therefore is never rendered except where it is clear that the defense is without merits in whatever form pleaded.² Such a judgment will not be rendered where there is substantially a material issue or a good defense although case, the court, for the sake of the plaintiff, will at once give judgment non obstante veredicto; but where the defect is not so much in the title as in the manner of stating it, and the issue joined thereon is immaterial, so that the court know not for whom to give judgment, whether for the plaintiff or defendant, there, for their own sake, they will award a repleader. A judgment therefore non obstante veredicto is always upon the merits, and never granted but in a very clear case; a repleader is upon the form and manner of pleading. 2 Tidd's Pr. 953. This distinction is adopted in 1 Chitty's Pl. 695 (ed. 1837). Staple v. Haydon, 1 Salk. 173, is a leading case on this subject. It is there said that where the defendant pleads an ill plea, but the matter, if well pleaded, might have amounted to a good bar or justification, judgment can never be given against the defendant as by confession; but where the matter, though never so well pleaded, could signify nothing, judgment may in such case be given as by confession. This case is also reported in 2 Ld. Raym. 922, where Holt, C. J., took this difference: that where the defendant confesses a trespass, and avoids it by such a matter as can never be made good by any sort of plea, there judgment shall be given upon the confession, without regard to such an immaterial issue. But where the matter of the justification is such as, if it were well pleaded, would be a good justification, there, though it be ill pleaded, yet that shall not be taken to be a confession of the plaintiff's action. Staple v. Heydon, 6 Mod. 1. Numerous cases in support and illustration of this doctrine have been collected and are cited by Mr. Tidd and Mr. Chitty at the pages already mentioned." Bellows v. Shannon, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 88. See also Otis v. Hitchcock, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 433; Hitchcock v. Haight, 7 Ill. 610.

Where the issue is wholly immaterial the verdict or finding will be set aside and judgment rendered non obstante, the rule being that when the matter, though never so well pleaded, can signify nothing, judgment may be given as by confession. Rothschild v. Bruscke, 131 Ill. 265. Compare Woods v. Hynes, 2 Ill. 103.

Ordinarily, where one of the parties, passing by what is material in adverse pleading, tenders a good issue upon an immaterial point and obtains a verdict, the judgment must be arrested and a repleader awarded. Probate Judge v. Briggs, 5 N. H. 66.

Judgment should not be rendered upon a verdict upon an immaterial issue. Hughes v. McCutchen, 1 Morr. (Iowa) 154.

the pleading is technically defective.¹ Where the pleading contains matters which, if well pleaded, might form a good bar or justification, the court will not give judgment non obstante veredicto, but will award a repleader.²

(d) Motion for Judgment. — Where a party against whom a judgment is rendered wishes a judgment non obstante veredicto, he must move therefor.³

Time of Motion. — The motion may of course be made after verdict,⁴ and must be made before entry of judgment on the verdict.⁵ The right to a judgment non obstante veredicto cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.⁶

Discretion of Court. — The rendition of judgment non obstante veredicto is discretionary with the court.⁷

Bill of Exceptions. — In Indiana a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto and exceptions to rulings thereon are parts of the record and need not be saved by a bill of exceptions.¹

(2) On Point Reserved. — The practice prevails in a few jurisdictions of taking a verdict subject to the decision of a reserved point of law by the court. The judgment is then entered for one party or the other according to the decision of the reserved point.²

Judgment on Verdict or Point Reserved. — Where the verdict of the jury and the decision by the court of the point reserved are both in favor of the plaintiff, the judgment should be entered for the plaintiff on the verdict, and not on the point reserved.³ But where the verdict is for the defendant a judgment cannot be rendered for the plaintiff although the point reserved is determined in his favor, as in such case there is nothing to support the judgment.⁴ Where it is uncertain whether the jury found their ver-

If the bench is equally divided, judgment goes according to the verdict, unless the court orders further argument. Van Dyck v. Van Beuren, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 103.

In Pennsylvania, a judgment non obstante veredicto cannot be entered where no question of law has been reserved at the trial. Inquirer Printing, etc., Co. v. Rice, 106 Pa. St. 623; Buckley v. Duff, 111 Pa. St. 223; Farmers', etc., Bank v. Lefever, 74 Pa. St. 49; Philadelphia v. Donath, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 4; Savings Fund v. Murphy, 1 Walk. (Pa.) 31; Henry v. Heilman, 114 Pa. St. 499.

New Trial Where Point Not Reserved.

— Where no point is reserved on the trial, the court has no power to enter judgment for the defendant non obstante veredicto. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Lefever, 74 Pa. St. 49, where, the court below having without a reserved point entered judgment for the defendant non obstante veredicto on the ground that in law the evidence did not warrant the verdict, on reversal the Supreme Court, under the circumstances, instead of entering judgment on the verdict, sent the case back that the defendant might move for a new trial nunc pro tunc. Where the Supreme Court was satisfied that the court below intended to reserve a question of law, but did not do so, it sent the case back for a new trial. Saving Fund v. Murphy, 1 Walk. (Pa.) 31.

3. Ringle v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 164 Pa. St. 529, 35 W. N. C. (Pa.) 379. Accordingly, where there is a judgment on the verdict for the plaintiff, and not for the defendant non obstante veredicto, it is immaterial whether the points of law were properly reserved or not, the jury having been rightly instructed. Erie City Iron Works v. Barber, 106 Pa. St. 125.

4. Ringle v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 164 Pa. St. 533; Robinson v. Myers, 67 Pa. St. 9; State Bank v. McCoy, 69 Pa. St. 204; Morris v. Ziegler, 71 Pa. St. 450; Glading v. Frick, 88 Pa. St. 460; Hosler v. Hursh, 151 Pa. St. 415.

"As a matter of practice it may be well to notice an irregularity in the form of the judgment. A point redict upon the facts relating to which the question of law was reserved or upon other facts also submitted to them, a judgment non obstante veredicto cannot be rendered.¹

Nature of Questions Reserved. — The point reserved must be solely a question of law, and a question of fact or a mixed question of law and fact cannot be reserved.² The question whether there is any evidence in the case to support a recovery is a question of law and may be reserved, but the question whether there is sufficient evidence to support a recovery where the evidence is conflicting cannot be reserved.³

served is an authority to the court to enter judgment for the defendant non obstante veredicto. There can be no reservation in favor of the plaintiff; the verdict must be for him, with authority to enter judgment for the defendant against the verdict. Robinson v. Myers, 67 Pa. St. 9; State Bank v. McCoy, 69 Pa. St. 204; Morris v. Ziegler, 71 Pa. St. 450; Gladings v. Frick, 88 Pa. St. 460; Hosler v. Hursh, 151 Pa. St. 415. If that authority is not exercised the reservation drops out of the case altogether, and judgment is entered for plaintiff, not on the point reserved, but on the verdict, as if there had been no reservation at all." Ringle v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 164 Pa. St. 533.

In State Bank v. McCoy, 69 Pa. St. 204, a verdict for the defendant was rendered subject to the question of law reserved "whether upon all the facts * * * the plaintiff is not entitled to recover." Judgment on the verdict for the defendant was afterwards entered on the reserved point, and on writ of error, taken by the plaintiff, that judgment was reversed. The court said: "Where the verdict is for the defendant, no question of law can be properly reserved, for no judgment can be entered in favor of the plaintiffs non obstante veredicto in case of a decision in his favor. * * * We must, therefore, reverse the judgment and remit the record to the court below for a new trial." This case was approved and followed in Hosler v. Hursh, 151 Pa. St. 420.

Directing Verdict. — The court may direct a verdict for the plaintiff subject to certain questions of law, and afterwards enter judgment for defendant non obstante veredicto. Hays v. City, 35 Pittsb. Leg. J. (Pa.) 117. But it may not direct a verdict for the defendant subject to a reserved point.

ing v. Frick, 88 Pa. St. 460, where the court below directed a verdict for the defendant subject to a reserved point. The court in banc afterwards entered judgment for the plaintiff on the point reserved non obstante veredicto. It was held that the more correct practice was to direct a verdict for the plaintiff, as a judgment could not be entered upon a reserved point for the plaintiff where the verdict was for the defendant.

Sufficiency of Reservation. — The reservation of controlling legal questions should always be made matter of record at the time, and the record must show the question of law distinctly stated and properly reserved.¹ The facts, as well as the questions of United States. — Smith v. Delaware Ins. Co., 7 Cranch (U. S.) 434.

"To authorize the court to enter judgment non obstante veredicto, the record must show the point and the facts on which it arises. Irwin v. Wickersham, 25 Pa. St. 316. The question reserved must be distinctly put on the record. The parties have a right to except not only to the judgment on the reserved question, but also to the manner in which the question itself be reserved. The specific reservation should therefore be made a matter of record at the time of the reservation." Buckley v. Duff, 111 Pa. St. 227 [citing Ferguson v. Wright, 61 Pa. St. 258; Wilde v. Trainor, 59 Pa. St. 439; Patton v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 96 Pa. St. 169; Elkins v. Susquehanna Mut. F. Ins. Co., 14 Pittsb. L. J. (Pa.) 420; Inquirer Printing, etc., Co. v. Rice, 106 Pa. St. 623].

Reason for Rule. — "Many evil consequences might follow the omission of the entry on record; but none could result from making the entry. To indulge a reserved point of this kind in memory only, might frequently leave the rights of the parties to much hazard, and in danger of being forgotten or incorrectly remembered; so that judgment at last might be rendered wrongfully, even with the best intentions existing on the part of the court. We therefore conceive the point reserved in this instance ought to have been stated on the record, and without it the verdict and judgment cannot be supported." Hann v. Field, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 378.

Point Appearing in Bill of Exceptions. — "It has been attempted to support the judgment upon the notion that it may be regarded as entered upon a reserved point. But the record shows no reservation. Properly, wherever there is a point or points reserved at the trial, the verdict should be taken subject to the opinion of the court, upon the reserved points. The record then shows the ground upon which the final judgment non obstante veredicto is based. But a loose practice has prevailed, and been sanctioned by this court, according to which it is considered sufficient that the reserved point or points should appear on the bill of exceptions, bringing, thereby, the facts on the record. We have here five bills of exceptions — three by the plaintiffs and two by the defendant — to the admission and rejection of evidence, but as there does not appear any reservation, of course there is no exception on that head, nor was there any exception to the final judgment, as is necessary, wherever there is a judgment entered upon a reserved point or points. No such exception was requisite here, for the judgment is without warrant and erroneous on its face." Farmers', etc., Bank v. Lefever, 74 Pa. St. 52.

Statement of Reservation in Opinion Not Sufficient. — "The omission to make the point reserved a matter of record is not cured by a statement of the reservation in the opinion of the court filed long afterwards, on entering judgment. That opinion is no part of the record proper." Buckley v. Duff, 111 Pa. St. 227.

Illustrations of Insufficient Reservation. — The reservation cannot be as to whether on the whole case a plaintiff is entitled to recover. Keifer v. Eldred Tp., 110 Pa. St. 3.

In Edmonson v. Nichols, 22 Pa. St. 79, it was said: "We are frequently embarrassed by the imperfect manner in which points are reserved by the courts below. When a verdict is taken law arising thereon which are reserved, must be stated in the record.¹

(3) On Special Findings Against General Verdict. — A judgment upon the special findings of a jury, but against their general verdict, is not really a judgment non obstante veredicto, although often inaccurately so called. A motion for judgment non obstante veredicto is a motion for judgment on the pleadings without regard to the verdict; but a motion for a judgment on the special finding of the facts, notwithstanding the general verdict, has no reference whatever to the pleadings in the cause, and proceeds upon the theory that the special finding of facts by the subject to the opinion of the court upon points reserved, the facts should be distinctly stated, as well as the questions raised upon them; and the judgment to be pronounced upon the solution of the questions of law thus reserved should also be specified as in a case stated." To the same effect are Clark v. Wilder, 25 Pa. St. 314; Irwin v. Wickersham, 25 Pa. St. 316; Wilson v. Steamboat Tuscarora, 25 Pa. St. 318; Winchester v. Bennett, 54 Pa. St. 510, and other cases. In Clark v. Wilder, 25 Pa. St. 314, it was said: "When we look at the record, we find no point reserved. The verdict was given subject to the opinion of the court on the whole case whether the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. It is impossible for the human imagination to conceive of anything more unlike a point." See also Yerkes v. Richards, 170 Pa. St. 352.

A reservation of "the question whether there is any evidence in this case to be submitted to the jury, upon which the plaintiff is entitled to recover," is not a proper reservation of a question of law. Yerkes v. Richards, 170 Pa. St. 346; Buckley v. Duff, 111 Pa. St. 227; Wilson v. Steamboat Tuscarora, 25 Pa. St. 317; Wilde v. Trainor, 59 Pa. St. 439.

"In the present case the record is fatally defective. In the charge of the court to the jury the learned judge says: 'There is a little law question, although I have not much doubt about it myself; still the learned counsel want to be heard on it, and I will take your verdict for the plaintiff subject to the opinion of the court on the question of law reserved.' What that question of law was, or on what questions of fact it arose, the record wholly fails to show. No search thereof could give the slightest information." Buckley v. Duff, 111 Pa. St. 227.

Presumptions on Appeal. — "But it is contended by the counsel for the defendant in error that, as the points of law upon which the court decided the cause against the plaintiff are not stated on the record, this court must presume everything in favor of the judgment, and should not reverse, unless the points were reserved and exhibited on the record. We cannot go so far in presuming in favor of the judgment. A verdict was found for the plaintiff; it was the duty of the court to render a judgment thereon for the plaintiff, unless some good ground existed to prevent it. The record states that points of law were brought up in the argument of the case, and upon these points of law, without stating what they were, judgment was rendered for the defendant. As the record is intended to preserve a history of the case, those points of law should have been stated. Enough should, at least, be shown to support the judgment, especially when the judgment is rendered against the party for whom the verdict is found. And so this court settled in the case of Hann v. Field, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 376, in a state of case very similar to the one under consideration." Evañs v. Bell, 6 Dana (Ky.) 479.

jury is so inconsistent with their general verdict that the former should control the latter and the court should give judgment accordingly.¹

IV. FORM OF JUDGMENT — 1. Sufficiency in General — a. WHAT LAW GOVERNS. — The language and form of the record of a judgment are regulated by the law of the state and the practice of the court in which it is rendered;² and a record which is good in the court where rendered is sufficient in another court although it would have been insufficient had it been rendered in the latter court.³

b. NECESSITY OF WRITING. — A judgment must be reduced to writing,⁴ and cannot exist merely in the memory of the officers of the court.⁵

c. LANGUAGE OF JUDGMENT. — The technical language in rendering a judgment is, if for the plaintiff, that "It is considered by the court that the plaintiff do recover," etc.;⁶ or, if for the defendant, "It is considered by the court that the plaintiff take nothing by his writ, and that the defendant go hence without day," etc.⁷ Another form of words, however, of equivalent

A motion for judgment non obstante veredicto and a ruling thereon will present no question for decision which ought to have been saved and presented by a motion for judgment on the special findings notwithstanding the general verdict and a ruling thereon. *Wright v. Proof of Foreign Law and Practice. — A record not corresponding in form to what would be necessary for a judgment in the state where the issue is raised, may be shown by the laws, practices, and usages of the state in which it was rendered to be sufficient to constitute a judgment there. Taylor v. Runyon, 3 Iowa 474.

Acquiescence in Clerical Error. — Great indulgence is extended to clerical misprisions, and when they have been acquiesced in for a long time the omission or inaccuracy, if it reasonably appear what was intended, will be supplied by intentment; and therefore, where in the entry of a judgment the words, "it was considered by the court that the plaintiff recover," were omitted, and the defendant afterwards acquiesced in the sufficiency of the entry as a judgment by procuring an injunction restraining the execution of the judgment upon other grounds, and kept up the litigation for twelve years, he will not be permitted then to say there was no formal judgment against him. Davis v. Hoopes, 33 Miss. 173.

Failure to Provide that Defendant Go Without Day. — An omission to insert in a judgment for the defendant that he go without day does not, under Minnesota Gen. Stat., c. 66, § 107, affect the substantial rights of the adverse party, and is not ground for vacating meaning, will be sufficient.¹ The use of words in the past instead of the present tense in entering a judgment is wholly immaterial.²

d. WHAT ENTRY MUST SHOW. — Strict Formality Is Not Essential to the validity of a judgment, and if the record entry is sufficient in substance, mere want of technical form will not render it either void or voidable.³ But it must appear that that which is offered the judgment. Ætna Ins. Co. v. Swift, 12 Minn. 437.

"It is insisted by defendant that there is no judgment in the lower court which is the subject of review in this. The judgment below is in the following form: 'It is therefore ordered and adjudged by the court that this cause be dismissed, and that defendants recover of plaintiff, W. B. Moody, all costs accrued herein, and have thereof execution. And the jury are, by order of the court, discharged.' In Bogges v. Cox, 48 Mo. 278, the judgment was as follows: 'Wherefore the court gave judgment against him for costs.' This case and the one at bar were where the plaintiff took a nonsuit with leave to move to set it aside, and when the motion to set aside was overruled the court rendered the judgments as set out. In Bogges v. Cox, 48 Mo. 278, Wagner, J., said: 'When a nonsuit is taken, in order to justify an appeal or writ of error the judgment should be formally set out; that it is by the court, therefore, considered and adjudged that the plaintiff take nothing by his writ, and that the defendant go thereof without day and recover of the plaintiff his costs,' etc. In Rogers v. Gosnell, 51 Mo. 466, this was held to be a good judgment, 'that defendant go hence, and that he recover his costs.'" Moody v. Deutsch, 85 Mo. 237.

1. In Baker v. State, 3 Ark. 491, it was said that a judgment is not the determination and sentence of the judges, but of the law. A determination of record therefore in the words, "ordered by the court that the said defendant," etc., was held not to be a judgment, for it implied an act of the judges, and it was said that if the words, "it is considered," are omitted, there is no judgment, and no appeal will lie. This case was practically overruled in Ware v. Pennington, 15 Ark. 226, where it was held that a judgment in the words, "it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court," etc., is not a nullity, the words being of fully equivalent import to the words, "it is considered."

Established Precedents Should Be Followed. — Common-law forms should be observed. Watson v. Hahn, 1 Colo. 385.

A judgment that plaintiff's demand be rejected at his costs is bad. Every new formula requires a new interpretation; old forms are the best, which with certainty either close the case forever or leave it open for another trial. Darby v. Miller, 6 La. Ann. 645; Birdsale v. Lakey, 6 La. Ann. 647; Marsh v. Perry, 6 La. Ann. 669.

The Word "Recover" is not absolutely essential to the existence of a judgment. Bradley v. Clark, 3 Day (Conn.) 502; Clark v. Moses, Kirby (Conn.) 144; La Porte v. Organ, 5 Ind. App. 369. It is, however, the appropriate and approved word to use. Needham v. Gil-laspy, 49 Ind. 245.

A record which recites the trial and verdict, and proceeds: "Therefore it is considered and adjudged by the court that the plaintiff in this action have judgment," etc., is a judgment, the word "have" being equivalent to "do recover." Potter v. Eaton, 26 Wis. 382. See also Schertz v. Chester First Nat. Bank, 47 Ill. App. 124.

An Approved Form. — In Pierce v. Wilson, 48 Ind. 299, the following judgment was pronounced perfect in form: "It is therefore considered by the court now here that the plaintiff do have and recover of and from the defendants the sum of two hundred dollars, and also the costs and charges in this behalf."

Irregularity in form does not render a judgment void, but can only be taken advantage of by a party on motion. Bennett v. Couchman, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 73.

Error in matter of form, although apparent on the face of the decree, is not sufficient ground for reversal. Foote v. Lefavour, 6 Ind. 473.

Degree of Formality Required. — "There may be error in the form or substance of a judgment as well as in the proceedings preliminary to the judgment." Hoehne v. Trugillo, 1 Colo. 161, citing Martin v. Barnhardt, 39 Ill. 12.

"This court has before held, with reference to judgments rendered in this state, that no particular form of words is necessary, and we are not inclined to apply a more stringent rule to the judgments of other states, when prosecuted in our courts. We should, therefore, not hesitate to enforce a judgment because the word decreed or resolved should be used, instead of considered. But we cannot but think that there should be something more than appears in this case, to show that a court has acted, in applying the law to a cause or action before it; something to show more clearly that there has been a judicial determination, decision, or adjudication. While there is no particular form necessary, yet there must be some form, something to show that the judgment stated or indicated by the court has been entered by the clerk." Taylor v. Runyon, 3 Iowa 474.

Tautology and the unskilful use of language in an effort to conform to law in the entry of a judgment on a verdict in replevin, where there is a substantial compliance with the statute, requiring a nice criticism upon the language employed to pronounce it erroneous, will not render the judgment erroneous. Butler v. Benton, 46 Miss. 118.

In Black v. Cabon, 24 Neb. 248, the judgment rendered was as follows: "It is the opinion of the court that Anton Cabon is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $117.90 and attorney's fee. It is therefore considered by me, and adjudged, that the plaintiff have and recover from the defendant, Anton Cabon, the sum of $117.90 and $3.46 attorney's fees, together with the costs of this suit, $4.25." The court said: "The judgment, although informal, is not void. The question was before this court in Marsh v. Synder, 14 Neb. 8. In that case the judgment was: 'I hereby render judgment against plaintiffs for costs herein. Judgment rendered against plaintiffs for costs.' Crowell v. Johnson, 2 Neb. 155; Vangeazel v. Hillyard, 1 Houst. (Del.) 515. In McNamara v. Cabon, 21 Neb. 589, the identical question now involved was presented to the court, and the judgment was held to be irregular, but not void. Lewis v. Watrus, 7 Neb. 477; Taylor v. Runyon, 3 Iowa 474; Minkhart v. Hankler, 19 Ill. 47; Fish v. Emerson, 44 N. Y. 376; Ransdell v. Putnam, 15 Neb. 642. A Clerical Error in Entitling a Cause on the record does not affect the judgment. McClelland v. Com., Hard. (Ky.) 297.

It is not necessary that the entry of a judgment should be preceded by the name of the case, so that the insertion of a wrong name will not be ground for reversal. Grimball v. Mississippi, etc., R. Co., 3 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 38.

It is sufficient if the memorandum of the style of the cause, made by the clerk, indicates with reasonable certainty to what suit it relates. Thus a description of it by a partnership name is sufficient. Collins v. Hyslop, 11 Ala. 508.

If the body of a judgment shows the case in which it was rendered, the judgment is valid although the style of the case is wrong. Woollard v. Shannon Novelty Works, Jackson (Tenn.) 1875, cited in King's Tenn. Dig., § 3386, par. 8.

That the heading or title of a judgment in the body of which a claim is allowed against the decedent's estate names only one of the two administrators, does not invalidate the judgment. Tewalt v. Irwin, 164 Ill. 592.

An Order in the words: "Ordered judgment in this action," etc., is not a judgment, although signed by the judge, and will not justify the issuing of an execution. Lincoln v. Cross, 11 Wis. 91. Compare Tift v. Keaton, 78 Ga. 235, where an order in the words: "There being no issuable defense filed, ordered that the plaintiffs have leave to enter up judgment against the defendant," signed by the presiding judge, in a suit on a promissory note, where the pleadings were good, was held a sufficient judgment for the plaintiff.

A Mere Memorandum of the Minutes of the judge, from which the record of the cause is afterwards to be drawn up, does not constitute a judgment. Taylor v. Runyon, 3 Iowa 474. See also Balm v. Nunn, 63 Iowa 641; Reeside v. Walker, 11 How. (U. S.) 272.

In Pickering v. Templeton, 2 Mo. App. 424, where the judgment assessed the damages of the plaintiff, it was held that the omission between the words "doth" and "assess" of the words "find the issues for the plaintiff, and" did not render the judgment invalid, and that if it were a defect it was cured by the statute of jeofails.

In Faulk v. Kellums, 54 Ill. 188, an entry was made upon the verdict of a jury as follows: "Whereupon the court enters judgment upon the verdict." This was held insufficient. The court said: "There is also an objection to the form of this judgment, if judgment it may be called, which is well taken. The ideo consideratum est is wanting; it has no element of a judgment other than a bare recognition of the finding of the jury. No action of the court was had upon that finding."

A judgment must show by what court it is rendered. Bevington v. Buck, 18 Ind. 414. See also Taylor v. Runyon, 3 Iowa 474.

A judgment cannot be objected to because it does not appear on its face to have been rendered in open court. That will be presumed in the absence of a showing to the contrary. Christian v. Lebeschultz, 18 S. Car. 602.

Other Judicial Statements of Rule — Alabama. — "The material requisites of a sufficient judgment are well settled. As said in Spence v. Simmons, 16 Ala. 828, 'a judgment should show the plaintiff who recovers, the defendant against whom the recovery is had, and the specific thing or amount of money recovered.' This statement of the general rule, however, must not be understood as meaning that only the mere entry of what the court considered or adjudged, disconnected from the other parts of the record, can be looked to, and that such entry itself must show, in terms, the material requisites. In the absence of statutory or positive regulations, each department of the judiciary may establish its own formula of proceeding. In Freeman on Judgments, § 50, speaking of the tests of the sufficiency of a judgment, the author observes: 'I think, however, that from the cases this general statement may be safely made: That whatever appears upon its face to be intended as the entry of a judgment will be regarded as sufficiently formal, if it show first, the relief granted; and, secondly, that the grant was made by the court in whose records the entry is written. In specifying the relief granted, the parties of and for whom it is given must, of course, be sufficiently identified.' While a judgment must designate the party in whose favor and the party against whom it is given, with such certainty that the proper officer may know for whom and against whose property to issue execution, it is not necessary that the names of the parties should be stated in the body of the judgment. Whenever the judgment entry is not clear and perfect on its face, it should be interpreted in the light of the pleadings and of the entire record. The judgment roll, as understood in the American practice, must be looked to, and not merely a fragment; and if from the whole the date and amount, the parties between and against whom the judgment is given, and the court in which it was rendered appear, the judgment is not defective. Fowler v. Doyle, 16 Iowa 534; Carr v. Anderson, 24 Miss. 188; In re Boyd, 4 Sawy. (U. S.) 270; Little v. Birdwell, 27 Tex. 688; Burnham v. Webster, 1 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 172; Collins v. Hyslop, 11 Ala. 508. The rule is correctly stated in Alexander v. Wheeler, 69 Ala. 332, as follows: 'The rule of law is that every judgment of a court of justice must either be perfect in itself or capable of being made perfect by reference to the pleadings, or to the papers on file in the cause, or else to other pertinent entries on the court docket.' Flack v. Andrews, 86 Ala. 396. See also Turner v. Dupree, 19 Ala. 198.

Colorado. — "As we said in Alvord v. McGaughey, 5 Colo. 244, 'while a strict compliance with forms is not essential in the entry of judgments, yet, to constitute a final judgment, the record must not only indicate that an adjudication took place, but the entry must have been intended as the entry of a judgment.' This intention must necessary, there must be something to show that the judgment stated or indicated by the court has been entered by the clerk.¹

be fairly deducible from the language employed in the entry. Thus tested, a final judgment will show, in intelligible language, a determination of the rights of the parties to the action, what relief has been granted, if any, or that the defendant has been dismissed without day. The supposed judgment in this case, not conforming to the above requirements, must be held to be interlocutory merely." Dusing v. Nelson, 7 Colo. 184. See also Stevens v. Solid Muldoon Printing Co., 7 Colo. 87.

Illinois. — Whatever appears upon its face to be intended as the entry of a judgment will be regarded as sufficiently formal if it shows (1) the relief granted, and (2) that the grant was made by the court in whose record the entry was written. In specifying the relief granted, the parties of whom and for whom it is given must be sufficiently identified. It must show the plaintiff who recovers, the defendant against whom the recovery is had, and the specified thing or amount of money recovered. Coats v. Barrett, 49 Ill. App. 275. To the same effect is Moody v. Deutsch, 85 Mo. 237. See also McMillan v. Lovejoy, 115 Ill. 498 [Phillips v. Webster, 85 Ill. 146; Gunn v. Plant, 94 U. S. 664].

Indiana. — A paper purporting to be a judgment, but not stating by what court rendered, nor when, nor for what cause of action, is a nullity. Bevington v. Buck, 18 Ind. 414.

Missouri. — To make a record valid upon its face it is only necessary for it to appear that the court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action and the parties, and that a judgment has in fact been rendered; all else is form only. Pickering v. Templeton, 2 Mo. App. 424 [citing Grignon v. Astor, 2 How. (U. S.) 319; Maxwell v. Stewart, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 77; Martin v. McLean, 49 Mo. 361]. See also the Illinois cases supra in this note.

Texas. — A judgment final should contain: (1) The facts judicially ascertained, with the manner of ascertaining them entered of record. (2) The recorded declarations of the court, pronouncing the legal consequences of the facts thus judicially ascertained. Fitzgerald v. Evans, 53 Tex. 461.

1. Taylor v. Runyon, 3 Iowa 474, holding that in the absence of some showing of the existence in a foreign jurisdiction of some particular statute, rule, or usage, a record of a judgment in such jurisdiction not showing by whom the judgment was rendered or against whom or for what amount, is not sufficient.

Volume XI.

2. Determining Provisions in Advance. — Before an action is ready for judgment it is not proper to bind the court by an order granted on special motion requiring it to enter particular provisions in the judgment.¹

3. But One Judgment Should Be Rendered. — The final determination of all the issues as to all the parties should be contained in one judgment record.² Thus, where two defendants are sued jointly and the verdict is against one and in favor of the other, it is error to render two several judgments signed at different times. There should be but one judgment and one judgment record in the case.³ So where for any reason a recovery is had by both parties form is required in the proceedings of an inferior court to render its order a judgment. It is sufficient if it be final and the party may be injured. Johnson v. Gillett, 52 Ill. 358. See also Ollis v. Kirkpatrick, 2 Idaho 976; Fox v. Hoyt, 12 Conn. 498; Wyatt v. Judge, 7 Port. (Ala.) 37.

Two Judgments which are distinct and separate, such as one reversing a justice's judgment and one at a subsequent term awarding damages, cannot coexist. Phillips v. Geesland, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 57, 2 Pin. (Wis.) 120.

In dissolving a temporary injunction against the collection of a judgment, it is error to render a second judgment for part of that one which was sought to be enjoined. Harris v. Beaven, 11 Bush (Ky.) 256.

Where a claim already reduced to judgment becomes the property in equity of another, by assignment, the assignee will not be entitled to a second judgment, but can only enforce the first by remedies provided by law. Smith v. Belmont, etc., Iron Co., 11 Bush (Ky.) 391.

A judgment dissolving an injunction, and directing the sheriff to sell, on a twelve months' bond, and ordering the plaintiff to pay the like amount in solido, with two other persons, is a double judgment against the same party for the same debt, ultra petitionem, and will be reversed. Hennen v. Wood, 16 La. Ann. 263.

Where two final judgments are entered in the same suit to sell the same land, the last, being rendered without supplemental proceedings, is void. Bethel v. Bethel, 6 Bush (Ky.) 68. Compare Morner v. Cooper, 35 Iowa 257, where after judgment upon a general verdict the court, on motion, without having first set aside such judgment, rendered a judgment for the opposite party upon a special verdict, and it was held that such final judgment was valid. See also Greff v. Fickey, 30 Md. 75, holding that the omission of the record to state that a judgment has been stricken out is not material and does not affect the validity or regularity of the judgment subsequently rendered.

Where a petition embraces several causes of action, and there is a separate assessment of damages on each, all the assessments must be blended in one judgment. Mooney v. Kennett, 19 Mo. 551.

3. Hundhausen v. Bond, 36 Wis. 29. But see Webb v. Bulger, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 588, holding the rule that there can be but one record to be a mere matter of form, and that where only one of two of some amount, but one judgment should be entered, and execution should be awarded for the excess, to whichever party it belongs.¹ Where, however, the defendant admits or offers to allow judgment as to part of the claim, judgment may be entered for such part, and subsequently another judgment may be entered for the amount found due upon further litigation.² Where several distinct actions are brought together for convenience, there must be a separate entry of judgment in each case.³

4. Certainty⁴ — General Rule. — A judgment must be specific and certain, and such as the defendant may readily understand and be capable of performing.⁵ And where the record entry is defendants was found guilty, and he made a bill of exceptions and the other entered judgment for costs, the judgment might stand, deducting costs of entering it.

1. Where the defendant recovers costs, the amount thereof should be set off against the plaintiff's recovery, and the judgment should be entered and execution awarded only for the excess. Johnson v. Farrell, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 384; Warden v. Frost, 35 Hun (N. Y.) 141, 1 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 364, 7 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 242; Crim v. Cronkhite, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y. In an action on account aided by attachment, judgment for a defendant who admits the account and recovers the full penalty in a cross-action on the bond for the wrongful suing out of the attachment should be for the difference between the amount of such account and the amount of the penalty. Union Mercantile Co. v. Chandler, 90 Iowa 650.

In Louisiana it has been held, in construing a judgment, that although the court is not permitted to look into the evidence in the suit to determine how the facts ought to have been decided, yet it may do so to learn the issues, in the absence of reasons given for the decree, and to ascertain what matters were presented for adjudication at the time the decree was rendered. *Bonvillain v. Construction as to Amount. — Where the clerk entered judgment for the amount of the verdict, "less $600 to be remitted," there was a valid judgment for the amount of the verdict, although the plaintiff had offered to enter a remittitur of the $600. Rothberger v. Wonderly, 66 Ill. 390.

The petition described an instrument promising to pay $212.50. The instrument was written "two twelve 50-100 dollars" judgment by agreement by the plaintiff, no sum being mentioned. The clerk entered judgment for "two twelve 50-100" dollars and interest. The defendant brought a writ of error. The court construed the words "two twelve" to mean two hundred and twelve, and judgment was so entered. Moseley v. Brigham, 12 Tex. 104.

It is sufficient if the sum recovered can be definitely ascertained by an inspection of the record. Wilbur v. Abbot, 58 N. H. 272.

b. CERTAINTY. — A judgment must not only state the amount for which it is rendered, but the amount must be stated with certainty.¹ Where the amount for which the judgment was rendered is wholly uncertain the judgment is void.²

c. FORM OF PROVISION—(1) In General. — A judgment should state the precise amount for which it is rendered, and not leave it to be ascertained by calculation; but if such data are given that the amount may be ascertained with certainty, the judgment will be upheld.³ A judgment for a sum to be there-successor of the judge who made the record could not look beyond the record to ascertain for what amount, if any, it was intended to render judgment, and that the affidavit of the plaintiff's attorney could not be received for that purpose.

An entry that a verdict of guilty was rendered, and that the state recovered of the defendant — dollars, is no judgment, and therefore the court may afterwards render judgment on the verdict thus recorded. Easterling v. State, 35 Miss. 210.

The Failure of the Clerk to Fill In the Amount of the judgment, in blank spaces left for that purpose, until fourteen months after entry of the judgment, did not render it invalid on collateral attack, though it might sustain a writ of error. *Lind v. Where the amount is recited in the commencement of the judgment, the judgment is sufficiently certain. Burge v. Shirk, 10 Ind. 396.

A judgment of affirmation not stating the amount is sufficiently certain if it can be made certain by reference to the original judgment. Benedict v. Dillehunt, 4 Ill. 287.

A judgment that the plaintiff recover $205.79, his damages assessed by the jury, less $5.79 remitted by the plaintiff, is in effect a judgment for $200, and is sufficiently certain. Guild v. Hall, 91 Ill. 223.

For other illustrations see Hansen v. Rounsavell, 74 Ill. 238; Warbington v. Norris, 3 How. (Miss.) 227.

Judgments Held Uncertain as to Amount. — Where the judgment entirely omits the sum adjudged, and makes no reference to the verdict, it is erroneous for uncertainty although the entry commences by a recital of the verdict, which is for a sum certain. Barnett v. Caruth, 22 Tex. 173.

Where the verdict was for $90 and interest, a judgment entered thereon for $90 and interest was reversed and rendered for the aggregate, it being uncertain, as the interest should run to the date of judgment and then draw interest as principal. Tankersley v. Silburn, Minor (Ala.) 185.

See also infra, VII. Interest.

Illustrations. — In Downing v. Dean, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 380, it was held that a decree for ten per cent. damages, without ascertaining their aggregate amount, was irregular.

In Mason v. Chambers, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 426, it was held that a decree upon the dissolution of an injunction must state the amount of damages or the sum upon which they are given and the rate of damages. See also, to the same effect, Landerman v. McKinson, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 234.

In Lewis v. Smith, 2 S. & R. (Pa.) 142, it was held that on confession it is sufficient to render judgment generally, without stating the amount, where the demand is in the nature of a debt that can be ascertained by calculation.

The court is not required to state the exact amount coming to each party in an action by an heir for a distributive share, if such amounts can be readily found by a mere calculation. Biddle v. Pierce, 13 Ind. App. 239.

A decree containing the necessary data from which, by mere computation, the amount to be paid can be determined, is sufficiently certain to cause the running of interest thereon. Phillips v. Edsall, 127 Ill. 535.

Va. 688. But compare Adickes v. Allison, 21 S. Car. 259, wherein the decision of the circuit judge disposed of all the issues, directed judgment for the balance due on a former judgment particularly stated in the record, and ordered execution to issue, but referred it to the clerk to calculate the interest and ascertain the balance. This was held to constitute a final judgment in proper form. See also Young v. Mackall, 3 Md. Ch. 398, wherein it was held that a judgment rendered for the penalty of the bond in a suit to be released on payment of such a sum as a person named shall find due is a final judgment, and may be set up as a claim against the estate of the defendant, although the referee did not ascertain the amount due till after the defendant's death.

When the sum on which the damages are decreed is not stated in the decree, but is left to be ascertained by a calculation by the clerk, under directions which might, from the manner in which they are given, be readily misapprehended, the decree is erroneous. Landerman v. McKinson, 5 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 234.

3. Ellis v. Dunn, 3 Ala. 632; Dyer v. Hatch, 1 Ark. 339; Barnett v. Caruth, 22 Tex. 173.

Thus, a judgment for "said sum of — dollars, so assessed as aforesaid," referring to a verdict for a definite sum, has been upheld. Ellis v. Dunn, 3 Ala. 632. See also Dyer v. Hatch, 1 Ark. 339.

4. Dickinson v. Mobile Branch Bank, 12 Ala. 54; Hinckley v. Stebbins, (Cal. 1892) 29 Pac. Rep. 52; Kamp v. Branch Crooks Saw Co., 47 Ill. App. 548.

If judgment is rendered for two sums separately, instead of the aggregate of them, and yet by this informality the defendant is not subject to the payment of more, either in debt, damages, or costs, than he would be by a judgment entered with technical formality, it is not error. Deering v. Halbert, 2 Litt. (Ky.) 292.

age.¹ A judgment for one amount, to be discharged by the payment of a larger amount, is erroneous,² as is also, except in the case of penal bonds, a judgment for one amount, to be discharged by a lesser amount.³

(2) Specifying Denomination. — In specifying the amount of recovery the judgment must contain some word or character indicating the denomination of money intended.⁴ Judgments for a numerical amount, without any word or sign indicating what units of value are intended, have been held void,⁵ but a

1. Thus where in the entering up of judgment the verdict of the jury was correctly followed, but a mistake in calculation was made at the conclusion in stating what the damages, costs, and charges amounted to in all, the words specifying such total sum were disregarded as surplusage. Longstreet v. Lafitte, 2 Spears L. (S. Car.) 664.

2. Fowler v. Cowper, Sneed (Ky.) 58.

3. Steinback v. Lisa, 1 Mo. 228, holding further that the clause in regard to the lesser amount could not be disregarded as surplusage, leaving the judgment to stand for the larger amount.

In Ross v. Gill, 1 Wash. (Va.) 91, the judgment was for one amount to be discharged by a lesser amount. This last clause was held surplusage, and unwarranted by law, but, as the plaintiff did not complain, it was regarded as a release of so much of the judgment. At all events, it was a defect of which the defendant could not complain.

Illustration. — "The judgment, as appears by the record before us, is not for any definite sum of money. The judgment is for four hundred and sixty-one and 53-100 damages. Whether this amount is cents, mills, or what, we are left entirely to conjecture. We have no right to indulge in presumptions as to what was found by the court; we must take the record as it reads. A judgment should be for a certain and definite sum of money. This judgment is not for any sum of money, and can only be regarded as a nullity." Carpenter v. Sherfy, 71 Ill. 427. See also Lawrence v. Fast, 20 Ill. 338; Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Chicago, 53 Ill. 81.

5. Peter v. Hill, 13 Ill. App. 36; Carpenter v. Sherfy, 71 Ill. 427.

"The ground relied upon for a reversal is that the judgment is indefinite and uncertain. There is no word, mark, or character which in any manner indicates for what the judgment is rendered. It is true that there are the figures '383.18,' but whether they are intended to represent that number of American, English, or German coins we are left entirely to conjecture. Nor is anything found in the record from which it can be certainly inferred. It may be said that indebtedness is usually for dollars and decimal fractions of a dollar, but we know it is not of unfrequent occurrence that agreements are made for sums in other coins, especially when made in other countries. The decisions of this court are uniform that, in a judgment for money, the sum must be specified in words or figures with some mark or character designating the precise sum. Lawrence v. Fast, 20 Ill. 338; Lane v. Bommelmänn, 21 Ill. 143; Eppinger v. Kirby, 23 Ill. 521; Dukes v. Rowley, 24 Ill. 211; Baily v. Doolittle, 24 Ill. 577. This case falls clearly within the rule announced in these cases, and no reason is perceived why it should not be governed by it." Avery v. Babcock, 35 Ill. 175.

more reasonable view prevails in some states, and such judgments are upheld where it appears clearly from the record what was intended.¹

(3) Words, Figures, and Signs. — The amount of a judgment should be expressed in words rather than figures,² and it has been held insufficient and erroneous to enter the amount in figures;³ but it would seem to be the better opinion that a judgment for a sum of money so expressed is valid against collateral attack at least, and according to some decisions it is not even erroneous.⁴

d. In Hay v. Imley, 3 N. J. L. 401, it was stated that all the precedents in debt, assumpsit, etc., include the costs with the sum recovered, and form one entire judgment.

7. In New Jersey, if a judgment be rendered for the amount of the debt or blank, no judgment for costs is rendered.¹ In other jurisdictions the amount of costs may be left blank and be filled in afterwards by the clerk.² In Missouri the practice is to render judgment for costs generally, and the clerk thereafter computes their amount and indorses it upon the execution.³

e. SPECIFYING MEDIUM OF PAYMENT — (1) Foreign or Domestic Money. — A judgment should be for domestic dollars and cents, and not for foreign money.⁴ Foreign currency is regarded damages, and for costs, without stating the amount of costs, execution can issue only for the debt or damages. Cook v. Brister, 19 N. J. L. 73.

Separate Statement of Costs. — A judgment of a justice of the peace was as follows: "It is therefore considered by me that the plaintiff recover from the defendant the sum of $7.48 and his costs herein expended, taxed at $37.55, as follows: See margin." The court held that this was correct in form in its reference to costs, as it only allowed recovery by the plaintiff of his costs expended in the suit; and, further, that separately stating or entering the costs in itemized tables on the margin of the record was a sufficient compliance with the requirements of the law in regard to separate taxing and entering the costs on the record. Kissinger v. Staley, 44 Neb. 783.

1. Costello v. Wilhelm, 13 Kan. 232.

In Linton v. Housh, 4 Kan. 535, a judgment for the plaintiff for a sum certain "and costs of suit, taxed at $—," was held regular, and, the amount of costs being left blank, not a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for more than his own costs, as it could not be presumed that any of the defendant's costs would be taxed; if so, the error could be corrected on motion. See also Clippinger v. Ingram, 17 Kan. 584.

A judgment which purports to be for costs only, and in which the amount thereof is left blank, is erroneous. Mosher v. Uinta County, 2 Wyoming 462. Compare Palmer v. Glover, 73 Ind. 529; Frankel v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 70 Iowa 424.

Blank for Costs — Effect on Judgments. — A judgment is not rendered irregular by failure to fill the blank for costs where the right to costs has been waived by the failure of the party entitled thereto to file a memorandum thereof within the time prescribed by statute. Cantwell v. McPherson, 2 Idaho 1044.

A judgment is unaffected by the taxation of costs until the actual entry of the costs therein. Leyde v. Martin, 16 Minn. 38. See also, generally, Richardson v. Rogers, 37 Minn. 461.

The adjustment of the costs by the clerk without notice is not sufficient ground to justify setting aside a judgment otherwise regular. Macomber v. New York, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. for public use the court could find its value in gold coin and render a judgment in gold coin.

1. Chamberlin v. Vance, 51 Cal. 75; Livingston v. Morgan, 53 Cal. 23.

The Vaughan, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 258, was a libel against a carrier for the loss of barley. The place of shipment was a port in Canada, and the value of the barley lost was estimated in currency of Canada which was equivalent in value to the gold coin of the United States. In the District Court the decree was rendered generally, and it was admitted that the decree was solvable in legal-tender notes, which were then largely depreciated, but it was held that this was an incident of the suit in the forum where it was brought, and that the result was unavoidable. On appeal the Circuit Court applied the same rule of damages, but the decree gave the value of the Canada currency in legal-tender notes, allowing for their depreciation. On an appeal to the Supreme Court, this judgment was affirmed, although the legal-tender notes had so largely appreciated in value that the libelants received almost twice the value of the barley. This was on the ground that the decree was right when rendered, and therefore could not be disturbed. Chief Justice Chase rendered a dissenting opinion, in which Justices Clifford and Field concurred, holding that the judgment should have been for gold coin. The chief justice said: "This case strikingly illustrates the evil consequences of rendering judgments payable in legal-tender currency. Hardly anything fluctuates in value more than such judgments. Every day witnesses a change. The judgment debtor gains by depreciation and loses by appreciation. Doubtless, if the legal-tender clauses of the Currency Acts are constitutional, such judgments may be rendered; but there is nothing in those acts which requires that judgments for damages estimated in coin shall be entered otherwise than for coin. On the contrary, we have decided in several cases that judgments for coin debts may be rendered payable in coin. In the present case the amount of indemnity was ascertained in gold, and, in our judgment, the decree should have been for that amount payable in coin. This would have done exact justice between the parties and would have been in harmony with the principles of the cases referred to. It would have given indemnity, and not double indemnity."

In Nevada, by a statute, a judgment in gold coin for damages in an action of tort is proper. Clark v. Nevada Land, etc., Co., 6 Nev. 203; Treadway v. Sharon, 7 Nev. 37.

2. Phillips v. Speyers, 49 N. Y. 653, holding that judgment in an action for conversion of gold should be for gold dollars, and not for the value of such gold in currency, following Kellogg v. Sweeney, 46 N. Y. 291.

In Independent Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 104 Mass. 192, an insurance agent had failed to pay over to his principal premiums collected in gold. The action was brought sounding in contract, and judgment was rendered for the face amount in currency of the gold converted. This judgment was reversed on appeal, and judgment was directed to be rendered for gold.

In an action against a common carrier for failing to deliver to the plaintiff on demand ninety double eagles of the coinage of the United States, received in a bag from the plaintiff's agent in Mexico, since the passage of the Act of Congress making treasury notes a legal tender for the payment of debts, the measure of damages is the value, computed in such treasury notes, of the coin considered as a commodity, at the time when and place where it should

Judgments for Duties and Taxes which are payable only in gold and silver may be specifically rendered for gold and silver coin, as nothing else is legal tender therefor.¹

(b) Contracts to Pay in Coin — aa. EARLY CONFLICTING CASES. — The earlier decisions in the various courts are very conflicting and contradictory as to the form of the judgment to be entered upon a contract providing for payment in gold or silver coin. In a number of states the validity of such contracts was denied,² and such contracts were held to amount to nothing more than contracts to pay the nominal value in any money which was a legal tender, and consequently the judgments to be entered thereon were required to be for money generally, without specifying the kind.³ In other cases it was held that the judgment on a con-have been delivered, with interest on such amount from the date of demand. Cushing v. Wells, 98 Mass. 550.

In State Bank v. Burton, 27 Ind. 426, judgment was rendered for the value in currency of a special deposit of gold coin which had been converted. Compare Frothingham v. Morse, 45 N. H. 545, where, in a similar case, judgment was rendered in currency for only the face amount of the special deposit converted.

tract calling for gold or silver should be for the value of the coin in currency;¹ while in still other cases it was held that the judgment should be in the alternative, for the coin or its value in currency.²

bb. PRESENT ESTABLISHED DOCTRINE. — Subsequently to the decision of most of the cases cited in the preceding section, the validity of express contracts to pay coined dollars of a kind specified was sustained in the federal courts as not being within the Legal Tender Acts, and the doctrine was established that such contracts can be satisfied only by the tender of payment of coined dollars of the kind specified, and judgments in suits brought on such contracts should be entered for coined dollars and parts of dollars.³ These decisions of the United States Supreme Court are controlling upon the state courts, and in effect overrule all previous inconsistent decisions.⁴ They have been followed in practically every state decision since rendered, and the rule is now well established.⁵ The rule established by the foregoing

It was held in Essex Co. v. Pacific Mills, 14 Allen (Mass.) 389, that when rent was payable in silver of a certain fineness, its value should be estimated in treasury notes, because these notes are the most common currency in use and most easily procured, and the currency by which it is to be presumed that the debtor will satisfy the judgment.

In Sears v. Dewing, 14 Allen (Mass.) 413, which was an action to recover rent due upon a lease, in which the lessee agreed to pay "the yearly rent of four ounces, two pennyweights, and twelve grains of pure gold, in coined money," it was held by a majority of the court that, though the gold was by the terms of the contract to be paid in the form of money, yet the contract regarded it as a commodity, and the value of the gold should be estimated in treasury notes, and the judgment rendered for its value in treasury notes. cc. SPECIFIC CONTRACT ACTS. — Before the present established doctrine became settled by the decisions, it was specifically incorporated in the statutes of some of the states. These statutes were known as Specific Contract Acts, and provided in substance that when contracts were made payable in a specific kind of money, or in an action for the recovery of money received in a fiduciary capacity, or for the use of another, judgments should be entered for the amount due in the kind specified or received.² These

In Nevada such a law was held unconstitutional and in conflict with the laws of Congress. Milliken v. Sloat, 1 Nev. 573; Mitchell v. Bromberger, 1 Nev. 604; Fox v. Barstow, 1 Nev. 612; Sigismund v. Troianovich, 1 Nev. 612. But its validity was afterwards recognized. Linn v. Minor, 4 Nev. 462. And finally it was held that the necessity for such a law did not exist, as without it courts possessed the power in question. Wells v. Van Sickle, 6 Nev. 50.

In Idaho a similar statute was pronounced void as being in conflict with the Legal Tender Acts. Betts v. Butler, 1 Idaho 185, following Milliken v. Sloat, 1 Nev. 573, which, as seen in the preceding note, was subsequently overruled.

In Kentucky an early statute provided statutes and the decisions thereunder are not of much present importance, as the right to render such judgments is now established independently of statute.

(c) Contracts for Coin or Equivalent Currency. — It has been held that the judgment upon a contract payable in coin or its equivalent in currency should be in the alternative, for coin or currency.¹ In other cases it has been held that the judgment should be in currency for an amount equal to the face value plus the premium of the coin,² while in still other cases it has been held that the judgment should be for gold alone.³

(d) Conformity to Pleadings and Verdict — Pleadings and Issues. — Judgments for a specific kind of coin must be supported by the case made by the pleadings.⁴ This rule was applied under the Spe-that when a contract was made payable in gold or silver, the judgment should specify that fact. This statute was recognized and enforced in Webb v. Moore, 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 483, but it does not seem to have been noticed in later cases. See Johnson v. Vickers, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 266; Riley v. Sharp, 1 Bush (Ky.) 348.

1. Wells v. Van Sickle, 6 Nev. 45.

In Atkinson v. Lanier, 69 Ga. 460, it was held that the judgment on such a contract should be for gold, or its equivalent in currency at the time of the rendition of judgment, and that it was error to render judgment for the value of the gold in currency at the time of maturity of the contract, and Bond v. Greenwald, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 453, where an exactly opposite conclusion was reached, was disapproved. Compare The Vaughan, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 258. See also Lane v. Gluckauf, 28 Cal. 288.

2. Mitchell v. Henderson, 63 N. Car. 643.

In Jones v. Smith, 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 552, it was held that, on a contract for specie or its equivalent, the judgment should be merely for the face amount in legal-tender notes. This case was overruled in Church v. Howard, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 5, where it was held that the judgment in such a case should be for the value of the specie in legal-tender notes. This case was reversed in Church v. Howard, 79 N. Y. 415, but upon other points, and the question here discussed was not considered.

3. Burnett v. Stearns, 33 Cal. 468; Reese v. Stearns, 29 Cal. 273, holding that, in an action on a contract to pay another a specific number of dollars in gold coin, or its equivalent in legal currency, a judgment made payable in the alternative, in gold coin or its equivalent in legal-tender notes, was erroneous, and that the Specific Contract Act did not authorize the entry of alternative judgments upon such contracts. Compare Lane v. Gluckauf, 28 Cal. 288, where it was said that if a note is made payable in the alternative, either in gold or legal-tender notes, a judgment rendered on it may also be in the alternative or may be rendered payable in gold alone.

4. Watson v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co., 50 Cal. 523; Chamberlin v. Vance, 51 Cal. 75; Emery v. Langley, 1 Idaho 694; Belford v. Woodward, 158 Ill. 122.

Disregarding Prayer. — "Inasmuch as United States legal-tender notes were the general standard of commercial value in the country at the time the action was brought, it was no uncommon error to suppose that the only way to obtain the full benefit of a contract expressly payable in coin was to procure a judgment for an amount of equivalent value, payable in such notes. The plaintiff, it is true, fell into this mistake in the form of the judgment asked in his petition, but it embraced the substance of the remedy to which he was entitled, the full value of his note. It is, however, sufficient to say that in cases where parties have sought the same form of remedy on coin contracts as that claimed in this, the Supreme Court of the United States have decided that it was the duty of the court, in order that the legal rights of parties may be preserved, to render judgments expressly payable in coin. This ruling we feel bound to follow." Phillips v. Dugan, 21 Ohio St. 472.

Immaterial Variance. — It is not a cific Contract Acts.¹ Where the pleadings or process do not specify gold, a judgment by default or nil dicit for gold is erroneous.²

Verdict or Findings. — A coin judgment must likewise be sustained by the verdict or findings.³ So, where the verdict is for gold or legal tender in the alternative, a judgment for legal tender only is not in accordance with the verdict.⁴

(e) Costs. — It has been held in several cases that, although judgment for the principal sum is properly rendered payable in gold, the judgment for costs must be rendered payable in currency,⁵ but there is one case to the effect that where a contract is made payable in a specific kind of money, the judgment enforcing it may enforce the payment of costs and interests in the kind of money mentioned in the contract, for the reason that costs and interest become a component part of the judgment.⁶

(f) Effect of Unauthorized Judgment for Coin. — A judgment for gold or silver coin in a case where such a judgment is not authorized is irregular and erroneous, but it is not in any event void.⁷

sufficient variance between a decree and the bill, in a foreclosure suit to render the decree erroneous, that the bill alleges that the bonds were to be paid in gold coin, and the decree is for payment in lawful money. Wallace v. Loomis, 97 U. S. 146.

1. McComb v. Reed, 28 Cal. 281; Goldsmith v. Sawyer, 46 Cal. 209; Watson v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co., 50 Cal. 523. See supra, IV. 5. c. (2) (b) cc. Specific Contract Acts.

2. Default Judgments. — Lamping v. Hyatt, 27 Cal. 99; Wallace v. Eldredge, 27 Cal. 495; Belford v. Woodward, 158 Ill. 122.

If the complaint in an action on a judgment avers that the judgment sued on was rendered payable in gold coin, and the defendant makes default, the clerk should enter judgment payable in the same kind of money. Wallace v. Eldredge, 27 Cal. 498. To the same effect see Harding v. Cowing, 28 Cal. 212.

3. North Pac. R. Co. v. Reynolds, 50 Cal. 280; McDonald v. Mission View Homestead Assoc., 51 Cal. 210.

Verdict Not Supported by Pleadings. — Where there is no issue made as to whether the plaintiff's demand is made payable in gold coin, but a verdict is found for an amount in gold coin, the words "gold coin" in the verdict are surplusage, and should be disregarded in entering judgment. Watson v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co., 50 Cal. 523;

Chamberlin v. Vance, 51 Cal. 75; Belford v. Woodward, 158 Ill. 122.

In Ejectment if the court finds the value of the use and occupation of the premises in both gold and currency, a general judgment may be rendered for the currency value. Carpentier v. Small, 35 Cal. 346 [citing Carpentier v. Atherton, 25 Cal. 564; Spencer v. Prindle, 28 Cal. 276; Reese v. Stearns, 29 Cal. 273].

On Verdict Not Specifying Medium of Payment. — In Winans v. Hassey, 48 Cal. 634, it was held that if the complaint alleges that the contract sued on called for payment in gold coin, and the answer admits the allegation, the plaintiff, if he recovers, is entitled to a judgment payable in gold coin, and the verdict of the jury need not specify the kind of currency or money to be recovered.

In Flournoy v. Healy, 31 Tex. 590, it

6. Designation of Parties — a. IN GENERAL. — A judgment should designate the parties for and against whom it is rendered,¹ and they should be described with sufficient certainty to enable the clerk to issue execution.²

Variance. — The record must show the identity of the parties mentioned in various stages of the suit; or, in other words, there must not be a variance between the parties for or against whom the judgment is rendered and the parties indicated by the pleadings.³ The principle of idem sonans may be invoked, however, was held that the words "in specie" might be regarded as surplusage and struck out on appeal.

In Belford v. Woodward, 158 Ill. 122, it was held that a default judgment ordering payment in gold coin of the amount adjudged is void as to such a provision where the complaint alleged no promise to pay in coin, but that this did not invalidate the judgment as a whole.

In Windisch v. Gussett, 30 Tex. 744, it was held that an erroneous judgment for gold or silver should be corrected by a writ of error, and that an injunction against it would not lie.

1. Sutton v. Louisville, 5 Dana (Ky.) 28; Moody v. Deutsch, 85 Mo. 237; McClellan v. Cornwell, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 298; Alston v. Emmerson, 83 Tex. 231; Smith v. Chenault, 48 Tex. 455; Maxwell v. Stewart, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 79.

More specifically as to the sufficiency of a judgment in this regard see infra, IV. 6. b. In Whose Favor; and infra, IV. 6. c. Against Whom.

In Johnson v. Richardson, 52 Tex. 481, it was held that although a judgment should set forth the full names of the parties for and against whom it is rendered, a failure in this respect will not be cause for reversal in the absence of an assignment of error pointing out the defect.

Reference to the Caption or to the Pleadings, Process, or Proceedings in a case may be made in determining the sufficiency of a judgment in respect to naming the parties. Taylor v. Branham, 35 Fla. 297.

The style of the cause is sufficient if the memorandum made by the clerk indicates with reasonable certainty to what suit it relates. Collins v. Hyslop, 11 Ala. 508.

In Smith v. Redus, 9 Ala. 99, it was held that where the names of the parties to the suit are not fully stated upon the margin of the judgment entry, the defect is amendable by reference to the papers in the case, and may be considered as amended, although the amendment is not in point of fact made; and, for the purpose of informing the court that the judgment was intended to apply to the particular cause, extrinsic evidence is admissible.

Illustrations. — Where one of the defendants was sued by the name of John Cox, and the service was returned upon James Cox, and the judgment was rendered against J. Cox, this was held to be erroneous unless there was something in the record to show that the person served was the person sued. Sutter v. Cox, 6 Cal. 415.

Where a suit is commenced in the name of J. T. D. and three others, and to obviate a variance in the names of the parties to the judgment,¹ and where, upon an inspection of the whole record, the identity of the parties named in the judgment and the pleading is clear, the apparent variance will be held to be a clerical misprision and immaterial, or at least amendable.²

The Transposition of the words "plaintiff" and "defendant" in a judgment is not fatal.³

b. IN WHOSE FAVOR. — A judgment not designating in whose favor it is rendered is void for uncertainty.⁴

the judgment is rendered in the name of J. T. D. & Co., the judgment is not void. Ellis v. Jones, 51 Mo. 180.

The fact that a certain corporation is named as defendant in a complaint, while judgment is rendered against another not named, does not render the judgment irregular, where the latter appeared and filed an answer which, if true, showed the identity of the two. Haynes v. Backman, (Cal. 1892) 31 Pac. Rep. 746. See also Austin Water, etc., Co. v. Makemson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. Rep. 588.

A variance between the writ and declaration, and verdict and judgment, as to the Christian name of the defendant, is fatal, and avoids the judgment. Sweazy v. Nettles, 2 Mo. 6.

Statute of Jeofails and Amendments. — Where the writ, pleadings, and contract speak only of Frederick D. Conrad, and judgment is for the plaintiff against Daniel Frederick Conrad, the defendant, the defect is cured by the statute of jeofails. Conrad v. Griffey, 11 How. (U. S.) 480.

Where an action was brought in the name of J. Brooks, W. E. Colton, and W. E. Churchill, partners trading under the name and firm of "Brooks, Colton and Company," and the judgment was in the name of "Brooks, Colton & Co.," it was held that this was a variance for which at common law the judgment might have been reversed, but that the error was cured by the statute of amendments. *Brooks v. Illustrations. — In an action against James L. Thompkins and Gilbert L. McMurphy, the name "Gabriel" was used in the judgment instead of the name "Gilbert." It was held that as it clearly appeared from the entire record that the name "Gabriel" was a clerical error, such error did not affect the sale upon execution against the real defendants. Halsell v. McMurphy, 86 Tex. 100.

The misspelling of the Christian name of one of the defendants in the title of the cause in the judgment record is not material where the name was correctly spelled in prior proceedings. Kerr v. Swallow, 33 Ill. 379.

Where an action was brought in the name of A, B, and C, copartners, under the name of "A B & Co.," and judgment was rendered and execution was issued in favor of "A B & Co.," the variance was held not fatal, as the true names were once given in the pleadings. *McNamee v. A Judgment Nisi which does not designate in whose favor it was rendered is insufficient to support a final judgment. Spence v. Simmons, 16 Ala. 828.

A Decree in Favor of a Fictitious Person is void. U. S. v. Samperyac, Hempst. (U. S.) 118.

Illustrations of Insufficient Designations. — A judgment in favor of the "officers of the Circuit Court of Mobile" is a nullity, and no writ of error can be sued out upon it. Patterson v. Circuit Ct., 11 Ala. 740.

The words, "whereupon it is considered by this court have and recover of said defendant the sum of," etc., do not constitute a judgment, there being no decision for or in favor of anybody. Fuller Watchman's Electrical Detector Co. v. Louis, 50 Ill. App. 428.

A judgment in favor of "Rawlings and Son" was reversed because the plaintiffs were not named with sufficient certainty. Rhea v. Rawlings, 3 Cranch (C. C.) 256.

A decree that money should be paid to "the owners of the said judgment," without determining who those owners were, is objectionable. De Wolf v. Long, 7 Ill. 679.

"Legatees," "Representatives," "Descendants," or "Heirs." — A judgment in favor of "legatees" or "legal representatives" of a deceased person is void for uncertainty. Betts v. Blackwell, 2 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 373; Joseph v. Joseph, 5 Ala. 280; Kyle v. Mays, 22 Ala. 673.

A judgment for the "descendants" or "heirs" of a deceased person has been held not to be void for uncertainty, although perhaps erroneous. Shackleford v. Fountain, 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 252; Parsons v. Spencer, 83 Ky. 305; Stevenson v. Flournoy, 89 Ky. 561.

The Insertion of the Names of the parties in the entry of the final judgment is unnecessary if there be enough in it to connect it with the other parts of the record in which the names are entered, so as to make the judgment a part of the record; and hence, if the clerk in making the entry err in the name of the plaintiff, as, for instance, by using "Brandon Bank" for "Mississippi and Alabama Railroad Company," it will be immaterial, and the judgment good. Grimball v. Mississippi, etc., R. Co., 3 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 38.

And so where the declaration sets out the names of the partners, a judgment which merely states the firm name and recites that "the plaintiffs recover of the defendant," etc., is good. Presley v. Anderson, 42 Miss. 274.

Mistake in Middle Initial. — Where the action is by the guardian of a minor, a judgment in favor of the guardian by name is not erroneous because of a variance as to the middle initial of the minor as stated in the pleadings and judgment. Crawford v. Wilcox, 68 Tex. 109.

A Judgment Against Attached Property, instead of against the defendant, is erroneous. Conover v. Conover, 17 N. J. L. 187.

In Crowell v. Johnson, 2 Neb. 146, a judgment which first found the amount due from the defendant to the plaintiff, and then ordered the sum found in his favor to be paid from the proceeds of the attached property, which was then in the custody of the law, was held very informal, but neither erroneous nor void.

Illustration of Sufficient Designation. — A judgment against "James and Wil-

Where a defendant is equally well known by either of two names, a judgment against him in either name is good as against him. Isaacs v. Mintz, (City Ct.) 11 N. Y. Supp. 423.

Where an infant defendant to a bill of revivor is described as the deceased defendant's only infant son, whose name is unknown, the decree rendered against him is not void for uncertainty, and cannot be collaterally impeached, especially when the infant, by a subsequent bill to redeem the land sold under the decree, shows that he is the person against whom the bill of revivor was filed. Preston v. Dunn, 25 Ala. 507.

See also Coolbaugh v. Huether, 6 Kulp (Pa.) 209, where a judgment entry was held sufficient to show a judgment against all three defendants.

Where the Defendant Was Sued in a Fictitious Name, as authorized by statute, it was held that the complaint must be amended before judgment, by inserting the true name, or it would be reversed. San Francisco v. Burr, (Cal. 1894) 36 Pac. Rep. 771.

In an action against Frederick D. Conrad, a judgment against "Daniel Frederick Conrad, the defendant," is good, as the name may be considered as surplusage, the party being sufficiently identified by the words "the defendant." Conrad v. Griffey, 11 How. (U. S.) 480.

A judgment is operative against all of the parties to the action, even where the names are incorrectly given in the judgment or are altogether omitted from it. McCartey v. Kittrell, 55 Miss. 253.

Reference to Other Parts of Record.—

A judgment against defendants generally, without mention of names, may be explained by reference to the caption, record, or pleadings. Collins v. Hyslop, 11 Ala. 508; *Finnagan v. Construction with Reference to Verdict.

— In Taylor v. Taylor, 64 Ind. 356, the verdict was against "the defendant." The judgment was rendered against "defendants." The word "defendant" was subsequently used in the entry. It was held that the letter "s" in "defendants" was a mere mispension of the clerk, and did not include one made a party defendant on his own motion.

See also Lamar v. Williams, 39 Miss. 342, where the verdict was in favor of a part of the defendants, and against the others, and a judgment entered thereon against "the defendants" was held not erroneous, as the judgment that is to say, it will be limited to those defendants who have been served with process or who have appeared.¹

A Judgment Against "the Defendant" has been held good against all the defendants, where the use of the singular number was evidently a clerical error.² In other cases a judgment against "the defendant," where there were several, has been held bad as to all for uncertainty,³ except where the record showed which one of the several was meant.⁴

Christian Name or Initials. — In a judgment against a party, omitting his Christian name⁵ or using the initials only of his Christian name⁶ is a mere irregularity and will not render the judgment void.

would be construed with reference to the verdict upon which it was rendered, and would be deemed to be against only those defendants against whom the verdict was given.

Compare Henry v. Halsey, 5 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 573, wherein it was held that where one of two defendants makes default, and the other pleads and a verdict is found against him on his plea, a judgment entered in the singular number against "the defendant" will be construed to be against the one who pleaded alone, and not to embrace the other, and the judgment will therefore be erroneous in not disposing of the case as against the defendant who had not pleaded.

A judgment that the plaintiff recover from "the defendant" so much damages, "together with his costs," etc., is, upon its face, a judgment against the defendant remaining of record only, the action as to the codefendant having been dismissed. Haines v. Amerine, 48 Ill. App. 570.

Omission of Middle Initial. — The omission of the initial of the middle name of the defendant, in the entry and docket of a judgment recovered against him, does not render the judgment invalid, or prevent its becoming a lien upon his real estate as against subsequent purchasers from him in good faith. Clute v. Emmerich, 26 Hun (N. Y.) 10; Hopper v. Lucas, 86 Ind. 43. Compare Wood v. Reynolds, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 406.

6. Oakley v. Pegler, 30 Neb. 628.

The Use of Initial Letters for the corporate name of the defendant in the caption of the minute entry of a judgment is not a material error, where the name is fully stated in the summons,

Where a Party Is Sued in a Wrong Name, his failure to plead the misnomer in abatement operates as an estoppel to object to the judgment.¹

Miscellaneous Cases. — A judgment against "the owners" of a boat, without any other designation or personal identification, is erroneous.² A judgment against "the administrator of A B, who was administrator of C D," is good where the record shows who is meant.³ A judgment for the plaintiff is equivalent to a judgment against the defendant, where there is but one.⁴ A judgment for the defendant, in a suit by an attorney in fact, is a judgment against the attorney in fact.⁵

7. Description of Property. — Where a judgment affects the title to property, real or personal, the property must be described, and the description should be specific and certain.⁶ An impossible,⁷ wrong,⁸ or uncertain description, or no description at all, renders the judgment erroneous and void.⁹

complaint, and all other papers in the case. Lampkin v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 106 Ala. 287.

In Bridges v. Layman, 31 Ind. 384, it was said that the judgment should contain not only the defendant's Christian name, but also his surname, but that the omission of the Christian name, by giving only the initials, would render the proceedings merely irregular, and not void.

Where There Is an Evident Omission in the general description of the property named in a declaration in ejectment, but which description is immediately followed by a correct and particular description, it is no misprision of the clerk to follow the latter description in entering the judgment. *Anderson v. Certainty.—In an action to recover possession of personal property, a reference in the judgment to the findings, and in the findings to the com-

the report of a commissioner for a description is sufficient.¹

8. Date. — A judgment should show with certainty the time of its rendition.² The omission of the date, however, is a mere irregularity, and will not render the judgment void.³ The date may be expressed in figures.⁴

Presumption as to Date. — At common law, where the date of a judgment did not appear, it was presumed to have been entered plaint, for a description of the property, is inexcusably circuitous, but the description is not uncertain. Certum est quod certum reddi potest. Kelly v. McKibben, 54 Cal. 192.

Where the description in the pleadings is so vague that the property cannot be identified, a judgment generally that the plaintiff be put in "possession of the land sued for" will be set aside. Williams v. Kelso, 7 La. 409.

Where the judgment simply directs the sale of "the tract of land * * * described in the petition," and the petition seeks to enforce a lien on two tracts of land therein described, a sale under the judgment will be set aside. Lawless v. Barger, 9 Bush (Ky.) 665.

A judgment for the possession of personal property which merely describes it as "two stallion horses," and does not refer to any pleading or any other paper for further description, is bad for uncertainty and will be reversed. Cooke v. Aguirre, 86 Cal. 479.

Description by Reference Held Bad. — In Hilliard v. Rountree, (Ky. 1894) 24 S. W. Rep. 607, it was held that a judgment for the sale of the land "set out and described in the petition" is insufficient. Citing Lawless v. Barger, 9 Bush (Ky.) 665. See also Ross v. Adams, 13 Bush (Ky.) 370, wherein it is said that the description should be so certain and specific as to enable the officer to perform his duties without reference to or inspection of any other pleading in the cause.

2. Jones v. Acre, Minor (Ala.) 5; Bevington v. Buck, 18 Ind. 414.

Where a warrant was dated as of a certain day, and an execution dated the same day with the warrant, it was held that a judgment on the same piece of paper with them was thereby made sufficiently certain as to the time of its rendition. Clayton v. Fulp, 7 Jones L. (N. Car.) 444.

A judgment entry need not specify the particular hour. Wilson v. Greenwood, 5 Houst. (Del.) 519.

The caption of an order or decree, unless otherwise directed by the court, should correspond with the time of the actual entry of the decree. Barclay v. Brown, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 245.

Clerical Error May Be Shown. — A judgment recited its date as June 14, 1874. The suit was instituted March 29, 1875. The judgment appeared in the proceedings of the court for June 14, 1876. It was held that the date 1874 was manifestly in error, and that it was competent to read the entry preceding the judgment to show the clerical mistake. Sloan v. Thompson, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 419.

Judgment Nunc Pro Tunc. — A judgment entered nunc pro tunc as of the time when judgment nisi was taken, pursuant to a rule of court, should have expressed therein the date of the actual entry of the rule for final judgment, and the execution should be indorsed to the effect that interest shall be recovered from the date of the judgment nisi. McNamara v. New York, etc., R. Co., 56 N. J. L. 56.

3. Omission of Date. — Reed v. Lane, 96 Iowa 454; Clark v. Melton, 19 S. Car. 509.

The omission of the date which is established by law is immaterial, and it may be proved aliunde. Drake v. Drake, 7 La. Ann. 545.

The date of a judgment may be fixed by reference to the record of proceedings in the case. Cooper v. Cooper, 14 La. Ann. 675.

In Wiley v. Southerland, 41 Ill. 25, it was held that the date of a judgment is as material as any other part of it.

4. Warder v. Millard, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 581.

Tennessee Code (1896), § 64a, provides that "Roman numerals and Arabic figures are to be taken as part of the English language, and are always sufficient to express dates and amounts, unless otherwise imperatively directed by law." See also Chadwell v. Jones, 1 Tenn. Ch. 495.

as of the first day of the term at which it was rendered.¹ In some states, where the date does not appear, judgments are presumed to have been entered on the last day of the term.²

9. Stating Facts of Case. — As a general rule a judgment need not recite the facts upon which it is founded. It is sufficient if they be stated in the pleadings and ascertained by the judgment.³ Under the old equity practice it was the rule to recite the pleadings and the evidence in the decree, but this is not the rule generally in the United States, and in this respect there is no distinction between judgments at law and decrees in equity.⁴

10. Provisions as to Enforcement. — Ordinarily a Judgment Should Not Order Execution or Other Process provided by law for its enforcement.⁵

Where the entry of judgment was to the effect that the parties waived a jury and submitted the cause to the judgment of the court, and that, upon inspection of the pleadings, the court rendered judgment for the plaintiff, etc., it was held that the recital did not render the judgment erroneous as showing that it was rendered without evidence. Cook v. Hancock, 20 Tex. 2.

In Texas, by statute, it is provided that where judgment is rendered after an ex parte hearing, and on service by publication, the record shall include a statement of the facts. Pasch. Dig., art. 1488. In Byrnes v. Sampson, 74 Tex. 79, it was held that this statute applies in the case of a judgment against unknown heirs served by publication, whether or not there has been an appointment of an attorney in their behalf, as required in case of their failure to appear. In Hill v. Baylor, 23 Tex. 261, it was held that the incorporation of a statement of facts into the judgment is a compliance with this statute.

Facts Should Be Stated Specifically where necessary to be stated at all, and not by reference to matter in a pleading. Quigley v. Birdseye, 11 Mont. 439.

Missouri. — Houck v. Cross, 67 Mo. 151.

Harmless Error. — An erroneous award of execution will not avoid a judgment otherwise valid. McBane v. People, 50 Ill. 503.

The judgment should simply be that the one party or the other recover his debt or damages, as the case may be, without any order or direction specifying how the money should be paid by the debtor or made by the officer.¹ After judgment the law, and not the court, directs what proceedings should be had for the purpose of satisfying the amount adjudged to be due.²

A General Judgment Should Not Limit Its Collection to certain property or funds.³

An award of execution, in a suit for benefits assessed against highways in drainage proceedings, is a harmless error and a nullity. Highway Com'rs v. East Lake Fork Special Drainage Dist., 127 Ill. 581.

A Judgment Against a City for damages to property should not include a clause awarding execution. Danville v. Mitchell, 63 Ill. App. 647.

1. Reed v. Eldredge, 27 Cal. 347.

A judgment for liquidated damages for breach of a contract to purchase real estate, the amount of which has been deposited in a bank, and a certificate of deposit delivered to a third person to be delivered up on the joint order of the parties, should require the purchaser to give an order for such certificate, and direct the holder to deliver it to the plaintiff and the bank to pay it upon presentation. Pellas v. Motley, 143 N. Y. 657, 62 N. Y. St. Rep. 272.

Validity of Provisions as to Enforcement.

— A judgment containing a clause requiring the defendant to pay "forthwith" will not be reversed, since such clause is a mere nullity, and the judgment can be enforced only by execution. Simmons v. Craig, 137 N. Y. 550.

In a proceeding by a widow to compel an administrator to charge himself with certain property of the estate it is error, upon rendering a judgment against the defendant, to require that he give a bond to secure the judgment, and, in default of so doing, that a judgment shall issue against his property. Pea v. Pea, 35 Ind. 387.

In Houck v. Cross, 67 Mo. 151, a direction in the judgment as to its enforcement was held superfluous.

2. Reed v. Eldredge, 27 Cal. 347.

Courts should not render judgments which cannot be enforced by any process known to the law. Johnson v. Malloy, 74 Cal. 430.

3. Limitation to Certain Funds. — In East St. Louis v. Canty, 65 Ill. App.

325, the court were of the opinion that the part of a judgment which limited the collection thereof to certain funds should be rejected as surplusage, as the plaintiff was either entitled to a judgment to be specified in the ordinary manner, or to no judgment at all.

In Horton v. Garrison, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 31, the court said that no distinction could properly be made, by the court rendering the judgment, between real and personal property, as both were equally subject to the debt, and it was not necessary for the judgment to define what property was to be levied on further than to indicate that it was to be satisfied out of the property of the defendant.

In State v. Vogel, 14 Mo. App. 187, it was said: "It is not only the right, but the duty, of the clerk to look to the record in issuing execution to determine the legal effect of the judgment. So where, in judgment on scire facias to revive judgment against an executor, the judgment directed a levy upon goods and chattels, and said nothing about the lands of the testator, it was held that the execution did not depart from the judgment in requiring a levy upon lands, because, the nature of the judgment being apparent, the manner of enforcing it is prescribed by law. Houck v. Cross, 67 Mo. 152. Where a general judgment was rendered in attachment, where there was service by publication only, and the court had jurisdiction of the res, but not of the person of the defendant, though the judgment was general in form, it was held to be the duty of the clerk to look to the nature of the proceedings and the jurisdiction of the court, and to issue only that special execution which the law and the character of the service warrants. The general judgment might have been corrected by a nunc pro tunc entry, but until this was done it would authorize the issuing of a special execution only. Massey v. Scott 49 Mo. 278; Clark v. Holliday, 9

The Lien of a Judgment Need Not Be Declared in terms, as it exists by law independently of any provision therefor in the judgment.¹

Stay of Execution. — A judgment may, however, provide that execution shall be stayed in a proper case.²

Collection Without Relief, etc. — Or it may provide that the judgment shall be collected without relief from valuation or appraisement laws.³

In Equity Cases the court may, and usually does, prescribe and supervise the manner of the performance of its decrees.⁴

11. Exceptions and Saving Clauses. — A judgment at law upon the merits cannot be rendered without prejudice to the rights of the parties to bring another action upon the same grounds.⁵

When Limitation to Certain Funds Necessary and Proper. — Where a mutual insurance company is divided into several distinct and independent classes, the court, on motion, will limit the execution to run only against the property and funds belonging to the class in which the plaintiff was insured; and as the provisions of the charter that each class shall bear its own losses are a matter of public concern, no mere neglect of the defendants, as by failing to move for such a limitation, can be construed as a waiver. Judkins v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co., 39 N. H. 172. See also generally Farley v. Cammann, 43 Mo. App. 168.

1. "The Lien of a Judgment is in fact no part or portion of it, but only an effect or incident of it. It is invisible, of course, even on the face or in the body of it, and exists only in the binding force, effect, and operation which the law accords to it." Capelle v. Baker, 3 Houst. (Del.) 344.

A decree for alimony should not be made a lien upon specific real estate, and the land ordered sold for its payment, since Neb. Comp. Stat., c. 25, § 4a, making such a decree a lien upon real estate and enforceable in the same manner as a judgment at law. Nygren v. Nygren, 42 Neb. 408.

A judgment against the receiver of a railroad company, in an action for damages against him officially, should not prescribe any particular fund on which it should constitute a lien. Brown v. Brown, 71 Tex. 355.

2. Staying Execution. — See SUPERSEDEAS AND STAY OF PROCEEDINGS.

A provision in the charter of a mutual insurance company that no execution shall issue upon any judgment against the company until three months after the rendition thereof will be enforced by the court although the judgment be founded upon a foreign judgment rendered long before. Judkins v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co., 39 N. H. 172.

An order final in its nature cannot be given an effect other than that of a final order by a saving clause in the words "without prejudice." Such a saving has function only in chancery. William Skinner Mfg. Co. v. Sinsheimer, 37 Ill. App. 467.

In Porter v. Morere, 30 La. Ann. 230, it was said that the words "without prejudice," inserted in a judgment dissolving an injunction, do not, without more, convert the judgment into one of nonsuit.

In an Equity Cause, however, the chancellor may make exceptions or reserve control over his decree.¹

12. Surplusage. — The mere presence of unauthorized provisions in a judgment entry does not necessarily render the judgment either erroneous or void. Such provisions may frequently be disregarded as surplusage.²

13. Signing by Judge or Clerk — By Judge. — Generally a judgment is not required to be signed by the judge of the court rendering it, and his failure to sign the judgment will not invalidate it.³ In a few cases, however, it has been held that judgis allowed to tender the sequestered property, in payment of its value, to the proper officer within ten days after judgment, and a provision to that effect is not required to be in the judgment. The defendant can avail himself of this privilege without any order of the court. Mills v. Hackett, 65 Tex. 580.

A Court of Law Will Not Reserve Equities of the parties in its entry of judgment. Such a reservation, if entered, would not avail to give chancery jurisdiction. Barney v. Dimitt, Wright (Ohio) 44.

Meaning of "Signing Judgment" at Common Law. — "It is claimed that at common law judgments were not valid unless they were signed; and authorities are cited to show the same. 'Signing judgment,' however, at common law did not mean such a signing of judgments as we have been considering. None of the authorities cited by counsel for plaintiff in error show that a complete judgment entry, after it was made, needed to be signed, or that it would be invalid if not signed. The words 'signing judgment' and other similar words, as used at common law, meant a very different thing from signing the completed judgment entry. Such words simply meant the allowance or permission by the master, prothonotary, or other proper officer, to the plaintiff or defendant, to have judgment entered in his favor when the cause had reached such a stage that he was entitled to have a judgment rendered in his favor. Bouv. Law Dict., tit. Signing judgment; also, tit. Postea;

3 Bouv. Inst. 531, No. 3313, § 6. And the common-law authorities nearly always speak of one of the parties, generally the plaintiff, 'signing judgment,' and seldom speak of an officer's 'signing judgment.' Jac. Law Dict., tit. Judgment; 2 Tidd's Pr. 465, 469, 903. And the judgment here spoken of as thus 'signed' is in fact no judgment at all. It is not a completed judgment. It has not yet been entered in full. It has not yet become a part of the permanent rolls of the court. It is really only a right and a permission to take judgment, and although an execution may in some cases be issued on it, yet it cannot be used as evidence in any court of justice. 1 Bouv. Law Dict., tit. Judgment; 2 Phil. Ev. (3d Am. ed.) 134. It has been held in Pennsylvania that the full or completed judgment may not be made up for years after it is allowed, and then that it may be made up from the skeleton entries on the docket and trial list. Wilkins v. Anderson, 11 Pa. St. 399. Now if this is good law, it would not seem necessary that the judge should sign the completed judgment when it is made up. See also Eastman v. Harteau, 12 Wis. 267, and the numerous cases there cited by court and counsel. In this state it is the practice and the law (Civil Code, Gen. Stat. 707) to enter up all judgments in full, and to make them complete as soon as they are allowed by the court." French v. Pease, 10 Kan. 51.

In New York it is only where an interlocutory judgment is rendered, with a direction that a final judgment be settled by the court or referee, that the signature of the judge or referee to the final judgment is required. Clapp v. Hawley, 97 N. Y. 610.

Sufficiency of Signature. — The signature of the judge to his reasons for judgment is not a signature to the judgment. Saloy v. Collins, 30 La. Ann. 63. Neither is his signature to the minutes. Scott v. Goodrich, 24 La. Ann. 259.

Where an acting judge signed an required by statute to do so, will render the judgment void.¹ Other cases, however, have held that such statutes are directory merely, and not mandatory, and that a failure to comply therewith will not render the judgment void.² In Louisiana final, but not interlocutory, judgments must be signed by the judge.³

order dated at New Orleans as "Judge of the Second District Court, acting," etc., the signature was held sufficient to show that he signed as acting judge of the Second Judicial District of New Orleans, and not as judge of the Second Judicial District of Louisiana. Millaudon v. Davis, 17 La. Ann. 85.

It is no objection to a probate judgment that it is signed by the judge as "parish judge." Johnson v. Hamilton, 2 La. Ann. 206.

As to which judge should sign the judgment, where there are several judges of the court, see Stone v. State, 20 N. J. L. 404; Mill Creek Road, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 592.

Where there is no law requiring the signature of a justice of the peace to a judgment entered by him on his docket, his signature by initials to a judgment does not avoid it. Gunn v. Tackett, 67 Ga. 725.

The fact that the signature is not at the end of the judgment does not avoid the judgment where there is no contradiction or inconsistency between the clauses which precede and those which follow the signature. Hurley v. Hewett, 89 Me. 100.

Remedy by Motion or Writ of Error. — In Remington v. Cummings, 5 Wis. 138, it was held that error would not lie upon a judgment not signed, as required by law, by a judge or commissioner, because it was in fact no judgment. See also Moody v. Vreeland, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 125, wherein it was held to be no ground of error that a record of judgment in the Common Pleas was signed by a judge not authorized by law to sign it. This was said to be a mere irregularity, to be corrected by motion.

The requirement that a judge shall sign all judgments rendered in his court is merely directory, and his omission to do so will not avoid the judgment as to strangers, although it might, in connection with other evidence, be proved that the judgment was fraudulent, or had not in fact been rendered by him. Rollins v. Henry, 78 N. Car. 342.

The statute in Arkansas does not require the circuit judge to sign the record of the preceding day every morning, but only at the close of the term, and the omission of the judge to sign the record at the close of the term will not invalidate judgments or decrees of the term, although such omission would be gross negligence, and would subject the judge to animadversion. Ex p. Slocomb, 9 Ark. 375.

Ann. 631; State v. Judge, 28 La. Ann. 451.

By Clerk. — It is sometimes held that judgments should be signed by the clerk,¹ but the omission of the clerk to sign the judgment is a mere irregularity which may be corrected at any time, and does not render the judgment void.² And in a few cases it has been held that, in the absence of statutory requirements, the entry of judgment in the judgment book is sufficient without the signature of the clerk.³

14. Alternative Judgments. — As a general rule judgments cannot be in the alternative, for one thing or another, but, as has been seen, must specifically determine the rights of the parties.⁴ A judgment, however, for the specific recovery of property may be in the alternative, for the property or its value,⁵ and in the case of replevin or detinue it seems that the judgment must be in the alternative.⁶

3. Clink v. Thurston, 47 Cal. 21; Jorgensen v. Griffin, 14 Minn. 464.

In Hardin v. Melton, 28 S. Car. 38, it was held that a judgment entered and filed, and regular in all particulars except that the formula prescribed by law was not dated or signed by the clerk, is a valid judgment. The court said, quoting Clark v. Melton, 19 S. Car. 498: "When entered and filed in the proper office, its existence could be as well ascertained without the date and signature as with them. The entering and filing are the essential facts, and whether this had taken place at a particular time could be discovered by an examination of the office as certainly where the formula had not been dated and signed as if these things had been done."

Illustrations of Alternative Judgments.

— The finding of the court that the defendant is indebted in one or the other of two different amounts, leaving to be determined in the future the question as to which of the two is proper, is not a judgment. A judgment cannot be alternative. Battell v. Lowery, 46 Iowa 49.

A justice of the peace has no jurisdiction to enforce specific performance of a contract to build a house upon a certain tract of land, by an alternative judgment requiring the defendant to build the house or to pay a certain sum of money, and an execution to enforce such an alternative judgment of a justice is void on its face. Munis v. Herrera, 1 N. Mex. 362.

5. Judgment for Property or Its Value.

— Where property is in the hands of an attachment plaintiff and an intervener, if the claim of another intervener is established he is entitled to an alternative judgment for the possession of the property, and against the plaintiff for its value, under the prayer for general relief. Burlacher v. Watson, 38 Tex. 62.

A decree in the alternative for the delivery of specific property or the payment of a certain sum of money is erroneous where there was no evidence as to the value of the property. Reilly v. Freeman, 1 N. Y. App. Div. 560.

15. Conditional Judgments. — It is a general rule that judgments must not be conditioned upon any contingency,¹ and it has been held that an alternative or conditional judgment is wholly void.² These rules apply to judgments in criminal cases as well as to those in civil cases.³ Terms, however, may be imposed,⁴ and it has been held that failure to object to a conditional judgment waives the error.⁵

In Hadley v. Hadley, 80 Me. 459, it was said that a party desiring a conditional judgment must make a motion for it, and the motion must be addressed to the court and not to the jury.

In Myers v. Williams, 85 Va. 621, a judgment allowing a conditional credit was sustained.

In Morrison v. Wimberly, 14 La.

Ann. 724; Dyke v. Dyer, 14 La. Ann. 713, it was held that a judgment may order the defendant to deposit a certain sum with the clerk within a certain time, and that if he fails to do so the plaintiff shall have judgment as prayed for.

What Does Not Amount to a Conditional Judgment. — A judgment awarding an execution against a party for costs if not paid within the time limited, is not a conditional judgment, but final and absolute. Sprott v. Reid, 3 Greene (Iowa) 489.

An agreement to take secured notes for the face of the judgment as payment, and to mark the judgment satisfied provided the notes were filed within a specified time, does not render the judgment a conditional one. In State v. Bennett, 4 Dev. & B. L. (N. Car.) 43, it was said that, upon a conviction for a criminal offense, it is irregular to annex to the sentence any condition for its subsequent remission. A judgment, though pronounced by the judge, is not his sentence, but the sentence of the law. It is the certain and final conclusion of the law following upon ascertained premises, and must therefore be unconditional. See also supra, II. 2. d. Definitiveness.

distinct and definite branch of it, and reserves no further question or direction for future determination¹ except such as may be necessary to carry it into effect.² But a judgment may be final, though it does not determine the rights of the parties, if it ends the particular suit.

An Interlocutory Judgment is one which does not dispose of the suit, but reserves some further question or direction for future determination.³ As a general rule a judgment is not considered final which settles part only of several issues of law or fact.⁴ A judg-

Appealability the Criterion. — Under statutes limiting the right of appeal to final judgments only, a vast number of cases have been decided in which the distinction between interlocutory and final judgments has been discussed. These cases are usually cited as furnishing the criteria of finality, where the question is to be decided for other purposes than to determine appealability. These cases have been collected in the article on APPEALS, vol. 2, p. 52 et seq., to which reference should be made.

2. Three Classes of Judgments. — "Writers on this subject divide legal actions and judgments into three classes, namely, in rem, in personam, and in rem et personam, or in utramque as the last is generally denominated; and they are thus respectively defined, in rem whenever the thing claimed by any one is declared by the judgment to be his, either by his right as creditor, or the possession of it is given him in any other manner; in personam when he is condemned to give or suffer, to do or not to do anything, or if the status of his person may be affected by it; and in utramque where it is of a mixed nature, and both in rem et in personam, and that is when both the thing and the person may come at the same time into condemnation. Story, Conf. of Laws, § 584, n. 1; Burgundus, Tract. 3, n. 1, 2, pp. 84, 85. One thing, however, will be found as an invariable and inseparable quality or incident of a judicial proceeding in rem purely, and that is a seizure of the thing to be condemned in some form or other by the process of the court regularly preceding the consideration and adjudication of the right or claim asserted to it before the tribunal. Perhaps the nearest approach we have in our practice under the common law and our statutes to a pure proceeding and adjudication in rem is under our statutory process in cases of domestic and foreign attachment, in which, however, the writs always issue in personam, or against the defendant by name, but with a mandate to attach or seize his goods and chattels, rights and credits, lands and tenements, which is invariably done, as they can only be sued out upon an affidavit in the one case that the defendant has left the state to avoid the payment of his debts, or in the other that he resides out of it. But although such proceedings are not strictly, they are nevertheless considered in the nature of, proceedings in rem. In all such cases, however, the principle of law is well settled that the judgment in rem, or against the thing, is conclusive as to the title and transfer and disposition of the property in question under it; but it is only conclusive and binding on the party in personam so far as the res or property itself is concerned. Story, Conf. of Laws, §§ 592, 593." Capelle v. Baker, 3 Houst. (Del.) 344.

1. Syester v. Brewer, 27 Md. 288.

"A judgment in rem I conceive to be an adjudication pronounced (as its name indeed denotes) upon the status of some particular subject-matter by a tribunal having competent authority for that purpose. Such an adjudication, being a most solemn declaration from the proper and accredited quarter that the status of the thing adjudicated upon is as declared, concludes all persons from saying that the status of the thing adjudicated upon was not such as declared by the adjudication." Childs v. Hayman, 72 Ga. 791.

Judgment in Rem and in Personam Distinguished. — "A judgment in rem I understand to be an adjudication pronounced upon the status of some particular subject-matter by a tribunal having competent authority for that purpose. It differs from a judgment in personam in this, that the latter judgment is, in form as well as substance, between the parties claiming the right; and that it is so inter partes appears by the record itself. It is binding only upon the parties appearing to be such by the record, and those claiming by them. A judgment in rem is founded on a proceeding instituted, not against the person, as such, but against or upon the thing or subject-matter itself whose state or condition is to be determined. It is a proceeding to determine the state or condition of the thing itself; and the judgment is a solemn declaration upon the status of the thing, and it ipso facto renders it what it declares it to be." Woodruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 65.

"It is urged that when the company asked that an interpleader be awarded, and brought the money owing by it into court, the court then obtained jurisdiction of the fund, and from that time forward the proceeding was one essentially in rem, and the court having thus obtained jurisdiction of the res, and having given notice according to the laws of Pennsylvania, had ample power to hear and determine, and having so heard and determined, the parties are bound by the judgment. That such proceeding could be in rem seems a novel doctrine. In rem is understood to be a technical term taken from the Roman law, and there used to distinguish an action against the thing from one against the person, the terms in rem and in personam always being the opposite one of the other; an act in personam being one done or directed against a specific person, while an act in rem was one done with reference to no specific person, but against or with reference to a specific thing, and so against whom it might concern, or 'all the world.' A proceeding brought to determine the status of the thing itself, the particular thing, and which is confined to the subject-matter in specie, is in rem, the judgment being intended to determine the state or condition, and, ipso facto, to render the thing what the judgment declares it to be, while a proceeding which seeks the recovery of a personal judgment is in personam. In the former, process may be served on the thing itself, and by such service and making proclamation the court is authorized to decide upon it without other notice to persons, all the world being parties; while in the latter, in order to give the court power to adjudge, there must be service upon those whose rights are sought to be affected. As regards rights, the terms signify the antithesis of 'available against a particular person' and 'available against the world at large.' Thus, 'jura in personam are rights primarily available against specific persons; jura in rem, rights only available against the world at large.' Beyond this, a judgment or decree is in rem, or in the nature of a judgment in rem, when it binds third persons, such as the sentence of a court of admiralty on a question of prize, or a decree of other courts upon the personal status or relation of the party, such as dissolution of marriage contract, bastardy, etc.; a decree in probate court admitting a will to probate and record, granting administration, etc.; or a decree of a court of a foreign country as to the status of a person domiciled there." Cross v. Armstrong, 44 Ohio St. 613.

Judgments in Utramque, or in rem et in personam, are judgments which fix the status of a matter, not as against the whole world, but only as between the parties to the suit.¹

Illustrations.—An adjudication in insolvency,² a decree in divorce,³ the probate of a will,⁴ a decree setting aside a homestead⁵ or establishing a disputed boundary line,⁶ are illustrations of judgments in rem. Judgments in attachment suits are in the nature of judgments in rem.⁷ But a decree in partition is not a decree in rem.⁸ The mere fact that money is brought into court

1. "There is another class of cases [besides proceedings purely in rem] which may perhaps be considered to some extent proceedings in rem, though in form they are proceedings inter partes. * * * The object and purpose of a proceeding purely in rem is to ascertain the right of every possible claimant, and it is instituted on an allegation that the title of the former owner, whoever he may be, has become divested; and notice of the proceeding is given to the whole world to appear and make claim to it. * * * The limited proceedings in rem, before mentioned, are not based on any allegation that the right of property is to be determined between any other persons than the parties to the suit; no notice is sought to be given to any other persons; and the judgment being only as to the status of the property as between the parties of record, it is, as to all other persons, a mere nullity." "The probate of a will I conceive to be a familiar instance of a proceeding in rem in this state. The proceeding is, in form and substance, upon the will itself. No process is issued against any one; but all persons interested in determining the state or condition of the instrument are constructively notified, by a newspaper publication, to appear and contest the probate; and the judgment is, not that this or that person shall pay a sum of money or do any particular act, but that the instrument is or is not the will of the testator. It determines the status of the subject-matter of the proceeding. The judgment is upon the thing itself; and when the proper steps required by law are taken, the judgment is conclusive, and makes the instrument, as to all the world (at least so far as the property of the testator within this state is concerned), just what the judgment declares it to be." Woodruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 65. See article PROBATE AND ADMINISTRATION.

A judgment rendered in an attachment suit against an absentee represented by a curator ad hoc is one in rem, and not in personam, and affects only the property attached. Herber v. Abbott, 39 La. Ann. 1112.

"An attachment of property, in this state, where the court has jurisdiction of the property but not of the person of the defendant, and a sale of it (or a levy upon it, if it be real estate) on execution, is in the nature of a proceeding in rem. The judgment, if the defendant have no notice, would be treated as a nullity out of our jurisdiction, so far as the person of the defendant was concerned, though it would be held binding, as between the parties, so far as regarded the property, as a proceeding in rem." Per Hall, J., in Woodruff v. Taylor, 20 Vt. 65.

The addition of the usual formula, "with privilege upon the property attached," does not impair the personality of a judgment, personal in its terms, against a defendant in attachment. Rathbone v. Ship London, 6 La. Ann. 439.

8. "A suit for partition is not a proceeding in rem; the process is not served upon the land, nor is the land a party defendant, nor is the final judgment binding on any of the cotenants who are not brought within the jurisdiction of the court by some service of process, actual or constructive." Childs v. Hayman, 72 Ga. 791 [citing in an interpleader suit does not render the proceeding one in rem.¹

Rendition and Entry. — A judgment in rem may be entered in a suit without also rendering a judgment in personam,² and conversely a judgment may be rendered in personam without also rendering a judgment in rem, although the proceeding was one in which a judgment in rem might have also been rendered.³ A decree both in rem and in personam may be rendered at the same time, where there is no inconsistency between such decrees.⁴

Jurisdiction is as essential to the validity of a judgment in rem as in the case of any other judgment, but jurisdiction over the res, or matter in question, is sufficient, and it is immaterial whether or not jurisdiction of the person of the owner has been acquired.⁵

It is no error to render a judgment in rem against a defendant who has pleaded and proved his discharge in bankruptcy. Truitt v. Truitt, 38 Ind. 16.

Judgment in rem, and decree for the foreclosure of a mortgage or the enforcement of a mechanic's lien, without a personal judgment on the debt, secured by such lien, over against the person liable, may be taken. The defendant is not injured, as his liability ends with the sale of the land. Truitt v. Truitt, 38 Ind. 16.

A judgment in a suit commenced by a writ of sequestration should be in rem alone, reserving to the plaintiffs their right to an action in personam. Peterson v. Willard, 17 La. Ann. 93.

3. Ellison v. Iler, 22 La. Ann. 470.

Where property, seized under an original attachment, has been replevied, and the plaintiff has also proceeded against the person of the defendant, praying that he may be cited to answer, the judgment must be in personam, and not in rem, against the specific property attached; the execution must run against the goods and chattels, generally, of the defendant; and the defendant has the right to point out, and have levied upon and sold, property other than that which may have been seized under the attachment. Cloud v. Smith, 1 Tex. 611.

4. In an action to enforce a lien a judgment may be rendered for the sale of the property and for the recovery of the debt against the defendant personally. Chambers v. Keene, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 294.

Where a guardian purchases land with his ward's money, the ward may elect to take the land or consider it as security for the money, but a decree against the guardian and his surety, and his surety in personam and in rem, to sell the land is erroneous. Edmonds v. Morrison, 5 Dana (Ky.) 224.

5. See generally article JURISDICTION.

The "thing" must be subject to the cognizance of the court and amenable to its decree. Brown v. Levee Com'rs, 50 Miss. 468.

Where the proceeding was in rem against property, and the averments in the complaint were sufficient on general demurrer to show a lien on the property, the mere fact that a void judgment in personam against the heirs was also rendered would not make void the judgment subjecting the property to the debt. Heidenheimer v. Loring, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 560.

To entitle one to a judgment in a proceeding in rem authorized by a statute, but in which the defendant was not served with process and did not appear, the res must have been attached or seized, or at least have been within

VII. INTEREST — 1. In General. — Interest, when recoverable, rests upon one of two grounds. It is recoverable either as a debt or as damages.¹ Where there is a contract to pay interest, it is a debt and recoverable as such. Where interest is given as damages, it is given because the law has adopted the legal rate of interest as the measure of damages for delay in the payment of money due either by contract or by reason of a tort. In either case its allowance is a matter of substantive law, and as such is beyond the scope of this article.² Where a party is entitled to interest, that right must of course be expressed in the judgment, and the form of the provision therefor in the judgment will be presently considered.³ To be entitled to interest, the party must, of course, make such a case by his pleadings as calls for its allowance,⁴ and the case so made must be established by the verdict or findings.⁵ This is upon the principle already considthe jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment. Ward v. Boyce, 152 N. Y. 191.

Illustrations. — In entering a judgment the correct rule is to add to the principal the interest due on the notes up to the time of the judgment, and enter the judgment for the gross amount, and such judgment is then to bear the same interest as the notes until paid. Guy v. Franklin, 5 Cal. 416. The fact that this results in allowing compound interest is no objection. Stanton v. Woodcock, 19 Ind. 273.

Where the suit was on a note for $100, and the jury returned a verdict "for the plaintiff the amount of the note, $100," and a judgment was rendered for $105.66, "principal debt and interest," the court, holding that interest followed the principal sum as an incident, affirmed the judgment. Fisk v. Holden, 17 Tex. 408.

In Tiernan v. Minghini, 28 W. Va. 314, a decree was entered in a cause ascertaining and fixing the aggregate amount of the plaintiff's debt and giving interest on such aggregate from the date of the decree, as prescribed by statute. In a decree entered in the same cause several years thereafter, the debt was reaggreated by calculating interest on the first aggregate sum to the date of the latter decree, then adding this interest to the sum of the first decree, and interest was allowed on the second aggregate from the date of the last decree. This was held erroneous.

Interest Between Verdict and Judgment.

— Where the judgment is not entered until some time after the verdict, the judgment should be entered for the amount of the verdict with interest thereon from the date of the verdict, and it is error to compute interest from the time of the verdict to the time of entry of judgment, so as to make that gross amount bear interest. Alpers v. Schammel, 75 Cal. 590.

3. See Wooster v. Clarke, 2 Ark. 101; Brookbank v. Jeffersonville, 41 Ind. 406.

In an Action of Debt the judgment should not be entered for an aggregate sum, including the debt, interest, and damages, without distinguishing the amount of either. Wilmans v. State Bank, 6 Ill. 667. The judgment should be entered for the principal as debt and for the interest as damages, and it is

Interest on Judgment. — By statute, judgments now bear interest without any provision therefor being inserted therein.¹ It is, therefore, ordinarily unnecessary to state the rate of interest which the judgment is to bear, as this is fixed by statute.² But where the judgment is to bear the same rate of interest as the debt upon which it is founded, the statute usually requires the rate to be expressed in the judgment.³

error to enter judgment for the aggregate. March v. Wright, 14 Ill. 248; Mager v. Hutchinson, 7 Ill. 266.

In an action of debt on a note, the interest ascertained to be due at time of judgment ought to be entered as so much damages; and the judgment is that the plaintiff recover against the defendant the sum of — dollars in debt and the sum of — dollars in damages, making in all the sum of — dollars, together with his costs and charges. Stevens v. Dunbar, 1 Blackf (Ind.) 56.

Judgment on Note. — In Johnson v. McLain, Hempst. (U. S.) 59, it was held erroneous to allow interest on the debt from the maturity of the note only to the date of the judgment. The judgment should have been for the amount of the debt with interest until paid.

In Ray v. Justices, 6 Ga. 303, it was held that a statute requiring the amount of principal and interest to be stated separately in judgments applied to suits on promissory notes and other special contracts bearing interest, and not to cases where the recovery was in damages.

Alternative Forms of Judgment. — "The judgment is for eight hundred dollars, to bear ten per cent. interest from the 17th day of November, 1831. It is contended that the interest should have been ascertained by the court, and a judgment rendered for it in damages. It is admitted that this is a very common way of giving judgment; but, on the other hand, the mode adopted by the Circuit Court is sanctioned by the practice of several of the states, especially by the practice in Kentucky, and we cannot conceive that one mode has any particular advantage over the other, each being equally calculated to promote the ends of justice." Archer v. Morehouse, Hempst. (U. S.) 186. Compare Prince v. Lamb, 1 Ill. 378, holding that the amount of interest should be calculated and given as damages. See also Wilbur v. Abbot, 58 N. H. 272.

1. Pearsons v. Hamilton, 2 Ill. 415; Simmons v. Garrett, McCahon (Kan.) 82; State v. Vogel, 14 Mo. App. 187; Amis v. Smith, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 303.

In Simmons v. Garrett, McCahon (Kan.) 82, the court said: "In rendering a judgment for money, the court should fix the amount then due and render a judgment therefor, saying nothing about subsequent interest, which must be collected by the sheriff or other officer from the date and amount of judgment."

Provision for Interest Inserted by Clerk. — A memorandum made by the clerk, at the foot of the judgment, that it should bear ten per cent. interest, is no part of the judgment. Fugate v. Glasscock, 7 Mo. 577.

In San Joaquin Land, etc., Co. v. West, 99 Cal. 345, it was held that the insertion by the clerk of the court in a money judgment entered by him, of the words, "with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent per annum from the date hereof until paid," is a proper ministerial act, authorized by law, although no authority therefor is found in the decision of the court, which should not contain any such adjudication, where there is no issue in the case as to the right of the plaintiff to have interest upon the judgment awarded.

2. Specifying Rate. — Catron v. Lafayette County, 125 Mo. 67; State v. Vogel, 14 Mo. App. 187. But see Troxwell v. Fugate, Hard. (Ky.) 2, holding a judgment for interest to be erroneous where it does not state the rate of interest recovered. Smith v. Tatman, 71 Ind. 171.

3. Wooster v. Clarke, 2 Ark. 101; Mount v. Chapman, 9 Cal. 294; McCutchen v. Dougherty, 44 Miss. 419; Ramsey v. Jones, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 500.

In Missouri, under Rev. Stat. 1889, § 5974 (Rev. Stat. 1879, § 2725), every judgment in a civil action bears interest, though it be not therein expressed, at the rate which the cause of action bore. The judgment need not

Certainty. — A provision in a judgment for interest should give data from which the amount may be calculated with certainty.¹

Harmless Error. — Error as to the day on which interest commences may or may not be harmless.² A mistake of a few cents in calculating interest is immaterial.³

On Default, the record need not show that the interest was computed by the clerk.⁴

VIII. RENDITION, ENTRY, AND RECORD OF JUDGMENTS. — See article RENDITION AND ENTRY OF JUDGMENTS.

IX. JUDGMENTS BY CONFESSION. (See also article COGNOVIT, vol. 4, p. 560.) — 1. Classification and Definition. — Judgments by confession are of two kinds: first, judgment by confession after action brought; second, judgment by confession without action. A judgment by confession after action brought is one entered by the defendant after the action against him has been commenced by the service of process.⁵ A judgment by confession without action is, as its name implies, one entered by the defendant, or by his attorney, without the institution of any action against him.⁶

2. By Confession After Action Brought — a. KINDS — By Cognovit Actionem. — Judgments by confession after action brought are also divided into two classes, the one a judgment by cognovit actionem, and the other a judgment by confession relicta verificatione.⁷ In the case of a judgment by cognovit actionem, the defendant after service does not enter a plea, but acknowledges and confesses that the plaintiff's cause of action is just and rightful.⁸

state the rate of interest, as the record may be consulted to ascertain the rate. State v. Vogel, 14 Mo. App. 187; Catron v. Lafayette County, 125 Mo. 67.

1. Wooster v. Clarke, 2 Ark. 101.

Judgment for interest from a day not specified and uncertain is bad. Brittenham v. Cummins, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 488.

In Tankersley v. Silburn, Minor (Ala.) 185, a judgment for a sum certain with interest from a particular date, but to a day which could only be ascertained by reference to the entire record, was held erroneous, but as the record furnished sufficient data it was corrected and rendered on appeal.

A judgment cannot be rendered to draw interest from a day prior to its rendition, nor can it fix a higher rate of interest than is allowed by law. Simmons v. Garrett, McCahon (Kan.) 82.

A judgment for interest from a given date is sufficiently certain without fixing the amount. Dinsmore v. Austill, Minor (Ala.) 89; DeWitt v. Swift, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 280.

2. "We think the recitation in the judgment that the purchase money, with interest from an erroneous date, amounts to a stated sum, is immaterial, when it clearly appears that the amount for which judgment is rendered does not exceed the amount for which the party complaining is legally liable." Dean v. Blount, 71 Tex. 270.

In Buford v. Burdett, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 227, it was held that an error in allowing interest from too early a date was prejudicial to the defendant and could not be cured by a release of the excess by the plaintiff, although made by leave of court.

3. Ziel v. Dukes, 12 Cal. 479.

A Clerical Error in calculating interest from too early a date will not be considered ground of reversal unless a motion to correct the error has been made in the court below. Wilson v. Barnes, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 330.

4. Radcliff v. Erwin, Minor (Ala.) 88

5. See Crouse v. Derbyshire, 10 Mich. 479.

6. Flanagan v. Bruner, 10 Tex. 257.

7. Burr v. Mathers, 51 Mo. App. 470.

8. Hirschfield v. Franklin, 6 Cal. 607; Burr v. Mathers, 51 Mo. App. 470;

By Confession Relicta Verifications. — In the case of confession relicta verificatione, the defendant, after pleading and before trial, both confesses the plaintiff's cause of action and withdraws or abandons his plea or other allegation, whereupon judgment is entered against him without proceeding to trial.¹

b. NECESSITY OF PROCESS. — This class of judgments originated under the common law and can be entered only after the action has been properly commenced by service of process upon a defendant.²

A Waiver or Acceptance of Service is, however, as effectual in law as actual service.³

Stewart v. Walters, 38 N. J. L. 274; Hower v. Jones, 1 Cleve. (Ohio) 257; Philadelphia v. Toll, 2 W. N. C. (Pa.) 226.

Signature of Cognovit. — A cognovit must be signed by the attorney. Philadelphia v. Toll, 2 W. N. C. (Pa.) 226.

Effect as Admission. — A cognovit is good as an admission in pais after answer is filed. Hirschfield v. Franklin, 6 Cal. 607.

Sufficiency of Cognovit. — Where the cognovit states that the defendant "cannot deny" the action, etc., it is sufficient to warrant an entry of judgment upon confession. Lewis v. Barber, 21 Ill. App. 638; Keith v. Kellogg, 97 Ill. 147. See, however, Elliott v. Daiber, 42 Ill. 467, in which it was held that where a party sued before a justice of the peace stated that he could not deny the plaintiff's demand, such admission conferred no authority to enter a judgment by confession. The court said: "It does not follow, because a defendant says he cannot deny the plaintiff's demand, that he is the plaintiff's debtor. The defendant may have claims to set off which he may not choose to litigate before the justice, but be willing the justice should find against him, so that he may take an appeal to another court and there litigate. By construing his declaration that he could not deny the plaintiff's demand as a confession of judgment, the right of appeal would be taken away, and the party injured."

Entry of Judgment. — A judgment by cognovit after service of process may be entered in vacation, without a judge's or commissioner's order, and without an affidavit. Stewart v. Walters, 38 N. J. L. 274.

Hicks v. Ayer, 5 Ga. 298; Burr v. Mathers, 51 Mo. App. 470; Burton v. Lawrence, 4 Tex. 373; Bouv. L. Dict., title Judgments.

In Burton v. Lawrence, 4 Tex. 373, a judgment which recited that "the defendants, by leave of the court, withdrew their pleas, and say that they cannot deny the plaintiff's cause of action against them for debt and interest in plaintiff's petition claimed," etc., was held to be in effect a confession of judgment for a sum certain, to be ascertained simply by reference to the petition.

Retraction of Confession. — In Smith v. Simms, 9 Ga. 418, it was held that where the confession of judgment was made by the defendant through a mistake of fact as to the contents of the pleadings, such confession may, upon discovery of the error, be retracted at any time before recording.

2. Rogers v. Bowen, 19 Ga. 596; Craig v. Glass, 1 Ind. 89; Crouse v. Derbyshire, 10 Mich. 479; Burr v. Mathers, 51 Mo. App. 470; Stewart v. Walters, 38 N. J. L. 274; Schroeder v. Fromme, 31 Tex. 602; Flanagan v. Bruner, 10 Tex. 257; Gerald v. Burthee, 29 Tex. 202.

In Flanagan v. Bruner, 10 Tex. 257, it is held that an appearance cannot be said to be with process where the citation is merely made out, but there is no service by the officer nor waiver or acceptance of such service.

In Missouri, where it is provided by statute that a confession of judgment if made before a justice without service, must be in writing, a judgment orally confessed without service is a nullity. Burr v. Mathers, 51 Mo. App. 470.

Sufficient Proof of Service. — Where W. B. acknowledged service of a declaration and process in a suit against J. B. as his agent, and J. B. afterwards confessed judgment, service on J. B. was thereby sufficiently proved. Rogers v. Bowen, 19 Ga. 596.

3. Flanagan v. Bruner, 10 Tex. 257;

c. AFFIDAVIT AND STATEMENT UNNECESSARY.—Where a defendant confesses judgment after service or waiver thereof, an affidavit or statement of indebtedness is unnecessary.¹

3. By Confession Without Action—a. IN GENERAL.—In almost all of the states provision is made by statute for the entry of judgment by confession where no action has been instituted against the defendant.² Such statutes are to be strictly construed.³ And since judgments by confession owe their efficacy entirely to the statutes authorizing them, a strict compliance with the statutory requirements in every particular is essential to their validity.⁴ As a corollary to this rule it follows that where Waiver by Power of Attorney.—In Varnum v. Runion, 1 McLean (U. S.) 413, it was held that a power of attorney by which an attorney was authorized to confess a judgment in a certain suit, naming the parties, then pending in the Circuit Court of the United States, authorized a judgment to be entered, though the process had not been served on the party; the power of attorney constituting a waiver of service in such case.

Statutes Not Applicable After Action Brought.—Such statutes have, however, no reference to the class of judgments by confession previously spoken of where process has been regularly served. Schroeder v. Fromme, 31 Tex. 602; Crouse v. Derbyshire, 10 Mich. 479; Elliot v. Woodhull, 12 N. J. L. 126.

the statute has been strictly complied with in every regard, nothing further can be necessary in order that the judgment may be valid.¹

b. DECLARATION OR SERVICE OF PROCESS UNNECESSARY. — Under such statutes the filing of a declaration² or the service of process³ is not essential to the validity of the judgment by confession.

c. WHO MAY CONFESS JUDGMENT. — Generally speaking, parties to a judgment by confession are the same as to a judgment rendered after litigation;⁴ that is, such judgment may be in Estes, 127 Mass. 474; Beach v. Botsford, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 199; Manufacturers', etc., Bank v. St. John, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 497; Rosebrough v. Ansley, 35 Ohio St. 107; Barker v. Beeber, 112 Pa. St. 216; Grubbs v. Blum, 62 Tex. 426.

Want of Signature. — Thus a judgment by confession is void for want of conformity to the statute where it does not appear to be signed by the person making the same, and by one or more competent witnesses. Beach v. Botsford, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 199.

Failure of Debtor to Appear in Person. — In those states where the statutes authorizing a judgment without pleadings apply only to a proceeding wherein the debtor appears personally in court and confesses judgment, no valid judgment can be confessed without such personal appearance. Rosebrough v. Ansley, 35 Ohio St. 107.

1. Johnston v. Glasgow, 5 Ark. 311; Marbury v. Pace, 29 La. Ann. 557.

Where a Declaration Is Filed in such case and judgment is confessed upon it, it is immaterial whether the declaration will stand the test of strict technical principles or not. Thompson v. Foster, 6 Ark. 208; Choat v. Bennett, 11 Ark. 313.

3. Gayle v. Foster, Minor (Ala.) 125; Hodges v. Ashurst, 2 Ala. 301; Callier v. Denson, Minor (Ala.) 19; Thompson v. Foster, 6 Ark. 208; Little v. Dyer, 138 Ill. 272; Marbury v. Pace, 29 La. Ann. 557; Farley v. Lea, 4 Dev. & B. L. (N. Car.) 169; Matthews v. Thompson, 3 Ohio 272.

No Application to Cognovit Actionem. — In Little v. Dyer, 138 Ill. 272, it was held that the confession of judgment contemplated by the statute of Illinois is a confession of judgment in a proceeding instituted "without process," and therefore has no application to a cognovit actionem, or confession of judgment by the defendant in an action after suit brought, which was resorted to at common law in many different forms of action.

4. By Officers of Corporations. — Shute v. Keyser, (Arizona 1892) 29 Pac. Rep. 386; U. S. Electric Lighting Co. v. Leiter, (D. C. 1887) 9 Cent. Rep. 655; Snyder v. Bailey, 165 Ill. 447; Boston Tailoring House v. Fisher, 59 Ill. App. 400; McKinley v. Smith, 25 Ill. App. 168. Joliet Electric Light, etc., Co. v. Ingalls, 23 Ill. App. 45; *McMurray v. A corporation may authorize an attorney to confess judgment for it. U. S. Electric Lighting Co. v. Leiter, (D. C. 1887) 9 Cent. Rep. 655.

The president of a corporation may confess judgment for such corporation. If, however, this is done without the order or knowledge of the directors or company, and without setting forth the cause of the indebtedness, it is void. McMurray v. St. Louis Oil Mfg. Co., 33 Mo. 377; Chamberlin v. Mammoth Min. Co., 20 Mo. 96.

Partnerships. — Columbus Watch Co. v. Hodenpyl, 61 Hun (N. Y.) 557; Stevens v. Diehl, 127 Pa. St. 416; Breeding v. Boggs, 20 Pa. St. 33; Alexander v. Alexander, 85 Va. 353; Coker v. Wynne, 2 Va. L. J. 377.

favor of, or made by, all such persons as may maintain or defend a suit and be bound by the judgment therein.¹

d. FOR WHAT MAY BE CONFESSED — (1) In General. — Although it is a requirement of the statutes authorizing a confession of judgment, that the debt for which judgment is confessed must be either justly due or to become due,² and though such debt should be a legal one, yet this does not mean that the demand must be one against which the debtor could set up no

A power of attorney executed by a firm need not be under seal. Alexander v. Alexander, 85 Va. 353.

A partner cannot confess a judgment against his firm. Elliott v. Holbrook, 33 Ala. 659; Hopper v. Lucas, 86 Ind. 43; Barlow v. Reno, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 252; Christy v. Sherman, 10 Iowa 535; North v. Mudge, 13 Iowa 496; Soper v. Fry, 37 Mich. 236; Morgan v. Richardson, 16 Mo. 409; Stoutenburgh v. Vandenberg, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 229; Von Keller v. Muller, 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 375, note; Hamilton's Appeal, 103 Pa. St. 368; Gerard v. Basse, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 119; Lehman v. Rood, 5 Pa. Dist. Rep. 655; Mair v. Beck, (Pa. 1886) 1 Cent. Rep. 898; McCleery v. Thompson, 130 Pa. St. 443; Boyd v. Thompson, 153 Pa. St. 78; Franklin v. Morris, 154 Pa. St. 152; Clark v. Bowen, 22 How. (U. S.) 270.

Partners have no implied authority to confess judgment for each other. Soper v. Fry, 37 Mich. 236.

Such judgment will be valid only against the one confessing. Hopper v. Lucas, 86 Ind. 43; North v. Mudge, 13 Iowa 496; Stoutenburgh v. Vandenberg, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 229; Gerard v. Basse, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 119; Clark v. Bowen, 22 How. (U. S.) 270.

A partner may, however, bind the partnership where the other partner or partners assent to his act. Elliott v. Holbrook, 33 Ala. 659; Edwards v. Pitzer, 12 Iowa 607; Hard v. Foster, 98 Mo. 297; Miller v. Wagner, 24 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 458; Hamilton's Appeal, 103 Pa. St. 368.

A Judge may confess judgment against himself. Thornton v. Lane, 11 Ga. 459.

A Clerk may enter his own confession of judgment, Smith v. Mayo, 83 Va. 910; or a judgment in his own favor, Moore v. Trimmier, 32 S. Car. 511.

A Public Officer who is liable to be sued for services rendered for the public at his request, may confess judgment therefor. Gere v. Cayuga County 7 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 255.

A defaulting tax collector and his securities may validly confess judgment for the amount of the defalcation. Pearce v. State, 49 La. Ann. 643.

The officers of a township may confess judgment in a suit brought against them. Menaval v. Jackson Tp., 9 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 28.

In Grand Island, etc., R. Co. v. Baker, (Wyoming 1896) 45 Pac. Rep. 494, it was held that the condition of personal appearance in court will not allow a confession of judgment by the board of county commissioners.

Married Women. — A judgment confessed by a married woman is presumably valid. Abell v. Chaffee, 154 Pa. St. 254; Adams v. Grey, 154 Pa. St. 258; Stephan v. Hudock, 4 Pa. Super. Ct. Rep. 474.

In New York a married woman may confess judgment only for a debt contracted for the benefit of her separate estate or in the course of business carried on by her on her separate account. White v. Wood, 15 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 187.

In Virginia a married woman may take confession of judgment from her husband. Alexander v. Alexander, 85 Va. 353.

A married woman cannot bind herself by simply signing a power of attorney. Patton v. Stewart, 19 Ind. 233.

Joint Defendants. — In an action against two or more defendants, judgment cannot be rendered against both on the confession of one. Wiggins v. Klienmans, 9 N. J. L. 249; Ballinger v. Sherron, 14 N. J. L. 144.

1. See title Judgments, Am. and Eng. Encyc. of Law.

2. Where Debt Is Paid. — In Rea v. Forrest, 88 Ill. 275, it was held that where the payee of a note more than reimburses himself from a note assigned to him by the maker as collateral security, and retains the collateral, he will not be entitled to enforce payment of the prindefenses in an action at law brought to recover such demand.¹ Thus, for instance, although part of the debt for which a judgment is confessed is barred by the statute of limitations at the time when the confession is taken, yet if such claim be honest the defendant is not obliged to interpose the statute, but has the right to waive such defense.² Where, however, the power of attorney to confess judgment is not executed until after the debt or claim is barred by the statute of limitations, such warrant of attorney does not extend the period of limitation, and confers no authority to enter judgment.³ Even if a part of the claim upon which the judgment is confessed be founded only upon a moral obligation, such as a verbal assumption of indebtedness, which under the statute of frauds would not be enforceable at law, the judgment is nevertheless good.⁴

(2) For a Tort. — Judgment cannot, however, be confessed for a tort.⁵

(3) Confession Before Maturity of Debt. — Where, as is the principal note thus paid; and if he takes a judgment thereon, under a power of attorney attached thereto, without the knowledge or consent of the maker, it will be fraudulent and void.

1. Confession on Illegal Demand. — Where a person apparently indebted to the estate of a deceased creditor, upon being called upon for payment, voluntarily confesses a judgment for the debt to the personal representative of the supposed creditor, without apprising him that the demand is illegal (in this case the notes upon which the confession was founded were given upon the sale of tickets in a lottery not authorized by law and contrary to the statute), the defendant in the judgment and those claiming under him subsequent thereto are estopped from denying the validity of such judgment. Shufelt v. Shufelt, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 137.

Judgment in Excess of Debt. — In Nusbaum v. Louchheim, (Pa. 1885) 1 Atl. Rep. 391, judgment was confessed for such an amount as to leave nothing for the levy of subsequent creditors, and it was held that, a combination between the parties having been proved, fraud would be established.

Confession by Bankrupt Subsequent to Discharge. — In Dewey v. Moyer, 72 N. Y. 70, it was held that where a bankrupt, subsequent to his discharge in bankruptcy, confesses judgment upon an old debt, such debt is a good consideration for the judgment, and the latter is not affected by the discharge.

Judgment Based on Gaming Consideration. — In Illinois it was held that a judgment by confession based on a gaming consideration is void under the code of that state. West v. Carter, 129 Ill. 249.

Confession by Executor. — It is not a fraud in law for an executor to confess a judgment for a bona fide debt barred by the statute. If sued therefor, he has a right to plead the statute, but is not bound to do so; and other creditors have no right to interfere except for fraud or collusion against them. Woods v. Irwin, 141 Pa. St. 278.

Clear and Precise Language Is Required in order to authorize a confession of judgment upon a note not due. Reid

v. Southworth, 71 Wis. 288, where it was held that a warrant of attorney to confess judgment upon a note "for such amount as may appear to be unpaid thereon" authorized judgment to be confessed only for the amount actually due.

Warrant to Confess in a Certain Contingency. — When a warrant of attorney confers authority in a certain contingency to confess judgment on a note before the same is due, the record must show that the specified contingency had happened, otherwise a judgment is unwarranted. Roundy v. Hunt, 24 Ill. 598, where the court said: "It is a rule of general application that all powers not coupled with an interest must be strictly pursued in their execution. Here was a power to confess a judgment before the maturity of the debt, upon the happening of a specified contingency. The judgment was confessed before the note fell due, and the record fails to show that the contingency had happened which authorized the entry of the judgment. The declaration on its face shows no cause of action, but sets out a note not then due by its terms, and it contains no averment to show that a judgment was authorized. The warrant of attorney, it is true, contains a provision that in case Hunt should believe that there was danger of losing the sum mentioned in the note, then a judgment might be confessed before the note fell due. But it is nowhere averred, nor does it appear, that Hunt had become apprehensive of such loss, or that he even knew that the judgment was confessed. Before the judgment could be legally confessed, Hunt must have feared the loss, and that should have appeared in the record. There were no other conditions upon which the judgment could be confessed before the maturity of the note. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the judgment was unwarranted, and should have been vacated, and the execution and levy quashed." provide that a judgment may be confessed for a debt justly due and owing, and where this is the case the debt must be one actually existing at the time.¹

(4) Confession for Future Advances. — In those jurisdictions where judgment may be confessed for an obligation not yet due, judgment by confession may be taken to secure future advances² or to secure both existing and future indorsements for the accommodation of the debtor.³

(5) Confession to Secure Against Contingent Liability. — So, also, in most of the states a confession of judgment for the purpose of securing the plaintiff against a future contingent liability is proper.⁴ In those states, however, where a confession can

Purpose Must Be Stated in Original Agreement. — Brinkerhoff v. Marvin, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 320. See also Robinson v. Consolidated Real Estate, etc., Co., 55 Md. 105.

In Averill v. Loucks, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 19, where it was held that a judgment may be taken and held for future responsibilities and advances to the extent of the amount of the judgment, it was also held that to enable a creditor thus to hold the judgment it must be a part of the original agreement that the judgment shall be a security for such responsibilities and advances, and that it cannot, as against third persons, be held to meet and cover new and distinct engagements subsequently entered into by the parties.

Effect of Subsequent Intermediate Judgments. — According to several of the decisions it seems that when a subsequent judgment intervenes before all the advances agreed for have been made, future advances after that period are not covered. Brinkerhoff v. Marvin, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 320. See also, to the same effect, Averill v. Loucks, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 19; Lansing v. Woodworth, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 43.

3. Lansing v. Woodworth, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 43, where the court said: "The confession of judgments to secure indorsements and future advances is not uncommon, and so far as I know is of unquestioned propriety. This court has sustained mortgages given for the same purpose, holding as to mortgages, as it probably would in respect of judgments, that advances made or liabilities incurred after the attaching of a subsequent lien would be subject to the priority of the latter."

(6) For a Sum Certain. — A confession of judgment ought to be for a certain and specified sum,² and a power of attorney to confess judgment for an indefinite sum is invalid.³ Where, however, the provisions of a power of attorney are severable, and judgment only for an ascertained amount is confessed, such judgment will not be set aside for the reason that the power of attorney provides also for the confession of judgment for an unliquidated amount.⁴

Confession on Future Award. — The judgment entered by a justice on a confession by the party for such sum as A and B should award, before the award, is bad. Nichols v. Hewit, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 423.

A Judgment Entered by Confession on an Arbitration Note conditioned for the performance of an award is void. Curtice v. Scovel, 1 Root (Conn.) 327; Curtice v. Bulkley, 1 Root (Conn.) 329; Talcott v. Pulsifer, 2 Root (Conn.) 443, where the court said: "The note is such that a justice has no right by law to take a confession upon; it being an escrow, and not a note for a debt due and owing; and it is altogether against the policy of the law to place an award which is to be made in such manner that the party can have no remedy or day in court to except against it, let it be ever so corrupt or mistaken."

A power of attorney in a lease authorizing a confession of judgment for unpaid water rent, gas bill, and bills for keeping the building in a sanitary condition, as additional rent, is invalid as authorizing the confession of judgment for an uncertain and indefinite sum. Fortune v. Bartolomei, 164 Ill. 51.

Cases Not Within the Rule. — Where a power of attorney authorizes a judgment to be confessed for "such sum as shall appear at the time of confessing judgment to be due" on the note therein described, and is in sufficient form in all other particulars to give the court jurisdiction, it is sufficient. Patterson v. Indiana, 2 Greene (Iowa) 492.

A power of attorney in a lease authorizing the confession of judgment "from time to time, for any rent which may then be due by the terms of this lease," is not invalid as being for an indefinite sum, where the monthly rental is fixed by the lease, and the amount which is due for the unpaid period is ascertainable by inspection thereof. Fortune v. Bartolomei, 164 Ill. 51.

In Holden v. Bull, 1 P. & W. (Pa.) 460, it was held that a judgment entered upon a bond in the penalty of one hundred dollars, with a warrant to confess a judgment, having a condition thereunder written that the obligor will pay a fine and bill of costs, then uncertain as to amount, is valid.

Ratification. — The creditor may, however, subsequently ratify a judgment confessed without his knowledge or consent, and such judgment will be valid from the time when ratified.² Such ratification will not, however, affect rights acquired by other parties previous to the ratification.³

f. JURISDICTION, PRESUMPTION THEREOF, AND WAIVER OF OBJECTION — Jurisdiction of Court Essential. — Judgments by confession have all the qualities, incidents, and attributes of other judgments,⁴ and must, therefore, be entered in a court having Presumption of Assent. — Consent may, where the contrary does not appear, be presumed from the record. Kennard v. Carter, 64 Ind. 31.

The assent of the plaintiff is presumed where judgment is for his benefit. McCalmont v. Peters, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 196; Flanagan v. Continental Ins. Co., 22 Neb. 235.

Where judgment is rendered on the personal confession of the defendant made orally in open court, it is held that the plaintiff's assent, although not affirmatively shown by the transcript, will be presumed from the fact that he procured a satisfaction of the judgment by an execution, levy, and sale of the defendant's property. Mercer v. James, 6 Neb. 406.

Consent of Creditor's Attorney. — In Chapin v. McLaren, 105 Ind. 563, it was held that knowledge of the confession of judgment and consent thereto on the part of the creditor's attorney is sufficient.

The Mere Silence of the Creditor, or his failure to object when informed of the judgment entered without his consent or knowledge, is not a ratification thereof, though admissible as evidence in some degree tending to prove the same. Haggerty v. Juday, 58 Ind. 154.

3. Wilcoxson v. Burton, 27 Cal. 228, where the court said: "It may be admitted, where a debtor confesses judgment without the request or knowledge of his creditor, and the creditor thereafter ratifies it by claiming under it and attempting to enforce it, that the record will become binding as between the parties to it, by force of the ratification; and that by relation the judgment, as to them, would be considered as good from the date of its entry. But such ratification can neither override nor in any manner affect rights acquired prior to the ratification, and while the judgment was one only in name. To hold otherwise would be to go counter to all analogy, and would be subversive of authority which it is now too late to question." See also Lowenstein v. Caruth, 59 Ark. 588, holding that "an insolvent debtor may prefer one creditor to others, and may secure him by confession of judgment. But he cannot do so without first obtaining the assent of the creditor. Parties are as indispensable to judgments as they are to actions. Neither is of any validity without them. A judgment by confession in favor of a person without his knowledge or consent cannot operate 'as a final determination of the right of the parties in the proceedings.' It estops neither party from denying anything set forth in it."

4. Caley v. Morgan, 114 Ind. 350; Lanning v. Carpenter, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 402; Ex p. Ware Furniture Co., 49 S. Car. 20.

In Lanning v. Carpenter, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 402, the court, in holding that the entry of a judgment by confession requires the exercise of the jurisdiction of the court, and that when entered such judgment is a judicial act of the court, said: "No adjudication in fact by the court, nor the agency of any judge of the court, is required to warrant or in entering the judgment. The legislature have prescribed the judgment and directed the clerk to enter it. But the judgment is, by the express jurisdiction of the cause.¹

When Record Must Show Jurisdiction. — Where a judgment is confessed in a court of limited jurisdiction, the record of such court must show that it had jurisdiction of the cause.²

terms of section 384, a judgment of this court. It has manifestly all the qualities, incidents, and attributes of other judgments, and is to be proceeded with, and upon, in like manner. It does not differ from any other judgment except in the mode of obtaining it. The court has full control over it as to amendments, and in all other respects, as in the case of its other judgments. I do not perceive why such a judgment does not occupy the same footing, and is not in like manner, in legal contemplation and effect, a judicial final determination of the court in the exercise of its jurisdiction, as judgments on failure to answer under subdivision 1 of section 246 of the code. Judgments, under that subdivision, are entered by the agency of the plaintiff and the clerk of the court, without any act otherwise of the court; and yet no one can doubt that such judgments are, in a legal view, the judicial action of the court in the performance of its functions."

Jurisdictional Amount. — In Marsh v. Sherman, 12 Ind. 358, it was held that the Circuit Court having original exclusive jurisdiction in all cases of "one thousand dollars or upwards," a judgment by confession for such amount entered in the Court of Common Pleas was void. See also Thomas v. Feaster, 22 Ind. 356; Shaw v. Gallagher, 8 Ind. 252; Armstrong v. Jackson, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 210.

A judgment cannot be confessed in the Superior Court for an amount an action to recover which would be within the exclusive jurisdiction of a justice of the peace. Slocumb v. Cape Fear Shingle Co., 110 N. Car. 24.

The District Court of Philadelphia could not enter judgment on a bond and warrant where the debt did not exceed one hundred dollars, even though the penalty was in a larger sum. Coates v. Cork, 1 Miles (Pa.) 270.

Justice of the Peace—New York. — Where the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace to enter confessions of judgment does not extend to the confession of judgment for a contingent liability, the confession of such a judgment before him is void. Adams v. Tator, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 302, 19 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 114.

Jurisdiction Dependent on Residence. — Where a statute requires actions to be tried in the county where the defendant resides, a confession of judgment against the defendant can only be entered in such county. Ex p. Ware Furniture Co., 49 S. Car. 20.

Erroneous Exercise of Jurisdiction. — In Bush v. Hanson, 70 Ill. 480, it was held that where a declaration, the warrant of attorney and affidavit of its execution, the note, and cognovit by the attorney authorized are filed, the defendant is before the court, and there is enough to set the court in motion to hear and determine; and if, in such case, the court proceeds, and, in rendering judgment, acts without sufficient authority, without the oral testimony required by the statute having been produced, a case will be presented, not of want of jurisdiction, but only of error in the exercise of jurisdiction.

Courts of Concurrent Jurisdiction. — Although the authority of a warrant to confess judgment should be strictly pursued, and judgment should be entered in the court therein specified, yet a judgment in another court will be valid where the courts are of concurrent jurisdiction. Hauer's Appeal, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 473.

2. Smith v. Finley, 52 Ark. 373; Dragoo v. Graham, 17 Ind. 427; Spear v. Carter, 1 Mich. 19; Howell v. Gilt Edge Mfg. Co., 32 Neb. 627; Tenny v. Filer, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 569; Camp v. Wood, 10 Watts (Pa.) 118.

In Howell v. Gilt Edge Mfg. Co., 32 Neb. 627, the court said: "The judgments in this instance are those of an inferior court without the legal pre-

Entry upon Warrant in Another Jurisdiction. — Although it is possible that a warrant of attorney may be given which will authorize confession of judgment in another jurisdiction, yet if, by a fair consideration of its terms, such warrant seems to contemplate judgment in a court of a state in which it was executed, it will not uphold a judgment in another state.¹

Presumptions as to Jurisdiction. — When collaterally attacked, however, judgments by confession are supported by the same presumptions that sustain other judgments.²

Waiver of Objection to Jurisdiction. — Although the consent of parties

sumptions in its favor, and every fact essential to jurisdiction ought to appear affirmatively of record."

Where by statute the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace was restricted to certain actions, and judgment by confession might be entered for any sum not exceeding $150, provided that such a confession should be in writing, signed by the person making the same, in presence of a justice or one or more competent witnesses, a judgment rendered by the justice in these words: "Judgment by written confession of the above-named defendants in favor of the above-named plaintiff, for $88.18 damages, and costs of suit," was held not to show, and not to be prima facie evidence, that the justice had jurisdiction of either the persons of the defendants or the subject-matter of the suit, and that it was therefore void. Spear v. Carter, 1 Mich. 19.

Where the entry of a judgment by confession in the docket of a justice's court did not show, except by inference, that the defendant personally appeared in court, as required by a statute governing a confession of judgment, and it was shown by parol testimony that he did not in fact appear, such judgment was held to be void. Smith v. Finley, 52 Ark. 373. So, also, as holding that the record should show the personal appearance of the parties, see Camp v. Wood, 10 Watts (Pa.) 118.

Record Sufficiently Showing Jurisdiction. — The record of a justice's court was as follows: "April 10, 1840. Comes S. Robins, with a power of attorney to confess judgment. Whereupon the defendant, by his attorney, waived the issuing and service of process, and confessed judgment," etc. Such record, though informal and irregular, was held sufficient as the basis of an action and sufficiently showed, that the justice had jurisdiction over the person of the defendant. Dragoo v. Graham, 17 Ind. 427.

In Grover, etc., Sewing Mach. Co. v. Radcliffe, 66 Md. 511, a resident of Maryland executed a bond for a penal sum with a collateral condition. The bond authorized any attorney of any court of record of another state to confess judgment. The judgment was entered by the prothonotary of a Pennsylvania court, and attachment upon it was levied on the defendant's land in Maryland. It was held that the defendant had not authorized the prothonotary or clerk of a court under a special law to enter judgment, and that such judgment could not be enforced against him in Maryland.

Where a Confession upon Warrant Is Forbidden. — A confession by warrant of attorney is inoperative in a state in which it is forbidden by law, although valid in the state where executed. Hamilton v. Schoenberger, 47 Iowa 385.

A warrant purporting to give authority to confess a judgment beyond the state is valid as to judgment confessed within the state where executed. Teel v. Yost, 128 N. Y. 387. See also Athens First Nat. Bank v. Garland, (Mich. 1896) 67 N. W. Rep. 559.

2. Caley v. Morgan, 114 Ind. 350, holding that when a party submits himself to the jurisdiction of a competent court and confesses judgment, and the court enters judgment for the amount admitted to be due, it will be presumed that all the preliminary steps necessary to confer jurisdiction were taken.

cannot confer jurisdiction over the subject-matter,¹ yet, where the subject-matter is within the jurisdiction of the court, a judgment entered upon confession without excepting to the jurisdiction of the person is valid.²

g. MANNER OF CONFESSION — (1) Upon Warrant of Attorney — (a) Generally. — A debtor may authorize the confession of judgment against him by a warrant of attorney.³

1. Feillett v. Engler, 8 Cal. 77; Slocomb v. Cape Fear Shingle Co., 110 N. Car. 24.

2. Kelly v. Lyons, 40 La. Ann. 498, holding that when a party about to be sued is presented by his adversary with a petition addressed to a particular court, and indorses thereon his acceptance of service, waiver of citation, and confession of judgment, and when, two days afterwards, said petition and confession are filed in court, and judgment rendered thereon, the defendant cannot claim that such judgment is a nullity because violating Code Pro., art. 162, which prohibits the election by a party of a domicile other than his own for the purpose of being sued. A confession of judgment was a pleading to the merits, and having thus pleaded to the merits without exception to the jurisdiction, the judgment rendered is valid.

The requisite that the debtor must have been a resident of a district where the judgment was confessed merely gives such privilege to the debtor, which he may yield up at his pleasure; and a confession of judgment before the clerk of the court of a district other than that where the defendant resides is valid. Martin v. Bowie, 3 Hill L. (S. Car.) 225.

Second Confession under Same Power. — Where a judgment rendered upon a power of attorney is reversed for error, the attorney may, under the same power, confess a correct judgment, his power not being exhausted by the first act.¹

Entry of One Judgment on Several Powers of Attorney. — Where several powers of attorney are given to confess judgment on several debts in favor of and against the same parties, it is both competent and proper for the court to consolidate them and enter a single judgment.²

(b) Nature of Judgment. — Confession by warrant of attorney is analogous to a judgment by cognovit, but differs therefrom in that an action must be commenced before a cognovit can be given.³

(c) Negotiability of Warrant. — As to whether a warrant of attorney attached to a note authorizing confession of judgment in favor of the holder will authorize confession of judgment in favor of one to whom the note has been transferred, the authorities differ. In some cases it is held that such warrant of attorney is a security, and that when the note is negotiated the transfer carries with it the security.⁴ In other cases it is held that such power of

In Kentucky it has been held that a warrant of attorney to confess judgment before suit is brought is void. O'Hara v. Lannier, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 100; Rankin v. Lawrence, 4 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 267.

1. Huner v. Doolittle, 3 Greene (Iowa) 76, where the court said: "A decree had been confessed in the same case at a previous term of the court. It is therefore contended that the first act of confession exhausted the authority of the attorney to confess under that power. This would be true if the first decree had been valid or remained unreversed. But it appears that it was taken to the Supreme Court and reversed. This placed the case and the rights of the parties the same as if the first decree had not been rendered. The intention of the power had not been carried out, consequently the object was not accomplished, and the authority was not exhausted by the first act." See also Fairchild v. Camac, 3 Wash. (U. S.) 558.

2. Genestelle v. Waugh, 11 Mo. 367, where it was objected that there were three several warrants of attorney to confess judgments upon three several notes, and a single judgment was entered for the whole amount of the notes, but the court said: "The single judgment resulted from the duty and powers of the court, and not from the form of the warrants of attorney. Had separate suits been brought the court would have ordered them to be consolidated. The judgment in this case was authorized by the warrants of attorney, although it did not conform to the letter of any one of them."

In Iglehart v. Chicago M. & F. Ins. Co., 35 Ill. 514, it was held that since a court of general jurisdiction has power to consolidate different actions of the same nature between the same parties, it is not error, where several promissory notes accompanied by warrants of attorney are declared upon in one action, to enter one judgment by confession in open court on all of the notes, nor is it material that any order should be made authorizing such an entry of judgment. See also Odell v. Reynolds, 37 U. S. App. 447.

Warrant in Favor of Any Holder. — In Watson v. Paine, 25 Ohio St. 340, the court said: "Upon this point [whether a warrant of attorney attached to a negotiable note authorizing an appearance, waiver of process, and confession of judgment in favor of the holder of the note can be exercised in favor of an indorsee], the members of the court are not fully agreed. For my own part, while admitting that a power ad-attorney is not negotiable, and when the note is transferred becomes invalid and inoperative.¹

(d) Construction of Warrant. — A power of attorney to confess judgment will be strictly construed,² but not with such strictness as to make it inoperative³ or defeat the manifest intention of the parties to the instrument.⁴

addressed to an individual attorney cannot be exercised by another, and that an authority to confess judgment in favor of the payee alone cannot be used in favor of an indorsee, I am still wholly unable to find a reason why a power to confess judgment in favor of any holder of the note may not as well be used in favor of an indorsee as in favor of the payee. That such warrant may be used in favor of the payee is not doubted. It is also clear that the negotiability of commercial paper is not affected by attaching thereto, as part of the instrument, a power of attorney to confess judgment thereon. The law regards a cognovit attached to commercial paper as a valuable security in the hands of the payee; and to hold that such security cannot, in any case, follow the note into the hands of an indorsee would materially depreciate the value of such paper. It appears to me unreasonable that the law should permit the payee of a note intended for circulation to take such security, and then restrain the negotiation of the paper by declaring a forfeiture of the security if the paper be put in circulation. Commercial policy does not, in my opinion, require such restriction upon the power to contract."

Negotiability of Note Not Affected. — A power of attorney to confess judgment, attached to a note, and forming a part of the same instrument, does not destroy the negotiability of the note. Osborn v. Hawley, 19 Ohio 130. But see Richards v. Barlow, 140 Mass. 218.

Available to Payee's Administrator. — A warrant of attorney to confess judgment, available to the payee of the note, of which it forms a part, is available to the payee's administrator, although it would not be available to a transferee of the note. Drake v. Simpson, 30 Ohio L. J. 236.

Where Both the Payee and His Assigns

Are Named, in a power to confess judgment upon a note, thus showing that its benefit was intended for the assignee as much as for the payee, and such being the case, it is a matter of no consequence whether the holder derived his title mediately or immediately from the payee. Holmes v. Bemis, 124 Ill. 453.

In Spence v. Emerine, 46 Ohio St. 433, the court said: "It is an established principle that an authority given by warrant of attorney to confess a judgment against the maker of the note must be clear and explicit, and strictly pursued, and we cannot supply any supposed omissions of the parties."

4. Keith v. Kellogg, 97 Ill. 147.

Usual Rules of Construction Applied. — In Holmes v. Parker, 25 Ill. App. 225, it was held that a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, although the power must be strictly pursued, is to be construed according to the rules that apply to other written contracts.

Construed as a Whole. — Where the meaning can be ascertained from a consideration of the entire writing, the omission of words plainly meant to be inserted, or the insertion of words evidently not intended, will not be permitted to defeat the intention of the parties. Holmes v. Parker, 25 Ill. App. 225.

Authority Conferred to Be Strictly Pursued. — In view of the rule of strict construction of a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, the authority thereby conferred must be strictly pursued, and cannot be exercised beyond the limits expressed in the instrument.¹

(e) Essentials of Warrant — Authority Must Be Expressly Granted. — A warrant to confess judgment should contain a grant of the authority, expressed clearly and intelligibly.²

In accordance with this principle, blanks left unfilled in warrants of attorney have been read as filled up with the proper date, and also with the name of the person against whom the judgment was to be confessed. Sweesey v. Kitchen, 80 Pa. St. 160; Links v. Mayer, 22 Ill. App. 489; Vliet v. Camp, 13 Wis. 198.

Where Written and Printed Portions Conflict. — Where a printed blank is used, the written portions will have greater weight in interpreting the instrument than the printed, if the two portions are inharmonious. Holmes v. Parker, 25 Ill. App. 225; American Express Co. v. Pinckney, 29 Ill. 392; Clark v. Woodruff, 83 N. Y. 523.

An attorney confessing a judgment under a warrant is an attorney in fact, under a special and limited authority which must be strictly pursued. Baldwin v. Freyendall, 10 Ill. App. 106.

Illustrations. — Where the warrant is for a confession for a specified sum, there can be no confession for a greater sum, no matter how small the excess. Askew v. Goddard, 17 Ill. App. 377.

Where the power conferred is to confess judgment on a note of a specified date, judgment cannot, in general, be confessed on a note bearing a different date. Chase v. Dana, 44 Ill. 262.

The power of attorney to confess judgment at the March term of a court does not confer authority to confess judgment at a subsequent term, even though such subsequent term is of the same year. Rankin v. Eakin, 3 Head (Tenn.) 229.

A judgment entered on a note by confession before anything was due, under a warrant of attorney which did not clearly confer authority for that purpose, will be set aside. Reid v. Southworth, 71 Wis. 288.

A warrant of attorney given by two persons authorizing an attorney to appear to an action brought "against us" and confess judgment "against us" will not authorize an entry of a judgment against one of them, although the other be dead at the time judgment is entered. Hunt v. Chamberlin, 8 N. J. L. 336.

Statute in Force at Time of Execution

Controls. — A warrant of attorney must be executed according to the requirements of the statute in force when the judgment is taken, and not when the power was given. McPheeters v. Campbell, 5 Ind. 107.

2. Campbell v. Goddard, 117 Ill. 251; Keith v. Kellogg, 97 Ill. 147; Graves v. Whitney, 49 Ill. App. 435; Frye v. Jones, 78 Ill. 632; Oakley v. McCotter, 12 N. Y. Leg. Int. 91; Rabe v. Heslip, 4 Pa. St. 139; Grubbs v. Blum, 62 Tex. 426.

Designation of Person to Exercise Power. — The warrant should also contain a designation of the person who is intended to exercise such power.¹ Such designation need not, however, be by a name, but may describe him personally, or as one of a specified class,² as, for example, "any attorney."³

No Particular Form Necessary. — While the warrant of attorney to confess judgment should set forth its purpose, yet no particular form of words is necessary if the intention of the parties is clearly apparent.⁴

In Rabe v. Heslip, 4 Pa. St. 139, it was held that a sealed instrument by a father, in consideration of natural love, ordering his heirs to pay to his daughter, at his decease, $600 with interest from the date of the instrument, and desiring that the same might be recorded according to law, did not authorize a judgment to be entered against the obligor.

Int. (Pa.) 190; Parker v. Poole, 12 Tex. 86; Mikeska v. Blum, 63 Tex. 44.

3. Poppers v. Meager, 33 Ill. App. 19; Hall v. Jones, 32 Ill. 38; Keith v. Kellogg, 97 Ind. 147; Blanck v. Medley, 63 Ill. App. 211; Patton v. Stewart, 19 Ind. 233; Sweeney v. Stroud, 55 N. J. L. 97; Betz v. Valer, 39 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 190; Parker v. Poole, 12 Tex. 86.

Authority to A "or Any Other Attorney." — Where a warrant of attorney authorized A "or any other attorney" of the court in which the judgment was to be confessed, to appear and confess a judgment, and A and B, attorneys of the court, appeared and confessed the judgment, it was held to be valid. Patton v. Stewart, 19 Ind. 233.

In Blanck v. Medley, 63 Ill. App. 211, it was held that the power to confess judgment on a note under a warrant of attorney expressly authorizing "any attorney of any court of record" to make the confession, might well be exercised individually by an attorney in partnership with the attorney who signed the declaration for the holder of the note.

In Mikeska v. Blum, 63 Tex. 44, it was held that an agreement which provides that a judgment may be confessed by any attorney selected by the creditor is not for that reason void, if the agreement was voluntarily made by the creditor.

4. Mason v. Smith, 8 Ind. 73.

Authority to "Enter" Instead of to "Confess." — In Mason v. Smith, 8 Ind. 73, where it was objected that the attorney was authorized by the warrant to "enter" instead of to "confess" judgment, the court said: "We think there is nothing in the objection that the attorney was authorized to enter instead of to confess judgment. The intention of the parties is clear, and that should govern."

Any Writing Signed by the Party, the language of which makes the object in view clear and certain, and accurately defines the power delegated, is sufficient. Vliet v. Camp, 13 Wis. 198. See also Drake v. Simpson, 30 Ohio L. J. 236; Frank v. Thomas, 35 Ill. App. 547.

Unfilled Blanks in Warrant. — A power of attorney to confess judgment will not be rendered invalid by the failure to fill certain blanks therein, where the intention of the party as to what was to be inserted in such blanks is apparent. Thus, in Sweesey v. Kitchen, 80 Pa. St. 160, a judgment was confessed by an attorney on a note commencing "I promise to pay," etc., with warrant attached, having unfilled blanks, and signed by the defendant: "And ——— empower any attorney of record in this commonwealth or elsewhere, to appear for ——— and confess judgment against ———," etc. It was held that the warrant was not void, and the attorney properly interpreted the blanks to be intended to be filled with "I" and "me."

In Vliet v. Camp, 13 Wis. 198, a warrant of attorney was delivered with the blanks left unfilled in the printed form

Power Contained in a Note or Other Obligation. — According to the statutes of some of the states, authority to confess judgment must be conferred by some proper instrument distinct from that containing the evidence of the debt or obligation for which the judgment is confessed, and capable of being produced and filed with the clerk of the court in which the judgment is entered.¹ In most jurisdictions, however, such a warrant may be either inserted in the bond, annexed to it, or conferred by a separate paper.² Where the warrant is not a part of or accompanied by evidence of the indebtedness, the nature of the liability for which the judgment is rendered must be set out in the warrant with the same certainty as is required in a declaration.³

after the words "being justly indebted," "payable to," and "confess a judgment in favor of said," and these blanks were filled by the holder. It was held that the filling of the blanks was not an alteration such as to invalidate the warrant, since it appeared to be the intention of the parties that they should be so filled. See further, as to the effect of blanks in the warrant of attorney, Links v. Mayer, 22 Ill. App. 489; Packer v. Roberts, 140 Ill. 9; Rapley v. Price, 9 Ark. 428; Richards v. Globe Bank, 12 Wis. 692.

Power Not in Writing. — In Pennsylvania it is held that the authority to confess judgment need not be in writing. Bauer v. Rihs, 4 Pa. Dist. Rep. 583; Flanigen v. Philadelphia, 51 Pa. St. 491.

1. Trombly v. Parsons, 10 Mich. 272; Hendrickson v. Fries, 45 N. J. L. 555. This was formerly the rule, it seems, in Wisconsin, Richards v. Globe Bank, 12 Wis. 693; Vliet v. Camp, 13 Wis. 198; but has been changed by a later statute permitting a warrant of attorney to be now made part of the note or other obligation, so that a certified signature may manifest the obligor's assent to both the obligation and the warrant. Sloane v. Anderson, 57 Wis. 123, holding that a warrant of attorney printed in fine type under the body of the note, but above the signature, was sufficient.

Warrants for Use in Other States. — In Hendrickson v. Fries, 45 N. J. L. 555, it was held that the statute declaring that every warrant of attorney for confessing judgment which shall be included in any bond, bill, or other instrument for the payment of money shall be void, is a mere regulation of the practice in the New Jersey courts, and does not prohibit the making, in that state, of such warrants of attorney for use in other states, in the form that is legal in their courts.

Both Instruments on Same Paper. — The fact that the warrant of attorney is upon the same paper as the note upon which it authorizes judgment to be taken is not objectionable under such statutes, since the warrant of attorney and note are to be regarded as separate instruments, although thus connected. Trombly v. Parsons, 10 Mich. 272.

Obligation and Warrant Executed at Same Time. — The fact that both warrant and note were executed at the same time is no objection to the judgment by confession. Trombly v. Parsons, 10 Mich. 272.

Bond and Warrant to Different Persons. — Under the New Jersey statute a bond and warrant of attorney need not be given at the same time or to the same person. Burroughs v. Condit, 6 N. J. L. 300.

2. Fortune v. Bartholomei, 62 Ill. App. 290; Packer v. Roberts, 140 Ill. 9; Scott v. Mantonya, 164 Ill. 473; Johnson v. Crane, 22 Ill. App. 366; Holmes v. Parker, 25 Ill. App. 225, 125 Ill. 478; Banning v. Taylor, 24 Pa. St. 289.

3. Gambia v. Howe, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 133; Veach v. Pierce, 6 Ind. 48; Agard v. Hawks, 24 Ind. 276; Richards v. Barlow, 140 Mass. 218; James v. Crownover, (Pa. 1886) 4 Cent. Rep. 287.

In Veach v. Pierce, 6 Ind. 48, a power of attorney purported to authorize a confession of judgment in the Circuit Court in favor of the payee "for the amount of the principal and interest" that might "be due on four certain promissory notes given by" the debtor. A judgment was taken by confession of the attorney for a sum which the record stated was the full

Seal Unnecessary. — A power of attorney need not be under seal.¹

(f) Effect of Alteration. — Where a power of attorney is materially altered while in the hands of the payee, without any explanation thereof, the alteration will be presumed to have been made with the consent of the holder, and will render the power void.²

(g) Confession on Lost Warrant. — In at least one state it is held that a judgment may be entered on a note and warrant of attorney duly executed, but which has been lost or stolen.³

(h) Confession under Void Warrant. — As to the effect of confession of judgment under a void warrant the decisions differ, some holding that a judgment confessed under a power of attorney which does not conform to the statutory requirement is a nullity,⁴ while according to others the judgment confessed by attorney is not void although the letter of attorney be void.⁵

(i) Filing of Warrant. — It is essential to the jurisdiction of the court that the warrant of attorney shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the court in which the judgment is entered.⁶ It is amount of the principal and interest due, at the taking of judgment, on the four notes specified in the warrant; but the notes were not shown by any extrinsic testimony to be the same notes therein referred to. The defendant having taken an appeal, the clerk certified in the transcript that four notes, which he copied therein, were placed on file in his office when the warrant was filed, and that upon them the judgment was rendered. It was held that the warrant did not sufficiently identify the notes to authorize the judgment.

Unauthorized Signature of Firm Name.

— In Uhlendorf v. Kaufman, 41 Ill. App. 373, it was held that while a partner is not authorized to sign the firm name to a power of attorney to confess a judgment, a judgment entered under such a power is not void, but voidable only as to, and at the instance of, him whose name has thus been unwarrantably used.

Power Void in Part. — As to the effect of a confession where the power is void in part, see Fortune v. Bartolomei, 164 Ill. 51, holding that a judgment by confession for an ascertained amount will not be set aside though the power of attorney provides also for the confession of judgment for an unliquidated amount, where the provisions are severable, and the judgment for only the ascertained amount is confessed.

Forged Warrant. — Where a judgment by confession is entered on forged notes and warrants of attorney, the proceeding is coram non judice, and the judgment is void for want of jurisdiction of the defendant's person. Bullen v. Dawson, 139 Ill. 633.

Power Fraudulently Obtained. — In Johnston v. Loop, 2 Tex. 331, it was held that a confession of judgment on a letter of attorney fraudulently obtained is null and void.

Warrant Dated on Sunday. — In Baker v. Lukens, 35 Pa. St. 146, it was held that a judgment will not be stricken off because the warrant of attorney appears to be dated on Sunday.

Judgment cannot be entered before the actual filing of the warrant. Chambers v. Denie, 2 Pa. St. 421.

Statement that It Was Proved. — In Durham v. Brown, 24 Ill. 94, the court held that the power of attorney itself to confess a judgment should be filed, and that a mere statement that it was proved is not sufficient.

Setting Aside Judgment for Failure to File. — In Knox County Bank v. Doty, 9 Ohio St. 505, it was held that the taking of a judgment upon a warrant of attorney without filing the original warrant or a copy thereof is an irregularity for which the judgment may be set aside upon motion at the same or a subsequent term, the motion having been filed at the first term and regularly continued.

Failure to Indorse Filing upon Warrant. — In Thompson v. Foster, 6 Ark. 208, it was held that where a judgment is confessed for the defendants by an attorney in fact in pursuance of a warrant of attorney executed to him by them, and where it appears in the record that a warrant of attorney was in fact filed in court, the neglect to indorse the filing upon the warrant will not prejudice the rights of the parties; and that such omission of duty on the part of the clerk is cured by the statute of amendment after judgment by confession.

Filing Previous to Time of Perfecting Judgment. — A judgment by confession will not be set aside because the warrant of attorney was not placed on file with the clerk of the court at the time of perfecting judgment, provided that it was then before the clerk, having been previously filed in his office. Manufacturers', etc., Bank v. St. John, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 497.

Filing Subsequent to Judgment. — In Grubbs v. Blum, 62 Tex. 426, it is held that where the judgment is entered without written authority, it cannot be afterwards amended and corrected by filing in the cause such written authority to the acting attorney, contained in a paper bearing no date, and with no evidence as to the time of its execution.

Filing After Office Hours. — In Polhemus's Appeal, 32 Pa. St. 328, it was held that a prothonotary may receive and file a warrant of attorney and enter judgment thereon at his residence after office hours, and may docket it the next day as of the time when filed.

In Stein v. Good, 115 Ill. 93, the court held as follows: "In this class dence of such fact need not, however, be preserved in the record where the judgment is confessed in open court, as it should be of cases, where the whole proceeding is strictly ex parte, and the papers filed constitute a part of the record without any bill of exceptions making them so, public interests would seem to demand that some evidence should appear in the record showing unequivocally that the judgment was confessed by authority of the defendant in the judgment—or, in other words, showing that the power of attorney on file was actually executed by him. These judgments are most generally confessed when the defendant is in failing circumstances, and when the business community have an interest in his affairs. In such case it is a matter of importance to his creditors to be able to know with reasonable certainty whether the instrument purporting to be authority for the confession of the judgment is genuine, and, in short, whether the law authorizing the judgment has been substantially complied with. Such information is generally essential to the protection of their own interests."

In Rapley v. Price, 9 Ark. 428, it was held that where a judgment is rendered upon a warrant of attorney to confess, it must appear of record that execution of the power was proved before the confession of judgment. Where this is not done the court has no jurisdiction of the maker of such power, and the judgment is invalid.

Setting Aside Judgment for Failure to Prove.—In Knox County Bank v. Doty, 9 Ohio St. 505, it was held that where execution of a power is not proved, judgment may be set aside on motion at the same or a subsequent term. See also Stein v. Good, 115 Ill. 93.

Collateral Attack on Judgment.—Where the execution of the power of attorney to confess judgment on a note is not proved, no jurisdiction over the debtor is acquired, and the judgment may be collaterally attacked as void. Oppenheimer v. Giershofer, 54 Ill. App. 38.

Contrary Authorities.—In Hays v. State Bank, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 179, it was held that a judgment which recites the power of attorney is good, without the recital that it was proved.

In Alabama a judgment by confession under a power of attorney must show that the authority was verified and authorized the particular judgment, though neither the warrant nor the proof thereof need be set out in the record. Brown v. Little, 9 Ala. 416. And, in Hill v. Lambert, Minor (Ala.) 91, the court said: "The old practice of filing and entering of record the warrant of attorney has been relaxed for the convenience of parties, * * * and now * * * if an attorney takes upon himself to appear the court looks no farther, proceeds as if he had authority, and leaves the party to his action against him should it be otherwise." See also Gaines v. Tombeckbee Bank, Minor (Ala.) 50.

In Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Newton Cotton Mills, 115 N. Car. 507, it was held that the confession itself, with the filing thereof, was express authority for its entry, and that the judgment would not be vitiated by the omission to file the authority where such authority actually existed.

An Affidavit Showing the Execution of a Warrant of Attorney to confess a judgment, filed with the warrant, is sufficient proof of its execution, even when the judgment is entered in vacation. Ball v. Miller, 38 Ill. 110. See also Hall v. Jones, 32 Ill. 39; Roundy v. Hunt, 24 Ill. 600; Durham v. Brown, 24 Ill. 93.

In Bunn v. Gardiner, 18 Ill. App. 94, the court, in holding that where judgment is confessed by attorney in vacation, it is essential not only that proof of the execution be made, but that it be made by affidavit, said: "The authority of such an agent is never presumed, but must always be proved. The instrument he presented could not prove it. It could not prove itself. Its execution must be shown by evidence dehors itself, and in such form that it may be certainly identified and the question of its competency and sufficiency determined whenever occasion may arise, by a judicial tribunal. Hence it must not rest alone in the memory of the clerk or others, but in the record and papers filed, and it must be complete when the judgment is entered, because the fact in its nature is, and by the statute is impliedly declared to be, jurisdictional."

when confessed in vacation before the clerk.¹ In the latter case it must appear in the record, while in the former it will be presumed to have been done unless it appears to have been omitted.² According to some cases, where judgment is not confessed on a warrant within a certain time after the date thereof, an affidavit must be filed showing that the maker of the warrant is alive and that the debt, or at least a portion thereof, is still unpaid;³ and a rule of court, or, if in vacation, an order of a judge, must be obtained granting leave to enter a judgment before it can be confessed on such warrant.⁴ It would seem, however, that before a

In Martin v. Judd, 60 Ill. 78, the court said: "In this regard there is a broad distinction taken in the adjudged cases where the proceedings are had in open court and where the judgment is confessed in vacation. In the latter case the authority of the attorney must affirmatively appear. No presumptions will be indulged as to his authority." See also Roundy v. Hunt, 24 Ill. 598; Rising v. Brainerd, 36 Ill. 79; Jarrett v. Andrews, 19 Ind. 403; Merritt v. Clow, 2 Tex. 582.

Where Papers Filed Make Out Prima Facie Case.—In Joliet Electric Light, etc., Co. v. Ingalls, 23 Ill. App. 45, the court, while recognizing the usual rule that where a judgment is entered in vacation evidence necessary to its validity should be filed and preserved in the record, said: "All that is required, however, in order to impose upon the clerk the duty to enter up the judgment by confession in vacation, is that the papers filed with him make out a prima facie case; and such judgment will be presumed to be regular unless shown not to be so by the files in the case or otherwise."

Record Reciting Proof.—Where the record of a judgment by confession recites that the execution of the power to confess the judgment was duly proved upon error brought this will be sufficient, though no affidavit was filed of the execution of a warrant of attorney. Iglehart v. Morris, 34 Ill. 501.

3. Warrant Executed More than a Year and a Day.—Thus it has been held that a judgment cannot be confessed on a warrant which has been executed more than a year and a day, unless an affidavit be filed showing that the maker is alive and that the debt or some portion of it is still due. Hinds v. Hopkins, 28 Ill. 344; Stein v. Good, 16 Ill. App. 516; Hempstead v. Humphrey, 38 Ill. 90; Alldritt v. Morrison First Nat. Bank, 22 Ill. App. 24; Manufacturers', etc., Bank v. St. John, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 497.

After Ten Years from Date of Warrant.—In Eakin v. Smith, 21 N. J. L. 97, it was held that where ten years have elapsed from the date of the warrant such affidavit is required. Emery v. Smith, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 133.

4. Hinds v. Hopkins, 28 Ill. 344; Stein v. Good, 16 Ill. App. 516; Hempstead v. Humphrey, 38 Ill. 90; Eakin v. Smith, 21 N. J. L. 97; Manufacturers', etc., Bank v. St. John, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 497; Emery v. Smith, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 133. See also Lushington v. Waller, 1 H. Bl. 94; Oades v. Woodward, 7 Mod. 93.

Contra.—In Cross v. Moffat, 11 Colo. 210, the court, holding that it is sufficient to establish by affidavit the genuineness of the defendant's signature, and that the court cannot presume that a warrant of attorney is void after a lapse of six years, said: "But it is insisted that after the lapse of so long a period from the date of the instrument as here appears, a legal presumption should be indulged against the authority of one presuming to act under the warrant as attorney for an absent defendant. A certain rule in England, adopted by the courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas, is confidently relied upon by plaintiffs in error to support their position in the foregoing regard. This rule prohibits judgment by confession on a warrant of attorney where more than a year and a day has expired from the date of such judgment will be set aside because such affidavit was not filed showing that the defendant was alive and that the debt was due and unpaid, the party making the application must show in addition some equitable reason therefor.¹

(k) Affidavit of No Collusion, etc. — In some states it is provided that the party taking a judgment under warrant of attorney must make affidavit that the debt is bona fide, and that there is no collusion between himself and the debtor.²

warrant, except upon affidavit stating that the instrument is genuine, that the whole or some portion of the debt is yet due, and that the debtor is still alive. The warrant of attorney in the case at bar was over six years old when judgment was entered, and the affidavit filed does not state that the parties were alive, or that the debt remained unpaid. We shall decline to be governed by the English practice mentioned. It rests upon a special rule, originating in the Court of King's Bench, and not recognized by statute. Some of the controlling reasons leading to the adoption of this rule in England can hardly be considered applicable in this state at the present time. Why should we select the arbitrary period of a year and a day, and say that after that time the instrument shall not have the same force and effect as before? There is nothing in the arrangement of our terms of court calling for such a rule; we have no statute of limitations fixing this period in connection with actions or recoveries; and there is no legal presumption that after a year and a day the debtor is dead or the obligation discharged. It will be observed that the time begins to run under the rule from the date of the warrant of attorney, not from the maturity of the debt. Yet here such warrants of attorney are frequently given in connection with promissory notes to run for two or three or even a greater number of years."

In Hempstead v. Humphrey, 38 Ill. 90, it is held that in addition to a want of such proof, or an order of a judge, it must appear that the defendant has a meritorious defense.

In Emery v. Smith, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 133, it was held that a rule of court requiring leave to enter judgment based on affidavit where the warrant of attorney is above ten years old was not so rigid as to preclude all discretion by the court in its application; and where judgment was entered in such a case without the affidavit required, but such affidavit was filed within a few days after a rule to strike off the judgment, and on the hearing of the latter rule no facts were alleged which would invalidate the judgment on the merits, the judgment would not be stricken off. (1) Revocation of Warrant. — A simple power authorizing the confession of judgment in favor of a third person which is unsupported by a consideration,¹ or is not given as a security or to render a security effectual, may be revoked at the pleasure of the maker.² Where, however, such authority is given as a security, or is coupled with an interest, it is irrevocable.³

debito justitia, see that the requirements of the statute are not evaded or misunderstood." Ogden, J., in Reading v. Reading, 24 N. J. L. 362.

In New Jersey, before the Act of Feb., 1820, an affidavit was required only in cases of judgment on bonds and obligations, and not on judgments without bonds. Sharp v. Young, 5 N. J. L. 976. See also Parker v. Griggs, 4 N. J. L. 182; Skillman v. Applegate, 7 N. J. L. 62.

In Wisconsin it is provided by the statute authorizing judgments by confession (Rev. Stat. 1889, § 2896) that "the plaintiff shall file with his complaint an answer, signed by the defendant or some attorney in his behalf, confessing the amount claimed in the complaint or some part thereof; and in case such answer is signed by an attorney an instrument authorizing judgment to be confessed or entered shall be produced to the court or judge signing the judgment, and shall be made a part of the judgment roll. The plaintiff, or some one in his behalf, shall make and annex to the complaint an affidavit stating the amount due or to become due on the note or bond; or, if such note or bond is given to secure any contingent liability, the affidavit must state concisely the facts constituting such liability, and must show that the sum confessed does not exceed the same." Rogers v. Cherrier, 75 Wis. 54. See also McCabe v. Sumner, 40 Wis. 386; Sloane v. Anderson, 57 Wis. 123. Such affidavit should be made by some one knowing the facts, and if not made by the plaintiff, should show why not. McCabe v. Sumner, 40 Wis. 386. The judgment will not be set aside for the failure of the affidavit to state the amount due, where the complaint states the amount due upon a note, and the affiant swears that the facts alleged in the complaint are true to his own knowledge. Rogers v. Cherrier, 75 Wis. 54.

Substantial Compliance with Statute Necessary. — If no affidavit is made, or if the affidavit is not a substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute, the judgment is ipso facto fraudulent and inoperative against creditors, and creditors whose rights are affected may contest the validity of the judgment, and for this purpose may show that the judgment has been entered in violation of the statute. Clapp v. Ely, 27 N. J. L. 555.

In Sheppard v. Sheppard, 10 N. J. L. 250, it was held that an affidavit which did not conform substantially to the words of the statute is the same as no affidavit, and the judgment thereon cannot be received in evidence against third persons.

Effect of Omission. — "It was decided in this court, in the case of Den v. Gaston, 24 N. J. L. 820, that a judgment by confession, in the Court of Common Pleas, without an affidavit, is only voidable, and cannot, on the ground of that omission, be attacked collaterally by a stranger to the record. * * * This decision has been too long acquiesced in as the law of the state to be now disturbed. * * * It is a good judgment even against a creditor without an affidavit, and cannot, for that reason only, be questioned." Dean v. Thatcher, 32 N. J. L. 470.

Admissible in Evidence Without Affidavit. — A judgment by confession is admissible in evidence without proof of the existence of the affidavit. Dean v. Thatcher, 32 N. J. L. 470.

1. A warrant of attorney to confess a judgment upon a valuable consideration cannot be expressly revoked. Eldridge v. Folwell, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 207; Baker v. Lukens, 35 Pa. St. 146.

2. Evans v. Fearn, 16 Ala. 689.

3. Evans v. Fearn, 16 Ala. 689; Rapley v. Price, 11 Ark. 714; Wassell v. Reardon, 11 Ark. 705.

Where an attorney has a claim for collection, and the debtor, to save costs of suit, executes to him a power to confess judgment thereon, such power is upon a valid consideration, and coupled with an interest, and is therefore not revocable. Rapley v. Price, 11 Ark. 714.

(2) Upon Affidavit and Statement — (a) Necessity of Affidavit. — As a general rule, where judgment is confessed an affidavit by the debtor that such confession is made in good faith is required by statute.¹

Effect of Omission. — As a general rule, the omission of the affidavit required by statute will not render a judgment by confession void, but only voidable.² And such a judgment, though voidable as to creditors, is valid between the parties thereto.³

(b) Essential Allegations in Affidavit. — While the statutes of the various states usually prescribe a certain form of words in which to allege the indebtedness, yet such form need not be strictly followed. A substantial compliance with the requirements of the statute will be sufficient.⁴

"A power of attorney to confess judgment is not revocable by act of the party. * * * But if any fact affecting its validity be alleged, the court will permit an issue to be formed and tried, and act in the premises accordingly, annulling the warrant or reducing the amount of judgment upon it, as the case proved may require." Perkins, J., in Kindig v. March, 15 Ind. 248.

Subsequent Marriage of Maker. — A warrant of attorney given by a feme sole is not revoked by a subsequent marriage. Baker v. Lukens, 35 Pa. St. 146.

Subsequent Insanity of Maker. — In Spencer v. Reynolds, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 249, it was held that a power to confess judgment is not revoked by subsequent insanity of the maker.

Death of Party. — In Nichols v. Chapman, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 452, the court said: "The general rule is that the death of either party to a warrant of attorney is a revocation of it; but this rule does not apply where a judgment entered upon such warrant can be made good by relation. Thus if a person who has executed a bond and warrant of attorney to confess judgment die during a vacation, judgment may be entered against him during the same vacation as of the preceding term, and it will be valid by the common law."

(c) Filing Affidavit. — As a general rule, such affidavit must be filed with the other papers.¹

(d) Necessity of Statement. — As a prerequisite to the entry of a judgment by confession, it is generally required by the statutes of the various states that the party confessing the judgment must, at the time, file and sign a verified written² statement³ in which the amount of the judgment is to be set out, and also the facts giving rise to the debt for which the judgment is confessed.

judgment confessed before a justice of the peace is for a sum exceeding fifty dollars an affidavit must be filed alleging that the confession was not made "or taken" with intent to defraud any creditor, although the omission of the words "or taken" may render such confession void as to every one except a purchaser in good faith of property thereunder and the defendant making the confession, nevertheless a constable is protected in making a levy under an execution regular on its face, and issued by the justice by virtue of such a judgment.

"It is not enough to state one fact, or two facts, such as the amount due and the general nature of the debt; but all the material facts out of which the indebtedness arose must be given with the same particularity as if the judgment was impeached and assailed by a bill filed for that purpose." Brown, J., in Purdy v. Upton, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 494.

2. Lawless v. Hackett, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 149; Nichols v. Kribs, 10 Wis. 76; Thompson v. Hintgen, 11 Wis. 112.

Statement as General as Common Counts. — "The specification ought to be so particular and precise as to apprise all persons interested of the nature and consideration of the debt. A statement as general as the common counts in a declaration is not sufficient. It ought to be as special and precise at least as a bill of particulars." Lawless v. Hackett, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 149. See also Brinkerhoff v. Marvin, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 320; and compare Gandall v. Finn, 1 Keyes (N. Y.) 217, cited in the next note.

More Minute than a Declaration. — In McHenry v. Shepard, 2 Mo. App. 378, the court, after citing the various sections of the statute required in statements, said: "We consider it plain that the object of the provisions we have quoted was to secure, in the statement of the facts out of which a debt to be secured by confession of judgment arises, a much more minute and elementary detail than would suffice in a declaration. * * * The law does to be an extreme construction of the statutory requirement, which is merely intended to compel the person confessing judgment to disclose what is the real consideration of the judgment confessed, and to show to all interested the transaction out of which the debt has originated.¹ According to the weight of authority, a statement is sufficiently specific which states the transaction creating the indebtedness concisely, and in terms which will make known to the ordinary understanding the manner in which the indebtedness arose.² It is not intended by such statutes to compel the debtor to state sufficient of the transaction out of which the indebtedness arose to enable other creditors to form an opinion not forbid preferences absolutely and without qualification, because obedience to such an order would be what it could not, in the nature of things, enforce; but it regards preferences with jealousy, and insists upon their not being fraudulent. * * * There is no toleration of concealment or disguise. The whole business must be laid bare, so that all concerned may see and judge it."

1. Chappel v. Chappel, 12 N. Y. 221.

In New York it is held that, unlike the Act of 1818, the code does not require that the statement of the indebtedness should be as specific as a bill of particulars, but that it will be sufficient if it states the nature and consideration of the debt, the time in which it accrued, and that it is still due and unpaid. Gandall v. Finn, 1 Keyes (N. Y.) 217.

2. Atwater v. Manchester Sav. Bank, 45 Minn. 341; Stern v. Mayer, 19 Mo. App. 511; St. Louis Fourth Nat. Bank v. Mayer, 19 Mo. App. 517; Hard v. Foster, 98 Mo. 297; *J. H. Supreme Ct.) 375; Hopkins v. Nelson, 24 N. Y. 518; Thompson v. Hintgen, 11 Wis. 112.

No More Definite than a Complaint. — In Cordier v. Schloss, 12 Cal. 143, it was held that a statement of an indebtedness need not be more definite than is required in a complaint upon the same cause of action.

Particularity Dependent upon Transaction. — In Mechanics' Bank v. Mayer, 93 Mo. 417, it was held that the degree of particularity requisite in a statement of indebtedness depends in each case upon the particular transaction.

Description Identifying Cause. — In Ex

p. Hays, 6 Ark. 419, it was held to be sufficient if a statement contains such a description of the cause of action as will identify it.

Technical Description of Instrument. — Where the confession of judgment is upon a written instrument, the party confessing judgment need not state the technical character of the instrument upon which he confesses the judgment. Thus, where the amount, the date, and the time of payment are stated with sufficient certainty to identify a writing obligatory, the fact that a party calls it in his confession a note will not invalidate the judgment. Ex p. Hays, 6 Ark. 419.

One of Several Items Incorrectly Stated.

— Where a statement for judgment by confession authorized judgment for the amount of two items, and alleged that it was for a debt justly due the judgment creditor, the fact that the statement of the facts from which the indebtedness under one item arose was defective was held not to affect the validity of the judgment upon the other item. Harrison v. Gibbons, 71 N. Y. 58.

So as to Be Pleadable in Bar. — In Wight v. Mott, Kirby (Conn.) 152, it was held that a judgment by confession ought to express the particular debt or duty it was for, that it may be pleadable in bar of a future demand for the same thing.

To Prevent Parties from Shifting Consideration. — In J. H. Teasdale Commission Co. v. Van Hardenberg, 53 Mo. App. 326, it is held that the statement of facts out of which the indebtedness arose will be sufficient if the consideration of the judgment is thereby so fixed that the judgment debtor and creditor are prevented from shifting it, and it is such as the law recognizes as valuable.

from the facts stated as to the integrity of the debtor in confessing the judgment,¹ but simply to require him to state enough of such facts to enable creditors to inquire into the transaction and to form an opinion of the honesty of the judgment from the facts they shall ascertain.²

On Promissory Notes. — A statement for confession of judgment setting forth as the facts from which the indebtedness arose simply the making of a promissory note is not a sufficient compliance with the statutory requirement.³ The statement should set

1. McDowell v. Daniels, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 143; Atwater v. Manchester Sav. Bank, 45 Minn. 341.

"When it is said that the written authority must state concisely the facts out of which the indebtedness arose, it is not intended that it shall state them particularly and specifically, but briefly. To be concise is to be brief. To make a statement in a concise manner is to make it as short and brief, and yet as intelligent, as possible, and not to make it particular and specific." Vanfleet v. Phillips, 11 Iowa 558.

Where Demand Has Been Assigned. — The requirement as to the particularity of the statement applies with the same force in the case of a confession to a subsequent owner of the demand as where the confession is to the original creditor. Clafin v. Sanger, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 338, where the court said: "The statement is to be made by the debtor, and not the creditor, and he can as well state the particulars in one case as the other. He knows the particular transaction out of which the indebtedness arose, and he can state it as easily after the claim has been transferred to a third person as he could before the transfer."

"Where a judgment is entered by confession, it is necessary that the sworn statement of indebtedness accompanying it should be sufficiently specific in sums, dates, and considerations to enable the other creditors of the debtor, with reasonable facility, to investigate its genuineness and protect themselves against fraud." Roosevelt, J., in Moody v. Townsend, 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 375.

It is sufficient if the statement identifies the transaction, and furnishes a sufficient clew to the indebtedness. Bryan v. Miller, 28 Mo. 32.

In Clafin v. Dodson, 111 Mo. 195, the court held that the purposes of the statute are satisfied when a sufficient clew is afforded a creditor to enable him to start an investigation as to the honesty and good faith of the transaction.

forth fully the facts out of which the indebtedness arose for which such note was given.¹

For Goods Sold. — According to the decisions in some states, a statement for confession of judgment founded on an indebtedness for goods sold is sufficient if it states that such indebtedness arose

In Ex p. Carroll, 17 S. Car. 448, it was held that a description of a note without a statement of the indebtedness for which it was given will not sustain a confession of judgment.

In Richardson v. Fuller, 2 Oregon 179, it was held that the sworn statement is insufficient where it merely sets forth that the indebtedness arose on a promissory note, and that such statement ought to show where and how much money was advanced on the note and the circumstances upon which it was advanced.

Statements Held Insufficient. — "That heretofore, at the city of New York, I made my certain promissory note for the sum of two thousand dollars, payable on demand, and that I have not paid such note. And that I am justly indebted to the plaintiff thereupon in the said sum of two thousand dollars." Kendall v. Hodgins, 1 Bosw. (N. Y.) 659.

"Promissory note for a specified date and amount, which note was given to L. W. & Co. for goods, wares, and merchandise theretofore purchased of L. W. & Co. by the defendant, which note was indorsed by the debtor and came into the hands of the plaintiffs for a valuable consideration." Clafin v. Sanger, 17 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 574.

"That we, A. H., E. H., and J. H., are indebted to the said A. B. upon a certain promissory note, of which the following is a copy" (setting out the copy). Bonnell v. Henry, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 142.

Washington. — Puget Sound Nat. Bank v. Levy, 10 Wash. 504.

In McHenry v. Shephard, 2 Mo. App. 378, the court held that the other creditors of the cognizor have an interest in knowing whether the note in its origin was business or accommodation paper; whether it was indorsed by the cognizor for value or for accommodation; whether it was indorsed before or after materializing; whether due notice of its dishonor was given by the holder, and upon what terms the holder took it; and a statement which was silent on all these heads was held not a compliance with the letter or spirit of the statute.

Sufficient as Against the Debtor. — In Von Keller v. Muller, 3 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 375, note, it was held that a statement which sets out a note as the indebtedness is sufficient as against the debtor, though it may not be as against creditors.

Statements Held Sufficient. — In Acker v. Acker, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 1, it was held that where a promissory note is stated, it is sufficient to state the consideration by giving the nature of the dealings out of which it arose, without giving all the particulars, such as the amount and time of loans or payments to the debtor's use, and the person to whom such payments were made.

A statement setting out the note and reciting that the consideration is money loaned by plaintiff to defendant is a sufficient compliance with the statutory requirement. Vanfleet v. Phillips, 11 Iowa 558; Marvin v. Tarbell, 12 Iowa 93.

In Freligh v. Brink, 22 N. Y. 418, it was held sufficient to state that the indebtedness arose upon a promissory on account of goods sold and delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant during a certain month,¹ or since a certain day,² or during a certain year,³ or within a certain number of years.⁴ In other states, however, it is held that where the consideration is for goods sold, the specification should state the kind, quantity, and price of such goods.⁵

For Money Lent. — Where the confession of judgment is for money lent, it is sufficient if the statement sets forth that the consideration of the judgment is the indebtedness of the defendant to the plaintiff for a certain sum lent,⁶ at a specified date.⁷

For Balance Due. — Where the confession of judgment is for the balance of account, it seems that such a statement should properly state where the goods were bought, the terms, the amount, quantity, or kind, and should allege any payments made and how such balance was ascertained.⁸

note for seven hundred dollars with interest, "that amount of money being had by the defendants of the plaintiff, and upon which there is this day due the sum of seven hundred and eighty-two dollars and forty-seven cents. * * * And we hereby state that the sum hereby by us confessed is justly due to the said plaintiff."

A statement as the foundation of a confession of judgment which sets out the execution and delivery "for value" of a negotiable note for fifteen hundred dollars "for money which" a creditor "then and there gave" the debtor "for said note as a loan, * * * which sum [of fifteen hundred dollars] is justly due and owing according to the tenor and effect of said note herein described," is sufficient to satisfy the statute. Stern v. Mayer, 19 Mo. App. 511.

Filing Note. — In a confession of judgment upon an indebtedness evidenced by a note, such note need not be filed with the confession. Stern v. Mayer, 19 Mo. App. 511; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Newton Cotton Mills, 115 N. Car. 507.

Note Attached to Statement. — In Dulard v. Phelan, 83 Iowa 471, it was held that where the note is attached to the statement and properly identified, this will constitute a concise statement of facts within the meaning of the statute.

In Missouri it was held that the statement, where the indebtedness is for property sold, should set forth when and what kind of property was sold, the price or the aggregate of the purchase, and the amount of payments, if any. Bryan v. Miller, 28 Mo. 32.

6. Miller v. Clarke, 37 Iowa 325; Kern v. Chalfant, 7 Minn. 487.

In Vanfleet v. Phillips, 11 Iowa 558, the following statement was held sufficient: "Money borrowed by me from the said Vanfleet, and the interest due thereon."

In Lyon v. Sherman, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 393, a statement that the indebtedness arose for "various sums of money lent and advanced" by the plaintiff to the defendant "during the last three years," including interest thereon to date, was held sufficient. Contra, Daly v. Matthews, 12 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 403, note.

7. Johnston v. McAusland, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 214.

On or About a Certain Date. — In Johnston v. McAusland, 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 214, it is held that stating the loan to have been made on or about the date mentioned is not indefinite.

8. Miller v. Earle, 24 N. Y. 111.

It is not sufficient that the statement should recite that the consideration of the demand on which it is based is a promissory note given to the plaintiff

bb. ALLEGATION THAT DEBT IS "JUSTLY DUE." — While it is provided by the statute in some states that the statement, in addition to setting forth the facts upon which the indebtedness arose, must also state that the sum confessed is justly due, or to become due,¹ it is held, however, that this does not require that the confession must state in terms that the sum for which the judgment is confessed is justly due or to become due,² if the statement shows a valid debt in the beginning.³

cc. ALLEGATION OF AMOUNT OF DEBT. — The statement must also set forth the amount of the debt for which the judgment is confessed.⁴ The amount must be set forth explicitly, and not be left to inference.⁵ Thus a confession of judgment on a note should set out the amount for which the note was given.⁶ If a judg-for balance due on settlement. Bernard v. Douglas, 10 Iowa 370.

In Wood v. Mitchell, 117 N. Y. 439, the following statement was held insufficient on account of its indefiniteness: "The said sum of five thousand dollars is a balance due to said plaintiff of various sums of money loaned and advanced by him to me, the said defendant, during a period from about July 1, 1886, to date, and includes interest upon such loans and advances to this date."

In Kinyon v. Fowler, 10 Mich. 16, it was held that the confession by defendants of a "judgment on a demand arising upon contract" is substantially a confession that they are "indebted."

Need Not Negative Payment or Discharge. — In Lanning v. Carpenter, 20 N. Y. 447, it was held that where the creating of a just debt is averred, it is unnecessary in terms to negative that it has been paid or otherwise discharged. The court said: "The particular facts must be set forth in such a manner as to show not only a just debt, but the amount thereof. That being done, an additional averment, in general terms, of the justice of the debt and its amount is not required. It is true that although the facts stated may show with all the requisite certainty and detail the creation of a debt, yet it may have been paid. So also it may have been released or discharged by bankruptcy, insolvency, or in some other manner. But it is not required to negative all the conceivable possibilities of the case." See also Freiligh v. Brink, 22 N. Y. 419; Miller v. Earle, 24 N. Y. 112; Neusbaum v. Keim, 24 N. 5. In Clements v. Gerow, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 325, it was held that this statement of the amount of the debt is a vital part of a valid confession, and the omission of it is a fatal defect. The court said, in speaking of the omission of the amount: "This I regard as a vital part of a valid confession, and the omission of it, in these cases, a fatal defect. It is not to be left to inference. The statute expressly requires, in substance, that the statement should show that the sum confessed does not exceed the amount of the debt."

In Cordier v. Schloss, 18 Cal. 576, it is held that the failure of the statement to set out the amounts due severally for goods and for money would be fatal, just as such an averment is insufficient in an ordinary complaint.

6. Rae v. Lawser, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 23.

ment is confessed for money lent and advanced, the amount of the money lent should be set forth.¹ If for goods sold and delivered, the amount of the sales or total price of the goods must be set forth.² If the confession be to secure against a contingent liability, the statement must set out concisely the facts constituting the liability,³ and must show that the sum confessed does not exceed the same.⁴

dd. SIGNATURE. — Under the statutes authorizing entry of judgment upon confession, it is required that the statement upon which such judgment is entered must be signed.⁵

By Defendant in Person. — Such statement must be signed by the person against whom the judgment is to be rendered.⁶ Where the

In Winnebrenner v. Edgerton, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 185, it was held that a judgment confessed to secure against a contingent liability on a guaranty should be set aside on motion of a subsequent judgment creditor, if the statement on which it is entered does not show the particulars of the contract on which the liability rests; e. g., in the case of a promissory note, if it does not show who are the parties to it, or the facts which imposed a liability thereon on the plaintiff in behalf of the defendant, and such liability as the defendant is bound to protect.

Statements Held Sufficient. — A confession to secure against contingent liability which set forth that "the said plaintiff has this day indorsed my notes, payable at bank, for six thousand dollars in all; which indorsements are made by said plaintiff for my accommodation, and to enable me to negotiate said notes," was held sufficiently to describe the statement, and that it was not necessary to state the date, time to run, amount, and place of payment of each note indorsed by the plaintiff. Hopkins v. Nelson, 24 N. Y. 518.

In Marks v. Reynolds, 12 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 403, it was held that a statement to secure against contingent liability as indorser for the accommodation of the defendant is sufficient if it describes the notes, naming the parties, dates, amounts, and times and places of payment. The consideration need not be stated, nor the fact that the notes have been discounted. See also Dow v. Platner, 16 N. Y. 562.

Affidavit and Statement Combined. — Where the affidavit and the written statement are both upon the same page, and the signature is to the affidavit and not to the statement and affidavit separately, the statutory requirement is sufficiently complied with. Purdy v. Upton, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 494. See also Post v. Coleman, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 64, holding that where the defendant signed his name at the close or foot of the verification, which immediately followed the statement and confession of judgment, instead of signing the statement, this was a sufficient signature.

confession of judgment is against two or more persons, the statement must be signed by each of the persons against whom it authorizes the entry of judgment,¹ else a judgment entered upon such statement will be void as to all.²

ee. VERIFICATION — Necessity. — It is also required by statute that the statement of indebtedness upon which the judgment is to be entered must be sworn to by the party making it.³

Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 340; French v. Edwards, 5 Sawy. (U. S.) 266.

In Michigan, under the statute authorizing a justice of the peace to enter judgment by confession "provided such confession shall be in writing and signed by the person making the same in presence of the justice and one or more competent witnesses," the judgment will be void for want of conformity to the statute where it does not appear to be thus signed. Beach v. Botsford, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 199.

Signature by Attorney. — A statement merely signed by the attorney of the person against whom judgment by confession is to be rendered will not sustain such judgment. Reynolds v. Lincoln, 71 Cal. 183; Chapin v. Thompson, 20 Cal. 687; French v. Edwards, 5 Sawy. (U. S.) 266.

2. Chapin v. Thompson, 20 Cal. 681, holding that where two persons sign a confession of judgment against themselves and two others, the judgment entered thereon, being void as to those not signing, was equally so as to those signing, and that the authority being to enter a judgment against four, no judgment thereon could be entered against a less number.

Signature by Two and by Attorney of Third Party. — In French v. Edwards, 5 Sawy. (U. S.) 266, judgment was entered upon a statement signed by two of the defendants in person and by the attorney of the third. It was held that the consent of those signing was only that judgment might be entered against all; and as there was no authority to enter judgment as to the third party, judgment was unauthorized and void as to all.

Between Parties. — In Thorp v. Platt, 34 Iowa 314, it was held that as between the parties the statement will be sufficient without being sworn to, and that a defect in that respect may be amended on leave of court.

Confession for Less than Fifty Dollars. — In Snyder v. Warren, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 519, it was held that a judgment by confession for fifty dollars or less was good without the oath required by the New York Fifty Dollar Act then in force. See also Griffin v. Mitchell, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 548; Cornell v. Cook, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 310.

Verification Before Plaintiff's Attorney. — In Post v. Coleman, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 64, it was held not to be a valid objection to the regularity of a judgment by confession, that the statement was verified before one of the plaintiff's attorneys, since the rule which excludes the attorney from taking the affidavit in an action is merely technical and does not apply to affidavits preparatory to the commencement of a suit.

In Vanfleet v. Phillips, 11 Iowa 558, it was held that the mere fact that the statement for the confession of judgment is sworn to before a notary public, who was at the time one of the attorneys of the plaintiff, did not necessarily render it void, but that such circumstances would be considered if it were claimed that fraud was practiced in procuring the confession.

On Belief. — An affidavit merely that the defendant believes the statement to be true is insufficient. He must swear positively to the truth of the facts so far as they are within his own knowledge.¹

1. Ingram v. Robbins, 33 N. Y. 409; Cook v. Whipple, 55 N. Y. 150.

In Ingram v. Robbins, 33 N. Y. 409, an affidavit was annexed to the statement in which it was said that the deponent "believes the above statement of confession is true." The court, in holding this not to be the proper verification, said: "In requiring that he should verify the statement, the legislature intended that in so far as it related to things within his own knowledge he should affirm it to be true; a statement that he believes it is something considerably short of this. * * * No one can fail to feel that when that term is used the party commits himself less conclusively to the principal fact. It is a qualification of the direct affirmation of the existence of the fact. Besides, the word is inappropriate when used in relation to a fact which the party either knows or does not know."

Contra. — In Delaware v. Ensign, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 85, it was held that the verification of a statement in which the debtor swears that "he believes the above statement of confession is true" is a sufficient verification, for the reason that "the defendant, on such an affidavit, could be convicted of perjury. He would not be allowed to shield himself from the consequences of crime on the pretense that he swore only to his belief, unless he had good grounds for such belief."

Sufficient Verification. — In Mosher v. Heydrick, 30 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 161, it was held that an allegation in the affidavit that "the facts stated in the above confession are true" is a sufficient verification of the statements made therein, since, when it is said that the facts stated in the above confession are true, it is in effect saying that the statement is true.

Defect in Jurat. — In Grattan v. Matteson, 54 Iowa 229, it was held that where a notary by mistake omitted to sign his full name below the jurat to a confession of judgment taken before him, the surname being omitted, but his seal, containing the full name, was attached, and the confession was in all respects legally made, and was duly approved by the court and judgment entered thereon, such a judgment would not be held invalid on account of the defective jurat, when assailed in a collateral action.

Failure to Seal Jurat. — In Chase v. Street, 10 Iowa 593, the affidavit accompanying the statement for a judgment by confession was sworn to before a notary public, whose seal was not attached to the jurat, and the judgment on the statement was, for that reason, reversed.

nullity, and cannot be collaterally attacked.¹ It is valid as between parties, and is void only as to creditors,² and must be called in question by such creditors in a direct proceeding for that purpose.³ If, however, there is an entire absence of the statement required by statute, judgment, it seems, is not only voidable, but is absolutely void as to creditors.⁴

gg. AMENDMENT OF DEFECTS. — The court may, in its discretion, allow a defective statement to be amended,⁵ but, as a general rule, ier v. Schloss, 18 Cal. 576; Richards v. McMillan, 6 Cal. 419.

The omission fully to comply with the statute by setting forth explicitly the facts and circumstances upon which the debt was incurred does not ipso facto make the judgment void; it merely throws on the judgment creditor, if his judgment is contested by other creditors, the burden of proving that his judgment was fair and not fraudulent. *Richards v. We know of no instance in which such a case has reached an appellate court. The statement of such facts is a prerequisite to the confession of judgment; it is not a confession of judgment without it. Every attempt at making such a statement being wanting, the pretended judgment by confession was null and void, and the case, after its entry, was still pending and undetermined."

Addressed to Discretion of the Court. —

In Symson v. Selheimer, 105 N. Y. 660, the court, in holding that a motion made by the plaintiff to obtain permission of the court to amend the statement of the confession of judgment is addressed to the discretion of the Supreme Court, said: "It was not an amendment which he had the legal right to demand, but was one which the court might in its discretion refuse, or grant upon such terms as to it might seem to be just."

In Mitchell v. Van Buren, 27 N. Y. 300, it was held that, upon a motion by a subsequent creditor to set aside the judgment confessed by the debtor, the court may allow an amendment supporting the judgment by signing and verifying a new statement, stating the facts more specifically.

such amendment will not be allowed where it will affect the rights of existing judgment creditors which may have attached in the meantime.¹

4. Time of Confession — a. IN VACATION. — According to the statutes of most of the states authorizing a confession of judgment, the judgment may be confessed in person or by power of attorney either in term time or in vacation.² Upon a warrant of attorney authorizing confession of judgment, a confession in vaca-

In Ingram v. Robbins, 33 N. Y. 409, it was held that an error in the statement which occurred from the inadvertence of the attorney employed to enter up the judgment is amendable.

In Wells v. Gieseke, 27 Minn. 478, it was held that the court cannot allow a nunc pro tunc amendment of an insufficient statement for judgment by confession so as to affect the rights of creditors who have subsequently acquired liens and who have begun proceedings to avoid the judgment.

Contra. — In National Park Bank v. Salomon, 17 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y.) 8, it was held that the power of the Supreme Court to amend a confession of judgment on motion may be exercised, notwithstanding the effect of such amendment may be to deprive subsequent judgment creditors of rights which otherwise would be theirs.

"The judgment is a judgment of a court of record, though confessed in vacation before the clerk." Kellogg v. Keith, 4 Ill. App. 386.

In Wells v. Morton, 10 Wis. 468, it was said that the practice of allowing clerks and prothonotaries, in vacation, and in the absence of the court or judge, and without his authority, to enter and record judgments by confession, is of very recent date. It had its origin soon after the substitution of written for oral pleadings, and still prevails in England. See also Shadrack v. Woolfolk, 32 Gratt. (Va.) 707.

In Blaikie v. Griswold, 10 Wis. 293, it was held that the practice of allowing judgments by confession in vacation is not judicial, since the court has a general discretionary control over judgments entered upon powers of attorney, and may always interfere.

Contra. — Moore v. McGuire, 26 Ala. 461; Penn v. Meeks, 2 N. J. L. 141.

In Miffin v. Stalker, 4 Kan. 283, it was held that confession of judgment must be made in open court and that a judgment entered on a confession taken by the clerk in vacation is a nullity. According to this case it seems that the clerk is authorized, in vacation, only to enter a judgment rendered by the court.

In Arkansas it seems that formerly a judgment by confession might be taken in vacation. Pickett v. Thurston, 7 Ark. 397. But that since the adoption of the Civil Code, providing that the person must appear in a court of competent jurisdiction, a judgment by confession before the clerk of the Circuit Court in vacation is unauthorized and void. Hare v. Hall, 41 Ark. 372.

Entry and Not Rendition. — "Under statutes authorizing judgments by con-tion is valid although the warrant itself does not in express terms authorize a confession of judgment in vacation.¹ But where it is doubtful from the language used in the power to confess whether the maker intended that such judgment might be confessed in vacation, such confession can be taken only in term time.² A warrant to enter judgment as of the last, next, or any subsequent term, authorizes the entry of a judgment at the current term.³

fession in vacation through the agency of the clerk, there being no judicial determination of the controversy, the act of giving judgment in such cases is called the 'entering' rather than the 'rendering' of judgment." Schuster v. Rader, 13 Colo. 329; Abbott v. Yuma County, 18 Colo. 6.

What Constitutes Vacation.—In Jasper v. Schlesinger, 22 Ill. App. 637, it was held that a period of definite adjournment for several weeks during the term will be vacated for the purpose of authorizing the clerk to enter up confessions of judgment. See also Conkling v. Ridgely, 112 Ill. 36.

Judgment may be thus confessed where the court has adjourned not sine die, but two judicial days, as from Thursday forenoon until Monday. The statutes are to be so construed as to promote the remedy, and such an interval may be deemed vacation within the meaning of the statute. Ottawa First Nat. Bank v. Daly, 34 Ill. App. 173.

In Brown v. Hume, 16 Gratt. (Va.) 456, it was held that under the act providing that judgment may be confessed in the clerk's office only in vacation, a judgment confessed in the clerk's office on the morning of the first day of the term of the court, before the hour for the opening of the court, is a judgment confessed in vacation and valid.

1. Kellogg v. Keith, 4 Ill. App. 386.

Warrant in Vacation.—In King v. Shaw, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 142, a warrant of attorney was given in vacation to enter up judgment in vacation or term, on a bond given at the same time, and payable immediately; and judgment was entered up as of the preceding term. The court, in its refusal on motion to set aside the judgment, said: "An authority to enter up judgment in vacation on a bond payable immediately, will include the vacation in which the bond was given; for the parties must be supposed to mean the present as well as any future vacation.

There was then no breach of good faith in entering up the judgment in the August vacation; and the relation back to the term of August is a fiction which can prejudice neither the parties nor purchasers, since the judgment is a lien only from the day on which it is docketed. To enter up judgment on a bond of a term before it was executed or due, is, however, error on the face of the record; but we do not think it proper to interfere in this way. The defendant must be left to his remedy by writ of error, and the plaintiff to protect himself by a release of errors, if he can procure it."

Notice of Confession.—In Tennessee, by the Act of 1801, c. 19, it is required that where a person has a bond with power to confess a judgment, before he shall do so, he shall give the debtor ten days' notice. Hays v. State Bank, Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 179.

A Term's Notice Necessary.—In Enston v. Mixer, 15 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 193, it was held that a judgment by confession comes under the general rule which forbids the entry of a judgment without a term's notice after the second term subsequent to that at which it was obtained; the term at which it was obtained being reckoned the first. "It is an indulgence granted to a confession in vacation when it is considered and allowed to be entered as a judgment obtained at the term next preceding; but if as good as a verdict or a final order of court, a confession is no better, and can claim no exemption from a rule which may often serve to prevent great abuses."

2. Whitney v. Bohlen, 157 Ill. 571.

A warrant of attorney which authorizes a confession of judgment on a note "as of any term" does not authorize a confession in vacation. Such warrant only gives power to confess at some term. Whitney v. Bohlen, 157 Ill. 571.

3. Montelius v. Montelius, Bright. (Pa.) 79.

b. AFTER DEATH OF PARTIES — (1) After Death of Plaintiff — In Pending Action. — A judgment by confession in a pending suit after the death of the plaintiff, and before the substitution of his representatives, is void.¹

Under Warrant of Attorney. — The entry of a judgment by confession under a warrant of attorney in favor of a plaintiff then deceased, for the use of such plaintiff's administrator, is erroneous.²

(2) After Death of Defendant. — As a general rule, a judgment by confession cannot be entered on a warrant of attorney, after the death of the defendant.³ Where one of the obligors in a joint or several bond is dead, a judgment against all of them by virtue of the warrant of attorney is irregular and will be wholly set aside.⁴

5. Amount for Which Judgment Is to Be Entered — a. FOR SUM CONFESSED. — While a judgment by confession should be entered only for the sum confessed,⁵ yet it is held that a judgment entered Set Aside on Application of Personal Representatives. — In Wentz v. Bealor, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 337, it was held that where a judgment is confessed in a pending suit after the death of the plaintiff, and before his personal representatives have been substituted, such judgment will be set aside on the application of his personal representatives.

On Day of Death. — In Maddock v. Stevens, 15 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 248, it was held that a judgment by confession cannot be entered after the defendant's death, although on the same day that he died. The doctrine that the law will not ordinarily inquire into fractions of a day has no application to such a case. See also, as to this point, Lanning v. Pawson, 38 Pa. St. 480.

Relation to Previous Term. — A judgment and proceedings in entering up a judgment in one term cannot be made to relate to, and be entitled as of, a term preceding. Thus, where a bond and warrant of attorney to confess judgment were executed by two persons on April 10, 1824, and one of them died on April 14, a judgment entered thereon during the subsequent term as of the preceding February term was set aside as irregular. Bennett v. Davis, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 68.

4. Lewis v. Ash, 2 Miles (Pa.) 110.

Entry Against Surviving Obligors. — In Croasdell v. Tallant, 83 Pa. St. 193, it was held that on a joint warrant of attorney the prothonotary may enter judgment against the surviving obligors.

5. Gayle v. Foster, Minor (Ala.) 125.

Entry by Clerk. — In Tucker v. Gill, 61 Ill. 236, it was held that since the clerk has no judicial power, but acts ministerially, he cannot do otherwise than follow the papers filed in entering a judgment by confession. He has no power to disregard the plea of confession and proceed to determine for what sum judgment should be entered. He must enter judgment for the amount confessed, or not at all. In this case there was a power of attorney to confess a judgment on a note for $26,000, the note was described in the declaration, which claimed $50,000 damages, the plea of confession admitted an indebtedness for the latter sum, and the clerk rendered judgment for $26,000. It was held that the attorney confessing the judgment exceeded his power, yet the clerk did not have power to deviate from the plea of confession in rendering the judgment.

Judgment under Warrant on Collectors' Bonds. — Where the judgment is confessed under a power of attorney on the bond of a tax collector, such judgment must be for the whole penal sum, otherwise it will be stricken off. Com. v. Evans, 8 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 665.

under a power of attorney will not be wholly void because of an erroneous excess,¹ where such excess is not the result of fraud,² and that only the excess included without authority is void.³

6. FOR ATTORNEY'S FEES STIPULATED IN WARRANT. — Where, as is the case in most jurisdictions, a warrant of attorney to confess judgment may contain a stipulation for the payment of attorney's fees,⁴ a judgment entered upon such warrant not only may, but should, include attorney's fees.⁵

Judgment for Excessive Rate of Interest. — In Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Newton Cotton Mills, 115 N. Car. 507, it was held that a confession of judgment will not be vacated for the reason that a greater rate of interest is confessed for than is allowed by the note on which confession is made, unless fraud is shown; but the judgment will be corrected so as to allow the proper rate.

Judgment in Excess, How Corrected. — In Adam v. Arnold, 86 Ill. 185, it was held that a judgment by confession under a power of attorney for a sum in excess of that due cannot be set aside at the instance of a stranger, although he be also a creditor of the debtor. The defendant in the judgment alone can complain, and he should have the error corrected in the court below.

Modification of Excessive Judgment Entered in Vacation. — Where a judgment entered in vacation upon confession of an attorney under a power is for too great a sum or includes a sum as an attorney's fee which is not proper, the court at the next term should, on motion of the defendant therein, modify or set aside the judgment to the extent of such improper sum. Campbell v. Goddard, 117 Ill. 251.

Contra. — In Ohio it seems that a stipulation in a warrant of attorney to pay collection fees, in addition to the principal debt and interest, is against public policy and void. Shelton v. Gill, 11 Ohio 417; State v. Taylor, 10 Ohio 378; Spalding v. Muskingum Bank, 12 Ohio 544; Martin v. Belmont Bank, 13 Ohio 250.

In Iowa, where a judgment was confessed on a note in which it was provided that a "reasonable attorney's fee, if sued," should be paid, it was held that no attorney's fee was allowable. In that state a judgment by confession is one entered without action. Dullard v. Phelan, 83 Iowa 471.

5. Ball v. Miller, 38 Ill. 110; Weigley v. Matson, 125 Ill. 64; Campbell v. Goddard, 117 Ill. 251; McAllister's Appeal, 59 Pa. St. 204; Faulkner v. Wilson, 3 W. N. C. (Pa.) 339; Mahoning County Bank's Appeal, 32 Pa. St. 158; Featherman v. Davison, 4 Kulp (Pa.) 301; Allison's Estate, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 550; Robins v. Beck, 2 Penny. (Pa.) 125.

In Weigley v. Matson, 125 Ill. 64, it was held that to include the attorney's fees in the judgment is not fraudulent as to other creditors.

Estoppel of Maker. — In Blanck v. Medley, 63 Ill. App. 211, it was held that the maker of a note authorizing judgment by confession and the payment of attorney's fees cannot question such attorney's fees on the ground that he was insolvent when he made the note.

Execution Without Judgment. — Where a warrant of attorney provides that the creditor shall recover an attorney's commission for collection, it must be included in the judgment, or it cannot

Amount Fixed by Court. — Where, as is sometimes the case, the warrant of attorney, instead of specifying the amount of attorney's fee, merely authorizes the inclusion in the judgment of a reasonable fee,¹ it is for the court to determine what shall be a reasonable fee under the circumstances.²

be collected by execution. McAllister's Appeal, 59 Pa. St. 204; Mahoning County Bank's Appeal, 32 Pa. St. 158; Faulkner v. Wilson, 3 W. N. C. (Pa.) 339.

Attorney's Fees as Costs. — Where, upon confession of judgment, attorney's commissions are not made part thereof, they cannot be collected as costs. Featherman v. Davison, 4 Kulp (Pa.) 301; Allison's Estate, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 550.

Addition After Entry. — Where judgment has been entered on a judgment note, the amount (as liquidated in the note) cannot be afterwards changed by the addition of attorney's fees, without the consent of the parties or an order of court. Ward v. Nice, 42 Leg. Int. (Pa.) 192.

When Not to Be Included — Where Note Paid at Maturity. — A clause in a judgment note authorizing inclusion of an "attorney's commission of five per cent. for collection" in the judgments to be confessed cannot be used to compel the debtor to pay such commissions when he does not dispute the claim and pays it at maturity. Moore's Appeal, 110 Pa. St. 433, where the court said: "To permit such a practice as this where the defendant offers to pay all that is due at the maturity of the obligation, would be sanctioning an intolerable and unreasonable oppression. There is no occasion whatever in such a case for the service of an attorney for the purpose of collection, and it was no part of the contract in this case that any commission should be paid for the mere entering of the judgment." See also, to the same effect, Imler v. Imler, 94 Pa. St. 375.

Where Attorney Acts for Both Parties. — In Askew v. Goddard, 17 Ill. App. 377, it was held that where a judgment on a note with warrant attached, which gives authority to include a reasonable attorney's fee, is confessed by the attorney of the payee, the judgment, including the fee, cannot be sustained; the attorney cannot be permitted to act for both parties.

In an Ordinary Action on Note. — Although an attorney's fee may be authorized in the power of attorney attached to a promissory note, in case of a confession of judgment under the power, this will not justify the court in allowing such a fee in an ordinary action on the note. Dowty v. Holtz, 85 Ill. 525.

Where Provided in Case of Contingency. — In Sweeney v. Stroud, 55 N. J. L. 97, the defendant gave a bond in the conditional sum of ten thousand dollars, conditioned to be void on the payment of five thousand dollars and interest, with an agreement added that if judgment should be obtained by virtue of a warrant of attorney annexed thereto, or certain other specific events should occur, an attorney's fee of five per cent. should be payable and should be recovered in addition to all the principal, interest, and costs of the suit. Annexed to the bond was a warrant authorizing any attorney to appear for the obligor, in case of a breach of the condition of the bond, and confess judgment for the penalty. It was held that the warrant of attorney did not authorize the confession of judgment for the five per cent. fee.

1. Campbell v. Goddard, 117 Ill. 251, 17 Ill. App. 385.

2. Campbell v. Goddard, 117 Ill. 251, where the court said: "If it were a fair matter of doubt whether the power to fix a reasonable fee in this case was conferred upon the court which should render the judgment, or upon the attorney who should confess it, that doubt, under the rule of strict construction, * * * should be solved in favor of the court, and not of the attorney, as the donee of the power. * * * The attorney is authorized to appear before a 'court of record' and confess judgment for such a fee as that court may decide to be reasonable. In order to decide correctly it may be necessary to hear evidence and draw conclusions therefrom. This is pre-eminently the business of a court, acting as such."

Judgment for Excessive Attorney's Fees. — Where an insolvent debtor confessed judgment for eighty-four hundred and fifty-one dollars debt and twelve hun-

c. WHEN JUDGMENT MAY BE ENTERED GENERALLY. — Upon a confession of judgment, if the plaintiff's demand be in the nature of a debt which may be ascertained by calculation, it may be sufficient to enter judgment generally,¹ since in such case the judgment is supposed to be for the amount of damages laid in the declaration, and execution may issue accordingly.² The plaintiff should, however, indorse upon the execution the actual amount of the debt, and if the defendant complains that injustice has been done, the court, on motion, or a judge at chambers before the return of the writ, upon a proper case being made out, will give immediate relief.³

d. WHEN LIQUIDATED BY THE COURT. — Where the extent of the recovery is not determined by the confession itself, this must be ascertained by the court.⁴

e. ENTRY ON WARRANT BY CLERK. — Where, as is the case in certain states, the prothonotary or clerk is authorized, upon the application of the holder of the instrument containing a warrant of attorney to confess judgment, to enter judgment thereon without the agency of an attorney,⁵ such prothonotary or clerk may exercise this power only when the amount due appears on the instrument or can be rendered certain by calculation from its face.⁶

In Action on Note. — In Batchelor v. Hickman, 2 B. Mon. (Ky.) 17, it was held that a confession judgment generally, in an action of debt on a note, should be understood as a confession for the amount specified on the note, subject to such credits as are then indorsed on the note.

Sufficient Instrument to Authorize Entry. — In Connay v. Halstead, 73 Pa. St. 354, where a contract was for the sale of land at $10 per acre, the quantity to be ascertained by a survey, with warrant to enter judgment, it was held that the prothonotary could not enter judgment on the instrument.

In Whitney v. Hopkins, 135 Pa. St. 246, it was held that judgment might be entered upon a contract for the payment of money in annual instalments, containing a confession of judgment "in case default be made for the space of three months" in any payment, "for the whole amount unpaid on the above agreement," on the ground that both the default and the amount due were ascertainable in the first instance from the face of the instrument; the holder not being required to disprove payment, but the production of the instrument affording proof, prima facie, of the right to judgment, if upon its face any instalment should appear to be three months overdue.

Power Barred by Undue Delay. — In Cook v. Cooper, 4 Harr. (Del.) 189, it was held that where there was a judgment by confession, "amount to be ascertained by the prothonotary with stay of execution for five months," and the prothonotary neglected for fourteen years to ascertain the amount, both plaintiff and defendant having died in the meantime, the power thus given to the prothonotary was barred by such neglect.

6. Entry by Clerk — Necessity and Nature of Entry. — A judgment by confession must be entered by the clerk in the records of the court.¹ Such entry is a ministerial and not a judicial act.²

Time of Entry. — There is no provision of law requiring a judgment by confession to be entered at any particular time after the confession and statement are made, and such a judgment is not defective because nearly a year has elapsed after the verification of the statement and before the entry of the judgment.³ The

On judgments by confession under the code there is no suit, recovery, or adjudication, either actual or formal, of any court or officer, until the judgment is entered by the clerk; and it is this act of the clerk that creates not only the lien, but the judgment. And until this entry is made there is no judgment, and nothing of the existence of which notice can be given to subsequent incumbrancers or grantees. Blydenburgh v. Northrop, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 289.

In King v. French, 2 Sawy. (U. S.) 441, where a confession of judgment was filed, and judgment indorsed on the statement, but not entered in the judgment book, and an execution issued thereon, it was held that there was no judgment to support the execution, and therefore a sale of property thereunder was invalid and of no effect. See also Knights v. Martin, 155 Ill. 486.

In State v. Vandever, 3 Harr. (Del.) 29, it was held that the record entry made by the prothonotary, and not the confession drawn by the attorney, is the judgment.

Entry Relates to Rendition. — Where a judgment is pronounced by the court in open session, it takes effect from the time it is so rendered, though the act of entering the same in the record may be delayed; but a judgment by confession takes effect from the time it is actually entered in the record, as provided by the statute. Schuster v. Rader, 13 Colo. 329, where the court said: "If a judgment by confession be not entered in fact substantially as required by the statute, an execution in advance of such entry will be postponed in favor of a junior execution or attachment creditor who has regularly made a levy based upon valid proceedings." See also Ling v. King, 91 Ill. 571; Chapin v. Thompson, 20 Cal. 681; King v. French, 2 Sawy. (U. S.) 441; Edgar v. Greer, 7 Iowa 136; Criswell v. Ragsdale, 18 Tex. 443; Brown v. Hathaway, 10 Minn. 303.

Effect of Entry. — The entry of the judgment as made by the clerk is a final determination of the rights of the parties, and will be a bar to any suit that might be brought upon the promissory note or indebtedness mentioned in the statement of confession. Humboldt Mill, etc., Co. v. Terry, 11 Nev. 237.

Parol Contradiction of Record. — Where a judgment has been once entered the record imports verity, and cannot be contradicted by parol. Hansen v. Schlesinger, 125 Ill. 230.

Book of Entry. — The fact that the judgment was not entered in the record of the ordinary proceedings of the court, but was entered in what was known as the "record of judgments by confession," that formed a part of the records of the court, was held not to invalidate the judgment. Brown v. Barngrover, 82 Iowa 204.

2. Pickett v. Thruston, 7 Ark. 397; Bradley v. Claudon, 45 Ill. App. 326; Humboldt Mill, etc., Co. v. Terry, 11 Nev. 237.

3. Curtis v. Corbitt, 25 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 58.

Within a Year and a Day. — The practice before the adoption of the New York Code allowed the plaintiff to enter judgment on bond and warrant of attorney at any time within a year and a entry of judgment by confession being a ministerial and not a judicial act, such entry may be made by the clerk in vacation ¹ or on a legal holiday other than Sunday.²

Manner of Entry upon Statement. — Where judgment is confessed upon a warrant of attorney, the clerk of the court must indorse upon the statement filed with him, and must enter in the judgment book, a judgment for the amount confessed with costs and disbursements.³ The statement and affidavit, with the judgment day after the same was given. Curtis v. Corbitt, 25 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 58.

Within a Reasonable Time. — In Burchett v. Casady, 18 Iowa 342, it was held that the requirement of the Iowa Code that judgments by confession shall be entered on the docket forthwith means that such entry shall be made within a reasonable time; but that if the delay be unreasonable, the judgment is not for that reason void as between the parties, but only voidable. Such a judgment could not be assailed collaterally by a party to it, but must be set aside by writ of error or other proper or direct proceedings.

1. Pickett v. Thruston, 7 Ark. 397; Durham v. Brown, 24 Ill. 93; Conkling v. Ridgely, 112 Ill. 36; Vanfleet v. Phillips, 11 Iowa 558; Kendig v. Marble, 58 Iowa 529.

Power Implied. — In Conkling v. Ridgely, 112 Ill. 36, it was held that power is conferred upon the clerk, under the statute, to enter judgments by confession in vacation, not expressly, but by implication, and the judge has no power to make an order of entry of such a judgment except in term.

Clerk's Act Ministerial. — In Durham v. Brown, 24 Ill. 93, it was held that the entry by the clerk in vacation of the judgment by confession is not a judicial act, the judgment being but a conclusion of law on a contract acknowledged of record.

In Ling v. King, 91 Ill. 571, it was held that the clerk, in entering such a judgment, acts under the direction of the defendant and the statute, just as in entering the judgment in term time he acts under the direction of the judge. The judgment must be entered in one case as much as in the other, and in either case the clerk's act is ministerial.

Approval at Next Term. — In Iowa it is provided that a judgment entered by the clerk in vacation shall be approved at the next term. Such provision, it seems, however, is only directory, and a failure so to approve will not avoid the judgment. Vanfleet v. Phillips, 11 Iowa 558; Kendig v. Marble, 58 Iowa 529.

Entry at Night and in Office of Counsel. — Where the entry was properly made and complied with all the statutory requirements, the mere fact that the judgment was entered in the nighttime and in the law office of counsel, near to the court-house, did not render it void or irregular. Sharp v. Danville, etc., R. Co., 106 N. Car. 308.

2. Entry on December 25. — A judgment by confession is not void because entered by the clerk on the twenty-fifth day of December, the same being a legal holiday. Bradley v. Claudon, 45 Ill. App. 326, where the court said: "The law seems to be clear that the holding of court or the transaction of other judicial business on a legal holiday, unless prohibited by the statute, or unless such holiday be on the Sabbath, is not illegal, and not even if the statute create or make those holidays."

3. Dullard v. Phelan, 83 Iowa 471; Wells v. Gieseke, 27 Minn. 478; Humboldt Mill, etc., Co. v. Terry, 11 Nev. 237; Allen v. Smillie, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 354; Neele v. Berryhill, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 16; Sharp v. Danville, etc., R. Co., 106 N. Car. 308; King v. Higgins, 3 Oregon 406.

Two Entries Have the Force of Duplicate Copies. — Under the Oregon statute relating to judgments by confession, which requires the filing of a sworn statement, and enacts that the clerk shall indorse the judgment upon the statement, and enter it in the judgment book, the two entries ought to be deemed to have the force of duplicate copies, each having the effect of an original. King v. Higgins, 3 Oregon 407, where the court said: "The indorsement and the entry must be considered simultaneous acts, or at least it cannot be contended that the entry of the judgment in the books need precede the writing of it on the back of indorsed thereupon, then become the judgment roll, and execution may issue thereon.¹

7. Relief from Judgment by Confession — a. APPEAL. — The decisions differ as to whether a judgment by confession is appealable, some denying this right of appeal on the ground that a judgment by confession operates as a release of errors,² while according to others a confession of judgment, though it waives formal the statement. The two entries may be considered duplicates; at least, the indorsement on the statement is not to be a mere copy, and it must be considered an original entry, under the language of the act. Doubtless the two entries ought to be deemed to have the force of duplicate copies, each having the full effect of an original entry."

Formal Words Unnecessary. — "It is the usual practice of clerks in entering the judgment to refer to the statement and affidavit, and then to use the formal words 'it is, therefore, by reason of the law and the premises, considered that said plaintiff * * * do have and recover of and from said defendant * * * the said sum of,' etc., and such a practice ought, for obvious reasons, to be encouraged and commended. There is, however, no special form absolutely necessary. The sufficiency of the writing claimed to be a judgment should always be tested by its substance rather than its form." Humboldt Mill, etc., Co. v. Terry, 11 Nev. 237.

Effect of Omission to Enter. — Where the clerk indorsed the judgment on the statement, but by mistake omitted to enter it in the judgment book, it was held that the omission would not invalidate the judgment except in favor of one who should be misled by the omission. King v. Higgins, 3 Oregon 407.

In Jeffries v. Morgan, 1 Ark. 169, it was held that if a judgment by confession is formally and properly entered up, the party confessing is estopped by his own voluntary act from questioning its correctness, and if, in such case, there be error in the computation of interest, it is too late in the Supreme Court to take advantage of it. In Parker v. Simpson, 1 Mo. 539, it was held that a confession of judgment is a release of errors, and the judgment cannot afterwards be arrested for defects in the declaration. In Iglehart v. Chicago M. & F. Ins. Co., 35 Ill. 514, a confession of judgment was held to operate as a release of errors in the entering up of judgment or making a record thereof. In McConnell v. White, Minor (Ala.) 112, it was held that if a party confessing a judgment, thereby releasing errors, sues out a errors,¹ will not prevent the defendant from objecting by writ of error to errors of substance.²

b. OPENING JUDGMENT ON BEHALF OF DEFENDANT—

(1) Power to Open.—Upon proper cause being shown the court may open a judgment by confession, on the application of the defendant, and allow him to make a defense.³

writ of error, the appellate court will affirm the judgment and not render a judgment dismissing the writ of error. In Miller v. Bank of British Columbia, 2 Oregon 292, it was held that a judgment by confession, regular upon its face, can only be impeached by a suit in equity for fraud, etc.

Errors Subsequent to Confession.—In Payne v. Lewis, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 164, it was held that while every prerequisite to uphold a judgment is acknowledged by a confession of judgment, errors subsequent to the confession are not thereby released.

(Iowa) 287; Portage Canal, etc., Co. v. Crittenden, 17 Ohio 436; Montgomery v. Barnett, 8 Tex. 143; Hopkins v. Howard, 12 Tex. 7.

In Edgar v. Greer, 7 Iowa 136, it was held that a judgment by confession, though entered by the clerk, is not to be treated as a judgment rendered by him, but by the court, and is subject to revision on appeal in the same manner as any other judgment in a District Court. In Montgomery v. Barnett, 8 Tex. 143, it was held that a confession of judgment is not a waiver of errors where the confession is not made conformably to law.

Grounds for Appeal.—A defendant may, by appeal, take advantage of a defect in the statement of the facts out of which the indebtedness arose. Kennedy v. Lowe, 9 Iowa 580.

That the statement required by the statute to be filed in writing is insufficient, is such an error of substance as to entitle the defendant to appeal. Edgar v. Greer, 7 Iowa 136.

Where judgment is actually entered, but for a larger amount than the particular sum authorized by the power of attorney, the defendant may appeal from such judgment. Battelle v. Bridgeman, 1 Morr. (Iowa) 363.

Necessity for Application in Court Below.—In Ball v. Miller, 38 Ill. 110, it was held that a judgment by confession in conformity with the power authorizing it will not be reversed for irregularity in its entry, unless the defendant has first applied to the court below for relief, and shown some equitable ground therefor. In Edgar v. Greer, 7 Iowa 136, however, it was decided that unless the written statement is in conformity to the requirements of the statute, the defendant may himself take advantage of the defect and have the judgment reversed, and that without first applying to the District Court to set the same aside. As to One of Two Defendants. — Upon motion by each of two defendants to set aside or open a judgment by confession by warrant of attorney so as to allow him to plead, the judgment may be set aside as to one of them where it appears by affidavit that nothing is due or owing from him to the plaintiff, and may be allowed to stand good as to the other.¹

1. Silvers v. Reynolds, 17 N. J. L. 275, 18 N. J. L. 238.

Effect of Such Order. — In Silvers v. Reynolds, 18 N. J. L. 238, it was held that since the control which the court exercises over judgments by confession is only of a discretionary and equitable character, and not as a court of error, such an order, though in terms it sets aside the judgment as to one defendant, does not alter or affect the record; its technical meaning and legal influence are only to restrain the plaintiff from executing the judgment on the defendant as to whom it was set aside.

In Packer v. Roberts, 140 Ill. 9, it was held that a motion to set aside a judgment confessed in term time under a warrant of attorney appeals to the equitable jurisdiction of the court, and will not be granted except upon equitable grounds, and that where no defense to the merits is shown, the court will refuse to vacate such judgment.

In Hier v. Kaufman, 134 Ill. 215, the court said: "We have held, in a number of cases, that a court of law exercises an equitable jurisdiction over a judgment by confession; that where there is a want of service, or an absence of authority to confess, the debtor will not be driven into a court of chancery, but may move to set aside the judgment before the court of law which rendered it; that such court of law may open the judgment and permit the debtor to present his defense to the claim if he has any, but will at the same time protect the creditor by permitting the judgment to stand as security; in such cases the proceedings on the judgment are merely stayed; the enforcement of the plaintiff's lien is suspended, but the lien is fully preserved; if the defense is successful, the judgment falls; if otherwise, the judgment is to be enforced."

Proper Grounds for Opening Judgments.

— The following were held to be proper cases for opening judgments:

Where a judgment confessed was void for a departure from the authority to confess. Graves v. Whitney, 49 Ill. App. 435.

Where it was alleged that a note on which judgment was entered was fraudulently altered. Anderson v. Woodworth, 1 Lack. Leg. N. (Pa.) 264.

Where there was evidence that a signature to a note containing a warrant of attorney was forged. Darragh v. Bigger, 172 Pa. St. 89.

Where the defendant denied the facts alleged as a breach of covenants in a lease containing a warrant of attorney. Hughes v. Moody, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 305.

Where there was a conflict of testimony as to whether the judgment note, upon which judgment was entered, had been paid in full or in part. Greenbaum v. Komorovski, 5 Pa. Dist. Rep. 284.

Where a defendant claimed that he had paid judgment notes upon which a judgment was entered to the obligee, not knowing that they had been assigned. Walker v. Sallada, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 371.

Where a judgment by confession by husband and wife was founded on promissory notes by the wife. Wotkins v. Abrahams, 14 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 191.

In order to show a subsequent breach of warranty of the contract on which the judgment was based. Keist v. Kingman, 36 Ill. App. 489.

Where the judgment was charged to be void as involving fraud or forgery, and the testimony was contradictory, the facts depending upon the credibility of the witnesses. Silberman v. Shuklansky, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 131. See also Armbrust v. Kennedy, 7 Kulp (Pa.) 520.

Where three uncontradicted witnesses testified that they knew the handwriting of the defendant, and that in their judgment the signature to the warrant shown in the note was not in his writing. Peters v. McDonald, 7 Kulp (Pa.) 308.

Where usury was alleged to constitute part of the judgment. McGuire v. Campbell, 58 Ill. App. 188. See also Riddle v. Canby, 4 West. L. M. (Ohio) 124.

Where judgment was entered by confession on a non-negotiable note in favor of the transferee, and the maker sought to defend on the ground of want of consideration. Baker v. Nipple, 16 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 659.

Where the maker of a warrant of attorney upon a note was subsequently found to have been insane at the time. Glass v. Hilberg, 1 Pa. Dist. Rep. 621.

To let in a plea of the statute of limitations. Bennett v. Allen, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 256; Loraw v. Nissley, 1 Pa. Dist. Rep. 410; Ellinger's Appeal, 114 Pa. St. 505.

Application to Open Properly Denied. — The uncorroborated oath of the defendant that the execution of a note upon which a judgment was entered was obtained by fraud is not a sufficient ground for opening the judgment.

merits is shown,¹ and under a petition to open the burden of proof is upon the petitioner to establish a defense to the judgment.² But if the affidavit shows a prima facie case of a good defense on the merits, the court should open the judgment and allow such defense to be made and the issue to be tried by a jury, notwithstanding counter-affidavits to the effect that the whole defense is bad.³

Laches of Defendant. — According to some decisions a judgment will not be opened, even on an affidavit of merits, where the defendant has been guilty of laches.⁴

(3) Who May Make Application. — A judgment by confession may be opened on motion of the defendant therein,⁵ his executors or administrators,⁶ or sureties on the judgment bond.⁷

(4) Form of Application — By Affidavit. — The application to open a judgment by confession to let in the defense should be by motion supported by affidavit showing a good defense.⁸

Should State Facts. — An affidavit on the belief of the party is not sufficient; it should disclose the facts in order that the court may determine whether there is just ground for such belief.⁹

ment. Davis v. Reyner, 12 Mont. L. Rep. (Pa.) 52.

Where the defendant's affidavit is not inconsistent with the truth of facts set up by the plaintiff and not denied by the defendant the judgment will not be opened. Morgan v. Park Nat. Bank, 44 Ill. App. 582.

A judgment will not be opened on the ground that it has been paid. Zeigler v. Evans, 8 Kulp (Pa.) 180.

An application to open a judgment entered by confession on the ground that the bond upon which it was entered was without consideration, and given to enable the obligee to obtain credit, was properly denied, it appearing that the one in whose favor the judgment had been entered made advances to him on such security. Weigley v. Conrade, 132 Pa. St. 147.

2. Roenigk's Appeals, (Pa. 1886) 2 Cent. Rep. 68.

Sufficiency of Evidence. — In English's Appeal, 119 Pa. St. 533, it was held that a judgment by confession under a warrant of attorney should not be opened nor the evidence submitted to the jury unless the written instrument be overcome by testimony which if believed would move a chancellor to decree that the note was void, or should be reformed because of forgery, fraud, or mistake. The unsupported testimony on oath of a defendant in such a judgment, admitting the execution of the instrument with a knowledge of its provisions, but alleging fraud in the procurement and use of it, which was directly opposed by the testimony, on oath, of the plaintiff, was deemed insufficient to warrant the opening of judgment or to be submitted to the jury on the trial of an issue awarded.

Construction of Affidavit. — An affidavit to open a judgment by confession is to be construed most strongly against the party making the motion.¹

(5) Proceedings upon Application — In General. — Where, upon an application by the defendant to set aside and vacate a judgment by confession upon notes and warrants of attorney, it clearly appears that the plaintiff was not entitled to judgment, the court should vacate the judgment and leave the plaintiff to pursue the ordinary remedy by action.² If, however, the case is doubtful or the testimony is so contradictory that the truth cannot be ascertained with reasonable certainty, the defendant should be let in to a defense on the merits,³ leaving the judgment to stand as security.⁴

Awarding Issue. — Where the matter is in doubt, the court should enter a conditional order allowing pleas to be filed and issues to be framed to try the defense.⁵

Imposition of Terms on Opening. — Although, as a general rule, a court on opening a judgment has power to impose terms,⁶ it has been held that it has no right to impose as a condition precedent

1. Chicago F. Proofing Co. v. Park Nat. Bank, 44 Ill. App. 150.

Opening After Expiration of Term. — In Heeney v. Alcock, 9 Ill. App. 431, where it was insisted that the court had no power to open the judgment after the expiration of the term at which it was entered, it was held that the statute providing that the court might "during the term" set aside any judgment upon good and sufficient cause did not apply to judgments by confession entered by virtue of the warrant of attorney in the absence of the defendant. See also Wyman v. Yeomans, 84 Ill. 403; Burwell v. Orr, 84 Ill. 465.

Delay in Making Application. — A delay of five days on the part of the applicant after knowledge that judgment has been entered by confession on warrant of attorney, before making application to set it aside, is not an unreasonable time in which to make the necessary preparation for the hearing of the motion. Heeney v. Alcock, 9 Ill. App. 431.

Evidence to Be Confined to Issue. — Where judgment has been opened and an issue awarded, the court, on a trial of such issue, should confine the evidence to it; it could not be expected that the opposite parties would be prepared to meet any other. McMurray v. Erie, 59 Pa. St. 223.

Feigned Issue. — If fraud is suggested or usury alleged in regard to a judgment entered upon a bond and warrant of attorney, the usual and proper way is to let the judgment stand and to award a feigned issue to try the fact. Alderman v. Diament, 7 N. J. L. 199, note; Barrow v. Bispham, 11 N. J. L. 110; Audenried v. Woodward, 28 N. J. L. 265; Hoyt v. Hoyt, 16 N. J. L. 138; King v. Shaw, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 142; *Robbins v. that the defendant shall bring into court the sum which is supposed to be due.¹

Granting Application as a Matter of Discretion. — The application to open a judgment by confession on a power of attorney is addressed to the sound discretion of the court,² and a refusal to grant the application is not in itself the subject of a writ of error.³ Although this is the general rule, yet according to some decisions it seems that the application may be made as a matter of legal right, and that when a party brings himself clearly within the statute the court has no discretion in the matter, but must grant the application.⁴

c. VACATION ON APPLICATION OF CREDITORS — (1) Power to Vacate. — Upon proper ground being shown the judgment by confession may be vacated or set aside on the application of other creditors of the defendant.⁵

In Martin v. Stubbings, 20 Ill. App. 381, it was held that where a motion to vacate a judgment by confession is made in apt time, if the affidavit read in support of the motion discloses a meritorious defense it is the duty of the court, in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction over its judgments by confession, to either vacate the judgment or stay all proceedings therein and give the defendant an opportunity to present such defense.

In Burley v. Millard, 11 Neb. 286, it was held that where a judgment was rendered by confession in the absence of the attorney for the defendant, and a sufficient showing was made of the misunderstanding of the attorney, it was an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse to restore the cause for trial.

(2) Grounds for Vacation. — The power to vacate a judgment by confession being an equitable power, and, whether exercised by courts of law or equity, always to be exercised on equitable principles, a judgment by confession will not be vacated for a mere irregularity.¹ Such judgments will, however, be vacated, upon proper application, on the ground of fraud,² or for failure substantially to comply with the requirements of the statute authorizing such judgments.³

(3) Who May Move. — According to some decisions the right to move to set aside the judgment by confession is confined to judgment creditors.⁴ According to the majority of cases, however, it would seem that this right is not confined to such persons.⁵

(4) Time of Application. — A motion to vacate a judgment filed at the next ensuing term of court after the confession of judgment in vacation is in apt time.⁶ A judgment entered on an appeal shall lie therefrom, but the same may be collaterally impeached for fraud by creditors of the judgment debtor, and such judgment shall be void as to such creditors unless, at the time of the rendition thereof, the defendant makes affidavit that he justly owes the debt." In Feaster v. Woodfill, 23 Ind. 493, it was held that since no distinction was made by the statute above quoted, a judgment by confession could be impeached collaterally for fraud by creditors of the judgment debtor, whether existing at the time of the rendition of the judgment, or subsequent thereto.

Sufficiency of Proof. — Alleged fraud must be established either by direct proof or by clearly proved facts sufficient to warrant a presumption of its existence. It is not enough to charge fraud and prove in support thereof slight circumstances of suspicion only. Hagy v. Poike, 160 Pa. St. 522.

Bona Fide Purchasers. — A judgment entered on an insufficient statement, and an execution issued thereon, may, on motion of a subsequent purchaser in good faith of lands on which the judgment is an apparent lien, be set aside as to such purchasers and the lands so purchased, and such lands may be declared free from the apparent lien and from any proceeding upon such judgment. Kendall v. Hodgins, 1 Bosw. (N. Y.) 659, holding that subsequent purchasers in good faith, etc., though not named in the provisions of the code, should be protected, and are entitled to the same relief, and may obtain it by the same procedure, as judgment creditors.

Assignee in Insolvency. — If confessions of judgment are prohibited by the insolvent law, the assignee in insolvency can have them adjudged void upon a proper proceeding for that purpose. Pehrson v. Hewitt, 79 Cal. 594.

Lien Acquired by Attachment. — In a suit to set aside a judgment confessed by a party to defraud his creditors, it is not necessary that the plaintiff should be either a judgment or an execution creditor. A lien acquired by attachment suffices. Scales v. Scott, 13 Cal. 77.

6. Kingman v. Reinemer, 58 Ill. App. 173.

insufficient statement is not merely irregular, and may be set aside upon motion of a judgment creditor more than a year after its entry.¹

(5) Manner of Application.—The provisions differ in the various states as to the manner in which the application shall be made. Thus, in some it is to be made by motion,² while in others the remedy is by action in the nature of a creditor's bill.³

(6) Proceedings upon Application.—Where an application charges that a judgment by confession has been fraudulently entered upon a bond and warrant of attorney, the court may direct an issue between the parties to try the truth of such allegations⁴ in such manner that the plaintiff may be bound on the trial of such issue to set out and prove the consideration of the bond,⁵ and may

Within Five Years After Entry.—In Ex p. Carroll, 17 S. Car. 446, it was held that a motion by a junior judgment creditor to set aside and invalidate a judgment was not barred by lapse of time when made within five years after the confession of judgment was entered, especially where the moving party had not been guilty of laches.

Motion by Attaching Creditor.—In Fort v. Fort, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 442, it was held that an attaching creditor under the Absent Debtor Act cannot, before an appointment of trustees, move to set aside a judgment as fraudulently confessed.

Manville*, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 485.

In New York it was held that a judgment by confession upon an insufficient statement may be set aside, not only by motion, but in an action brought for such purpose. Dunham v. Waterman, 6 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Ct. App.) 357; Jessup v. Hulse, 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 539; Miller v. Earle, 24 N. Y. 110.

Specification of Grounds.—In Winnebrenner v. Edgerton, 30 Barb. (N. Y.) 185, it was held that a motion to set aside a judgment entered upon confession, on account of the defects in the statement, is not founded upon an irregularity so as to require the moving party to specify in his motion papers the grounds of the motion.

Evidence Need Not Be Set Out in Affidavit.—An allegation that a judgment is fraudulent and without bona fide consideration, and was confessed and is being used for the purpose of hindering, delaying, and defrauding other creditors, is a sufficient averment of material facts in dispute, and it is not necessary to state in the affidavit the means by which the want of consideration is to be proved. That is to say, the applicant is not bound to give his evidence in his affidavit. Moore v. Dunn, 147 Pa. St. 359.

4. Frasier v. Frasier, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 80. See also Bach v. Morey, 1 Lehigh Valley Rep. (Pa.) 58; Lynch v. English, 4 Del. (Pa.) 481; Moore v. Dunn, 147 Pa. St. 359; M'Neal v. Smith, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 552; Reynolds v. Britton, 18 N. J. L. 304.

Bill of Particulars.—Where the court, at the instance of a subsequent judgment creditor seeking to be relieved from a prior confessed judgment, directs a trial for the purpose of ascertaining whether anything, and if anything how much, is really due on such prior judgment, the plaintiff has no right to demand from the creditor a bill of particulars of what he intends to give in evidence on the trial. Reynolds v. Britton, 18 N. J. L. 304, holding that the parties may read the affidavits already before the court and give such further evidence as they may see proper, but that if the creditor intends to rely upon other payments, or other facts than those disclosed by the affidavits, he must give notice of them in writing at least ten days before the trial.

allow the creditor to subpoena witnesses in the name of the defendant to attend the trial.¹

X. JUDGMENTS BY AGREEMENT OR CONSENT — 1. In General. —

As a rule, any disposition of a pending action, not illegal, may be fairly agreed to, and when so agreed to it becomes the duty of the court to permit such disposition.² The parties may, during an action, agree upon the terms of the judgment, and as to what kind of a judgment shall be entered.³

80.

"The usual practice, and doubtless the better one, is to hear such motions on affidavits, and if the defendant shall satisfy the court that it is probable that he has suffered injustice by the entry of judgment by default or confession, the court should vacate the judgment and let the party in to plead and make his defense. But if the court should hear the motion on verbal testimony, or before a jury to try a feigned issue, and should set the judgment aside, no exception can be taken to the proceeding in this court. The object of the evidence, whether by affidavit, deposition, or heard orally in court, is to inform the court of the propriety of setting aside the judgment, and the same end may be attained by either mode. Nor can it be objected that in vacating the judgment the court acted upon the verdict of the jury on the feigned issue, as it is a matter of judicial discretion, to be exercised by the court as in other cases." Per Walker, J., in Bolton v. McKinley, 22 Ill. 203.

2. Berry v. Somerset R. Co., 89 Me. 552.

Agreement as to Amount. — When parties determine by agreement the amount which is to be paid by way of compromise of the suit, their determination stands in the place of a judgment of the court, and upon payment of the sum agreed upon the defendant has a right to demand that the plaintiff shall do what in his petition he has expressed a willingness to do, although the defendant has not asked such specific relief. Robertson v. Iowa Cent. R. Co., 57 Iowa 376. See also Jarrett v. State, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 27.

Premature Entry of Judgment on Stipulation. — Where a stipulation authorized the entry of a judgment upon a final judgment being obtained in another action, a judgment pursuant to such stipulation cannot be entered while a motion for a new trial in the latter cause is pending. Gillmore v. American Cent. Ins. Co., 65 Cal. 63.

Conclusiveness. — Any judgment entered by consent where the court has full jurisdiction is as efficacious as though it had been entered after a trial of the issues,¹ and is binding and conclusive between the parties and their privies,² unless procured by fraud.³

Canada. — Charlebois v. Delap, 26 Can. Super. Ct. Rep. 221.

Distinguished from Judgment by Confession. — In Lauderdale v. R. & T. A. Ennis Stationery Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 24 S. W. Rep. 834, the court said: "The judgment upon its face shows that it was rendered upon agreement of the parties. We have had some difficulty in determining whether a judgment thus rendered can substantially be distinguished from a judgment by confession. The first presupposes an agreement of the parties as a basis for it, and the latter an act of the defendant alone. The distinction is more technical than substantial. * * * The effect is the same in each instance, whether the judgment is obtained by the agreement or the confession. One is as much the voluntary act of the defendant as the other. * * * The term 'agreement,' * * * we think, necessarily involves the idea of confession, for the agreement is nothing more than an admission or confession by the party defendant that he owes the amount and is willing that judgment be rendered against him for it. This is necessarily the same consequence that results from a confession."

In the Nature of a Contract. — A judgment by consent of parties is in the nature of a contract between them, and cannot be set aside where fraud or mistake is not alleged, merely because of some irregularity of procedure. Jones v. Webb, 8 S. Car. 202.

Such Judgment an Entirety. — A judgment entered by consent of parties is entire, even though the court erred respecting the mode of adjusting the compensation to be paid by one party to another. In such case the party will not be permitted to insist upon a right secured by the judgment and to repudiate the compensation required by the judgment to be made. Union Pac. R. Co. v. McCarty, 8 Kan. 126.

Verification. — In Lauderdale v. R. & T. A. Ennis Stationery Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 24 S. W. Rep. 834, it was held that where a judgment is entered "by agreement of parties," such judgment comes under article 1347 of Sayles's Civ. Stat. Tex., which requires verification by a justice of a debt alleged and confessed without process.

Although Pleadings Would Not Authorize. — In Fletcher v. Holmes, 25 Ind. 458, it was held that a judgment entered by agreement by a court of general jurisdiction, having the parties before it, will bind those by whose agreement it was entered, even though the pleadings would not, if the case were contested, authorize such a judgment as was agreed to. See also article DECRIES, vol. 5, p. 962.

Consent Does Not Enlarge or Affect Judgment. — An agreement of parties under which a judgment is rendered does not serve to enlarge the scope of the estoppel of the judgment, when it was such as the plaintiff was entitled to without the agreement. Willis v. Pounds, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 512. The consent is merged in the judgment. Holmes v. Guion, 44 Mo. 164.

Judgment by Consent of Some Parties Only. — The fact that a judgment or

2. Conformity to Agreement. — Where parties agree in writing to a judgment, such judgment must be in conformity to the terms agreed upon.¹

3. For What Rendered. — A judgment may be rendered by agreement or consent not only for debts due, but also to cover future advances.²

4. Who May Agree or Consent. — A party may, in person, agree to a judgment against him,³ or the attorneys of the parties may agree or consent to the judgment.⁴ Such judgment must, however, be in conformity to the law.⁵

order is by consent of some only of the parties in open court will not render it invalid as to those who do not consent. It will be binding upon the latter unless an appeal is taken, and the order or judgment set aside as to those who do not consent, upon other grounds than want of consent. Clyburn v. Reynolds, 31 S. Car. 91.

Complaint Unnecessary. — The fact that no complaint appears in the record will not render a judgment invalid where it was either entered by consent or subsequently ratified by assent. Stancill v. Gay, 92 N. Car. 455, where the court said: "No complaint appears in the record, nor is it certain one was filed. The clerk finds as a fact that there was one, and that it was lost. The judge finds that the only evidence of this was the recitals in the judgment. These recitals were evidence, but not conclusive. But if there was no complaint filed, this fault alone did not render the judgment void. The court having jurisdiction of the subject of the action and the parties to it, the latter might consent to the entry of a judgment by express agreement, or, one having been entered, they might assent to it. There is a presumption in favor of the regularity of the judgment — that the court gave it in the course of procedure, or that the parties consented to it." See also Vick v. Pope, 81 N. Car. 22.

"The object of a complaint is to inform the defendant of the nature of the plaintiff's case. It is for his protection that it is required. If he wishes to waive it, or agrees to the granting of greater relief than could otherwise be given under its averments, without amendment, and such relief is given by his consent, we think that the judgment is not even erroneous, much less void, as to him." Per Frazer, C. J., in Fletcher v. Holmes, 25 Ind. 458.

Alteration by Court Without Consent of Parties. — In Berry v. Somerset R. Co., 89 Me. 552, the parties in the pending action agreed to enter it: "Neither party, no further suit for the same cause." It was held that the judgment being so entered, and there being neither fraud nor mistake in the making of the agreement, it was a binding disposition of the cause, and could not be changed by the court without the consent of the parties thereto. See also Kerchner v. McEachern, 93 N. Car. 447; Stump v. Long, 84 N. Car. 616.

1. Sprowl v. Stewart, 19 La. Ann. 433, holding that where the parties to a suit have consented in writing to a judgment, and the judgment of the court does not conform to the consent, either party has a right to appeal to have the error corrected.

Assent by Agent. — In Brown v. Newman, 13 Iowa 546, it was held that an agent may appear and assent to a judgment, and that his authority need not appear of record.

4. Tupper v. Hertung, 46 Mo. 135; Hudson v. Allison, 54 Ind. 215; Jones v. Webb, 8 S. Car. 202; Simmons v. Baynard, 30 Fed. Rep. 532.

5. Tupper v. Hertung, 46 Mo. 135, holding that it is within the province of attorneys in the cause, in the conduct thereof, to agree upon the terms, and what kind of a judgment shall be entered.

Without Summons or Personal Appearance. — In Jarrett v. Andrews, 19 Ind. 403, it was held that a judgment by agreement of attorney without a summons or a personal appearance of the defendant can only be rendered when a written authority to the attorney from his client is produced and proven.

Authority Conferred by Authority to Confess. — In Hart v. Sarvis, 3 Ohio N. P.

5. Requisites of Agreement — To Be in Writing. — The agreement between the parties for judgment should be in writing.¹

Filing. — The agreement should be filed.²

6. Effect as Waiver of Error. — A judgment by consent or agreement operates as a waiver of all errors committed before its rendition,³ except such as would involve the jurisdiction of the court.⁴

7. Vacating. — A consent judgment may be vacated on the ground of fraud, mutual mistake, or surprise.⁵

XI. JUDGMENTS ON OFFER. — See article OFFERS IN PLEADINGS.

XII. JUDGMENTS ON PLEADINGS — 1. When Proper — a. GENERAL RULE. — Generally speaking, judgment upon the pleadings is only proper in cases where the pleadings are insufficient to sustain a different judgment, notwithstanding any evidence which might be produced.⁶

316, it was held that a warrant of attorney in a note authorizing any attorney to appear for the maker in any court and confess judgment empowers the attorney to appear in a suit upon the note and consent to judgment.

1. Sprowl v. Stewart, 19 La. Ann. 433.

Under the Iowa Code, which provided that parties may submit to any judgments which may be agreed to between them, it was held that the agreement must be in writing. Vail v. Stone, 13 Iowa 284.

Defects in the Complaint. — In Hudson v. Allison, 54 Ind. 215, it was held that a judgment by consent waives or cures all defects in the complaint.

Waiver of Demurrer to Complaint. — In Spinetti v. Brignardello, 53 Cal. 281, it was held that where a defendant consents to a judgment against him he waives a demurrer to the complaint.

4. Lessing v. Cunningham, 55 Tex. 231. See also Laird v. Thomas, 22 Tex. 280.

In Townsend v. Moore, 13 Tex. 36, it was agreed by the parties that their attorneys should decide upon their respective rights, or, if unable to agree, they should call an umpire. Such umpire was called in, and his opinion was given in writing, and a decree in accordance therewith filed, upon which a judgment was rendered. This was held to be a judgment by consent, and as such it operated as a waiver of all errors.

5. Kerchner v. McEachern, 93 N. Car. 447; Anderson v. Carr, (Supreme Ct.) 7 N. Y. Supp. 281; Elder v. Ottawa First Nat. Bank, 12 Kan. 238.

Insufficient Grounds for Vacation. — Where, in compromise of a claim, judgment has been rendered against the defendant with his consent, he cannot, in the absence of proof of fraud, have it vacated on the ground that he acted on the erroneous advice of counsel. Anderson v. Carr, (Supreme Ct.) 7 N. Y. Supp. 281.

Where, in an action regularly commenced and procured without fraud or fraudulent representations, judgment is rendered by consent against the defendants, they cannot thereafter have the judgment set aside and a new trial granted on the ground of the existence of a plea and legal defense of the action of the nature and existence of which they were unaware at the time the judgment was entered. Elder v. Ottawa First Nat. Bank, 12 Kan. 238.

6. Rice v. Bush, 16 Colo. 484.

A motion by one party for judgment upon the pleadings after issue joined will be denied if his adversary's pleadings, though defective in form, are sufficient in substance to sustain a judgment in his favor. Rice v. Bush, 16 Colo. 484; Iba v. Central Assoc., (Wyoming 1895) 40 Pac. Rep. 527.

In Watson v. Higgins, 7 Ark. 475, it was held that where no evidence at all is offered by the party upon whom the burden of proof is thrown by the plead-

b. JUDGMENT ON INSUFFICIENT PLEADINGS — (1) On Answer.

— A judgment for the plaintiff is properly rendered where the answer admits or leaves undenied the material allegations of the complaint.¹ Where an answer does not deny all the facts alleged ings, the other party is entitled to judgment.

In Oregon it was questioned whether, under the code of that state, a court is authorized to render judgment on the pleadings for the defendant except when the answer contains new matter constituting a defense or counterclaim, and the plaintiff fails to reply or demur thereto. Bowles v. Doble, 11 Oregon 474. See also Watkins v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 38 Fed. Rep. 711.

In Washington it has been held that a judgment for the defendant on the pleadings for insufficiency of the reply to an affirmative defense in the answer is properly refused under the code, which authorizes such a judgment only where no reply whatever is filed to the affirmative matter in the answer. Davis v. Ford, 15 Wash. 107.

Whenever the answer fails to deny any of the material allegations of the complaint in such form as to put the same in issue, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment upon the pleadings. Doll v. Good, 38 Cal. 287.

Where the issue taken upon rejoinder is immaterial, but the plea admits the cause of action, there must be a judgment for the plaintiff. Rochester v. Whitehouse, 15 N. H. 468.

Illustrations. — Where a complaint in an action on a promissory note executed by two defendants averred that the defendants were partners and that the note was executed by them, and the answer simply denied that the defendants were partners, and did not deny that they executed the note, it was held that the averment of partnership was immaterial, and that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment on the pleadings. The execution of the note, not the co-partnership of the defendants at the time, constituted the material averment. Whitwell v. Thomas, 9 Cal. 499. If an answer to a complaint on a promissory note alleges a failure of the payee to perform an agreement for labor which was the consideration for in the complaint, but denies legal conclusions only, judgment on the pleadings for the plaintiff is proper.¹ Judgment on the pleadings cannot, however, be properly rendered where the answer denies any material allegation of the complaint.² A verified the note, without alleging the terms of the agreement, or the conditions or effect thereof, no ground of defense is stated, and, the defendant failing to amend his answer, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment on the pleadings. McDonald v. Pincus, 13 Mont. 85.

An answer, in an action by a judgment creditor against a garnishee who denies that he is indebted to the judgment debtor, which in effect admits that the garnishee has money belonging to the judgment debtor, either personally or in his representative capacity, and in which capacity the defendant does not know, raises no issue, and a judgment is properly rendered on the complaint if the same be sufficient. Sweeney v. Schlessinger, 18 Mont. 326.

Judgment may be rendered on the pleadings against a tenant holding over after default in payment of rent although he denies the plaintiff's right of possession, if he admits that he leased the premises from the plaintiff's intestate, and that as such tenant he is indebted for certain rent. State v. Votaw, 13 Mont. 403.

Judgment for the plaintiff may be ordered on the pleadings where the answer states merely a counterclaim or set-off of nominal damages only. Hitchcock v. Turnbull, 44 Minn. 475.

No Proof by Plaintiff Necessary.—Where the allegations of a complaint are not denied by the defendants, the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment on the pleadings without any proof on his part. Alvord v. U. S., 1 Idaho 585.

Finding of Facts Unnecessary.—When a judgment is rendered on the pleadings, the court need not make any finding of facts. Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 240. See also Martin v. Smith, 53 N. Y. Super. Ct. 277; Eaton v. Wells, 82 N. Y. 576.

1. Simpson v. Prather, 5 Oregon 86. The denial of indebtedness of the defendants to the plaintiff is a denial of a conclusion of law, and when inconsistent with admitted facts cannot avail to prevent a judgment for the plaintiff on the pleadings. *Drew v. Answers Held to Raise Material Issues.—An answer by an insolvent in an action of replevin by the assignee in insolvency, disclaiming and denying that he was ever the owner, or in possession of, or entitled to, the possession of the property claimed, or ever withheld it or refused to deliver it to the plaintiff, raises material issues which will preclude a judgment on the pleadings in favor of the assignee. Martin v. Porter, 84 Cal. 476.

If the complaint in replevin alleges the plaintiff's ownership and right to the possession of the goods, and this allegation is properly denied in the answer in the disjunctive, it is error to render judgment on the pleadings though there be other faulty denials in the answer. Bach v. Montana Lumber, etc., Co., 15 Mont. 345.

In Forrester v. Flores, 64 Cal. 24, the complaint alleged the making of an agreement, without stating whether it was in writing or not, and also alleged the payment of the purchase-money. The answer denied the agreement, and averred that there was no contract or answer which in any part contains a distinct denial of a fact material to the plaintiff's recovery cannot, whatever its defects, be treated as a nullity so as to entitle the plaintiff to judgment on the pleadings.¹

Denial of Unnecessary Averment. — Where an unnecessary issue is tendered by the plaintiff, it may be controverted by the defendant, and such denial will be sufficient to prevent rendition of a judgment on the pleadings.²

(2) On Insufficient Pleadings of Plaintiff. — Judgment may be rendered for the defendant on the pleadings when the pleadings of the plaintiff are in substance insufficient to sustain a judgment for him.³ Such judgments are most commonly rendered for the reason that the replication admits or leaves undenied the material averments of fact in the answer,⁴ and are improper where an issue agreement in writing, but was silent as to the payment of the purchase-money. It was held that a motion for judgment on the pleadings was properly denied.

Inconsistent Defense. — A judgment on the pleadings is not authorized if the answer denies the material allegations of the complaint, although in a special defense separately stated the allegations formerly denied are admitted. Botto v. Vandament, 67 Cal. 332.

If the answer contains a denial of the material facts alleged as a cause of action in the complaint, and a special defense, stated separately, the plaintiff is not entitled to a judgment on the pleadings, even if the entire cause of action is confessed in the special defense. Nudd v. Thompson, 34 Cal. 39. See also, to the same effect, Amador County v. Butterfield, 51 Cal. 526; Milner v. Chandler, 59 Cal. 541.

A Single Material Issue raised by an answer is sufficient to preclude judgment on the pleadings for the plaintiff. Widmer v. Martin, 87 Cal. 88; Johnson v. Manning, 2 Idaho 1073; Hancock v. Herrick, (Arizona 1891) 29 Pac. Rep. 13.

In Speer v. Craig, 16 Colo. 478, it was held that a motion for judgment on the pleadings "touches the substance and not the form of the pleading attacked. It is usually interposed only where one or more of the material averments of fact in the complaint or answer are admitted or left undenied by the answer or replication."

1. Ghirardelli v. McDermott, 22 Cal. 539. See also Briggs v. Sholes, 14 N. H. 262.

If it can be gathered in any way from the answer that an issue is tendered by the defendant's pleading upon a material matter, the plaintiff should not be allowed judgment. Rourk v. Miller, 3 Wash. 73, an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, where it was held, on motion for judgment on the pleadings, that a statement in the answer alleging that the contract price was $450 instead of $550, as the complaint alleged, although referred to the wrong paragraph of the complaint, must be construed to be a denial that the contract price was more than $450.

2. The plaintiff in an action on a note is not entitled to judgment on the pleadings where an allegation in the complaint of transfer and delivery of the note to the plaintiff from the payee before maturity for a valuable consideration, as a result of which the plaintiff is owner and holder of the note, is denied, although such allegation may have been unnecessary. Hughes v. Wilcox, 17 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 32. See, however, Wallace v. Baisley, 22 Oregon 572, where it was held that if the only issue in a case is raised by a denial, in the answer, of immaterial allegations in the complaint, without which a complete cause of action would remain, the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment on the pleadings as a legal right which the court cannot refuse.

3. Rice v. Bush, 16 Colo. 484.

4. Speer v. Craig, 16 Colo. 478; Limerick v. Barrett, 3 Kan. App. 573, Dean v. Messer, (Ky. 1895) 30 S. W. Rep. 198.

The petition in an action on the official bond of a justice of the peace alleged the collection of certain moneys by the principal of such bond as a jusis framed by the plaintiff's pleadings.¹ Where facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action are stated in the complaint, judgment upon the pleadings cannot properly be rendered for the defendant.² A mistake in the petition which is plainly apparent, and is rectified by the evidence, so that the defendant could not have been prejudiced thereby, will not be ground for a motion by the defendant for judgment on the pleadings.³

c. JUDGMENT FOR FAILURE TO ANSWER OR REPLY. — Judgment may also be rendered for the want of a proper pleading; thus, judgment may be rendered for the plaintiff upon his application, where the defendant has failed to answer a complaint.⁴

tice of the peace, and the answer admitted the execution of said bond, and alleged that the moneys so collected were collected by virtue of a contract made and entered into between the plaintiff and the said justice of the peace. A copy of the contract was made part of the answer, which contract showed upon its face that it was illegal and void as being against public policy, and a reply was filed consisting of a general denial, unverified. It was held that the execution of the written contract was properly alleged and was not put in issue by the allegations of the unverified reply, and that, under such pleadings, the legal effect of the instrument set forth in the answer was admitted, and that a judgment for the defendant was properly rendered upon the pleadings. Limerick v. Barrett, 3 Kan. App. 573.

1. Floyd v. Johnson, 17 Mont. 469; Miles v. Edsall, 7 Mont. 185; Raymond v. Morrison, 9 Wash. 156.

A complaint for the specific performance of a contract to convey land, which alleged that two persons named were the equitable owners of such land, but that the legal title was in the name of one only, would be sufficient in substance to prevent judgment on the pleadings for the defendant, although such allegations might be open to a special demurrer or to a motion to make more definite and certain. Rice v. Bush, 16 Colo. 484.

A motion for judgment on the pleadings upon the ground that the replication does not specifically deny the new matter set up in the answer should be denied where the denials of the replication are as specific as the allegations which they meet, and controvert both their spirit and their substance. Miles v. Edsall, 7 Mont. 185.

A judgment for the defendant on the pleadings is erroneous, where a breach by him of an actually existing contract is alleged and proved, as under such circumstances the plaintiff is entitled to at least nominal damages. Mollyneaux v. Wittenberg, 39 Neb. 547.

Answer to Cross-complaint. — A defendant who has filed a cross-complaint is not entitled to judgment on the pleadings if the answer of the plaintiff states facts which are not consistent with the allegations thereof, and which, if true, would defeat the right of the defendant to recover. Pfister v. Wade, 69 Cal. 133.

2. Denis v. Velati, 96 Cal. 223.

In Greenleaf v. Egan, 30 Minn. 316, it was held that a motion by the defendant for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that the complaint assumes to set forth an equitable cause of action, but fails to state some facts essential thereto, should not be granted if a cause of action of any character is set forth.

3. Clement v. Hughes, (Ky. 1891) 17 S. W. Rep. 285.

Omission Supplied by Answer. — A motion for judgment on the pleadings for the reason that there is an apparent defect of parties plaintiff, owing to an omission of certain allegations from the petition, was properly denied where a general demurrer had been overruled, and the answer filed supplied the allegations of the petition which had been omitted, and cured the apparent defect of parties. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. German Ins. Co., 2 Kan. App. 395.

4. Argall v. Pitts, 78 N. Y. 239; Aymar v. Chase, 1 Code Rep. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 141; De Forest v. Baker, 1 Robt. (N. Y.) 700; Watson v. Brigham, 3 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 290; Hoffnung v. Grove, 18 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 14; Swart v. Borst, 17 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 69;

So if an answer sets up new matter constituting a counterclaim, to which the plaintiff fails to reply or demur within the proper time, the defendant may apply, upon due notice, for such judgment as he is entitled to.¹

After Demurrer to Replication.—In Haldeman v. Starrett, 23 Ill. 393, it was held that where the defendant had an opportunity to answer over after a demurrer was overruled to a replication, a judgment by nil dicit is good without the entry of a formal judgment of respondent ouster.

After Demurrer to Complaint Overruled.—In Ackerman v. Horicon Iron Mfg. Co., 16 Wis. 155, it was held that when an order has been made overruling a demurrer to a complaint and granting the defendant leave to answer within a specified time, and he fails to answer within such time, but, after its expiration, obtains and serves an order staying all further proceedings in the action, pending an appeal from the order overruling the demurrer, it is irregular for the plaintiff to enter judgment for want of an answer while such order staying proceedings is in force, though he might have done so before it was granted and served.

In Story v. Jones, 14 La. Ann. 73, it was held that a judgment by default is properly rendered against the defendant in an attachment suit where the curator ad hoc, after exceptions filed by him have been overruled, fails to file an answer.

In Missouri it was² held that, under the Practice Act of 1849, where the defendant, upon whom there had been fifteen days' service of process, filed an answer admitting the cause of action or containing no defense, the plaintiff was entitled to judgment at the return term as for want of an answer. North v. Nelson, 21 Mo. 360.

When an Answer Is Struck Out as sham and irrelevant, the proper method of obtaining judgment is to proceed as if no answer had been put in. De Forest v. Baker, 1 Robt. (N. Y.) 700; Aymar v. Chase, 1 Code Rep. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 141.

Where Amended Answer Stricken Out.

—An original answer is not superseded by an amended answer which is stricken out as being improperly filed, but thereupon the original stands as the answer, and it is error to render judgment for the plaintiff on the ground that there is no pleading on file in the defendant's behalf. Spooner v. Cady, (Cal. 1894) 36 Pac. Rep. 104.

What Admitted by Failure to Answer.

—By not answering the complaint a defendant does not admit that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief demanded, but simply that he is entitled to such relief as the facts properly alleged entitle him to have. Argall v. Pitts, 78 N. Y. 239.

Dak. 56; Iba v. Central Assoc., (Wyoming 1895) 40 Pac. Rep. 527; Watkins v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 38 Fed. Rep. 711.

In Comstock v. Hallock, 1 Code Rep. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 200, it was held that when an answer denies a material allegation, and as a separate defense sets up new matter in avoidance, and the plaintiff omits to reply, the defendant is not entitled to judgment for want of a reply, for there is an issue undisposed of; but where the denial is merely a part of the new matter, the defendant may so move.

Reply to Mere Defense Unnecessary.

—In McKensie v. Farrell, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 192, it was held that in accordance with Code Pro., § 168, matters of mere defense in the answer call for no reply.

One Good Affirmative Defense Unreplied To.—In Perkins v. Bragg, 29 Ind. 507, it was held that when a plaintiff declines to reply to an answer containing

d. JUDGMENT ON FRIVOLOUS PLEADINGS—(1) Generally.—If a demurrer, answer, or reply be frivolous, the party who is prejudiced thereby may apply to the court or a judge of the court for judgment thereon.¹

Where Complaint Is Insufficient.—Judgment for frivolousness of an answer cannot be granted against the defendant where facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action are not stated in the complaint.²

(2) Test of Frivolous Pleading—In General.—On a motion for judgment on account of the frivolousness of the answer, the only question is whether or not it denies any material allegations of the complaint or sets up any defense;³ and if there is a material one good affirmative defense, judgment may be rendered for the defendant. See also Stoops v. Greensburgh, etc., Plankroad Co., 10 Ind. 47, holding that a defendant is entitled to judgment on the pleadings if the answer alleges payment, and there is no reply.

Cannot Be Ordered at Chambers.—In Aymar v. Chace, 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 301, it was held that a judge at chambers cannot order judgment for want of a reply; he can do so only in the case of frivolous pleadings.

1. Hemme v. Hays, 55 Cal. 337; Decker v. Kitchen, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 332; Lane v. Gilbert, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 150, holding that where redundant or irrelevant matter in an answer—e. g., mere mitigating circumstances in an action for assault and battery—is such that to strike it out would leave the pleading an unintelligible fragment, raising no issue, the proper remedy is not a motion to strike out, but a motion for judgment on account of frivolousness.

In Darrow v. Miller, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 247, the court said: "A pleading may be frivolous and still be interposed in good faith; * * * and unless the want of good faith in the pleader is manifest, the pleading, though technically frivolous, should remain on the record. For a party has the right to have any defense honestly interposed passed upon, not only in the court of original jurisdiction, but in a court of appeal. In such a case the remedy of the party alleging the frivolousness of the pleading is, if he desire a summary decision, to move for judgment under section 247 of the code."

Cannot Treat Pleadings as a Nullity.—Under the New York Code of 1848 it was held that, on a frivolous answer or demurrer, the plaintiff might move for judgment as for want of an answer. Noble v. Trowbridge, 1 Code Rep. (N. Y.) 38. Under the later provision of the code, however (Bliss's Code, § 537), a frivolous pleading cannot be treated as a nullity, but the party aggrieved must demur or move. Decker v. Kitchen, 21 Hun (N. Y.) 332, where the court said: "We think this provision has superseded the practice of treating an answer as a nullity although the court may deem it frivolous, and the practice of disregarding an answer regularly served has long been discontinued. Its reintroduction is not desirable, as it would lead to innumerable motions if attorneys were to assume to judge for themselves whether an answer is frivolous, and, upon coming to such conclusion, to disregard it." Illustrations.—In an action upon a promissory note against the maker, an answer which denies the indebtedness for which the note was given or that the plaintiff presented the note for payment is frivolous. Berrigan v. Oviatt, 3 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 199.

In an action for the dissolution of a corporation on the ground that it had paid money in pursuance of a corrupt and overruled agreement and committed acts of extravagant appropriation, the answer alleged that the money was paid on the advice of counsel, and denied the allegation of extravagance, and also alleged that only three of the board of trustees had been re-elected, and that the present board was competent to manage the affairs of the corporation. Such answer was held frivolous, since its denials went to portions of the complaint not necessary to sustain the action. People v. Dispensary, etc., Soc., 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 304.

A denial that the plaintiff in foreclosure was the owner of the bond and mortgage which the defendant executed and delivered to the plaintiff, and a denial that the plaintiff was the real party in interest, were held to be frivolous. Grinnell v. Church, 65 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 399.

In an action upon a bill of exchange by the payee against the acceptor, an answer denying that the plaintiffs are the owners and holders of the draft is a simple denial of a legal conclusion, and is frivolous. Witherspoon v. Van Dolar, 15 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 266.

Answers Held Not Frivolous.—In an action against a foreign corporation upon its mortgage bond, where the complaint alleged a demand for the interest at the defendant's agency in New York, an answer that the defendant had no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to such allegation, and therefore denied the same, was not frivolous, but put the demand in issue. Warner v. U. S. Land, etc., Co., 53 Hun (N. Y.) 312.

Where, in an action on a promissory note, the answer admitted the making and delivery, nonpayment, and protest, and denied each and every allegation in the complaint not theretofore admitted, it was held that the answer was not frivolous, as the allegations of the indorsement and transfer were thereby denied. Taylor v. Smith, (Supreme Ct.) 29 N. Y. St. Rep. 365.

Denial of Fact Not Alleged.—An answer is not frivolous which denies a fact essential to a plaintiff's recovery, even though such fact is not directly averred in the complaint. Lord v. Chesebrough, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 696.

In Youngs v. Kent, 46 N. Y. 672, it was held that when the answer puts in issue material allegations of the complaint, although its form and structure indicate that the intention of the pleader is to present a different plea, the issues in fact presented cannot be disregarded, and the court cannot, by summary judgment, deprive the defendants of the right to a trial of the issues thus formed.

2. Munger v. Shannon, 61 N. Y. 251;

Where, however, the denials of the answer go merely to immaterial portions of the complaint, proof of which is not necessary to sustain the action, a motion for judgment on the pleadings may properly be granted.¹

Answer Assumed to Be True. — For all the purposes of the motion the answer is to be assumed to be true,² since it is not the motive for which an answer is put in, or its truth or falsity, that is the test,³ and if it is a good defense on its face the motion must be denied.⁴

Effect of Former Decision. — An answer or demurrer will be held to be frivolous where there is a decision in point adverse to its sufficiency,⁵ unless the principle of such decision is questionable.⁶

Frivolous Only in Part. — Judgment on an answer as frivolous can

Clerical Error. — Where it was averred that the word "when," as used in one of the denials of the answer, was a clerical error, and was intended to be "where," a motion for judgment upon the pleadings for such clerical error on the ground that the answer was evasive was properly denied. 3. Hecker v. Mitchell, 5 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 453.

Good Faith No Defense. — The fact that an answer is interposed in good faith furnishes no defense to a motion for judgment for frivolousness, though it is a good reason for the allowance of an amendment. Swinburne v. Stockwell, 58 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 312.

4. Hecker v. Mitchell, 5 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 453; Kelly v. Barnett, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 135; Lord v. Chesebrough, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 696; Tamisier v. Cassard, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Crum, 2 N. Dak. 72.

It is not sufficient to sustain a judgment on an answer as frivolous that such answer will probably be held bad on demurrer. Aitken v. Clark, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 319.

Mere Defect in Form. — The fact that the answer is merely defective in form will not render it frivolous. Thompson v. Griswold, 11 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 180.

Good Defense "Shadowed Forth." — Mere vagueness in pleading is not frivolousness, but is to be corrected by amendment. It is enough on a motion for judgment for frivolousness of the answer that a good defense is "shadowed forth." Kelly v. Barnett, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 135; Yerkes v. Crum, 2 N. Dak. 72.

In Lattimer v. New York Metallic Spring Co., 9 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 207, note, it was held that a motion will not be granted by a single justice where there is a decision sustaining the answer.

In Strong v. Stevens, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 668, it was held that an answer stating only such facts as, under the former system, if set out in a special plea, would have made the latter bad on general demurrer, according to decisions determining the precise question, is frivolous.

be given only where the answer as an entirety is frivolous,¹ and is properly denied if a part of the answer is good.²

(3) Frivolousness Must Be Manifest. — Judgment should not be rendered on an answer as frivolous unless such defect is apparent to the court upon inspection of the pleadings and without argument.³

e. JUDGMENT UPON PART OF CLAIM ADMITTED — When Proper. — In many of the states it is provided that where the answer admits a part of the plaintiff's claim, upon his motion the action may be severed and judgment may be rendered in his favor for the part so admitted.⁴ Such provisions apply to equitable as

In Hecker v. Mitchell, 5 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 453, it was held, where an answer contained two defenses, and the plaintiff moved for judgment for frivolousness of the answer, and one defense was held good and the other frivolous, that the latter defense might be stricken out under notice that the plaintiff would ask other and further relief.

Improper in Absence of Statute. — Judgment cannot be taken by the plaintiff for the amount admitted to be due, and proceedings maintained for the remainder of the claim, where there is no statute or rule of practice permitting it. Blydenstein v. Haseltine, 140 Pa. St. 120.

In New York, before the provision of the code which authorized judgment upon partial admissions of a plaintiff's claim, he was allowed judgment on motion under Code Pro., § 246, for the part not denied, as for failure to answer. Tracy v. Humphrey, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 155.

In Pennsylvania it was provided by the Act of May 31, 1893, P. L. 185, that "in all cases now pending or hereafter to be commenced in the several courts of this commonwealth, in which affidavits of defense have been or may be filed to part of the claim of the plaintiff or plaintiffs, the plaintiff or plaintiffs may take judgment for the amount admitted to be due and have execution for the collection of the same, and the cases shall be proceeded in for the recovery of the balance of the demand of the plaintiff or plaintiffs, if anything more should be justly due to such plaintiff or plaintiffs." See Calkins v. Keely, 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 339; Johnson v. Carver, 175 Pa. St. 200; M'Kinney v. Mitchell, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 25; Maylin v. Root, 33 W. N. C. (Pa.) 76; Myers v. Cochran, 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 135; Jordan v. Kleinsmith, 5 Pa. Dist. (Pa.) 160.

In Myers v. Cochran, 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 135, it was held that the act above cited does not give the court the power to determine that an affidavit which goes to the whole claim is insufficient as to a part, and to give judgment for that part, with leave to proceed as to the balance. In Reilly v. Daly, 159 Pa. St. 605, it was held that, under the act, judgment cannot be entered for certain amounts claimed by the plaintiff, but denied by the defendants to be due, although the court decides that the affidavit of defense is insufficient as to such amounts, while sufficient as to other portions of the claim. Such a case is not brought literally within the terms of the act, namely, that the amounts are admitted to be due.

Where Judgment Not Proper. — In Ohio it was held that the code provision applies only to cases where a part of the cause or causes of action is admitted, and part denied, and does not apply where all are admitted or denied. Weaver v. Carnahan, 37 Ohio St. 363.

In New York it has been held that such judgment should not be ordered upon an admission by the defendant of part of the plaintiff's claim where the claim is one on which the defendant is exempt from imprisonment by the New York Non-Imprisonment Act of 1831, since in such case the order should be enforced as a provisional remedy by attachment for contempt. Lane v. Losee, 11 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 360; Duncan v. Ainslie, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 199.

Express Admission Not Essential. — The admission which will justify such judgment may be made by the answer either expressly or by its failure to deny a part of the plaintiff's claim.³

the complaint, alleging in his answer that a payment had been made upon the bond and mortgage. It was held that the plaintiff might admit the payment and move upon notice, under section 511 of the Code Civ. Pro., for leave to enter judgment for the balance due under the allegations of the complaint, after deducting payment. The court said: "The language of this section is broad. It is not limited to any class of actions, but applies with equal force to actions at law and in equity. It gives a discretion to the court to allow actions to be severed where a part of the plaintiff's claim is admitted to be just; and if the plaintiff elects to continue his action as to the part denied by the answer, that he may do so. If he does not elect to continue, then costs must be awarded as upon a final judgment in any other case."

Answer Denying Only a Part of Cause of Action. — In Tracy v. Humphrey, 5 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 155, it was held that where an answer denies only a part of the cause of action, judgment may be given for the part not denied, with costs of motion and costs of suit, though this may involve the necessity of two defenses on the record.

No Defense to One of Several Causes of Action. — In Russell v. Meacham, 16 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 193, the action was upon several separate causes of action arising on contract, to one of which the defendant failed to interpose a defense. It was held that an order should be granted requiring him to pay the amount of that cause of action, to be enforced by execution.

Failure Specifically to Controvert Allegations. — In Mills v. Brown, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 404, which was an action ex contractu, the plaintiff alleged a specific sum to be due, and the answer failed specifically to controvert the allegations in the petition. It was held that the court might render judgment without a jury and without proof of demand.

Admitted Counterclaim. — Where, in an action to recover money, the answer admits the debt, but sets up a counterclaim, which is admitted, the plaintiff may enter judgment for the balance and interest. Robbins v. Watson, 22 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 293.

the defendant in foreclosure did not deny any allegations of the complaint, but alleged in his answer a payment on bond and mortgage. It was held that the plaintiff, upon admitting payment, might move upon notice for leave to enter judgment for the balance.

Pleading Irregularity of Contract as to Interest. — In McLaurin v. Parker, 24 Miss. 509, it was held that the defendant, by pleading the irregularity of the contract as to interest, thereby confesses it as to the principal, and that judgment may be rendered for the plaintiff as to such principal and the issue tried as to the interest.

Admission of Smaller Sum than Claimed. — In McConnell v. Lincoln First Nat. Bank, 38 Neb. 252, the answer admitted that there was due to the plaintiff a certain sum smaller than that claimed by his petition. It was held that such admission would entitle the plaintiff to judgment for the smaller amount, even though his reply unequivocally denied all the new matter averred in the answer.

On Plea of Tender. — In Monroe v. Chaldeck, 78 Ill. 429, it was held that where, under a plea of tender, the amount pleaded is not brought into court, the court may render judgment for the amount admitted with costs.

Distinguished from Affidavit of Merits. — An affidavit of defense is a sworn written statement of the facts which constitute the defense in a civil action; its opposite is the affidavit of claim filed by the plaintiff. Anderson's L. Dict., title Defense, 2. It is a statement made in proper form that the defendant has a good ground of defense to the plaintiff's action upon the merits. Bouvier's L. Dict., title Affidavit of Defense. An affidavit of or to the merits represents that upon the substantial facts of the case justice is with the affiant; it is to the sufficiency of the facts which constitute a defense in a civil action instead of resistance upon technical grounds. Anderson's L. Dict., titles Merit; Affidavit.

By Whom Made. — An affidavit of defense must be made by the defendant or some person on his behalf who possesses a knowledge of the facts. M'Carney v. M'Camp, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 4.

Affidavit by One of Several Defendants. — Where several defendants have the same defense and plead jointly, an affidavit of defense made by one will inure to the benefit of and be regarded as sufficient for all. Tyrer v. Chew, 7 App. Cas. (D. C.) 175.

To What Actions Applicable. — The provisions requiring such affidavits have been held to apply to all actions of assumpsit, to actions against married women, to foreign attachments, to actions against public officers and corporations, and to appeals. See article AFFIDAVITS OF MERITS OR DEFENSE, vol. 1, p. 348, note 1. They do not apply to actions for torts, against lunatics, on implied contracts, on judgments, against infants, executors, administrators, or heirs. See article AFFIDAVITS OF MERITS OR DEFENSE, vol. 1, p. 349, note 1.

Effect of Filing Unnecessary Affidavit. — The filing of an affidavit of defense in a case where no affidavit is necessary is not a waiver of the right to resist judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense on the ground that no rendered by default for the plaintiff if the defendant omits to make such affidavit of defense, or makes an insufficient one.¹ The object of this provision is to prevent the delay of justice by resort to sham or false defenses.²

Test of Sufficiency. — On the hearing of a motion for judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, only the matters which are presented by the plaintiff's claim and the affidavit of defense can be considered,³ and the only proper inquiry is whether or not affidavit is necessary. Bartoe v. Guckert, 158 Pa. St. 124. See also Hutchinson v. Woodwell, 107 Pa. St. 509, where the court said: "The first question is, was the plaintiff below entitled to a judgment if no affidavit of defense had been made? If he was not, the judgment, for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, must be reversed; for in such case no affidavit of defense is required from the defendant. * * * The filing of one is no waiver of an objection to the sufficiency of the plaintiff's affidavit of claim."

Co. v. Snowdon*, 166 Pa. St. 236.

Right Not Affected by Appearance of Defendant's Attorney. — The right of a plaintiff to judgment by default for want of an affidavit of defense within the time prescribed by law will not be barred by the appearance of the defendant by his attorney within such time. North v. Yorke, 174 Pa. St. 349.

Judgment for Part of Claim Admitted by Affidavit. — Where a part of the plaintiff's claim is admitted by or denied in the affidavit of defense, the practice in Pennsylvania is to allow the plaintiff to take judgment for that part and to litigate as to the balance. See article AFFIDAVITS OF MERITS OR DEFENSE, vol. 1, p. 351, note 1.

2. Wilson v. Hayes, 18 Pa. St. 354; Bloomer v. Reed, 22 Pa. St. 51. In Johnson v. Wright, 2 App. Cas. (D. C.) 216, the court, speaking of the seventy-third rule of court, providing for such judgment, said: "The rule 73 is a salutary one, and is a law to the court as well as to the suitors as long as it remains in force. It is intended to prevent the delay of justice by the common expedient of resorting to sham or pretended defenses. It exacts nothing that is unreasonable from the parties; and if a defense be pleaded of what the defendant alleges as truth, and he is not willing to swear to it, it is not fair or reasonable to assume that he can get others to do what he declines to do himself; and hence the court is justified in assuming that the alleged defense is unfounded in fact, and in giving judgment to the plaintiff who has supported his claim by affidavit appended to the declaration."

Statement by Plaintiff Necessary. — In order to compel the defendant to present an affidavit of defense, a statement must be served or filed by the plaintiff showing prima facie liability on the part of the defendant. See article AFFIDAVITS OF MERITS OR DEFENSE, vol. 1, p. 349, note 2.

Not a Waiver of Right to Statement. — The defendant, by filing an affidavit of defense, does not waive his right to a proper statement by the plaintiff. See article AFFIDAVITS OF MERITS OR DEFENSE, vol. 1, p. 350, note 1.

3. Musser v. Stauffer, 178 Pa. St. 99.

the affidavit sets out sufficient facts to send the case to a jury.¹ In passing on the sufficiency of an affidavit of defense, the rule is that all unequivocal traverses or denials of material allegations in support of the claim, and all material allegations of fact contained in the affidavit of defense, must be accepted as verity.² Whenever the court entertains a doubt as to the sufficiency of an affidavit of defense, it is the settled practice to refuse the motion for judgment on the affidavit of the plaintiff's cause of action and to suffer the case to go to pleading, issue, and trial at bar in the usual manner.³

2. Motion for Judgment on Pleadings — a. NECESSITY FOR. — Where a party considers the pleadings insufficient to support a judgment for his adversary, for the reasons hereinbefore stated, he may move for judgment for himself upon the pleadings,⁴ and

See also Wood Co. v. Berry Co., 4 Pa. Dist. Rep. 141.

The court may not go outside of the case as presented by the claim and affidavit to consider extraneous facts either in support of or against the line of defense disclosed. Allegheny City v. McCaffrey, 131 Pa. St. 137.

Affidavit of Third Person. — On a motion by the plaintiff for judgment for want of an affidavit of defense, the affidavits of third persons cannot be considered under Rule 73 of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, since this provides for affidavits by the plaintiff and the defendant. Richmond v. Cake, 1 App. Cas. (D. C.) 447.

Additional Affidavit of Defense. — In Sykes v. Anderson, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 329, it was held that if an affidavit of defense is insufficient the court will not permit the filing of additional conflicting affidavits of defense, but will enter judgment as for want of an affidavit.

2. Johnston v. Callery, 173 Pa. St. 129.

Reasonable Certainty and Particularity in setting forth the facts of the defense are sufficient. Showing that an affidavit of defense might be more clear, definite, and particular, does not always prove its insufficiency to prevent judgment. Steiner v. Bartlett, 2 Pa. Super. Ct. Rep. 4.

3. Tallman v. Whitaker, 2 Houst. (Del.) 72; Gale v. Myers, 4 Houst. (Del.) 546. See also Philadelphia v. Second, etc., Streets R. Co., 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 705.

Where the Court Is Equally Divided upon the question whether or not a portion of the affidavit shows a good defense, a judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense will not be granted. Scranton v. Bush, 11 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 57, affirmed in 160 Pa. St. 499.

4. Douglas v. Rinehart, 5 Kan. 393.

When Motion Not Proper Remedy. — Motion for judgment is not the proper method of raising the objection of indefiniteness or uncertainty. The objection in such case should be raised by motion to make the pleading more definite. Webb v. Bidwell, 15 Minn. 479; Stewart v. Erie, etc., Transp. Co., 17 Minn. 373.

When an answer is not verified as it should be, a motion to strike out and for judgment by default should be made. Speer v. Craig, 16 Colo. 478.

A motion for judgment on the pleadings is not proper for raising the objection to the pleading of a double statement of the case. Spaulding v. Saltiel, 18 Colo. 86.

Proper Test of Affidavit of Defense. — If the plaintiff does not consider the defendant's affidavit of defense sufficient, the proper procedure is to test its sufficiency by a motion for judgment. Com. v. Payton, 1 Pa. Dist. Rep. 609, holding that a rule by the defendant to show cause why he should not be relieved from filing an affidavit of defense is not proper.

Defects to Be Specified. — In Davis v. Hitz, 13 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 238, it was held that a rule for judgment for want of sufficient affidavit of defense will be discharged where the plaintiff, in taking out the rule, fails to comply with a

it seems that the party thus moving should give notice to his adversary of such application.¹

Waiver of Right by Failure to Move. — The right of a party to judgment on the pleadings will be waived by failure to move for such judgment.²

rule of the court requiring him to specify in writing wherein the affidavit is defective.

Exceptions to Affidavit. — In Trader's Nat. Bank v. Wood, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 76, it was held that where a rule of court requires exceptions to be filed to an affidavit of defense, a rule for judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit will not be entertained in the absence of such exception.

Motion in Court. — In Pennsylvania it has been held in some courts that a judgment by default for want of an affidavit of defense must be moved for in court. Blair v. Warden, 4 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 464; Doud v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 6 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 329.

In Iowa a motion for judgment upon the pleadings is not proper for the purpose of testing the sufficiency of the petition under the provisions of the code, § 2650, that defects in the petition apparent on its face are waived if not taken advantage of by demurrer. Fulmer v. Mahaska County, 92 Iowa 20.

Motion Not Favored. — In Oregon a motion for judgment on the pleadings is held not to be in harmony with the spirit of the code, and will not be favored. Currie v. Southern Pac. Co., 23 Oregon 400; Bowles v. Doble, 11 Oregon 480.

1. New York Code Civ. Pro., § 537; Beal v. Union Paper Box Co., 4 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 18; Seattle Nat. Bank v. Meerwaldt, 8 Wash. 630, where the court said: "The practice adopted in this case of granting a judgment on the pleadings upon an oral motion at the time the case was set for trial is not to be commended. It has been recognized by this court in several cases, in one of which, Port v. Parfit, 4 Wash. 369, the proper theory of such proceedings is stated, but the portion of the statute there alluded to (Code Pro., § 412) expressly provides for a five days' notice of the time and place of application to the court for the relief demanded in the complaint, where the defendant has appeared. No such notice was given in this case, and in view of the other matters controlling the disposition of the case we only speak of it because it must undoubtedly operate to the surprise of a party who has filed an answer which has been replied to, to have an oral motion of this kind presented at the time when the case is called for trial on the pleadings, which he has until then supposed to be unexceptionable."

Affidavit Unnecessary. — In Smith v. Hoyt, 14 Wis. 252, it was held that affidavits showing service and failure to answer need not be served with the notice of motion for judgment.

On Motion for Judgment for Part of Claim. — In Shaw v. Coleman, 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. 4, it was held that, since there is no provision as to giving notice of the application for a judgment for a part of the claim admitted, the court may act on an ex parte application and grant an order severing the action, giving the judgment applied for, but that it would seem to be the better practice to require notice to be given. The court, in holding that such ex parte order should not be disturbed, said: "In the exercise of its discretion upon the facts presented, the court did not require notice of the application to be given to the defendants. * * * Inasmuch as section 511 does not require notice to be given, the court, in its discretion and under the circumstances of this case, had the power to act upon plaintiff's ex parte application, and to make the order complained of, although in general it may be the better practice under the said section to require notice to be given."

2. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Copas, 95 Ky. 460. See also Covel v. Smith, 68 Miss. 296.

In Nelson v. Wallace, 48 Mo. App. 193, it was held that the defendant's right to a judgment because new matter in the answer remains undenied will be waived by his going to trial and submitting the issue to the jury.

Although the denial in an answer may be insufficient, yet if the plaintiff omits to move for judgment on the ground that the answer is frivolous, or to have it made more definite and certain, he thereby waives the defect and cannot move at the trial for judgment

b. EFFECT OF MOTION. — A motion for judgment on the pleadings is in the nature of a demurrer, which it closely resembles,¹ and admits for its purposes the truth of all the facts well pleaded by the opposite party.² Thus, if a complaint fails to state a cause of action, and the defendant has answered, the defect may be taken advantage of by a motion of the defendant for judgment upon the pleadings, thereby admitting for its purposes all the facts alleged in the complaint, and testing their sufficiency to show a cause of action.³

c. MOTION MUST BE SPECIFIC. — A motion for judgment on the pleadings should be so drawn as to direct the attention of the court to the specific questions which it seeks to raise.⁴

d. TIME FOR MOTION. — A party who desires judgment on the pleadings should move for such judgment before introducing on the pleadings. Green v. Raymond, 14 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 322.

For Insufficient Affidavit of Defense. — The right to move for judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense, being for the plaintiff's sole benefit, will be held to have been waived by him if, instead of availing himself of it, he seeks to compel the defendant to enter a plea, or if he moves the court to direct a plea to be entered in behalf of the defendant. Edison General Electric Co. v. Johnstown Electric Light Co., 56 Fed. Rep. 456.

"A rule to plead is a waiver of the right to ask for judgment upon the affidavit of defense." Fuoss v. Schleines, 15 W. N. C. (Pa.) 192.

1. Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 257; Floyd v. Johnson, 17 Mont. 469; Burrall v. Moore, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 654.

In Floyd v. Johnson, 17 Mont. 469, both the plaintiff and the defendant, in a suit on a promissory note in which an answer was filed pleading new matter constituting a defense, moved for judgment on the pleadings, which motion was granted as against the plaintiff, who thereupon, and within twenty-four hours after the ruling on the motion, filed a replication denying the affirmative matter in the answer. It was held error for the court to render a final judgment against the plaintiff without allowing the issues to be made up by the filing of the replication, since his motion for judgment, being in effect a demurrer to the answer, was within the spirit and intent of a rule of court allowing a party twenty-four hours in which to answer or reply after demurrer overruled. See also Power v. Gum, 6 Mont. 5.

2. Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 257; People v. Johnson, 95 Cal. 471; De Toro v. Robinson, 91 Cal. 371; Stewart v. Erie, etc., Transp. Co., 17 Minn. 373; Floyd v. Johnson, 17 Mont. 469.

"A motion for judgment upon the pleadings confesses the facts to be as there stated, and is equivalent to a general demurrer." Sanderson, J., in Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 257.

A motion for judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense is in the nature of a demurrer. It admits the existence of the facts averred, but denies their sufficiency as an answer to the plaintiff's claim. Hicks v. National Bank, 168 Pa. St. 638; Third Reformed Dutch Church v. Jones, 132 Pa. St. 462; Wood Co. v. Berry Co., 4 Pa. Dist. Rep. 141; Class v. Kingsley, 142 Pa. St. 636.

If a Legal or an Equitable Defense Is Stated, a motion for judgment will be denied. Class v. Kingsley, 142 Pa. St. 636. See also article AFFIDAVITS OF MERITS OR DEFENSE, vol. 1, p. 351, note 3.

3. De Toro v. Robinson, 91 Cal. 371.

Application to Substitute Another Answer. — Where a motion is made by a plaintiff for judgment on the pleadings, if the defendant intends to abandon his answer and substitute another in its stead, he must make his application before judgment is ordered; if he waits until after that time, a denial of the application involves no abuse of discretion. Felch v. Beaudry, 40 Cal. 439.

4. Brown v. Jones, 125 Ind. 375.

"On the Pleadings." — In Holcraft v. King, 25 Ind. 352, it was held that where an answer to a complaint in three paragraphs professes in terms to answer only the first, a motion after ver-evidence to support his own pleading.¹ Such motion should not be delayed until too late for the opposing party to amend his pleadings after defects therein have been pointed out.²

e. CONSTRUCTION OF PLEADINGS ON MOTION. — Upon a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the pleadings objected to as insufficient will be liberally construed,³ and the motion will be denied where there is any reasonable doubt as to their insufficiency.⁴

f. AMENDMENT OF PLEADING ON MOTION FOR JUDGMENT. — A motion for judgment on an answer as frivolous being in effect a summary demurrer,⁵ upon notice of the motion the defendant may amend his answer as a matter of course, if the time to amend has not expired.⁶ Service of the answer as amended before the time specified by the notice for hearing the motion will be an answer to it.⁷ Where the plaintiff has a good cause of action which through accident or mistake he has failed to set out in his complaint, the court, on a motion for judgment dict for the plaintiff for a judgment "on the pleadings" is too vague and indefinite.

1. Tevis v. Hicks, 41 Cal. 123, where the plaintiff desired to move for judgment on the pleadings for the reason that the allegations of the complaint were not denied in the answer, and it was held that he should move for it before introducing evidence to support his complaint.

2. Tevis v. Hicks, 41 Cal. 123.

After Going to Trial on General Issue. — In Nelson v. Wallace, 48 Mo. App. 193, it was held that where the defendant goes to trial on the general issue only, he may still insist that he is entitled to judgment on the pleadings. See also, to the same effect, State v. Finn, 19 Mo. App. 560.

After Reply to Defective Answer. — In Port v. Parfit, 4 Wash. 369, it was held that if an answer is filed which does not controvert the material allegations of the complaint, the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment for failure to answer although he may have filed a reply to the defective answer.

After Overruling a Demurrer for Same Reason. — In De Courcey v. Cox, 94 Cal. 665, it was held that the granting of a motion for judgment on the pleadings, on the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, after the overruling of a demurrer based on that ground, is not a reversible error, but is an irregularity which should be avoided; but where the demurrer was properly overruled and the motion improperly granted, judgment will be reversed.

4. Giles Lithographic, etc., Co. v. Recamier Mfg. Co., 14 Daly (N. Y.) 475.

In McAllister v. Welker, 39 Minn. 535, upon a motion for judgment on the pleadings by the defendant at the trial and after answering, the court held that the complaint should be liberally construed, and should be sustained if, upon such liberal construction, a cause of action was disclosed.

5. Burrall v. Moore, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 654.

6. Burrall v. Moore, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 654.

In Stedecker v. Bernard, 4 N. Y. Month. L. Bul. 31, it was held that on a motion for judgment under Code Pro., § 247 (Code Civ. Pro., § 537), upon a frivolous answer, a court or judge may allow an amended answer to be served on terms, and the application, therefore, should be made to the judge making such decision, though it may be formally made to the court immediately afterwards. Where the judge refuses, however, to entertain the application, a formal motion may be made to the court.

7. Burrall v. Moore, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 654.

on the pleadings for the defendant, should, on the plaintiff's application, permit him to amend.¹

3. Form of Judgment on Frivolous Pleading. — A judgment granted upon motion of the plaintiff upon a frivolous answer may be either final, as, for instance, where nothing is left to be ascertained but the amount of damages, or it may simply adjudge the pleading frivolous and leave the plaintiff to apply to the court for the relief he seeks.²

XIII. JUDGMENTS ON AWARDS — 1. Conditions Precedent to Entry of Judgment. — Parties acting under a statute authorizing the settlement of disputes by arbitration must substantially pursue its provisions to entitle the award to be made the judgment of the court.³

Failure to Apply for Amendment. — Should the plaintiff fail to make application for leave to amend, the defendant is entitled to judgment on the pleadings. *Kelley v. Entry of Submission. — If no note of the submission is entered by the clerk in his register of actions, judgment cannot be entered on the award. Pieratt v. Kennedy, 43 Cal. 393; Kettleman v. Treadway, 65 Cal. 505; Steel v. Steel, 1 Nev. 27.

Attestation of Submission. — Nor can judgment be entered on the award if the instrument submitting the differences between the parties is not attested by a subscribing witness as required by statute. Cook v. Schroeder, 55 Ill. 530; Estep v. Larsh, 16 Ind. 82; Goodsell v. Phillips, 49 Barb. (N. Y.) 353; Ocean House Corp. v. Chippu, 5 Hun (N. Y.) 419. But see Lovell v. Wheaton, 11 Minn. 92, where it was held that an award not attested by a subscribing witness was not necessarily void.

2. Awards on Which Judgment May Be Entered — a. AWARD UNDER SUBMISSION IN PAIS. — In the absence of statutory authorization no judgment can be entered on an award under a submission in pais.¹ But if the submission has been made a rule of court,² or contains a stipulation that judgment shall be entered on the award,³ judgment may be entered.

b. AWARD UNDER SUBMISSION IN PENDING SUIT. — A court cannot enter up judgment on an award made in a cause pending in such court, unless the submission has been made a rule of court⁴ or contains a stipulation that the award shall be made the judgment of the court.⁵

to serve a copy of the award on the parties, when the statute provides for such service, is fatal to the entry of judgment. Flatter v. McDermott, 15 Ind. 389; Coats v. Kiger, 14 Ind. 179; Estep v. Larsh, 16 Ind. 82; Adams v. Hammon, 10 B. Mon. (Ky.) 5; Cleaveland v. Dixon, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 227; Wrigglesworth v. Morton, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 157.

Affidavit. — Though an award is not entitled to entry on the docket without the affidavit required by the statutes, a judgment on an award entered without such affidavit is only voidable, and not void. Wall v. Fife, 37 Pa. St. 394.

Waiver of Requirement. — Though the submission and award should be recorded before the grant of a rule to show cause why judgment should not be entered, consent of the parties to the entry of the rule waives the recording. Jacobs v. Moffatt, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 395.

1. Dudley v. Farris, 79 Ala. 187; Davis v. M'Connell, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 492; Coxetter v. Huertas, 14 Fla. 270; Halloram v. Bray, 29 Ga. 422; Eaton v. Arnold, 9 Mass. 519; Shearer v. Mooers, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 308; White v. Shriver, 2 Watts (Pa.) 471.

Where the parties to an action of replevin entered into a written agreement to refer the cause to A., and a rule was entered that the cause be referred to A., and that he report to the court, it was held that this was not a reference under the statute, but a voluntary submission working a discontinuance, and that, therefore, the court had no authority to give judgment on the report. Camp v. Root, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 22.

2. Sherron v. Wood, 10 N. J. L. 7; Richardson v. Cassily, 3 Watts (Pa.) 320.

3. Tennant v. Divine, 24 W. Va. 387.

In North Carolina a judgment cannot be entered on an award where the reference to the arbitrators was not under an order of court made in a pending cause. Metcalf v. Guthrie, 94 N. Car. 447; Long v. Fitzgerald, 97 N. Car. 39; Gibbs v. Berry, 13 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 388; Simpson v. McBee, 3 Dev. L. (N. Car.) 531; Cunningham v. Howell, 1 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 9; Moore v. Austin, 85 N. Car. 179; Lusk v. Clayton, 70 N. Car. 184; Robbins v. Killebrew, 95 N. Car. 19; Jackson v. McLean, 96 N. Car. 474. Unless by consent. Long v. Fitzgerald, 97 N. Car. 39; Moore v. Austin, 85 N. Car. 179.

The filing of exceptions to an award is a waiver of an objection that the submission was not had under a rule of court. Long v. Fitzgerald, 97 N. Car. 39.

4. Jewell v. Blankenship, 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 439.

Judgment Against Person Not a Party.

— Where a pending cause is submitted to arbitration under an agreement that the award shall be entered as the judgment of the court, and the award is against the defendant and another, it is error to render judgment against such other, where he in no way assented to the proceedings. Smith v. Byrd, 7 Ill. 412.

Nonsuit After Submission. — Where a pending suit has been submitted to arbitration and an award has been rendered conforming to the provisions of the statute, the plaintiff cannot prevent the award from being entered up as the judgment of the court by taking a voluntary nonsuit. Davis v. Forshee, 34 Ala. 107.

Presumption of Consent. — Though the consent of parties, either before or after an award, is necessary to make the award the judgment of the court, it will be presumed, after judgment, where there is no proof to the contrary, that such consent was given. Edrington v. League, 1 Tex. 64.

5. Davis v. M'Connell, 3 Stew. (Ala.)

3. Courts in Which Judgment May Be Entered — a. STATUTORY PROVISIONS. — The statutes relating to the submission of controversies and pending actions to arbitration, and the entry of judgment on the award of the arbitrators, usually make provision for the court in which the judgment is to be entered.¹

b. COURTS OF RECORD. — As a general rule, the courts invested by statute with jurisdiction to enter judgment on awards are courts of record.²

c. DESIGNATION OF COURT IN AGREEMENT. — In some states the statutes provide that the agreement of submission must designate the court in which the award must be filed and the judgment entered. It follows that judgment must be entered in the court so designated.³

d. COURT MUST HAVE JURISDICTION. — But the court designated in the agreement of submission must be a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the award.⁴

e. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE. — Justices of the peace have no jurisdiction to enter judgment on an award,⁵ except in cases

Y.) 22; Farrington v. Hamblin, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 212; Rogers v. Nall, 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 29. And see Gunter v. Sanchez, 1 Cal. 45.

In Georgia an order of court is not necessary to make an award of arbitrators the judgment of the court. Jones v. Bond, 76 Ga. 517.

2. Weinz v. Dopler, 17 Ill. 111; Richards v. Reed, 39 Ind. 330; Hubbel v. Baldwin, Wright (Ohio) 86.

3. Richards v. Reed, 39 Ind. 330; McKnight v. McCullough, 21 Iowa 111; District Tp. v. Independent Dist., 60 Iowa 141.

Designation of Court in Agreement. —

Under the provisions of the Iowa statute that the agreement must designate the court in which the judgment on the award is to be entered, an agreement providing that "judgment shall be entered in any court having jurisdiction of the same" authorizes the District Court of the county where both parties reside to enter judgment on an award of $741. McKnight v. McCullough, 21 Iowa 111.

An agreement specifying the court wherein the award is to be filed sufficiently indicates the court wherein judgment is to be rendered. District Tp. v. Independent Dist., 60 Iowa 141.

Necessity of Designation of Court. — A provision in the agreement of submission that the court to which the award is to be returned shall render judgment thereon is necessary to authorize the court to render judgment on the award. Love v. Burns, 35 Iowa 150.

Abolishment of Court. — In Kendall v. Lewiston Water Power Co., 36 Me. 19, the terms of submission required that the award should be returned to the District Court by July 9, 1852. This court was abolished by a law which took effect May 1, 1852, and all its jurisdiction was transferred to the Supreme Court, and all processes made returnable to the District Court at its June term were directed by the law to be returned to the Supreme Court at its October term, 1852. It was held that the award was properly returned and judgment rendered thereon at the October term of the Supreme Court.

4. Williams v. Walton, 9 Cal. 142. In this case the parties entered into a submission to arbitration in which it was stipulated that the award be entered as the judgment of the County Court. It was held that the judgment entered by the County Court on the award was void, as that court had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter.

5. Weinz v. Dopler, 17 Ill. 111; Richards v. Reed, 39 Ind. 330; Hubbel v. Baldwin, Wright (Ohio) 86; Worthen v. Stevens, 4 Mass. 448; Kingsley v. Bill, 9 Mass. 197.

pending before them.¹ But a stipulation in an agreement of submission that a designated justice of the peace shall enter judgment on the award warrants such justice in entering judgment, provided the sum for which judgment is entered does not exceed in amount the jurisdiction of a justice.²

f. COURTS OF OTHER COUNTY. — A judgment may be entered in the court of a county other than the one in which the arbitration was held, and the award rendered, and the parties reside, if the agreement for submission so provides,³ or the parties so consent.⁴

4. Time of Entry of Judgment — a. STATUTORY PROVISIONS. — The statutes likewise provide for the time of the entry of judgment on an award. Such time is usually a certain number of days after the date or filing of the award or a certain term of court.⁵

b. CONSENT OF PARTIES. — As the provisions of the statute that judgment cannot be entered on an award until a certain time after the rendition of the award are only intended to prevent judgment from being taken before the losing party shall have had an opportunity of filing objections to the award, judgment may be entered on an award before the statutory time if the parties consent thereto or waive the privilege as to time.⁶ And the filing

3. McMillan v. Allen, 98 Ga. 405.

4. Henry v. Hilliard, 120 N. Car. 479.

5. See the statutes of the several states. See also the following cases: Hoogs v. Morse, 31 Cal. 128; Schaffer v. Lehman, 2 MacArthur (D. C.) 305; Middleton v. Hume, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 221; Wrigglesworth v. Morton, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 158; Phillips v. Travis, Sneed (Ky.) 174; Hollingsworth v. Willis, 64 Miss. 152; Alexander v. Witherspoon, 30 Tex. 291.

In Wheatley v. Martin, 6 Leigh (Va.) 62, it was held that a submission by rule of court of a matter of controversy in a suit pending was not within the statute of awards, and that judgment could be entered on an award rendered in such a submission at the same term at which it was returned.

Estoppel to Question Time of Entry. — If a judgment on an award of arbitrators is entered by the clerk at the request of the prevailing party less than five days after the award is filed, such prevailing party cannot afterwards question its validity on the ground that it was irregularly entered. Hoogs v. Morse, 31 Cal. 128.

Effect of Premature Entry. — A judgment prematurely entered on an award is not void, but only voidable. Gibbon v. Dougherty, 10 Ohio St. 365; Fortune v. Killebrew, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 21 S. W. Rep. 986.

Agreement as to Entry. — An agreement that an award may be returned to the court at the term at which the submission is made is not a waiver of that provision of the statute requiring that there shall be fifteen days between the date of the award and the time of its return to court, and a judgment on an award returned within nine days is erroneous. Phillips v. Travis, Sneed (Ky.) 174.

Entry in Vacation. — An appellate court, on reversing a judgment on an award because entered in vacation, may remand the case with directions to the lower court to proceed to the entry of a new judgment. Hopkins v. Flynn, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 526. But see Tisdale v. Gandy, 1 Hawks (N. Car.) 282. In this case the action was referred to arbitrators, who returned their award in vacation. The clerk thereupon entered it as a judgment rendered in the court. The entry was ordered to be expunged and the proceedings held to be void, though the party against whom it was entered gave a subsequent release of errors.

6. Middleton v. Hume, 3 J. J. Marsh.

of exceptions to an award, or a motion to set it aside, pending the entry of judgment on it, is a waiver of the privilege as to time.¹

c. DELAY IN ENTRY. — Failure to enter judgment at the time designated in the statute is not fatal to the award.²

5. Procedure on Entry of Judgment — a. NOTICE OF MOTION OR RULE. — In some states a motion to enter judgment on an award or a rule to show cause why judgment should not be entered thereon must be upon notice to the opposite party.³ In others it would seem that no notice is necessary.⁴

b. PRESENCE OF PARTIES. — If the parties agree that the award shall be returned and entered as the judgment of the court at a particular term, it is no objection to the judgment of that term that one of the parties was not present at the return and judgment.⁵

c. DEATH OF PARTY. — The death of one of the parties to a submission abates the proceeding, in the absence of a statute providing for the revival of the proceeding or the substitution of another party in the place of the deceased party.⁶

(Ky.) 221; Lovell v. Wheaton, 11 Minn. 92; Hughes v. Bywater, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 551; Mitchell v. Kelly, 1 Call (Va.) 379; Alexander v. Witherspoon, 30 Tex. 291.

2. Savannah, etc., R. Co. v. Decker, 94 Ga. 149; Hall v. Morris, 30 Tex. 280.

Delay in Entry. — An award made five years after the order of reference, and returned six years after the reference, and three years after the suit had been dismissed by order of court, is not such an award as authorized the court to render judgment thereon, though entered and ordered to record by consent of the parties. Hay v. Cole, 11 B. Mon. (Ky.) 70.

3. Nelson v. Hinesley, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 432; Price v. White, 27 Mo. 275; Hubbel v. Baldwin, Wright (Ohio) 86; Anonymous, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 520.

Notice of Motion. — In Anonymous, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 520, it was held that if confirmation be asked at the next term after publication of the award, notice of the application must be given, but where a term intervenes between the publication and the confirmation no notice is necessary.

A notice between a regular and an adjourned term is sufficient for the entry of judgment at the adjourned term. Green v. Shields, 37 Ga. 35.

Change in Term of Court. — Where notice is given that a motion for the confirmation of an award will be presented to a court on the first Monday of May, and the legislature subsequently changes the time of holding such court from the said Monday to a later date, no further notice need be given. Price v. White, 27 Mo. 275.

Confirmation After Reversal of Order Vacating. — Where an order vacating an award is reversed on error, it is necessary to give notice to the defendants in error to show cause at a special term why the award should not be confirmed. Bergh v. Pfeiffer, Hill & D. Supp. (N. Y.) 110.

Waiver of Notice. — Consent to the entry of a rule to show cause why judgment should not be entered on an award waives the right to a formal notice of the rule. Jacobs v. Mofatt, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 395.

4. Anderson v. Beebe, 22 Kan. 768.

5. Keans v. Rankin, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 88.

In Turner v. Maddox, 3 Gill (Md.) 190, it was held that a judgment entered on an award after the death of one of the parties is not invalid on that account, as the statute expressly provides that the death of one of the parties shall not abate the proceeding. But see Wheatley v. Martin, 6 Leigh (Va.) 62, where it was held that a submission by rule of court was not avoided by the death of the plaintiff where the cause was revived by the

d. OBJECTIONS TO MOTION. — Objections may be made to the entry of judgment on an award though the objecting party failed to file his objections within the time limit specified by the statute.¹

e. SUFFICIENCY OF OBJECTIONS. — An objection to the entry of judgment on an award must state specifically the grounds of objection.²

f. EXCEPTIONS TO ENTRY OF AWARD ON MINUTES. — The filing of exceptions to a judgment ordering an award to be entered on the minutes of the court does not prevent the entry of judgment on the award.³

g. MANNER OF ENTERING JUDGMENT. — On a reference to arbitrators of matters in a pending suit, by order of court, upon agreement of the parties, judgment should be entered on the award as on the verdict of a jury.⁴

administrator, who, with the defendant, proceeded under it.

1. Shores v. Bowen, 44 Mo. 396; Hinkle v. Harris, 34 Mo. App. 223.

Objections to Motion. — A clause in an agreement of arbitration providing that the unsuccessful party should comply with the award within ten days after notice thereof is no objection to making the award the judgment of the court. Forshey v. Galveston, etc., R. Co., 16 Tex. 516.

Showing on Motion. — On a motion to enter judgment on an award, it may be shown that the arbitrators considered and passed on matters not submitted to them. Hinkle v. Harris, 34 Mo. App. 223. Ex parte affidavits may be read against or in support of objections to the entering of an award as the judgment of the court. Tennant v. Divine, 24 W. Va. 387.

Jury Trial of Issue. — One against whom an award is made on a submission signed for him by an attorney may deny the latter's authority on a proceeding to enter judgment on the award, and is entitled to a jury trial on the issue of the attorney's authority. Boyden v. Lamb, 152 Mass. 416.

Raising Objections on Appeal. — As a rule, no objection can be made to an award on appeal that was not made in the court below. Price v. Kirby, 1 Ala. 184; Wright v. Bolton, 8 Ala. 548; Mobile Bay Road Co. v. Yeind, 29 Ala. 325; Carson v. Carson, 1 Metc. (Ky.) 435. But an objection going to the jurisdiction of the arbitrators may be made at any time. Gaines v. Clark, 23 Minn. 64; Barney v. Flower, 27 Minn. 403; Heglund v. Allen, 30 Minn. 38.

Effect of Appeal. — Where the charter of a corporation, after prescribing for arbitration to determine damages from flowage of land, provided that "the award shall remain in force and judgment be rendered thereon," it was held that judgment should be entered on the award though the corporation appeals from the award. Darge v. Horicon Iron Mfg. Co., 22 Wis. 417.

Effect of Garnishment. — One in whose favor an award is made under a rule of court is entitled to a judgment thereon though his creditor may have attached the same by a trustee process after the acceptance of the award. Holt v. Kirby, 39 Me. 164; Codman v. Strout, 22 Me. 292.

2. Shaifer v. Baker, 38 Ga. 135, where it was held that an affidavit to prevent an award from becoming a judgment because of "fraud, accident, mistake, or illegality," was insufficient, and that the facts showing the fraud, accident, mistake, or illegality should have been set forth; Conrad v. Johnson, 20 Ind. 421; Bash v. Christian, 77 Ind. 290, where it was held that an objection to the entry of judgment on an award that it was obtained by the partiality and misbehavior of an arbitrator should specify in what the partiality and misbehavior consisted.

3. Walker v. Walker, 25 Ga. 257; Hart v. Stewart, 13 La. Ann. 37.

4. Thorpe v. Starr, 17 Ill. 199.

Form of Judgment. — It is not necessary to insert in a judgment on an award an order requiring the plaintiff to execute releases of certain claims, though the award requires the execution of such releases, where the claims

h. ENTRY BY CLERK. — If the submission is made an order of court, the clerk may enter judgment on the award without any further order of the court.¹

i. ENTRY OF ARBITRATOR'S MINUTES OF RECORD. — In entering judgment on an award the minutes of the arbitrators cannot be made a part of the record.²

j. LOSS OF AWARD. — Where an award is lost, judgment may be entered on a copy of it duly proved or on affidavit of its contents.³

k. AMENDMENT OR CORRECTION OF AWARD. — Though it is the general rule that the judgment entered on an award must conform to the award,⁴ a clerical error or mistake in the award may be corrected,⁵ or it may be modified by striking out an unauthorized provision.⁶

6. Allowance of Interest — In General. — A judgment on an award and the final decision rejecting them, together with the arbitrator's explicit decision that they shall be released, fully appear. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hughes, 28 Mich. 186.

Where it is agreed in the submission to arbitrators that the money awarded to the plaintiff, if any, shall be paid to the sheriff for the benefit of the plaintiff's creditors, the judgment should be so entered. Coupland v. Anderson, 2 Call (Va.) 106.

Proceedings Subsequent to Entry of Judgment. — An order continuing a cause after the entry of judgment on an award made therein by arbitrators, and the rendition of another judgment, are coram non iudice. Taylor v. Harris, 16 Tex. 574.

1. Carsley v. Lindsay, 14 Cal. 390. But see Heslep v. San Francisco, 4 Cal. 1.

3. Little v. Gardner, 5 N. H. 415; Hill v. Townsend, 3 Taunt. 45; Robinson v. Davis, 1 Stra. 526.

Loss of Submission. — Though the original agreement of submission is not produced and filed, the court has jurisdiction to enter judgment on the award on satisfactory evidence that an agreement of submission was signed, acknowledged, and certified conformably to the statutory requisitions, and has been lost, and on proof of a copy thereof, or of its contents, so full and complete as to be substantially a copy. Eaton v. Hall, 5 Met. (Mass.) 287.

Statutory Grounds. — In Huss v. Turner, 2 Ind. 217, it was held that an award could only be modified on the grounds enumerated in the statute.

Addition of Interest. — The court has no authority to change an award by adding interest thereto. District Tp. v. Independent Dist., 60 Iowa 141.

Remittitur of Excess. — Judgment may be entered for a less sum than that which was awarded, if the party in whose favor the sum was reported releases the difference on the record. P Phelps v. Goodman, 14 Mass. 252.

Changing Time of Payment. — Where arbitrators award a party a sum of money payable in several annual instalments, it is erroneous to order judgment for the whole amount payable immediately. Bouck v. Bouck, 57 Minn. 490.

Judgment at Variance with Award. — A judgment on an award is not inconsistent with the award because it provides for the payment of the costs of the court to be taxed, while the award provided that the expenses and charges of the arbitration should be mutually borne and paid by the parties. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hughes, 28 Mich. 186.

5. Gunn v. Bowers, 126 Pa. St. 552; Deford v. Deford, 116 Ind. 523.

may include interest from the time of the award to the time of the entry of judgment upon it.¹

Statutory Provisions. — In some states the statutes provide for interest on an award from the time it is payable² or from the time of its acceptance by the court.³

7. Enforcement of Judgment — Issuance of Execution. — Execution may issue upon a judgment entered on an award for the payment of money as upon a judgment on a verdict.⁴

XIV. JUDGMENTS ON APPEAL — 1. In General — a. NECESSITY OF DECISION. — It is the duty of an appellate court to decide only actual controversies, and not to give opinions upon moot questions or abstract propositions, or to declare principles or rules of law which cannot affect the matter in issue in the case before it.⁵ Consequently when, pending an appeal, an event occurs which Prospective Award. — If the award be prospective by ordering money to be paid at some future time or a specific act to be done, no execution will issue, but the remedy is by attachment or action on the award. Com. v. Pejepsicut, 7 Mass. 399; Skillings v. Coolidge, 14 Mass. 43.

In Pennsylvania an award of arbitrators for a certain sum has the effect of a judgment upon which an execution may issue without a scire facias. O'Donnell v. Lynch, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 283; Coleman v. Lukens, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 347. But execution cannot issue until judgment is entered. Book v. Edgar, 3 Watts (Pa.) 29.

But where, on a rule to show cause why a judgment should not be opened and the defendant let in to defend, the parties entered into an agreement to refer the cause to arbitrators, whose award should be final, and upon which execution might issue, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to execution on filing the award, without any order or sanction of court. *Gallup v. Release of Right to Appeal. — An appeal will not be considered where it appears that the appellant has released his right to appeal. Elwell v. Fosdick, 134 U. S. 500.

Acquirement by Appellant of Subject-matter of Controversy. — Nor will an appeal be considered where the appellant comes into possession of the subject-matter in controversy pending the appeal. Cleveland v. Chamberlain, 1 Black (U. S.) 419; Little v. Bowers, 134 U. S. 547; Russell v. Campbell, 112 N. Car. 404.

Settlement Pending Appeal. — Where, pending the appeal, the parties make a settlement or compromise, the appeal will be dismissed. Martinez Bank v. Jahn, 104 Cal. 238; Hunter v. Dickinson, 3 Colo. App. 372; Dakota County v. Glidden, 113 U. S. 222.

Satisfaction of Judgment. — An appeal will not be considered where the judgment has been satisfied. Morton v. Superior Ct., 65 Cal. 496; People v. Burns, 78 Cal. 645.

Payment of Tax. — Where, pending a suit concerning the validity of the assessment of a tax, the tax is paid, the appeal will not be considered. San Mateo County v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 116 U. S. 138; Little v. Bowers, renders it impossible for the appellate court, if it should decide in favor of the appellant, to grant him any effectual relief, the court will not proceed to a formal judgment.¹

b. REMAND WITHOUT DECISION. — An appellate court may, without passing on a question raised on appeal, remand the cause to the lower court for the determination of such question.²

c. DELIVERY OF WRITTEN OPINION. — In the absence of constitutional provisions, the duty of an appellate court is performed on its rendition of judgment.³ The legislature cannot, therefore, require the Supreme Court to give reasons for its decisions in writing.⁴ And a constitutional or statutory provision requiring the Supreme Court to reduce its opinions to writing and notice every error assigned does not require a notice of points not essential to a full and effectual disposition of the cause, or of unimportant points, or of points involving no new question.⁵

134 U. S. 547; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Wright, 141 U. S. 696. So, too, where the amount of the tax is tendered and deposited in a bank. California v. San Pablo, etc., R. Co., 149 U. S. 308.

Distinction Between Judgment and Opinion. — The opinion filed by an appellate court is not the judgment of the court, but only the reasons for the judgment. Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 24; Lambert v. Hyers, 27 Ill. App. 400; Ex p. Dial, 14 S. Car. 586; Davidson v. Carroll, 23 La. Ann. 108; Watkins v. Junker, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 629.

1. New Orleans Flour Inspectors v. Glover, 160 U. S. 170; Parker v. Bilgery, 47 La. Ann. 1348; Meloy v. Scott, 83 Md. 375.

In Cheong Ah Moy v. U. S., 113 U. S. 216, the court declined "to decide questions arising in cases which no longer exist, in regard to rights which it cannot enforce."

A writ of error sued out to a judgment refusing to enjoin a sale of land will not be entertained where the sale sought to be enjoined has actually taken place. Thornton v. Manchester Invest. Co., 97 Ga. 342.

2. Blumenthal v. Shaw, 70 Fed. Rep. 801.

3. Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 24.

4. Delivery of Written Opinion. — In Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 24, Field, J., speaking for the court, said: "The legislature can no more require this court to state the reasons of its decisions than this court can require, for the validity of the statutes, that the legislature shall accompany them with the reasons for their enactment."

5. Henry v. State Bank, 3 Ind. 216; Clark v. Trovinger, 8 Ind. 334; Marvin v. Carter, 8 Ind. 462; Trayser v. Indiana Asbury University, 39 Ind. 556; Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 116 Ind. 578. See, generally, article OPINIONS.

Necessity of Written Opinions. — In Baker v. Kerr, 13 Iowa 384, the court said: "In view of the great press of business, in our anxiety to pass upon and adjudicate the causes submitted with as little delay as possible, we have felt at liberty, and indeed that it was our duty, to announce that a case was affirmed, without filing a written opinion, when it was unimportant, involved no new question, and when an opinion would be but repetition and tend to unnecessarily encumber our published reports."

In Willets v. Ridgway, 9 Ind. 368, it is said that a constitutional provision requiring a written opinion upon every point arising in the record of every case, "if literally followed, tends to fill our reports with repetitions of decisions upon settled as well as frivolous points, and often to introduce into them, in the great press of business, premature and not well-considered opinions, upon points only slightly argued."

In Burnett v. Powell, 6 Tex. Civ. App. 39, Head, J., speaking for the court, says: "Believing that the legal literature of this state is already sufficiently voluminous, * * * this court * * * has felt that it could subserve the interests of litigants better by devoting its time to the decision of cases than by writing at length the reasons for such decisions, unless some

d. CHANGE IN LAW OR STATE OF FACTS. — An appellate court, in determining a cause, is confined to an inquiry as to whether the judgment, when rendered, was correct or incorrect.¹ Consequently a judgment of an inferior court will not be reversed for any fact arising after the rendition of such judgment.² But if, subsequent to the judgment and before the decision of the appellate court, a law intervenes and changes the rule which governs, the rights of the parties must be determined by such law.³ So, too, a judgment imposing a penalty will be reversed on appeal where the law imposing the penalty expires or is repealed after the rendition of the judgment and pending an appeal therefrom.⁴ useful purpose could be accomplished thereby; and we have, therefore, adopted the practice of delivering our opinions orally in affirmed cases in which our jurisdiction is believed to be final. * * * This practice we shall continue to follow until convinced of our error in its adoption."

Writing Out Reasons at Length. — Under a statute providing that the Supreme Court shall not write out its reasons at length unless necessary, no reasons will be stated on affirmance on second appeal where the principles laid down on the first appeal have been carefully followed by the trial court. Bradsher v. Cheek, 112 N. Car. 838.

1. Parmalee v. Lawrence, 48 Ill. 331; Montague v. State, 54 Md. 481; Ryerson v. Eldred, 18 Mich. 490; Boone v. McJunkin, 63 Miss. 559; Hartung v. People, 22 N. Y. 95; U. S. v. Schooner Peggy, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 103.

Inquiry Confined to Correctness at Rendition. — In State v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 233, the attention of the court was called to a statute relating to the subject-matter at issue, passed pending the appeal. The court declined to consider it, saying: "We must decide whether the order made by the court below was correct or erroneous at the time it was pronounced." To the same effect is Parmalee v. Lawrence, 48 Ill. 331.

2. Boone v. McJunkin, 63 Miss. 559, where it is said: "We know of neither an authority nor a principle upon which we can try on appeal the existence of a fact which has arisen since the judgment in the court below, or upon which the alleged fact, if now found to be true, would warrant a reversal of a judgment right when it was rendered. This court can only reverse a case erroneously determined by the inferior court; a judgment right when rendered is not subject to reversal because of any fact arising after its rendition, and which, if it had existed at the time, would have produced a different result."

Plea Puis Darrein Continuance. — On appeal to the general term from a judgment of the Superior Court at special term, a plea showing that the appellant, since taking the appeal, had commenced another action in the federal court will not be considered. Voorhees v. Indianapolis Car, etc., Co., 140 Ind. 220.

3. Covington, etc., R. Co. v. Kenton County Ct., 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 144; Atwell v. Grant, 11 Md. 101; State v. Norwood, 12 Md. 177; Keller v. State, 12 Md. 322; Day v. Day, 22 Md. 530; Price v. Nesbitt, 29 Md. 263; Wade v. Saint Mary's Industrial School, 43 Md. 178; Smith v. State, 45 Md. 49; Turner v. Bryan, 83 Md. 373; Meloy v. Scott, 83 Md. 375; Musgrove v. Vicksburg, etc., R. Co., 50 Miss. 677; Yeaton v. U. S., 5 Cranch (U. S.) 281.

Appeal Determined by Existing Law. — In U. S. v. Schooner Peggy, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 110, it is said that "the court must decide according to existing laws, and if it be necessary to set aside a judgment, rightful when rendered, but which cannot be affirmed but in violation of law, the judgment must be set aside."

U. S. v. Preston, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 57, declares that "any statute which governs the case must be an existing valid statute at the time of affirming the decree below."

4. The Schooner Rachel v. U. S., 6 Cranch (U. S.) 329; Butler v. Palmer, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 324; Hartung v. People, 22 N. Y. 95.

Repeal of Statute Imposing Penalty. — In Com. v. Duane, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 60r, a judgment of conviction was arrested, e. DEATH OF PARTY AFTER SUBMISSION. — The death of a party after argument and submission of the appeal does not constitute any ground for delaying a decision or departing from the ordinary course of procedure, except as to the entry of the judgment which may be rendered. The entry should be of a day anterior to the death.¹

f. JUDGMENT IN EXCESS OF JURISDICTION OF LOWER COURT. — On appeal from the judgment of a court whose jurisdiction is limited by the amount in controversy, no judgment can be rendered in excess of such jurisdictional amount.²

g. RENDERING FINAL JUDGMENT — (1) In General. — Although it is the usual practice of the appellate court, on rendering judgment, to remand the cause to the trial court,³ the appellate court may, in the absence of a statute requiring a remand, pronounce final judgment.⁴ But final judgment should not be rendered in it appearing that the statute under which the conviction was had was repealed pending a decision on a motion in arrest. To same effect, see Com. v. Marshall, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 350; Com. v. Kimball, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 373.

1. Black v. Shaw, 20 Cal. 68; Savings, etc., Soc. v. Gibb, 21 Cal. 596; Jeffries v. Lamb, 73 Ind. 202; Gas Light, etc., Co. v. New Albany, 139 Ind. 660; Campbell v. Mesier, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 334; King v. Dunn, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 253; Miller v. Gunn, 7 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 159; Macon v. Dasher, 90 Ga. 195; Central Sav. Bank v. Shine, 48 Mo. 456; Mead v. Mead, 1 Mo. App. 247; Aultman v. Utsey, 35 S. Car. 596; Davies v. Davies, 9 Ves. Jr. 461; Jones v. Le Davids, 2 Fowl. Exch. Pr. 169.

Death of Party After Submission. — Where a party dies after submission of an appeal, and the appellate court, in ignorance of the death, renders judgment and issues a remittitur, the remittitur will be recalled and a judgment rendered as of the date of the submission. Holloway v. Galliac, 49 Cal. 149.

Where the party in whose favor a judgment is rendered by the appellate court is dead at the time such judgment is rendered, the judgment will be set aside at a subsequent term, and the judgment revived in the name of his legal representatives. Slagel v. Murdock, 52 Mo. 521.

Where the complainant died after the entry of an appeal and after the cause was ready for a hearing, but, his death being unknown to counsel, the cause was heard and decided, the decree upon the appeal was ordered to be entered nunc pro tunc as of a day previous to the death of the complainant, and after the entering of the appeal. Vroom v. Ditmas, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 528. To the same effect, see U. S. Bank v. Weisiger, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 481.

Death of Party Pending Appeal. — See article APPEALS, vol. 2, p. 196.

Judgment in Excess of Jurisdiction of Lower Court. — In Pruitt v. Stuart, 5 Ala. 112, it is said: "Where a suit seeking the recovery of money originates in one of these inferior tribunals, if it is removed to the Circuit or County Court, the judgment should not exceed the amount for which the primary jurisdiction was authorized to proceed. * * * If the law were otherwise, a party having a demand for a sum far beyond the limitation prescribed might cause a warrant to be issued by a justice, suffer a judgment to be rendered against him by an intentional failure to adduce any proof, and immediately prosecute an appeal and recover all he claimed — a state of things which would be in itself an intolerable perversion of justice."

favor of the appellant if it will prevent the appellee from raising questions upon exceptions reserved in the court below.¹

(2) On Exceptions. — Cases brought into the Supreme Court upon exceptions are finally disposed of there, unless a jury trial becomes necessary, or unless, by the decision of the court, the case is placed in such a state that either party has a right to a trial by a jury.²

h. LEAVE TO APPLY TO TRIAL COURT FOR RELIEF. — Where the form in which a cause is presented to the trial court, and on appeal, is such that it does not raise an issue material to the cause, and an absolute affirmance or reversal would bar the presentation of such issue, the appellate court may remand with leave to present the matter to the trial court in such form as to raise such issue.³

v. Smith, 20 Vt. 344; Wires v. Farr, 24 Vt. 645; Reed v. Jones, 8 Wis. 421; Boyd v. Sumner, 10 Wis. 41.

Rendering Final Judgment. — In Person v. Merrick, 5 Wis. 231, the court said: "We have no doubt of our power to render original and final decrees, * * * yet we are free to confess that experience has shown that this practice is inconvenient and open to serious objections."

In Boyd v. Sumner, 10 Wis. 41, it is said that "as the parties desired that final judgment might be entered here, in consequence of the situation of the premises and the length of time before the next term of the circuit, although the late practice in this court has been different, the judgment may be entered here accordingly, though as a general rule we shall adhere to the practice of remanding to the Circuit Court for such further proceedings as may be necessary."

In Illinois the statute expressly authorizes the Supreme Court to render final judgment. See Commercial Ins. Co. v. Scammon, 123 Ill. 603.

In Vermont the Supreme Court cannot make a final decree in an equity case, as the statute provides that the proceedings and decree of the Supreme Court shall be remanded to the Court of Chancery, where such proceedings shall be had as may be necessary to carry the decree into effect. Downer v. Dana, 22 Vt. 337.

On Reversal. — The statutory grant of power to the general term to order a final judgment in a cause appealed to it, where the judgment is wholly or partly affirmed, does not exclude the exercise of such power in case of reversal. Flatow v. Van Bremsen, (C. Pl.) 17 N. Y. Supp. 506.

2. Peach v. Mills, 13 Vt. 501.

3. Lucke v. Clothing Cutters, etc., Assembly No. 7507, 77 Md. 396; Pickett v. Jones, 63 Mo. 195; Ledlie v. Wallen, 17 Mont. 150; Roehr v. Liebmann, 9 N. Y. App. Div. 247; Koch v. Purcell, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 162.

Leave to Apply to Trial Court for Relief. — In Koch v. Purcell, 45 N. Y. Super. Ct. 162, it is said that "it is sometimes the practice to look after the equity of the case on appeal, if justice demands it, even where it has not been presented in due form to the court below."

In Roehr v. Liebmann, 9 N. Y. App. Div. 247, there was a misjoinder of causes of action. A demurrer for such misjoinder was overruled. On appeal the Supreme Court granted leave to the plaintiff to sever.

In Ryan v. Spieth, 18 Mont. 45, a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it did not state a cause of action was sustained. It appeared that the plaintiff had a good cause of action. The Supreme Court accordingly remanded the case to give the plaintiff an opportunity to amend. To the same effect is Ledlie v. Wallen, 17 Mont. 150.

Where, in a bill for the specific performance of a contract, the contract proved varies from that set up in the bill, but is clear and certain in its terms and is such as equity might enforce, and the trial court decrees a specific execution of the contract set out in the bill, though the decree must be reversed, the Supreme Court will not dismiss but will remand the cause to the court below to put the plaintiff to his election either to have a specific execution of the "contract as proved"

And this is true though the judgment appealed from is correct.¹

i. GRANT OF AFFIRMATIVE RELIEF TO APPELLEE — (1) In General. — While it is the general rule that appellate courts only grant relief to parties who appeal,² affirmative relief may be granted to an appellee who has properly saved the question below,³ or where the entire record and all the parties to the cause are before the court.⁴

(2) On Appeals in Chancery. — A decree in chancery may in some cases be reversed at the instance of the appellee if it contains errors prejudicial to his rights, though no appeal is taken by him.⁵

j. RELIEF BETWEEN CO-APPELLEES. — An appellate court is only concerned with the determination of the controversy as between the appellants on the one hand and the appellees on the other. No cognizance will, therefore, be taken on appeal of any question between co-appellees.⁶

Grant of Affirmative Relief to Appellee. — In Patoka Tp. v. Hopkins, 131 Ind. 142, it is said: "It is a mistake to suppose that an appellee who properly saves a question, and duly presents it by the assignment of cross-errors, is not entitled to affirmative relief. An appeal may do more than save costs or prevent a reversal by appropriately assigning cross-errors. He may in many instances accomplish as much by the assignment of cross-errors in a case appealed by his adversary as by himself prosecuting an appeal."

On Appeals in Chancery. — In Parsons v. Kinzer, 3 Lea (Tenn.) 342, it is said: "The very nature of a chancery suit proper requires the presence of all parties interested, and a final determination of their rights."

In Neubert v. Massman, 37 Fla. 91, it is said: "An appeal in chancery opens the whole case for the consideration of the appellate court."

6. Berthelot v. Fitch, 44 La. Ann. 503; Jamison v. Barelli, 20 La. Ann.

2. Entry, Form, and Amendment of Judgment — a. ENTRY OF JUDGMENT. — It is not necessary that the judgment of the appellate court be enrolled and signed by the judges. An entry of it on the journals of the court is sufficient.¹

b. FORM OF JUDGMENT — (1) On Affirmance — In General. — As a general rule, an appellate court on affirming a judgment simply declares that the judgment is affirmed. And in those jurisdictions where there is an appeal from the special to the general term it has been said that the entry of judgment should contain nothing more.²

Explanation of Judgment. — The court, however, may add to a judgment of affirmance such explanation as may be necessary to make the judgment below fully understood.³

Entry of New Judgment. — No new judgment should be entered on affirmance, especially where the affirmance is by a general term of a judgment of the special term.⁴

Relief Between Co-appellees. — In Powell v. White, 11 Leigh (Va.) 322, it is said: "The decree being deemed right in all respects, as it affects the questions in controversy between the appellants on the one hand and each and all of the appellees on the other, I think the court cannot take cognizance on this appeal of any question between the appellees. The power of the court to take cognizance of such questions arises only when, on the questions between the appellants on the one hand and one or more of the appellees on the other, a decision is made which directly or incidentally disturbs the rights of one or more of the appellees, as settled by the decree appealed from. When such disturbance is the consequence of the decision of the question between the appellants and the appellees, there must necessarily result the questions that arise from the new position in which the rights of the appellees are placed; and of such questions the Court of Appeals has cognizance, and they should be decided by the court."

3. Mayo v. Purcell, 3 Munf. (Va.) 243; Brooke v. Shelly, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 266.

Addition to Terms of Judgment. — An appellate court on affirming a judgment may make such additions to its terms as may be necessary to secure to both parties the benefits, advantages, and prospective rights for which they mutually stipulate in relation to which the judgment appealed from was silent or not sufficiently precise. Jones v. Belt, 2 Gill (Md.) 106.

4. Beers v. Hendrickson, 45 N. Y. 665; De Agreda v. Mantel, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 130; Halsey v. Flint, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 367.

Entry of New Judgment. — In Eno v. Crooke, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 463, it is said: "Under the old system, when a judgment brought into this [Supreme] court from an inferior court, by writ of error, was affirmed, a new judgment was entered in this court. * * * But that practice was founded upon the theory that the cause was taken from the court below, and remained thereafter in the Supreme Court. * * * The reason of the rule does not apply to appeals from a judgment entered on the direction of a single judge to the general term. For here both judgments are in the same court, and there is an obvious impropriety in entering up two judgments

Inclusion of Judgment of Lower Court. — And it has been held to be irregular to include in the judgment of affirmance the amount of the judgment of the court below.¹

Judgments of Inferior Courts. — The rule that on the affirmance of a judgment a mere entry of affirmance is all that is necessary does not apply to the affirmance of judgments of inferior courts. In such cases the affirmance should be for a specific sum.²

(2) On Modification. — On rendering a judgment modifying the judgment appealed from, the modification directed need not be embodied in the formal order of court entered of record.³

(3) On Reversal. — The form of a judgment entered upon a reversal depends on the disposition made of the cause or the nature of the order or judgment from which the appeal is taken.⁴

in the same court for the same demand."

1. Beers v. Hendrickson, 45 N. Y. 665; De Agreda v. Mantel, 1 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 130; Eno v. Crooke, 6 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 462.

Inclusion of Judgment of Lower Court. — In Halsey v. Flint, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 367, it is said that "it has become the established practice, and is settled by the Court of Appeals as the only proper practice, to exclude from the judgment of affirmance all sums and amounts secured by the judgment in the court below."

2. Woodruff v. Badgley, 12 N. J. L. 367; Jones v. Pitman, 12 N. J. L. 93; Saxton v. Landis, 16 N. J. L. 302; Ivins v. Schooley, 18 N. J. L. 269; Doremus v. Howard, 23 N. J. L. 390.

Judgments of Inferior Courts. — In Ivins v. Schooley, 18 N. J. L. 269, Hornblower, C. J., said: "If the judgment [of the justice] is affirmed in all things, the court must go further and specify the amount of debt or damages and costs for which they give judgment."

In Hann v. Gosling, 9 N. J. L. 248, the judgment was: "The court do affirm the judgment of the justice below, with costs of increase. Whereupon it is considered that the said John Gosling, appellee, do recover of the said Azariah Hann, the appellant, the sum of — debt, and — costs of suit," and Ewing, C. J., said: "The judgment is not properly entered. No sum is mentioned."

But see Benedict v. Dillehunt, 4 Ill. 287, where it was held that a judgment of affirmance on appeal from a justice, not stating the amount, is sufficiently certain if it can be made so by reference to the justice's judgment.

3. Washburn, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Chicago Galvanized Wire Fence Co., 119 Ill. 30, wherein it was said that it was conformable with the practice of the court, and sufficient, if the modification be specifically directed in the written opinion of the court filed in the case.

Modification of Decree. — In Hunter v. Hatch, 45 Ill. 178, the court said: "After a decree is reversed, then the court may modify it by a decree in this court, or by remanding it with instructions. But before it can be modified, the erroneous portion, at least, must be reversed." And see, to same effect, Washburn, etc., Mfg. Co. v. Chicago Galvanized Wire Fence Co., 119 Ill. 30.

4. Illustrations. — Where a demurrer to a plea is sustained and a judgment of respondent ouster entered, and another plea is filed, a demurrer to which is overruled by the court below, but sustained on appeal, the judgment of the appellate court will be quod recuperet. Atkinson v. Fortinberry, 7 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 302.

Where a judgment in an action tried by the court is reversed by the general term, and a new trial ordered upon questions of fact, the general term is not required to specify in its order the particular errors of fact. It is sufficient if the order states generally that the reversal was based wholly or in part upon errors in fact. Hubbell v. Meigs, 50 N. Y. 480.

So, in a case tried by a jury, it is not necessary that the order of reversal by the general term should state whether the reversal was on questions of law or of fact. Harris v. Burdett, 73 N. Y. 136; Goodwin v. Conklin, 85 N. Y. 21.

On reversing an order of the special term discharging a mechanic's lien and vacating an order continuing the lien, the general term may include in the order of reversal an order requiring the county clerk to restore the lien and the record of the order continuing it. McGuckin v. Coulter, 33 N. Y. Super. Ct. 328.

(4) Conclusions and Findings of Fact. — In some states intermediate appellate courts are required, on rendering judgment, to file a "conclusion of the facts and law of the case," if their judgment is not final,¹ or to recite in their judgment "the facts as found" by them, if their judgment is the result of a finding of fact different from that of the court from which the cause was brought.²

Reversal of Judgment Entered upon a Verdict. — In Louisiana the Supreme Court, on setting aside a judgment entered upon the verdict of a jury, must declare that the finding of the jury was erroneous. Halliday v. Lanata, 25 La. Ann. 373.

Motion for Filing Conclusions of Fact. — In Muhle v. New York, etc., R. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 24 S. W. Rep. 312, it was held that a motion asking the Court of Civil Appeals to file its conclusions of fact must point out the particulars in which the findings in the opinion as rendered are deficient.

See, generally, article FINDINGS OF COURT, vol. 8, p. 931.

The Finding of Facts which the appellate court must make is the finding of the ultimate fact or facts upon the existence or nonexistence of which, as set up in the pleadings of the cause, the rights of the parties depend; it does not mean that the appellate court shall find what was the evidence of these facts, or that it shall find those merely subordinate or evidentiary facts which, when established, contribute to the establishment of the ultimate fact which must exist in order to sustain the alleged cause of action or defense. Brown v. Aurora, 109 Ill. 165. To the same effect see Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Pulling, 159 Ill. 603.

Manner of Setting Out Findings. — The facts found should be set out by way of recital in the final order or judgment of the court, in the same manner in which they are usually set forth and recited in decrees in chancery. Tibballs v. Libby, 97 Ill. 552; Tenney v. Foote, 95 Ill. 99; Neer v. Illinois Cent. R. Co., 138 Ill. 29.

c. AMENDMENT OF JUDGMENT—(1) Power to Amend.—An appellate court may amend or correct its judgment for clerical errors or mistakes, or for defects of form,¹ or where it is founded fact is necessary on the affirmance of the judgment of the lower court. Lamson v. Illinois Trust, etc., Bank, 166 Ill. 162. Nor where the judgment is reversed and the court remanded for a new trial. Cassell v. Fitzsimmons, 9 Ill. App. 78; Union Nat. Bank v. Manistee Lumber Co., 43 Ill. App. 528. Nor where all the facts but one are admitted by a stipulation of the parties, and as to that fact, the finding is the same as that of the trial court. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. v. Mueller, 151 Ill. 254. Nor where there is no controversy as to what the facts are. Goodrich v. Lincoln, 93 Ill. 359.

Certificate in Lieu of Recital.—In Tenney v. Foote, 95 Ill. 99, it was held that a certificate of the judges of the appellate court as to the facts of the case was not a compliance with the statute. To the same effect is Tibbals v. Libby, 97 Ill. 552.

See generally articles OPENING, VACATING, AND AMENDING JUDGMENTS; RECORDS.

As to amendment of judgment on rehearing, see article APPEALS, vol. 2, p. 382.

Amendment of Judgment After Remand.—See article MANDATE AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON.

Power to Amend.—In Drake v. Smythe, 44 Iowa 410, there was a judgment of affirmance against the appellants and the sureties on the appeal bond. At a subsequent term the sureties moved to set aside the judgment against them on the ground that they had been released from liability. The Supreme Court, in passing upon the motion, said: "As there can be no review of judgments entered here, it appears that the protection of parties and the right administration of justice demand that jurisdiction should rest in this court to correct or cancel judgments improvidently entered through mistake or oversight, or procured in cases wherein the record, when inspected, fails to show jurisdiction in this court."

Misentry by Clerk.—A judgment of the Supreme Court, erroneous by reason of its misentry by the clerk, may be amended. King v. Ruckman, 22 N. J. Eq. 551.

Error in Computation.—A clerical error in the computation of a debt, though formulated in the decretal part of the judgment, may be corrected and the proper amount specified without on a misconception of facts,¹ or may add such clause to its judgment as may be necessary to carry it out.²

(2) Time of Amendment. — The power to amend at a term subsequent to that in which the judgment was rendered has been doubted,³ and even denied.⁴

3. Affirmance — a. ERROR NOT SHOWN. — Where no error is shown on appeal and none appears, the judgment below will, of course, be affirmed.⁵

b. FAILURE TO PROSECUTE OR PERFECT APPEAL. — The judgment below will be affirmed, at the instance of the appellee, where the appellant fails or unreasonably delays to prosecute the appeal⁶ or to comply with the requisite steps for the perfection granting a rehearing. Mahony v. Mahony, 41 La. Ann. 135.

Mistake in Judgment. — An order entered in the Court of Appeals on the decision of a cause, incorrectly stating the judgment pronounced, may be corrected though a remittitur has been sent to the court below. Palmer v. Lawrence, 5 N. Y. 455.

Mistake as to Interest. — So a judgment misstating the date at which interest should begin to run will be amended by the insertion of the correct date. Crawford v. Osmun, 90 Mich. 82.

Mistake in Order. — Where it is clear from the opinion filed on appeal that the court intended to reverse the judgment of the lower court, but the order made at the foot of the opinion was an affirmance of the judgment below, the court will direct the correct entry. Cook v. Moore, 100 N. Car. 294.

Modification of Judgment. — But where a judgment dismissing a complaint has been affirmed on appeal, the Supreme Court will not entertain a motion to modify its own judgment so as to remand the case to the lower court with leave to amend the complaint. Wagner v. Law, 3 Wash. 500, 28 Am. St. Rep. 56.

1. Roberts v. Edmundson, 4 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 730; Cotten v. McGehee, 54 Miss. 621; Pringle v. Sizer, 3 S. Car. 335; Hartsfield v. Chamblin, 44 S. Car. 110. See also article REHEARING.

2. Chambers v. Hodges, 3 Tex. 529; Ximenes v. Ximenes, 43 Tex. 458.

Insertion of Ground of Reversal. — An order reversing a judgment because the verdict on which the judgment was entered was against the evidence will not be resettled by the insertion of a recital of the grounds of reversal. Kummer v. Christopher, etc., St. R. Co., 3 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 100.

3. Wailles v. Johnson, 25 Miss. 421; Morrell v. Miller, 28 Oregon 354; Milam County v. Robertson, 47 Tex. 224.

At Subsequent Term. — In Burke v. Mathews, 37 Tex. 73, it is said that the only control which the Supreme Court has over its judgments after the close of the term is to correct clerical errors, mistakes, or defects of form, or matters necessary to carry out the jurisdiction of the court.

After Entry of Satisfaction. — Where the Supreme Court on its own motion orders a rehearing, and it appears that before the rehearing was ordered the procedendo had issued, and the appellee had filed the remittitur required by the first decision, and the appellant had performed the judgment by paying into court the amount thereof, and the appellee had received the same and entered satisfaction, the court, though it overrules its first judgment, is powerless to make any order affecting it. Hasted v. Dodge, (Iowa 1888) 39 N. W. Rep. 668.

After Issuance of Execution. — After execution has been issued on a judgment of the Supreme Court it is too late to change the form of the judgment entry. Stoll v. Padley, 100 Mich. 404.

of the appeal.¹ And an appellee's right to an affirmance for the failure of the appellant to prosecute cannot be defeated by a motion by the appellant to dismiss the appeal.²

As to Dismissal for Failure to Prosecute, see article APPEALS, vol. 2, p. 340.

Rights of Joint Appellees. — Where, in an action of trespass, the defendants plead severally and have several judgments, and the plaintiff appeals but neglects to enter and prosecute the appeal, each defendant is entitled to the affirmance of his own judgment, independent of his codefendant. Cook v. Bennett, 2 Me. 13.

On the Failure of the Appellee to appear, the appellant, notwithstanding the default, must proceed to show error. Stiles v. Burch, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 132.

So where the defendant is the excepting party and the plaintiff fails to appear, the court will not treat the plaintiff as having become nonsuited, but will hear the cause on the defendant's exceptions. Winn v. Sprague, 35 Vt. 243.

Stay of Execution. — But it was held in Tindall v. Jordan, 8 Ark. 267, that a decree in chancery would not be affirmed for the failure of the appellant to prosecute the appeal if the execution of the decree had not been stayed. See also Clay v. Notrebe, 11 Ark. 631.

Notice of Motion to Affirm. — A motion to affirm for failure to prosecute the appeal will only be allowed on notice to the appellant. McCarty v. Wintler, 17 Oregon 391. See also Furber v. Carter, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 1; Freeman v. Henderson, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 647.

In Massachusetts, if the appellant be the original plaintiff, and enter his appeal and fail to prosecute, the court will enter judgment for the appellee for costs of both courts; but if the appellant be the original defendant, he will be defaulted on failing to prosecute his appeal after entering it, and the plaintiff will have judgment according to the justice of his case, without regard to the judgment below. Campbell v. Howard, 5 Mass. 376.

1. McManus v. Humes, 6 Iowa 159; Heald v. House, 39 Iowa 198; Kelly v. McCormick, 28 N. Y. 318; Oeters v. Groupe, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 639, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 263.

Failure to Submit Points. — In Kelly v. McCormick, 28 N. Y. 318, it was held that where the appellant failed either to appear, or, after appearing, to submit points in accordance with a rule of court, the judgment would be affirmed as of course. See also, to the same effect, Smith v. Martin, 3 Keyes (N. Y.) 373.

Failure to Make or Serve Case. — In Oeters v. Groupe, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 638, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 263, it was held that where on an appeal no case is made or served, the respondent is not bound, on the cause being regularly called on the calendar, to move to dismiss the appeal or to strike it from the calendar, but may have an affirmance.

As to Failure to File Briefs, see article BRIEFS, vol. 3, p. 726.

3. Cline v. Miller, 8 Md. 275. See also Curtiss v. Brown, 29 Ill. 201.

e. CONSENT TO AFFIRMANCE. — Where the parties to an appeal appear and consent to an affirmance, such an order may be entered.¹

f. WITHOUT PREJUDICE TO SUBSEQUENT PROCEEDINGS. — It is competent for an appellate court to affirm a judgment without prejudice to subsequent proceedings in the cause.²

g. DIRECTING FURTHER PROCEEDINGS. — An appellate court, though affirming the order or judgment appealed from, may remand the cause for further proceedings in the lower court.³

h. JUDGMENT ABSOLUTE PURSUANT TO STIPULATION. — A stipulation, sometimes required on appeal, that if the order or judgment appealed from is affirmed judgment absolute shall be rendered against the appellant, is obligatory upon the appellate court.⁴

2. Shafer v. Newlan, 29 Ill. 44; White v. Poorman, 24 Iowa 108, wherein an affirmance was ordered, but without prejudice to the appellant's right to a new trial in the court below; Barney v. Hartford, 73 Wis. 95, wherein an order denying a motion to require the plaintiff to make his complaint more definite and certain, and for a bill of particulars, was affirmed on the ground that the complaint was sufficiently definite and certain, but without prejudice to the defendant's right to ask for the bill of particulars.

3. Phillips v. Evans, 64 Mo. 17; Creager v. Hooper, 83 Md. 490, which was an appeal from an order dismissing a petition, entered upon the refusal of the petitioner to plead after the overruling of his demurrer to the answer. The Court of Appeals affirmed the order and remanded the cause for a trial upon the merits.

In Adams v. Castle, 64 Minn. 505, the Supreme Court affirmed an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of a variance between the pleading and the proof, but remanded the cause with directions to the court below to permit the plaintiff to amend his complaint so as to conform to the facts proved.

In Piper v. Hoard, 107 N. Y. 73, the Court of Appeals affirmed an order of the general term affirming an order of the special term overruling a demurrer to the complaint, and granted leave to the defendant to apply below for leave to withdraw the demurrer and interpose an answer.

St. Rep. 250; East River Bank v. Kennedy, 4 Keyes (N. Y.) 279.

But it was held in People v. Thacher, 55 N. Y. 525, that judgment absolute pursuant to stipulation should not be entered on appeal in a proceeding to determine title to an office in which judgment has been rendered for the respondent.

And in Talcott v. Salke, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 154, the court affirmed an order but refrained from giving judgment absolute pursuant to the stipulation, as it appeared from the particular circumstances of the case that such disposition would work a hardship to the appellant.

Judgment Absolute. — The affirmance in the Court of Appeals of an order granting a new trial, and the simple direction for judgment absolute upon the right of the appellant, do not authorize the county clerk to enter an affirmative judgment against the appellant on a counterclaim which had not been the subject of adjudication below. People v. Denison, 8 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 129.

4. Modification — a. POWER TO MODIFY. — An appellate court is vested with the amplest power to suit its judgment to the exigencies of each case that comes before it or to make its judgment effectively yield justice to the parties whose interests are involved.¹ Accordingly, an appellate court may modify or correct a judgment brought before it.²

Withdrawal of Appeal. — But an appellant who has taken an appeal with a stipulation for judgment absolute in cases of affirmance may be granted permission to withdraw the appeal. Brown v. Simmons, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 456; Mackay v. Lewis, 73 N. Y. 382.

Effect of Affirmance. — The affirmance of a judgment is an affirmance thereof with respect to all the issues decided thereby, though the opinion be based upon but one of such issues. Finch v. Hollinger, 46 Iowa 216.

But the affirmance of a void judgment upon grounds not touching, but overlooking, its invalidity, does not make it valid. Pender v. Felts, 2 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 540, cited in Wilson v. Montgomery, 14 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 205.

In Smith v. Platt, 96 N. Y. 635, there was an appeal by both parties from a judgment on an accounting. The successful party claimed that by erroneous rules of evidence his recovery was too small, and stated that he asked no new accounting, but desired an affirmation unless the court could modify the judgment. It was held that as the error, if there were one, affected the whole accounting, the judgment could not be corrected.

Offer to Modify. — The appellee's offer to permit a judgment to be modified in respect to an error therein, made after the perfection of the appeal, will not defeat the appellant's right to a reversal for such error. Leake v. Hayes, 13 Wash. 213.

5. Reversal — a. TRIVIAL OR TECHNICAL DEFECTS OR ERRORS.

— A judgment will not be reversed on appeal for trivial or technical defects or errors.¹

b. ERROR AS TO GROUNDS OF DECISION. — Nor will a judgment correct on the merits be reversed, though based on erroneous grounds.²

c. COURT WITHOUT JURISDICTION. — A judgment will be reversed on appeal where the court below was without jurisdiction.³

Wisconsin. — Cook v. Racine, 49 Wis. 243.

United States. — Walker v. Windsor Nat. Bank, 56 Fed. Rep. 76; Richmond v. Atwood, 52 Fed. Rep. 10; Potter v. Beal, 50 Fed. Rep. 860.

Effect of Stipulation. — Where, after verdict, and pending a ruling of the court upon a motion for a new trial, it is stipulated, "that if the court shall grant a new trial herein, then that said plaintiff may review said order granting a new trial, by petition in error to the Supreme Court, and that if said Supreme Court shall affirm said order granting a new trial, that judgment absolute shall be rendered against the plaintiff, dismissing his action, with costs; but if the said Supreme Court reverses said order, then that judgment absolute shall be rendered against defendants for the amount of verdict and costs," the Supreme Court will be governed by the stipulation, review the case, and render such judgment as the District Court should have rendered. Johnson v. Parrotte, 23 Neb. 232.

Trivial Errors. — A judgment for seventeen cents too much will not be reversed on appeal, under the maxim de minimis non curat lex. Caldwell v. Roberts, 1 Dana (Ky.) 357. Nor will a judgment for eighty-two cents too much be reversed. Palmer v. Degan, 58 Minn. 505. But in Thompson v. Thompson, 5 Ark. 18, a judgment for $1.34 too much was reversed.

Reversal by Consent. — A judgment fixing the amount of a bond cannot, if correct, be reversed on appeal with directions to fix it at another amount, though all the parties stipulate therefor, where the rights of persons not parties may be prejudiced thereby. Levy's Succession, 48 La. Ann. 1520.

Premature Action. — A judgment in an action conceded by the appellee to be prematurely brought will be reversed and the cause dismissed without prejudice to another action. Tacoma v. Dougan, 4 Wash. 796.

Reversal Pro Forma. — In Lassell v. Burton, 16 Vt. 188, a judgment for the plaintiff was reversed pro forma, as it appeared that an affirmance would embarrass the plaintiff in pursuing his claim in a different form of action.

2. Ledbetter v. Castles, 11 Ala. 149; Kidd v. Teeple, 22 Cal. 255; Bleven v. Freer, 10 Cal. 172; State v. Michaels, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 436; Whiting v. Root, 52 Iowa 292; Jamison v. Chester, 43 Pa. 521; and cases cited in article APPEALS, vol. 2, p. 372, note 5.

Error as to Grounds of Decision. — Thus a judgment dismissing a complaint on the ground that the action is barred may be sustained on the ground that the defendant had an equitable set-off. Christensen v. Colby, 43 Hun (N. Y.) 362.

But an erroneous reason for a right decision below is ground for reversal if it led the appellant to omit evidence which would have altered the case. Wisser v. O'Brien, 35 N. Y. Super. Ct. 149.

Rendering Final Judgment. — Final judgment should not be entered on reversal where it appears that the appellee was misled as to the sufficiency of his pleading by an erroneous ruling in his favor, and thus failed to amend as he might have done. International Bridge, etc., Co. v. McLane, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 665.

In New York the general term has no power on reversal of a judgment to render a judgment in favor of the appellant unless the facts on which its judgment is founded are agreed to by the parties, or were found by the court or jury on trial, Cuff v. Dorland, 57 N. Y. 560; Peterson v. Walsh, 1 Daly (N. Y.) 182; or unless it is evident that the respondent cannot better his condition on a new trial, Patterson v. Robinson, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 341. But where no possible state of proof applicable to the issues raised will entitle the appellee to a verdict, the judgment will be reversed without ordering a new trial. Burkhardt v. McClennan, 15 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Ct. App.) 243, note; Edmonston v. McLoud, 16 N. Y. 545.

Judgment on Cross-complaint. — In an action to compel the specific performance of a contract to surrender certain notes executed by the plaintiff, the appellate court will not, in reversing a judgment for the plaintiff, render judgment for the defendant on his cross-complaint seeking a recovery on the notes where the right of recovery was not clearly established in the trial court. Libbey v. Packwood, 11 Wash. 176.

Issuance of Procedendo. — No procedendo will be ordered on the reversal of a judgment for the defendant if it is clear that the plaintiff cannot succeed in a second trial. Mudd v. Harper, 1 Md. 110; Berry v. Pierson, 1 Gill (Md.) 234; Nesbit v. Manro, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 261; Commercial, etc., Nat. Bank v. Baltimore First Nat. Bank, 30 Md. 11; Deutsch v. Bond, 46 Md. 164.

vacation or annulment of the judgment appealed from; ¹ and this without any action on the part of the trial court.²

6. Award of Damages — a. IN GENERAL. — An appellate court, on affirming a judgment or dismissing an appeal, is usually invested by statute with authority to award damages against the appellant to compensate the respondent for the delay in his recovery caused him by the appeal.³

Nor will procedendo issue if the amount to be recovered is not within the jurisdiction of the court below. Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512.

Judgment of Intermediate Court. — The effect of the reversal of a judgment of an intermediate court is to restore the judgment of the trial court. Rankin v. Perry, 5 Mo. 501; Strouse v. Drennan, 41 Mo. 289; Lewis v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 59 Mo. 495; Coalfield Coal Co. v. Peck, 105 Ill. 529.

A Second Judgment reversing a first, being itself reversed, reinstates the first. Ragan v. Cuyler, 24 Ga. 397.

Error Subsequent to Trial. — The effect of the reversal of a judgment for an error occurring subsequent to the trial is to put the parties back to the stage of the case where the error occurred. Ervin v. Collier, 3 Mont. 189.

Reversal of Interlocutory Judgment. — A final judgment based on an interlocutory judgment falls with the reversal of the interlocutory judgment. Agate v. House, 69 Hun (N. Y.) 616, 53 N. Y. St. Rep. 890.

The Reversal of an Order Denying a New Trial vacates the judgment as effectually as the reversal of the judgment upon a direct appeal therefrom. Fulton v. Hanna, 40 Cal. 278.

b. DISCRETION OF COURT. — The imposition of damages, however, does not necessarily follow on affirmance or dismissal, but is within the discretion of the appellate court, to be exercised in cases where there is no reasonable cause for taking the appeal.¹

c. EXPRESS AUTHORIZATION. — It is only on the affirmance of the kinds of judgment enumerated in the statute that damages will be awarded.²

d. MONEY JUDGMENTS. — As a general rule, it is only on money judgments that the statutes authorize damages to be awarded.³

Judgment in Personam. — In Redd v. Thompson, 56 Miss. 230, it was held that there must be a judgment in personam to authorize an allowance of

e. RECOVERY SUSPENDED BY APPEAL. — And to authorize an assessment of damages by an appellate court the collection of the judgment must be suspended by the appeal.¹

f. APPEAL FRIVOLOUS OR TAKEN FOR DELAY. — Damages will be awarded on affirmance where the appeal is frivolous or without merit,² or is manifestly vexatious or taken for damages. But see Colby v. Small, 40 Ill. 42, where damages were allowed on dismissing, for want of prosecution, an appeal taken from a decree of foreclosure of a mortgage, which found the amount due and directed a sale of the premises, though there was no decree in personam against the defendants for the payment of the money.

Judgment for Sum Declared to Be Due. — A judgment declaring the appellant's property assessable for certain back taxes and fixing the valuation of the property is not such a judgment for a sum of money declared to be due as would authorize damages on affirmance. Vicksburg Bank v. Adams, 74 Miss. 179.

Stay of Judgment. — In Tigner v. McGehee, 60 Miss. 242, it was held that the right of the appellee to damages on affirmance was independent of whether or not the judgment appealed from was stayed by supersedeas.

Payment of Judgment. — Damages will not be awarded to the respondent on affirmance of a judgment fully paid and satisfied before the appeal was taken, *Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. XV. JUDGMENTS IN CRIMINAL CASES. — See article SENTENCE.

XVI. PAYMENT, SATISFACTION, AND DISCHARGE. — See article SATISFACTION OF JUDGMENTS.

XVII. ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENTS — In General. — Every Court Has Inherent Power to enforce its judgments and decrees,² and the finality of a decree will not prevent any proceedings by the court necessary and proper to carry it into complete execution.³

The Lex Fori Determines the Mode of enforcing a judgment,⁴ and as such law refers only to the remedy, all judgments and decrees are taken subject to such changes as before execution thereof the legislature may make in the procedure for their enforcement.⁵

Enforcement by Execution. — The ordinary and appropriate method of enforcing judgments in actions at law is by writ of execution or *fi. fa.*⁶ This subject has already been fully considered in the states, and the following cases: Crump v. Battles, 49 Ala. 223; Bateman v. Blumenthal, 61 Cal. 628; Lamothe v. Lamarque, 17 La. Ann. 77; Wheeler v. Rowell, 82 Cal. 635, where a gross sum was awarded. See also Guerrant v. Tayloe, 2 Call (Va.) 208.

Assessment of Damages. — The damages should be estimated on the amount of the judgment at the time it was superseded. Popp v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., (Ky. 1897) 40 S. W. Rep. 254; Lawrence v. Jones, 37 Ala. 388; Dearman v. Radcliffe, 5 Ala. 192; Hudson v. Johnson, 1 Wash. (Va.) 10.

Express Reservation in Judgment. — A judgment for possession of real property, with leave to apply for an account of the rents and profits, retains by necessary implication jurisdiction in the court to enforce payment of the same so found due, and to be satisfied only pro tanto by a delivery and possession of the lands. Madison Ave. Baptist Church v. Baptist Church, 43 N. Y. Super. Ct. 151.

A Lower Court Has Power to direct as to its judgment in process so as to carry out the intention of the appellate tribunal. Wilde v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 1 Sheld. (N. Y.) 269.

"Now a judgment is merely a record contract. Being such, its meaning and effect must be determined by the laws of the state where rendered. The interpretation of that contract affects the question of right and not the question of remedy. The remedy is determined by the laws of the state where the judgment is sued upon. But a judgment which is special by the laws of the state where rendered cannot be turned into a general judgment by being sued upon in the courts of another state." Smith v. Moore, 53 Mo. Collateral and Auxiliary Remedies.—In addition to the remedy by writ of execution, various other collateral or auxiliary remedies are recognized or established by statute in various states,¹ such as attachment,² creditors' bills,³ garnishment,⁴ and supplementary proceedings.⁵ It seems, however, that a court of one state cannot give effect to the judgments of the courts of another state by enforcing any of the collateral remedies provided in the state where the judgment was rendered.⁶

A bill in equity and an injunction cannot be substituted for a writ of mandamus to compel the satisfaction of judgments against the municipality. Walkley v. Muscatine, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 481. See also article MANDAMUS.

1. Proceedings to Enforce—What May Be Gone Into.—Where the enforcement of a judgment is sought by proceedings which were authorized by legislation existing at its date, but subsequently repealed, the court may inquire whether the judgment was founded upon a contract the obligation of which the state was prohibited from impairing, but cannot re-examine the validity of the contract or the propriety of the judgment. Nelson v. Police Jury, 111 U. S. 716.

Remedies of Assignee.—The assignee for value of a judgment has all the legal remedies for enforcing it which the original judgment creditor had. Lionberger v. Baker, 14 Mo. App. 353. Thus he may enforce the judgment by supplementary proceedings. Burns v. Bangert, 16 Mo. App. 22. See also Bobb v. Taylor, 56 Mo. 311; Julian v. Calkins, 85 Mo. 202. Foreign Judgment for Alimony—Remedies of Forum.—A foreign judgment of divorce providing for alimony is not enforceable by sequestration and security under N. Y. Code Civ. Pro., § 1772, which provides such remedies

Equitable Remedies.—A court of equity has general power to appoint a receiver, and to exercise further incidental equitable powers for the enforcement of a judgment, independently of any statutory provisions.¹ Thus a bill in equity lies to enforce a judgment lien,² and creditors' bills are of this nature.³

Enforcement by Contempt Proceedings.—As a general rule, mere nonpayment of a money judgment or decree does not constitute contempt of court, and payment can only be enforced by a writ of execution and not by proceedings and imprisonment for contempt.⁴ Where, however, a judgment requires of a party the Presumption of Regularity.—When a party has to go into equity to enforce a judgment obtained by him at law, that judgment must be presumed to have been regularly obtained, upon due proof of every allegation necessary to entitle the plaintiff to recover. Schley v. Dixon, 24 Ga. 273.

In Florida the rule is the same as in Virginia. See Howe v. Robinson, 20 Fla. 352.

In Michigan, Howell's Statutes,

§§ 8107-8121, provided a remedy at law in lieu of suits in equity by a judgment creditor's bill. The defects of this statute were pointed out, and a resort to it deprecated, in Reed v. Baker, 42 Mich. 272. Further, as to the construction of this statute, see Ehlers v. Stoeckle, 37 Mich. 261.

Judgment for Costs in Mandamus Cases can only be collected by execution in the same way as other judgments. A respondent failing to pay such judgments is not in contempt and cannot be proceeded against therefor. State v. Jaynes, 19 Neb. 697.

An Order Allowing Alimony is a judgment, and a nonpayment is not such resistance of an order of the court as to render the party liable to imprisonment. Segear v. Segear, 23 Neb. 306.

In Replevin the judgment can only be enforced by execution, and not by punishment for contempt. Hammond v. Morgan, 101 N. Y. 179, reversing 51 N. Y. Super. Ct. 472.

Rule under New York Code.—In Gray v. Cook, 24 How. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 432, an order or decree of the court was entered after trial on a reference providing that the plaintiff have judgment for a certain amount against the defendant as administrator, and that he pay such money into court to await the further order of the court, and to be distributed according to law. It was held that this constituted a final judgment against the defendant as between the parties which could be enforced by execution under section 285 of the code, but that a proceeding by an order as for contempt and attachment against the defendant was unauthorized. In this case the court said: "Proceedings cannot be had under 2 Rev. Stat. (5th ed.), 849, § 1, sub. 3, because that, in terms, excludes all cases where performance of any other act than the payment of money or delivery of real or personal property, it seems that a performance of such act may be enforced by proceedings as for contempt.¹

Enforcement Against Property in Forum. — The judgment of a court of one state declaring the existence of a lien on real estate situated in another state,² or ordering the conveyance or mortgage of such real estate,³ will not be enforced by the courts of the latter state.⁴

XVIII. ACTIONS ON JUDGMENTS — 1. When Action Lies — a. JUDGMENTS AS CAUSES OF ACTION — (1) Domestic Judgments — (a) Statement of Rule. — A judgment for a sum certain in money⁵ is by law execution can be awarded for the collection of the sum ordered to be paid. It excludes them because this remedy 'for the nonpayment of any sum of money ordered by such court' is authorized only 'in cases where by law execution cannot be awarded for the collection of such sum.' No authority for this proceeding is found in section 4 (id. 850), for that applies only to a 'rule or order of court.' Another fatal objection is, that no demand has been made of the defendant to pay the money to the plaintiff or into court. Under section 4 of 3 Rev. Stat. (5th ed.), and section 285 of the code, there must have been a refusal to comply with the order to justify a conviction as for a contempt. Lorton v. Seaman, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 609."

1. Fero v. Van Evra, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 148; McBrair v. Hanson, 16 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 399, note; Morris v. Walsh, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 387, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 636; Underwood's Case, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 46.

A Judgment Requiring Performance of an Act other than payment of money or delivery of property — e. g., giving a satisfaction of mortgage — is not to be enforced by motion for an order to perform. The judgment itself should embrace such order, and the party should proceed by serving on defendant personally a copy of the judgment requiring such act, after which, if he refuse to perform, he may be punished for contempt. (Code, § 285.) Refusal to comply after personal demand, and after serving on the attorney a transcript of the docket of judgment for costs with notice that performance is required, is no ground for a motion to compel performance. Fero v. Van Evra, 9 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 148.

A decree ordering the sheriff to commit to prison a defendant, in case he fail to deliver up certain personal property as directed therein, is erroneous. It is indispensable that, in such a case, a positive finding should be made by the court that a respondent has, in fact, disobeyed the order of the court before an order of committal can be made, and that the committal should be only on a mittimus setting forth such finding. Sherwood v. Sherwood, 32 Conn. 1.

A Distringas against the plaintiff is not the proper mode of executing a judgment that a dam erected by him shall be torn down. As no other person is ordered by the judgment to do the work it must be done by the sheriff, as executive officer of the court. Avery v. Police Jury, 15 La. Ann. 223. But see Leonard v. Kleinpetre, 7 La. Ann. 44.

Attachment and Sequestration. — "If judgment of ouster and exclusion be given against the defendants, execution shall be had by writ of injunction, and obedience thereto may be compelled by attachment and sequestration." Com. v. Dieffenbach, 3 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 368.

2. Short v. Galway, 83 Ky. 501.

3. Bullock v. Bullock, 51 N. J. Eq. 444.

4. Napier v. Davis, 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 283.

A bill will not lie to subject land in another county to a judgment where the judgment has not been made a lien on the land by filing a transcript. Barnes v. Beighly, 9 Colo. 475.

Enforcing Mortgage in Action on Foreign Judgment. — Where the judgment in one state is for a debt secured by a mortgage of lands in another state, in an action in the latter state upon such judgment the court may order a sale of the mortgaged property to pay such debt. Brown v. Todd, (Ky. 1895) 29 S. W. Rep. 621.

5. Judgment for Sum Certain. — In a final judgment against a garnishee, a debt of record, and as such may be made the foundation of a new action.¹ Thus it has been held that an action will lie upon a judgment for costs,² and upon a judgment for money in a criminal case,³ and upon a judgment nisi,⁴ and upon a quasi entered after a judgment conditioned upon his showing cause why it should not be made final, the words "interest thereon from" the date of the conditional judgment are mere surplusage and do not make the judgment one for an uncertain sum upon which an action cannot be maintained. Washington Park Club v. Baldwin, 59 Ill. App. 61.

1. An Action Lies on a Domestic Judgment.—Ames v. Hoy, 12 Cal. 11; Burnes v. Simpson, 9 Kan. 658; Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Gaslin, 41 Minn. 552; Eldredge v. Aultman, 35 Neb. 884; Columbia Bank v. Newcomb, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 98.

It Is a Common-law Right to sue upon a judgment as soon as it is rendered. Hale v. Angel, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 342; Smith v. Mumford, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 26.

As a general rule the creditor may, if he chooses, sue upon a judgment or decree, and have a new recovery, and especially so if his rights or remedies are broadened under the new judgment or decree. Boyd v. Mann, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 349; Pigue v. McFerrin, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 645; Gardner v. Henry, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 458; Webb v. Jones, 13 Lea (Tenn.) 200.

In Kentucky the only action that can be maintained on a domestic judgment is the equitable action to enforce its satisfaction under Code 1875, § 474. Davidson v. Simmons, 11 Bush (Ky.) 331. So where a claim already reduced to judgment becomes the property in equity of another, by assignment, the assignee will not be entitled to a second judgment, but can only enforce the first by the remedies provided by law for the enforcement of the satisfaction of judgments. Smith v. Belmont, etc., Iron Co., 11 Bush (Ky.) 390. But in Snoddy v. Maupin, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 51, an action of debt upon a judgment was maintained.

A Judgment Against a County should ordinarily be enforced by mandamus and not by action thereon. Alden v. Alameda County, 43 Cal. 270. But an assignee of such a judgment is entitled to maintain an action thereon against the county, so as to secure a judgment in his own name against the county and to enable him to invoke the power of the court in granting and enforcing the mandamus proceeding. Buchanan County First Nat. Bank v. Duel County, 74 Fed. Rep. 373.

An Enjoined Judgment will not support an action, whether it be foreign or domestic. Blair v. Caldwell, 3 Mo. 353; Palmer v. Palmer, 2 Miles (Pa.) 373.

2. Philpott v. Lehain, 35 L. T. 855; Richardson v. Willis, L. R. 8 Exch. 69; Hutchinson v. Gillespie, 11 Exch. 798.

An Interlocutory or Collateral Order for Costs will not support an action; the mode of enforcing payment is by attachment in the court in which the order is made. Sheehy v. Professional L. Assur. Co., 2 C. B. N. S. 211, 89 E. C. L. 211.

A Judgment on Appeal for Costs will support an action. Marbella Iron Ore Co. v. Allen, 47 L. J. C. P. 601, 38 L. T. 815.

A judgment rendered for costs in favor of the prevailing party on a writ of error or motion in error is a final and unconditional judgment, on which the party in whose favor it is rendered has an immediate right of action, and which is not affected by the entry of the original action in the Superior Court for further proceedings. Ives v. Finch, 28 Conn. 112.

3. A Judgment in a Criminal Action, so far as it requires the payment of money, whether the same be a fine, or costs and disbursements of the action, or both, may be enforced as a judgment in a civil action. Whitley v. Murphy, 5 Oregon 328. But see infra, XVIII. 1. a. (2) c. Judgments in Penal Actions, as to the rule in such cases in actions on foreign judgments.

4. Judgment Nisi.—The proper method of enforcing a judgment nisi is by action or special proceeding commenced by summons, and not by scire facias. Thompson v. Berry, 64 N. Car. 79. In this case the court said: "We think a proceeding to make a judgment nisi absolute must be commenced by summons. But it was contended that this sci. fa. was in substance a summons, and we might, perhaps, so regard it; but that could not judgment,¹ and upon a decree in admiralty,² and upon a judgment against an executor or administrator conditioned upon the existence of assets,³ and upon a judgment in foreclosure.⁴

More than One Action Lies on the original judgment. Thus, where in an action on a judgment the creditor recovers a second judgment for the amount of the first, and which is of no higher nature than the first, as where both are justices' judgments, the latter is no bar to a new action on the former, for it works no extinguishment.⁵

help the plaintiff, as it would still be irregular by reason of its being returnable before the court in term time, and not as prescribed by the code. Johnson v. Judd, 63 N. Car. 498."

1. Debt May Be Brought on a Quasi Judgment, as a forfeited delivery bond taken by a collecting officer after levy upon execution. Fossett v. Turnage, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 686; Gardner v. Henry, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 458.

2. A Decree on a Libel in Admiralty of a District Court of the United States, that the libellants recover against the respondents salvage to the amounts set opposite their respective names, is a decree on which one of the libellants may maintain an action in a state court against a respondent for the amount set against his name. Brown v. Bridge, 106 Mass. 563.

3. Judgment Conditioned on Existence of Assets.—An action of debt or scire facias may be brought upon a judgment "when assets," or "if assets;" and if, upon the plea of plene administravit, the issue is found for the executor or administrator, the plaintiff may take another judgment when assets. Braxton v. Wood, 4 Gratt. (Va.) 25. In this case the court said: "The plaintiff, in thus proceeding upon his judgment quando acciderint, accomplishes one of two objects, both of which are perfectly legitimate. If he can show that further assets unadministered have come to the defendant's hands since the former judgment, or rather since the former plea of fully administered, he converts his qualified judgment quando acciderint into an absolute judgment de bonis testatoris, and thereby obtains priority over other creditors in equal degree who have not recovered judgment. If he fails in this, still he revives and keeps alive his former judgment, so as to enable him to subject any assets which may yet accrue after the second judgment.

There is express authority to prove that in a scire facias upon a judgment quando acciderint, where assets are found as to part, judgment shall be given to recover so much immediately, and the residue of assets in futuro. Perryman v. Westwood, cited in Noell v. Nelson, 1 Vent. 95, Sid. 448; 2 Williams Ex'ors 1231; 2 Tidd's Pr. 1019. I have seen no case where, upon such proceeding and no assets whatever found, judgment has been given for satisfaction out of future assets; and I have seen none to the contrary. But there is no reason for a distinction between a partial and a total failure of assets. If the scire facias ought to be barred or abated as to the whole where it is found there are no present assets, the same result ought to follow in regard to any part as to which there is the same finding; and if it is proper to take judgment quando acciderint as to part where there are not present assets to satisfy that part, it is equally proper, the like state of things existing, to take such judgment in regard to the whole."

4. Rowe v. Blake, 99 Cal. 167.

On a foreclosure where there is no order or judgment for any deficiency that may remain unpaid after the sale of the mortgaged premises, there is no personal judgment upon which an action may be maintained. Buckinghouse v. Gregg, 19 Ind. 401; Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Tomlinson, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 630.

5. Millard v. Whitaker, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 408; Mumford v. Stocker, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 178; Andrews v. Smith, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 53; Jackson v. Shaffer, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 513.

Where the plaintiff, having recovered judgment in New Hampshire, brought suit thereon in another state, and had judgment there, and afterwards brought a suit upon the first judgment, a plea in bar of the judgment in the second state is not an answer, since

After Payment or Satisfaction of a judgment an action cannot, of course, be maintained thereon.¹

After Affirmance on Appeal an action may be maintained upon the original judgment.²

Scire Facias and Debt Concurrent Remedies. — A remedy by scire facias upon a judgment given by statute does not take away the common-law remedy by action of debt on the judgment.³

In Pennsylvania a common-law action will not lie on a decree of the Orphans' Court for the payment of a legacy, it being held that the Orphans' Court has exclusive jurisdiction to enforce its decree.⁴

Action Postponed by Statute. — It is sometimes provided by statute that an action shall not be maintained upon a judgment within a limited time.⁵

A Decree in Equity by which a specific sum of money is found to one judgment is of as high a nature as another. Weeks v. Pearson, 5 N. H. 324.

"It is suggested that the plaintiff cannot have, at the same time and for the same debt, two different judgments, both in force, with concurrent right to issue execution on both; and that, therefore, by recovering a second judgment, he therein merges his first judgment; that if he recovers in the state courts, he by this act deprives himself of the right to process from the federal court to enforce the judgment rendered in that court, and must be content with such rights as the state courts recognize the laws as giving to him. These propositions may be true; but no such questions are made in the record, and we pass them without further notice." Thomson v. Lee County, 22 Iowa 206.

1. A Satisfied Judgment cannot be assigned so as to be made the foundation of an action by the assignee; it is extinguished. Simpson v. Mercer, 144 Mass. 413.

A judgment conclusively presumed to be paid will not support an action. Baker v. Stonebraker, 36 Mo. 338.

An action cannot be maintained upon a judgment for the benefit of one of the joint debtors who has paid the full amount thereof, for by such payment the judgment is wholly discharged. Hammatt v. Wyman, 9 Mass. 138. Compare Allen v. Holden, 9 Mass. 133.

2. Snoddy v. Maupin, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 51.

Debt lies upon the original judgment although the result has been partially changed on review. Hart v. Little, Smith (N. H.) 52.

3. Haven v. Baldwin, 5 Iowa 503.

In Garibaldi v. Carroll, 33 Ark. 568, it was held that at common law a plaintiff had a right of action on a judgment as soon as it was recovered; that the remedy by Gantt's Digest, § 3774, to revive or restore a lost judgment, was but cumulative; and that a plaintiff might at the same time prosecute an action on the judgment, and a scire facias to revive it and have judgment in both.

4. Black v. Black, 34 Pa. St. 354. So an action of debt will not lie upon a judgment of the Supreme Court affirming the decree of the Orphans' Court upon the statement of a guardian's account. Eichelberger v. Smyser, 8 Watts (Pa.) 181.

5. The provision in the New York Code that no action shall be brought on a judgment within two years after its rendition does not apply to a justice's judgment recovered before the code went into effect. M'Guire v. Gallagher, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 402.

The Superior Court of Cook county is not a court of like jurisdiction with that of a justice of the peace, within the meaning of the Act of 1891, § 2 (Laws 1891, p. 151), providing that no suit shall be brought upon a judgment of a justice of the peace in a court of like jurisdiction within the same county where such judgment was rendered until the expiration of seven years next after its rendition. Barbee Wire, etc., Works v. Malinowski, 58 Ill. App. 395.

be due and absolutely ordered to be paid will, by the weight of authority, support an action at law.¹

(b) Remedy by Execution — Election of Remedies — aa. ACTION AND EXECUTION CONCURRENT AND CUMULATIVE. — At common law, and by the overwhelming weight of authority in this country, the right to maintain an action upon a domestic judgment is not at all dependent upon the right to issue an execution thereon.² Thus an action may be maintained upon a dormant judgment,³ and it may equally well be maintained upon a judgment which is not dormant,⁴ and upon which execution might issue.⁵

1. See article DECREES, vol. 5, p. 1069.

2. Even Before Execution Can Issue an action may be maintained upon the judgment. Church v. Cole, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 645, holding that Laws of New York (1840) 334, § 24, giving thirty days after judgment before execution can issue, does not prevent the plaintiff from suing immediately upon his judgment.

Execution Stayed. — An action of debt lies on a judgment recovered before a justice of the peace immediately on its rendition, notwithstanding execution upon it has been stayed pursuant to the statute. McDonald v. Butler, 3 Mich. 558; Smith v. Mumford, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 26.

3. Action Lies on Dormant Judgment — California. — Stuart v. Lander, 16 Cal. 372.

South Carolina. — Copeland v. Todd, 30 S. Car. 419; Lawton v. Perry, 40 S. Car. 255.

Texas. — Bridges v. Samuelson, 73 Tex. 522.

Revivor Unnecessary. — Where it is not sought to maintain the lien of the former judgment which has become dormant, an action may be maintained thereon without first reviving it. Lawton v. Perry, 40 S. Car. 255; Copeland v. Todd, 30 S. Car. 419.

Both Scire Facias to Revive and an Action of Debt to recover the amount of the judgment may be pending at the same time, and a judgment on the scire facias cannot be pleaded in bar of the action of debt. Carter v. Colman, 12 Ired. L. (N. Car.) 274.

A New Action Is Necessary to restore the vitality of a dormant judgment of a justice of the peace, and a mere transfer to the docket of the Superior Court is insufficient. Woodard v. Paxton, 101 N. Car. 26.

4. Action Lies on Judgment Not Dormant. — Williams v. Bradley, 5 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 114, holding that a judgment creditor of an insolvent partnership may maintain an action on its judgment, although such judgment has not become dormant, against the administrator of a deceased partner's estate which is also insolvent, to recover a balance due from the judgment on such estate.

In Texas, a judgment which, though not dormant, has lost its lien, may be made the basis of an action to restore the lien, either by scire facias or by an action of debt, Anderson v. Boyd, 64 Tex. 108; although the general rule in this state is that a second action cannot be maintained upon a judgment which is not dormant, Parks v. Young, 75 Tex. 278.

By common law, an action could be maintained within a year and a day on a domestic judgment, that being the life of a judgment without issuance of execution. "Debt lies upon a judgment within or after the year after recovery." 3 Com. Dig., Debt, A. 2; 43 Edw. III. 3, 2b; Wheat. Selw. Nisi Prius 600.

In New York, prior to the code, a plaintiff in a judgment could bring an action upon it as a matter of course and of strict right. An assignee of a judgment could do the same, only he was obliged to sue in the name of the assignor. The only way in which a judgment debtor could arrest such a proceeding was by paying the judgment. Tufts v. Braisted, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 607.

"It is a matter of history that, prior to the inhibition of the statute requiring leave to sue upon a judgment in this state, immediately upon the recovery of a judgment an action might be maintained thereon, and another judgment recovered, and so on ad infinitum, and thus costs be heaped up to an extortionate extent; and, to prevent this abuse, legislation was had by which, in respect to a domestic judgment, a suit could not be brought thereon except by leave of the court." Merritt v. Fowler, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 424.

Reasons for Rule. — In Greathouse v. Smith, 4 Ill. 541, Treat, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "No rule of law is better settled than the one that an action of debt is maintainable on a judgment of a court of record. The judgment is a good cause of action, it being as between the parties the most conclusive evidence of indebtedness. We know of no principle which inhibits the creditor, on a judgment which is in force and unsatisfied, from recovering in an action brought on it, although he may, at the time of bringing the suit, be entitled to an execution on his judgment. He is at liberty to proceed by execution to collect the judgment, or institute a new action on it. Notwithstanding the second suit may be unnecessary, he has the clear legal right to recover, and the courts have no power to prevent him or impose terms on him for so doing." The propriety of this decision has never been questioned. Young v. Cooper, 59 Ill. 121.

Costs. — "This doctrine would probably have to be accepted with the qualification that, in case of more than one judgment being recovered on the same demand, a payment of either in full, with costs, would render the judgment creditor responsible for the costs made in the other proceedings."

execution upon a judgment is merely a cumulative remedy,¹ and does not deprive the judgment debtor of his common-law right to enforce the judgment by action, if he so elects.²

No Reason for Bringing the Suit, other than that the judgment remains unpaid, need be alleged.³

bb. CONTRARY VIEW. — Actions upon judgments are not favored,⁴ and in a few states it is held that a judgment creditor cannot claim a strict right to sue upon his judgment as often as he may choose, without showing any necessity for such course.⁵ A party

Hickman v. Macon County, 42 Fed. Rep. 759.

1. Simpson v. Cochran, 23 Iowa 81; Hickman v. Macon County, 42 Fed. Rep. 759.

"It is one of the first principles we learn in relation to the action of debt that it may be sustained on a record of a judgment, and when the judgment is obtained, and the record made up, the right of action is complete. It may be brought not only on the judgments of our own courts, but those of our sister states. The right to issue execution on a judgment is a remedy cumulative only; and I know of no law which would deny to the party a right of action on a judgment, if he chose that remedy, because he could issue an execution." Headley v. Roby, 6 Ohio 522.

The provision of Cal. Code Civ. Pro., § 681, limiting the issuance of an execution for the enforcement of a judgment to the term of five years, is but a limitation upon a certain mode for its enforcement, and does not purport to limit or qualify the right to its enforcement in any other mode, as by action thereon. Rowe v. Blake, 99 Cal. 167. To the same effect, see Field v. Sims, 96 Ala. 540.

2. In Gould v. Hayden, 63 Ind. 443, the court said: "He may enforce its collection by the process of the court in which he obtained his judgment, or he may, if he may elect so to do, use his judgment as an original cause of action, and bring suit thereon in the same or some other court of competent jurisdiction, and prosecute such suit to final judgment. This procedure he may pursue as often as he elects, using the judgment last obtained as a cause of action on which to obtain the next succeeding judgment." In Hansford v. Van Auker, 79 Ind. 157, this was said to be the settled law in Indiana. See also Palmer v. Glover, 73 Ind. 529; Davidson v. Nebaker, 21 Ind. 334.

3. Denison v. Williams, 4 Conn. 402; Ives v. Finch, 28 Conn. 114.

4. Actions on Judgments Not Favored. — Biddleston v. Whitel, 1 W. Bl. 507.

In Hummer v. Lamphear, 32 Kan. 439, it was held that an action on a judgment might be maintained although execution might have issued on the original judgment. This decision was controlled by the earlier case of Burnes v. Simpson, 9 Kan. 658, but the writer of the opinion said he would have preferred to follow the cases holding the contrary view, if the question had been open in that state. In Denison v. Williams, 4 Conn. 402, Brainard, J., dissenting, said: "Although, as I have before stated, there is no question that in England debt on judgment will lie at any time until satisfaction, yet I believe, were not the principle originally established as part of their common law, that their courts would now reject it. Mischiefs resulting from it they certainly have experienced. Actions of debt on judgment they now discourage, as far as they are authorized, which is by the exercise of their discretionary power over costs." In Texas it seems that the District Court has power to prevent the harassment of the defendant by vexatious repetition of suits. Lander v. Rounsaville, 12 Tex. 195.

5. Action Must Be Necessary. — "Neither the common law nor the practice in the various states of the republic, nor anything inherent in the subject, based on sound reason, gives to a judgment creditor an absolute right of action on a domestic judgment, unless such action is necessary in order to enable the plaintiff to have the full benefit of his judgment." Pitzer v. Russel 4 Oregon, 124. This decision is the leading case in support of this view. See also Solen v. Virginia, etc., R. Co., 15 Nev. 313, where the whole subject is elaborately discussed and the cases reviewed in the dissenting is not entitled to maintain an action which, if successful, would result in a personal judgment against the defendant of no more binding force than the one which he already has.¹ The cases maintaining the view under discussion take the position that the reason an action could always be maintained at common law upon a judgment was that an action was always necessary at common law to enable the judgment creditor to obtain all that he was entitled to receive, inasmuch as interest upon a judgment could not be collected by execution. Interest upon judgments, in this country, is now very generally collectible by execution, and the reason of the common-law rule failing, it is held that the rule itself also fails.²

The Necessity of a Separate Action to enforce a judgment has been said to exist in two cases: the first, when the judgment is a foreign one;³ the second, when it is a domestic judgment, but when the judgment debtor has died and his estate is under administration.⁴

opinion of Beatty, C. J., and the concurring opinion of Leonard, J.

In Texas it is held that a second action cannot be maintained upon a judgment which is not dormant. Parks v. Young, 75 Tex. 278. In order to sustain a suit on a judgment in the District Court, if objection be taken, it must appear that the judgment, by reason of failure to issue execution or other cause, is not in a condition to be enforced without such suit. Johnson v. Murphy, 17 Tex. 216.

In South Carolina it has been held that as execution might be sued out upon a judgment in a magistrate's court at any time within a year and a day, a new action could not be brought within that period. Lee v. Giles, 1 Bailey L. (S. Car.) 449, a leading case in support of this view.

To the effect that an action will not lie during the time within which execution might issue, see, in addition to the cases above cited, Vandiver v. Hammet, 4 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 509; Ligon v. McNeil, 6 Rich. (S. Car.) 377; Shooter v. McDuffie, 5 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 61.

In Alabama, in an early case, it was held to be a good defense to an action on a judgment to show that execution thereon was still available. White v. Hadnot, 1 Port. (Ala.) 419. But this case was in effect overruled by Kingsland v. Forrest, 18 Ala. 519, where it was held that debt would lie on a judgment after a year and a day, although an execution could legally issue upon it; that the remedy by execution is cumulative merely, and the statute giving it does not take away the common-law right of suing on judgment. See also Alabama cases cited supra, p. 1089, note 5.

1. Shepherd v. Bridenstine, 80 Iowa 225; Solen v. Virginia, etc., R. Co., 15 Nev. 313. See also Harrison v. Union Trust Co., 144 N. Y. 326, holding that where a decree of foreclosure requires the trustee to convey the mortgaged property to the purchaser, and the trustee refuses to do so, an action cannot be maintained against such trustee to compel a conveyance, since the decree in such action would be merely a repetition of the decree already made.

2. Reason for Common-law Rule Inapplicable. — "But I insist that if, under the common law, there was always a necessity for the action, which was the reason why the rule was adopted, it then follows that the common-law rule in fact was and is that this action may be maintained when a necessity, not caused by the fault of the creditor, exists therefor, and in that case only; and adopting the language of the court in Pitzer v. Russel, 4 Oregon 130, that 'the common-law reason for the practice is inapplicable in a state where every judgment bears interest collectible by execution, and where interest can be obtained equally well without an action. It is a part of the common law that where the reason of the rule fails, the rule fails with it.' " Per Leonard, J., concurring, in Solen v. Virginia, etc., R. Co., 15 Nev. 313.

Necessity Caused by Plaintiff's Default. — A necessity caused by the judgment creditor's own act or default will not, of course, be sufficient to entitle him to maintain an action.²

(c) Leave of Court to Sue — aa. STATEMENT OF RULE. — In a number of states statutes exist providing that actions upon domestic judgments cannot be maintained without first obtaining an order of court granting leave to sue.³ Under such a statute prior leave

1. Actions Supported by Necessity — Illustrations. — In Whelpley v. Nash, 46 Mich. 25, it was held that where excessive costs have been awarded by a justice in giving judgment, and the judgment debtor does not appeal, the party recovering judgment is entitled to rectify the error by remitting the costs and suing again upon the judgment for damages.

"When, however, circumstances have occurred since the judgment was rendered, such, for example, as a discharge in bankruptcy, or a release by act of the creditor, or a constructive payment, about the truth or effect of which circumstances a dispute exists, a formal action to try the newly arisen issues would not only be proper, but some proceeding of the kind may be necessary. For such reasons, actions upon judgments continue to be brought; and there is no doubt they have been permitted, from the earliest times of which we have knowledge, for other equally valid reasons. Our statutory proceedings in the nature of scire facias (Civ. Code, § 292) are proceedings in the nature of an action which afford means of disposing of many, if not all, such newly arisen issues; and these proceedings have the advantage over an ordinary action of retaining the entire record in the same court, and of preventing unnecessary cost and inconvenience to the defendants. Whether they are intended as a substitute for all other actions upon a domestic judgment, as is claimed by the respondent, it is not necessary now to attempt to decide." Pitzer v. Russel, 4 Oregon 128.

In Buchanan County First Nat. Bank v. Duel County, 74 Fed. Rep. 373, it was held that the assignee of a judgment against a county could maintain an action thereon although the original judgment remained in force. This was upon the ground that the assignee had a right to have judicially determined its right to enforce payment of the indebtedness, and that therefore the action could not be considered as merely vexatious.

In Hull v. Naumberg, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 132, it was held that a judgment creditor without execution, levy, or sale could maintain an action in equity to foreclose a judgment lien, although the judgment had not lost its lien under the statute, where land was fraudulently claimed as a business homestead by the debtor, such claim being an impediment to the enforcement of the judgment.

2. Pitzer v. Russel, 4 Oregon 124, holding that where the plaintiff, by his own unexplained negligence in failing to file a transcript with the county clerk, as required by statute, has lost the right to levy on real property, he cannot, for that reason alone, maintain a new action upon the judgment. The complaint in such case must allege a sufficient excuse for the neglect. So, in Solen v. Virginia, etc., R. Co., 15 Nev. 313, it was held that the neglect of the plaintiff's attorneys, in drawing the judgment, to insert therein a provision for interest, whereby the plaintiff lost the right to collect interest on his judgment by execution, was not a sufficient cause to entitle the plaintiff to maintain a new action upon the judgment.

New York. — Farish v. Austin, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 430; Carpenter v. Butler, 29 Hun (N. Y.) 251.

to sue has been held to be a jurisdictional requisite.¹ In Minnesota the statute provides that costs shall not be allowed in an action on a judgment unless the action was brought with previous leave of the court.²

Retroactive Operation. — These statutes, affecting merely the remedy, apply to judgments rendered before as well as after their passage.³

Discretion of Court. — Where leave is granted by the judge below to bring an action on a judgment, his decision upon the question whether "good cause" is shown is conclusive,⁴ and it is equally so when leave to sue is refused.⁵

Leave Must Be "Previous." — Under New York Code Civ. Pro., § 1913, an action on a judgment cannot be maintained unless leave to sue has been granted prior to the bringing of the suit. Cook v. Thurston, 18 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 506.

Nunc Pro Tunc. — Where the defendant in an action on a judgment moves to set aside the summons and complaint for the reason that the action was commenced without leave of the court, such leave should not be granted nunc pro tunc, upon the motion to vacate the proceedings, but the plaintiff should be left to his direct motion for such leave. Finch v. Carpenter, 5 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 225.

In the following cases it is held that an order granting leave to sue may be granted nunc pro tunc after suit is brought. Burrough v. Smith, cited in Voorhies Code (ed. 1855), § 71, note d; Church v. Van Buren, 55 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 489; McKernan v. Robinson, 84 N. Y. 105; Lane v. Salter, 4 Robt. (N. Y.) 239.

Costs. — "But the defendant must be saved all costs he has incurred in defending this action, prior to granting such leave to sue nunc pro tunc, as he was justified in making an objection that would have defeated the plaintiff's recovery." Church v. Van Buren, 55 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 489.

1. Leave to Sue Is Jurisdictional. — "The question whether the bringing of a suit on a judgment without such leave is a mere irregularity which may be waived by the defendant's not objecting in time or otherwise, or whether such leave is a substantive right which must be shown to exist, is one much in conflict in the authorities. In Lane v. Salter, 4 Robt. (N. Y.) 239, it is held to be a mere irregularity, and in Finch v. Carpenter, 5 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 225, that the proper remedy is by motion to set aside the complaint, and on such motion leave to sue nunc pro tunc should not be granted, but the plaintiff should be left to his direct motion for such leave. And in Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co. v. Frisselle, 57 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 255; Thompson v. Sutphen, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 527, and Mills v. Winslow, 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 18, it was held that the question was a jurisdictional one, and the absence of the order granting leave was fatal to the maintenance of the action." Farish v. Austin, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 430. See also Cook v. Thurston, 18 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 506.

3. Watts v. Everett, 47 Iowa 269; Finch v. Carpenter, 5 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 225. Contra, M'Guire v. Gallagher, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 402.

4. Warren v. Warren, 84 N. Car. 614.

5. Distinction Between Granting and Refusing Leave as to Conclusiveness. — Kendall v. Briley, 86 N. Car. 56. In this case the original judgment was rendered on the 18th of October, 1871, and the motion for leave to sue was made on the 10th day of October, 1881, just ten days before the bar of the statute of limitation would attach to it, and the effect of the ruling was, not to shield the defendant from vexatious litigation, but to give him an absolute discharge from a debt not one cent of which had ever been paid. There was accordingly much point in the distinction made by Ruffin, J., in a vigorous dissenting opinion, between cases where the finding was that good cause for a new action was shown, and cases where the finding was that good cause was not shown, and leave, therefore, refused. In the former case the granting of leave to sue might well be sustained as a conclusive exercise of

Review on Appeal. — The granting of leave to sue, being discretionary with the lower court, will not be reviewed on appeal.¹

The Purpose of These Statutes is to prevent the reduplication of costs and the vexation of the defendant, by piling judgment upon judgment, which results in nothing but increased costs, without increasing the remedies or altering the position of the plaintiff in the original judgment.²

Designating Place of Suit. — The leave need not require the suit to be brought in the court in which the judgment was recovered.³

bb. CASES NOT WITHIN RULE. — There are several well-defined classes of cases to which the statutes under consideration have no application.⁴ Thus they do not apply to judgments pleaded as a counterclaim,⁵ nor to an action to foreclose a mortgage,⁶ nor to a proceeding in the Probate Court to compel the payment of a judgment by a guardian.⁷

discretionary power, inasmuch as it impairs no legal right of the debtor, and every just defense may still be set up when the action is brought. But in cases where leave to sue is refused, substantial legal rights may be impaired, as in this instance, and in such cases the discretion of the court should be held to be a sound legal one, subject to review, and not an arbitrary one.

1. Warren v. Warren, 84 N. Car. 614; Kendall v. Briley, 86 N. Car. 56.

A Motion to Vacate an Order Granting Leave to Sue on a judgment is properly denied where it is not made until more than three years after the granting of such order. Van Arsdale v. King, (Supreme Ct.) 33 N. Y. Supp. 858.

2. Dean v. Eldridge, 29 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 218; Wheeler v. Dakin, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 541; Graham v. Scripture, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 501; Pitzer v. Russel, 4 Oregon 129.

3. National Mechanics' Banking Assoc. v. Usher, 1 Sweeny (N. Y.) 403.

4. Actions Not Technically on Judgment.

— Where a judgment in an attachment suit ordered that the plaintiff therein should return the attached property, or, in case it could not be returned, then that the defendant should recover of the plaintiff its value, fixed at a certain sum, an action to recover the value so fixed, on the plaintiff's failure to return the property, is not an action on a judgment, within the meaning of the code, § 2521, prohibiting any action on a judgment within fifteen years without leave of the court. Morrison v. Springfield Engine, etc., Co., 84 Iowa 637.

Where a judgment has been obtained against two defendants upon a joint contract, but process has been served only on one of them, and judgment taken to be collected out of the joint property of both or the separate property of the defendant served, a second action may be brought against both defendants, alleging the recovery of the former judgment, and serving process only on the defendant not served in the former action, and a like judgment obtained against the latter defendant. This second action is not an action upon a judgment within the meaning of the code, § 71, requiring leave of court as a condition precedent to its maintenance. Dean v. Eldridge, 29 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 218.

A Sci. Fa. upon a Judgment more than thirty years old may be brought without the previous leave of court. Chambers v. Carson, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 365; Lesley v. Nones, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 410.

5. Judgment as Counterclaim. — Wells v. Henshaw, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 625.

6. An Action to Foreclose a Mortgage given to secure a note which is already reduced to judgment may be brought without prior leave of court. Matthews v. Davis, 61 Iowa 225.

7. An Application to the Probate Court for an order to compel a guardian to pay the amount of a judgment against him as garnishee in a suit against his ward is in the nature of a special proceeding auxiliary to the judgment, and is not such an action upon a judgment that it cannot be brought within fifteen years without leave of court. Coffin v. Eisiminger, 75 Iowa 30.

Justices' Judgments. — Where a statute is by its terms limited to judgments of courts of record, an action may be brought upon a justice's judgment without leave, even though it has been docketed in the County Court.¹

Assigned Judgments. — The prohibition is usually confined to actions between the same parties, and therefore a bona fide assignee of the judgment may sue without leave.²

Executors and Administrators. — On the same principle, an executor or administrator may maintain an action without leave upon a judgment recovered by a decedent.³

Judgments of Foreign and Sister States. — An action may be maintained in one state without leave upon the judgment of a foreign or a sister state, even though such judgment is based upon a prior domestic judgment;⁴ and this is true notwithstanding a statute of such foreign or sister state requires leave to sue upon judgments obtained in its courts.⁵

Federal Courts. — So, also, a suit upon a judgment rendered in a federal court may be maintained in a state court without first

1. Justices' Judgments. — New York Code Civ. Pro., § 1913, prohibiting actions upon judgments for money rendered in courts of record, except in cases where leave to sue is first obtained, does not apply to an action on a judgment rendered in a justice's court and docketed in the office of the county clerk under section 3017, which provides that thenceforth such judgment is to be deemed the judgment of the County Court and enforced accordingly. Harris v. Clark, 65 Hun (N. Y.) 361, disapproving Lyon v. Manly, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 337, and Baldwin v. Roberts, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 163, and following Dieffenbach v. Roch, 112 N. Y. 621.

2. Assignees May Sue Without Leave. — Knapp v. Valentine, 24 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 331; McButt v. Hirsch, 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 441; Kopper v. Howe, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 69; McGrath v. Maxwell, 17 N. Y. App. Div. 246.

Section 71 of the code does not prohibit the bona fide assignee of a judgment from commencing an action upon it without first obtaining leave of the court. It is so obviously for the interest of an assignee, in many cases which can be suggested, to sue upon an assigned judgment and obtain a recovery in his own name, that the natural meaning of the words, "between the same parties," found in section 71, should not be enlarged by judicial construction so as to deprive an assignee of that right. Tufts v. Braisted, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 607.

3. Executors and Administrators. — Smith v. Britton, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 498. See also Smith v. Britton, 45 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 428.

Where a plaintiff dies after judgment, there is no party left who can make a motion for leave to issue execution on the judgment; and the only remedy is an action by his legal representatives to obtain the relief formerly reached by the writ of scire facias quare executionem non. Such a proceeding is not an action on the judgment; it may, therefore, be brought without leave of the court. "An action on a judgment" (Code, § 71) is an action to recover of the defendant the amount due on the judgment, as any other money demand would be recovered, using the judgment only as evidence of the amount of the debt — such as actions of debt on judgment under the former system. Wheeler v. Dakin, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 537.

4. Merritt v. Fowler, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 424.

5. A Statute of One State prohibiting an action on a judgment obtained in one of its courts, unless leave of court is first obtained, affects the remedy merely, and does not apply to an action on such judgment in a court of another state. Weber v. Yancy, 7 Wash. 84. Compare McClean v. Keener, 8 Lanc. L. Rev. (Pa.) 313, where it is held that a suit cannot be maintained in Pennsyl- obtaining leave to sue;¹ and, vice versa, a judgment of a state court may be sued upon in a federal court without leave, notwithstanding leave is required by a statute of the state where the judgment was rendered.²

cc. APPLICATION FOR ORDER — In What Court Made. — Application for leave to sue upon a judgment must be made in the court where the action is to be brought, or in the court where the judgment was rendered, according to the wording of the statute.³

Notice of a motion for leave to sue upon a judgment is usually required.⁴

vania upon a foreign judgment where the provisions of the statute of the state in which it was rendered, requiring leave of the court before action brought, have not been complied with.

1. The judgment of a federal court, although docketed in a county clerk's office, still remains a judgment of the federal court, and an action lies thereon without leave. Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co. v. Frisselle, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 174, reversing 57 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 255. See also Morton v. Palmer, 60 Hun (N. Y.) 583, 39 N. Y. St. Rep. 236, where it is said that a judgment rendered in a federal court sitting in New York might be sued upon in the courts of New York without leave, just as if it were a foreign judgment.

2. State Statute Inapplicable in Federal Court. — In Union Trust Co. v. Rochester, etc., R. Co., 29 Fed. Rep. 609, it was held that "the New York statutory provisions forbidding suit to be brought upon a judgment rendered in a court of record of that state without the previous order of the court in which the original action was brought, granting leave to bring the new suit, must be held as intended only to regulate the course of procedure in the New York state courts," and were therefore inapplicable to an action on a New York judgment in a federal court. See also Phelps v. O'Brien County, 2 Dill. (U. S.) 518, where it was said that a person who, under the Constitution and laws of the United States, has the right to bring his action in the federal court upon a judgment cannot be compelled first to obtain leave of a state court to do so.

3. In New York, under Code Civ. Pro., § 1913, the order granting leave to bring such an action must be made by the court in which the action is to be brought. Baldwin v. Roberts, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 163. Under the former statute (code, § 71) it was held that leave to prosecute should be obtained from the court in which the judgment was rendered, and that, perhaps, a fair construction of the language of such section would, in some cases, extend its application, so as to permit a motion for leave to prosecute to be made in the court which had control of the judgment and execution. Graham v. Scripture, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 501. The court in this case said: "It is not necessary to decide that in all cases the order must be obtained from the court having control of the judgment on which suit is desired to be instituted. Perhaps there may be cases when it would be appropriate and necessary to the attainment of justice to obtain leave to prosecute from the court in which the action on the judgment is brought."

4. In Wisconsin an order granting leave to bring an action upon a judgment is not void for want of jurisdiction although notice of the motion therefor was served less than eight days before the order was made, in violation of the statute and rules of court. "It is at most merely irregular. It is sufficient that the defendants had notice of it, and were apprised of what was going on against them, and were afforded an opportunity to defend against it. This gave the court jurisdiction over them." Cole v. Mitchell, 77 Wis. 131.

An Order Granting Leave to Sue on a Judgment Will Not Be Vacated for a mere irregularity in allowing notice of the application for leave to sue to be served by mail, while the defendant could have been served personally, and because such service was permitted to be made in less than sixteen days. Van Arsdale v. King, (Supreme Ct.) 33 N. Y. Supp. 858.

Sufficiency of Notice. — When the notice states the amount of the judgment unpaid, the want of service of any affidavit or other paper on which the

Demurrer. — And it has been held that where the petition does not allege that leave to sue has been obtained it is open to a demurrer.² But this is disputed, and there are cases in which a contrary view is taken.³

1. Dunlap v. Hendley, 92 N. Car. 115.

The Proper Remedy for an action which is brought upon a judgment without the leave of court required by the New York Code Civ. Pro., § 71, is by motion to set aside the summons and complaint. Finch v. Carpenter, 5 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 225.

Sufficiency of Answer. — An answer claiming that the action cannot be maintained because "under the provisions of the code no action can be maintained on a judgment of the County Court," has been held a sufficient statement of the objection that leave of court was necessary. Lyon v. Manly, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 337.

2. Watts v. Everett, 47 Iowa 269; Graham v. Scripture, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 501.

3. Contrary View. — "The proper method, of course, for raising the objection is by motion. The complaint is not defective. It sets forth, prima facie, sufficient facts to show the liability of the party sued. But the action is brought in plain violation of the statute, and the court may, on a motion, interfere to prevent the act which the law thus forbids." Finch v. Carpenter, 5 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 225.

"Besides, if it were within the prohibition of section 71, I do not think that a ground of demurrer. This section prohibits the bringing of an action upon a judgment in a court of record between the same parties, without leave of the court. As a matter of pleading, I do not think it necessary to aver such leave in the complaint. That is no part of the cause of action; this exists independently of the leave to sue, so that if there is any defect in the proceedings from want of such leave, the demurrer does not reach it. So far, therefore, as the demurrer rests on the ground that the action is prohibited by section 71, I have no difficulty in holding that it was properly overruled." Dean v. Eldridge, 29 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 218. Compare Graham v. Scripture, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 501, quoted supra, p. —, note —.

4. Dunlap v. Hendley, 92 N. Car. 115.

The objection is waived unless raised by demurrer or answer. Brush v. Hoar, 14 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 297.

But see cases cited supra in this section, to the effect that the requirement of leave is jurisdictional.

5. Judgment for Alimony. — An action at law may be maintained in one state upon a judgment or decree for alimony rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction in another state. Dow v. Blake, 148 Ill. 76; Brisbane v. Dobson, 50 Mo. App. 170; Bullock v. Bullock, 57 N. J. L. 508; Wood v. Wood, 31 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 235.

The action lies on a judgment upon petition for a further sum in gross as a final allowance for the wife, in division and distribution of the property of the husband, though it orders that, except as therein modified or superseded, the original judgment for a gross sum which has been paid shall remain in force. Dow v. Blake, 46 Ill. App. 329, affirmed in 148 Ill. 76.

An order of a court of another state directing the payment of alimony by giving a mortgage upon land in New Jersey will not be enforced in the latter state on a bill for that purpose, but the judgment of divorce directing payment of alimony can be enforced only by notwithstanding the pendency of proceedings in the original forum for its enforcement¹ or for its vacation.² So, also, an action will lie although the judgment is dormant.³

Alternative Judgment. — An action will not lie, however, upon an alternative judgment in replevin for the return of the goods or their value.⁴

another suit in New Jersey; although such order may be enforced by the court rendering it so long as the defendant is within its jurisdiction, by compelling him to execute the mortgage. Bullock v. Bullock, 57 N. J. L. 508.

In Allen v. Allen, 100 Mass. 373, it was held that, as a necessary consequence of all the legislative provisions on the subject of divorce in that state, a decree for alimony rendered in that state could only be enforced by the court making the decree, and not by an action on the decree in the Superior Court. The court said, however, that, by a clear preponderance of authority, such an action might be maintained upon a decree for alimony rendered in another state. The court also enumerated some very strong reasons against allowing a common-law action to recover arrears of alimony. See also Van Buskirk v. Mulock, 18 N. J. L. 184; Battey v. Holbrook, 11 Gray (Mass.) 212; Barber v. Barber, 1 Chand. (Wis.) 280.

Judgment on Bond. — In an action brought in New Hampshire on a bond conditioned for the payment of certain notes, judgment was rendered for the penalty and execution issued for the sum then due. The remedy for enforcing such bonds was prescribed by the statute of New Hampshire, and by such statute the judgment stood as security for any damages resulting from future breaches of the condition, to be liquidated upon a scire facias. It was held that an action of debt on such judgment could not be sustained in Vermont, either by declaring upon it directly and simply as a judgment or by setting forth all the facts in the case and averring further breaches of the condition. Dimick v. Brooks, 21 Vt. 569.

An Action at Law in a Federal Court lies to recover arrears of alimony due upon a judgment rendered in a state court. Knapp v. Knapp, 59 Fed. Rep. 641.

In Texas, prior to its annexation to the United States, an action could not be maintained on a foreign judgment, but the action was brought upon the original cause of action. Wilson v. Tunstall, 6 Tex. 221. Now, however, actions may be brought upon foreign judgments the same as in other states. Harper v. Nichol, 13 Tex. 151; Clay v. Clay, 13 Tex. 195; Field v. Gantier, 8 Tex. 74.

And, generally, as to the right to maintain an action upon a judgment of a foreign or a sister state, see the cases cited to specific propositions in this section.

1. Hogg v. Charlton, 25 Pa. St. 200.

2. Pending Proceedings to Vacate. — The mere pendency of equitable proceedings in the courts of Alabama, whether state or federal, to set aside a judgment rendered by the Alabama court, presents no obstacle to the rendition of a judgment upon such judgment by a court of the state of Georgia. Tompkins v. Cooper, 97 Ga. 631.

3. Dormant Judgment. — David v. Porter, 51 Iowa 254. But see St. Louis Type Foundry Co. v. Jackson, 128 Mo. 119.

4. Alternative Judgment in Replevin. — Thorner v. Batory, 41 Md. 593, where the opinion filed by the trial court was as follows: "After careful consideration of this case, I am of opinion that the judgment ought to be arrested, the judgment sued upon not being such an one as this court can carry into effect by a like judgment to be rendered here. Any other judgment than one presenting the same alternative would be transcending the power of this court, which must be limited to precisely the same measure of relief which the plaintiff was entitled to in the state of Tennessee. The only case known to the law of Maryland in which an alternative judgment, such as this, can be entered is in the action of detinue, long disused, but still, perhaps, in force. But the action brought on this Tennessee judgment is the action of debt, in which the only judgment is for a certain sum of money. It must be apparent that such an unconditional judgment would take from the defendant the right which he had under the Tennessee judgment to satisfy it by returning the property, and to that extent would be more exacting than the Tennessee judgment. Such a change of rights is not within the powers conferred by the Constitution of the United States, which extend only to the same measure of right. This view is, I think, fully sustained by C. J. Redfield, in Dimick v. Brooks, 21 Vt. 569. The clerk will, therefore, enter the arrest of judgment." The judgment of the trial court was affirmed on appeal.

New Trial Pending. — Nor will it lie after the filing of a bond which, under the lex fori, entitles the defendant to a new trial.¹

(b) Exclusive Remedy. — A judgment recovered in one state will not be enforced either at law or in equity in another state until judgment has been recovered thereon in the latter state.²

Distinction Between Domestic and Foreign Judgments. — In other words, an action upon a foreign judgment is always necessary, and therefore the question already discussed in connection with domestic judgments, as to whether or not an action will lie upon a judgment in the absence of any ground of necessity therefor, cannot arise.³

2. Weaver v. Cressman, 21 Neb. 675; McLure v. Benceni, 2 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 513; Needles v. Frost, 2 Okla. 19; Waddill v. Cabell, 21 Wash. L. Rep. (D. C.) 265; Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107.

A judgment recovered in one state, as was said by Mr. Justice Wayne in M'Elmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 312, "does not carry with it into another state the efficacy of a judgment upon property or persons, to be enforced by execution. To give it the force of a judgment in another state, it must be made a judgment there, and can only be executed in the latter as its laws may permit." Quoted in Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265.

Federal Courts. — Even a judgment of a federal court rendered in Indian Territory will not be enforced in the courts of Oklahoma Territory before it is reduced to judgment there. Needles v. Frost, 2 Okla. 19.

Creditor's Bills. — In Watkins v. Wortman, 19 W. Va. 78, it was held, under Code 1868, c. 133, § 2, that a foreign judgment was a debt upon which a suit in equity could be maintained in West Virginia to avoid a fraudulent or voluntary conveyance without first reducing it to judgment in that state.

Constitutional Law — Remedy on Foreign Judgments. — The United States Constitution, requiring full faith and credit to be given in every state to the judicial records and proceedings of every other state, does not prevent any state from legislating as to the remedy in actions on judgments of sister states, provided they do not interfere with the merits. Harper v. Nichol, 13 Tex. 151.

3. Abbot v. Knight, 1 Root (Conn.) 406; Solen v. Virginia, etc., R. Co., 15 Nev. 313, per Leonard, J.

The reasons which would not permit an action on a domestic judgment upon which execution might issue have no application to judgments of sister states. Knapp v. Knapp, 59 Fed. Rep. 641, distinguishing Pitzer v. Russel, 4 Oregon 124.

The principle that a defendant should not be vexed by a rendition of a second judgment, if there is in existence upon the records of the court a judgment which may be enforced for the benefit of the plaintiff to the same extent as the second judgment, does not apply when the second action is brought in another jurisdiction. Buchanan County First Nat. Bank v. Duel County, 74 Fed. Rep. 373.

"At the common law, courts discouraged the bringing second suits upon the judgment record where no reason therefor existed, and to that end refused costs, although giving judgment for the plaintiff in the case. Ultimately courts, upon a proper showing, refused to entertain a second action when the original judgment remained in force, and the plaintiff gained no advantage by the rendition of a second judgment. These cases, however, are generally those wherein the second judgment is sought in the same court

(c) Judgments in Penal Actions. — The penal laws of a state have no extraterritorial force, and will not be enforced by the courts of another state. Accordingly, no action lies upon a judgment rendered in another state for a penalty incurred by a violation of the municipal laws of such state.¹ The essential nature and real foundation of a cause of action are not changed by recovering judgment upon it;² and the court to which such judgment is presented for enforcement, while it cannot go behind the judgment for the purpose of examining into the validity of the claim, may ascertain whether the claim is really a claim for a penalty, and therefore one which the court is not authorized to enforce.³ And the judgment is not thereby denied the full faith, credit, and effect to which it is entitled under the constitution.⁴

Whether a Statute Is a Penal Law which cannot be enforced in another state is to be determined by the court which is called upon to enforce it.⁵

Exceptional Rule. — In a few cases actions of debt upon judgments wherein the original judgment was rendered, and relief is denied upon the theory that, there being already in existence a judgment upon which the court can give the plaintiff all the relief that would be open to him in case he obtained a second judgment, the institution and maintenance of a second action is clearly vexatious." Buchanan County First Nat. Bank v. Duel County, 74 Fed. Rep. 373.

4. Arkansas v. Bowen, 20 D. C. 291.

If a state court declines to enforce the judgment of a sister state because of an erroneous opinion that the original liability was a penalty, the judgment is thereby denied the full faith and credit to which it is entitled under the constitution. Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657.

5. Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657.

What Are Penal Actions. — The question whether a statute of one state, which in some aspects may be called penal, is a penal law in the international sense, so that it cannot be enforced in the courts of another state, depends upon the question whether its purpose is to punish an offense against the public justice of the state or to afford a private remedy to a person injured by the wrongful act. Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657.

Illustrations of Penal Actions. — A statute imposing a penalty of twenty-five per cent. upon the sureties upon a tax collector's bond for his nonpayment of moneys due from him, and providing that the whole amount shall bear interest until paid at fifty per cent. per annum, is a penal statute in aid of the revenue laws of the state, and the judgment founded thereon cannot be enforced in another jurisdiction. Arkansas v. Bowen, 20 D. C. 291.

A statute making the officers of a corporation who sign and record a false certificate of the amount of its capital stock liable for all its debts is not a penal law in the international sense, and therefore an action may be maintained upon a judgment founded on such liability. Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, reversing 70 Md. 191, where a contrary conclusion had been reached.

A judgment for a penalty imposed by statute for failing to make a report to an insurance commissioner of a state will not support an action in another jurisdiction. Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265, approved in Sparf v. U. S., 156 U. S. 157. And see in general article PENALTIES AND under foreign penal statutes have been sustained upon the principle that after judgment the transaction no longer retained its penal character.¹ These cases, however, have been disapproved by the United States Supreme Court.²

b. JUDGMENTS OF JUSTICES OF THE PEACE. — An action will lie upon a judgment of a justice of the peace, and it is immaterial whether the judgment is a domestic³ or a foreign judgment.⁴

Where the Jurisdictional Facts Do Not Appear on the face of the proceedings before a justice, it has been held that no action will lie upon the judgment.⁵

1. Spencer v. Brockway, 1 Ohio 259; Wright v. Munger, 5 Ohio 443.

In State v. Helmer, 21 Iowa 370, it was held that while statutes prescribing proceedings to compel the fathers of bastard children to support them are merely local police regulations, enforceable alone by the state enacting them, yet where the local jurisdiction has attached, and the courts of the state have taken cognizance of the case and rendered judgment for the penalty in such statutes, the judgment is entitled to full faith and credit in every other state.

In Healy v. Root, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 389, it was held that an action of debt would lie in Massachusetts upon a judgment recovered in Pennsylvania in a qui tam action upon a penal statute for usury.

2. Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265.

3. Domestic Justices' Judgment. — Fravel v. Springfield Tp., 34 Ind. 296; Harris v. Clark, 65 Hun (N. Y.) 361; Brooks v. Todd, 1 Handy (Ohio) 175; Alexander v. Arters, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 379; Shannon v. Woollard, 12 Lea (Tenn.) 663; Boyd v. Mann, 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 349.

It is not necessary to issue executions on the justice's judgment before suing on it in the District Court. Lander v. Rounsaville, 12 Tex. 195.

In Delaware, under Dig. 347, § 28, providing a remedy by sci. fa. upon a justice's judgment, an action of debt will not lie before a justice of one county upon a judgment recovered before a justice in another county. The remedy is by sci. fa. and is exclusive. Johnston v. Hayes, 3 Harr. (Del.) 486.

In Wisconsin a statute providing that "no action on a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace shall be brought in the same county within two years after its rendition" except in certain specified cases, was held to forbid the bringing of such actions in justices' courts, as well as in any other court. Diederich v. Nachtsheim, 33 Wis. 225. In this case it was also insisted that the statute was not intended to apply to a judgment where the damages were less than ten dollars, and where the transcript thereof could not be filed, but the court refused to see any merit in the distinction.

4. Foreign Justices' Judgments. — Action lies on a judgment of another state. Cone v. Cotton, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 82; Case v. Huey, 26 Kan. 553.

5. Jurisdictional Facts Must Appear in Record. — Rossiter v. Peck, 3 Gray (Mass.) 538; Wise v. Loring, 54 Mo. App. 258. But see Gray v. McNeal, 12 Ga. 424.

Contra. — "In our view, the rule which makes the judgment of a court of record binding upon the parties until reversed by proper proceedings therefor, although jurisdiction of the person was not properly obtained, is applicable as well to a judgment of a justice of the peace as to one of a court of general jurisdiction. It was so applied in Hawes v. Hathaway, 14 Mass. 233, and that decision is cited with approval in Crockett v. Drew, 5 Gray (Mass.) 399. A contrary decision, however, is found in Rossiter v. Peck, 3 Gray (Mass.) 538. This decision was manifestly made without much consideration. The case of Hawes v. Hathaway, 14 Mass. 233, was not referred to; and the decision seems to have been based upon Piper v. Pearson, 2 Gray (Mass.) 120. But in Piper v. Pearson the justice assumed to exercise a judicial power, when, in fact, he was clothed with no judicial authority in the premises. The whole proceeding was coram non judice; and he was a mere trespasser. There is a broad distinction between that case

c. JUDGMENTS IN REM AND IN PERSONAM. — An action will not lie upon a judgment purely in rem,¹ but only upon a valid judgment in personam.²

Judgment in Attachment. — Accordingly, a judgment in attachment will not sustain an action where the defendant was not personally served and did not appear;³ and this rule applies equally to both foreign and domestic judgments.⁴

and one where the magistrate possesses the requisite judicial authority, but, in the exercise of that authority, fails to secure, by proper proceedings, jurisdiction of the person of the defendant. The case of Brown v. Cady, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 477, also cited by the court in Rossiter v. Peck, 3 Gray (Mass.) 538, does not support that decision, and is in direct conflict with Hawes v. Hathaway, 14 Mass. 233. But the only question discussed in Brown v. Cady, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 477, was the sufficiency of the proof that there was service of process upon the defendant, in the original suit; and it is to that point that the case seems to have been cited. The judgment of a justice of the peace was held to be invalid without showing such service, and insufficient to support an action of debt or contract for the amount due upon it. But the propriety of impeaching such a judgment without proceeding to reverse it directly by writ of error does not appear to have received the consideration of the court." Hendrick v. Whittemore, 105 Mass. 29.

Where a transcript of such a judgment does not show that the defendant had been served, or that he did not appear, the judgment is not conclusive, nor is it absolutely void, but it is prima facie evidence of the debt, and per se a cause of action. Holt v. Alloway, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 108.

Jurisdiction may be proved by parol evidence when the jurisdictional facts do not appear in the justice's docket. Roberts v. Burrell, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 30.

1. Lippard v. Edwards, 39 Ind. 165.

2. Scovil v. Fisher, 77 Iowa 97; Seligman v. Kalkman, 17 Cal. 152.

3. Attachment Will Not Support Action. — Henrie v. Sweasey, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 335; Roose v. McDonald, 23 Ind. 157.

Against Nonresidents. — A judgment in a proceeding by attachment against a nonresident debtor who does not appear to such suit will not form a legal foundation for an action. Miller v. Dungan, 36 N. J. L. 21.

A judgment by default, without personal notice, against a nonresident whose property within the jurisdiction of the court has been attached is void except as to the property attached, and an action of debt cannot be maintained upon it for the unsatisfied balance. Eastman v. Dearborn, 63 N. H. 364, overruling Kendrick v. Kimball, 33 N. H. 482.

Contra. — In North Carolina, in an early case, it was held, under the special wording of the statute, that a final judgment in an original attachment where the service was by publication was equivalent to a final judgment in any other case and would sustain an action of debt. English v. Reynolds, Term (N. Car.) 92. See also Armstrong v. Harshaw, 1 Dev. L. (N. Car.) 187; Skinner v. Moore, 2 Dev. & B. L. (N. Car.) 138.

A similar ruling was made in Kendrick v. Kimball, 33 N. H. 482. But this case was subsequently overruled in Eastman v. Dearborn, 63 N. H. 364.

4. Domestic Judgments. — See cases cited in the preceding note.

Foreign Judgments. — A judgment in rem obtained in one state in attachment cannot sustain an action in another state. Chamberlain v. Faris, 1 Mo. 517; Feltus v. Starke, 12 La. Ann. 798.

A judgment in an action where jurisdiction is obtained only by attachment of defendant's property, although in form against the debtor, can be enforced only against the property attached, and will not sustain an action in another state. Nagel v. Loomis, 33 Neb. 499.

Appearance. — Where, in an action of debt on a judgment rendered in Georgia, it appeared that the action was commenced by attachment, and that the defendant had appeared and made his defense on the merits of the case, it was held that the action ceased to be in rem, and became an action in personam. Arnold v. Frazier, 5 Strobb. L. (S. Car.) 33.

Where the Proceedings Are Both In Personam and In Rem, an action of debt may be sustained upon the judgment in personam.¹

d. FINAL AND INTERLOCUTORY JUDGMENTS. — An action will not lie upon an interlocutory judgment or order.² The judgment must be final in order to sustain the action,³ and this rule applies equally well to actions upon domestic judgments and upon foreign judgments.⁴

e. EFFECT OF PENDING APPEAL. — A judgment is none the less a final judgment, within the meaning of the rule requiring

1. Whiting v. Johnson, 5 Dana (Ky.) 390, holding that a petition, in a court of Louisiana, which, beside praying for a sequestration and sale of the property of absent defendants, prays also for a judgment for the debt, must be deemed a proceeding in personam as well as in rem.

Where the Proceedings Are Altogether In Rem, the court has no jurisdiction to render any judgment in personam, and therefore an action of debt cannot be sustained in one state upon a judgment rendered in such a case in another state. Whiting v. Johnson, 5 Dana (Ky.) 390.

2. Browder v. Faulkner, 82 Ala. 257; Ledyard v. Brown, 27 Tex. 393; Ledyard v. Brown, 39 Tex. 402; Fry v. Malcolm, 4 Taunt. 705; Biddell v. Dowse, 9 D. & R. 404, 6 B. & C. 255, 13 E. C. L. 164.

3. Ives v. Finch, 28 Conn. 112; Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Tomlinson,³ 3 Hun (N. Y.) 630.

What Are Final Judgments. — Whenever a party becomes entitled by law to take execution, although it be by special leave of the court granted during a term, the judgment is final for all purposes, and action on such judgment may be brought at once. White River Bank v. Downer, 29 Vt. 332.

In Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Tomlinson, 3 Hun (N. Y.) 630, it was held that a judgment upon which an action may be brought must be not only final in the technical sense of that term, but one which has been duly docketed and upon which execution might issue, and that therefore in foreclosure, where the last proceeding was the filing of the report of a referee to sell, showing a deficiency, but which report had not been confirmed nor judgment docketed thereon, no action could be maintained thereon, even with leave.

A judgment rendered for costs in favor of the prevailing party on a writ of error or motion in error is a final and unconditional judgment, on which the party in whose favor it is rendered has an immediate right of action, and which is not affected by the entry of the original action in the Superior Court for further proceedings under the provisions of the statute on that subject (Rev. Stat., tit. 1, § 167) or by the result of such proceedings. Ives v. Finch, 28 Conn. 112.

A judgment in favor of a divorced wife against her husband for a specific sum of money is a final judgment upon which an action may be maintained, notwithstanding the judgment of the appellate court affirming it gives the defendant leave to apply to the trial court for a modification of the judgment as to the time of its payment. Such a modification is directed only to the matter of carrying the judgment into effect. Dow v. Blake, 148 Ill. 76.

The general rule is that a judgment or decree is final if after it has been entered no further questions can come before the court except such as are necessary to be determined in carrying it into effect. Dow v. Blake, 148 Ill. 76. See also article APPEALS, vol. 2, p. 53, for a full consideration of what constitutes a final judgment.

4. Domestic Judgments. — See cases cited in preceding note.

Foreign Judgments. — Dow v. Blake, 148 Ill. 76; Baugh v. Baugh, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 556; Munn v. Cook, 24 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 314.

An action will not lie unless the judgment conclusively (subject to an appeal) settles the existence of the debt so as to become res judicata between the parties. Nouvion v. Freeman, L. R. 15 App. 1.

"A foreign judgment, or judgment of a sister state, cannot be sued upon unless it is final and conclusive in the country or state where it was rendered, according to the law of that place. It should be complete and definitive in its nature, and a valid and subsisting judgments to be final in order to sustain an action thereon, because an appeal is pending therefrom,¹ and it is a general rule that an action will lie upon a judgment, either foreign or domestic, although an appeal therefrom is pending in the courts of the state where it was rendered.²

Effect of Supersedeas. — Especially is this true where, by reason of a failure to file an appeal bond, or for other cause, the appeal or writ of error does not operate as a supersedeas or stay.³ It has often been held, however, that such an action would lie pending appeal or error notwithstanding the fact that such proceedings operated as a supersedeas or stay.⁴ But the contrary has been obligation.' It must be 'certain or capable of being made so.' " Dow v. Blake, 148 Ill. 76, citing 12 Am. and Eng. Encyc. of Law (1st ed.), pp. 148m, 149⁷.

The mere pendency of equitable proceedings in the courts of the state where the judgment sued on was rendered is no bar to the suit. Tompkins v. Cooper, 97 Ga. 631.

In Woodward v. Carson, 86 Pa. St. 176, it was held that an attachment might be sustained upon a domestic judgment pending an appeal therefrom.

Application to Reduce Alimony. — An action on a judgment for alimony cannot be affected by an application pending the action pursuant to leave granted upon an appeal to reduce the amount of the judgment. Dow v. Blake, 46 Ill. App. 329, affirming 148 Ill. 76.

Judgment of Sister State. — Under art. 4, § 1, of the Constitution of the United States and the Act of Congress of May 26, 1790, a writ of error, not operating as a supersedeas, from the appellate court of Texas to a judgment of a District Court of that state, will be regarded as having the same effect in Virginia as in Texas. Piedmont, etc., L. Ins. Co. v. Ray, 75 Va. 821.

The filing of a petition for a review directly held in an action on a domestic judgment,¹ and in many cases where actions have been sustained on judgments of sister states pending appeal, the decisions have been expressly limited to cases where it did not appear that the appeal or writ of error suspended the judgment in the state where it was rendered.²

Staying Execution. — In an action upon a judgment execution may be stayed pending the final determination of the appeal from the original judgment whenever it is made to appear that, by the laws of the state where the judgment was rendered, such appeal or writ of error operates as a supersedeas.³

and the awarding of a supersedeas on the execution issued on the judgment in the action sought to be reviewed are no bar to maintaining an action on such judgment. Gifford v. Whalon, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 428.

Summary Statement of Doctrine. — The only effect of an appeal, even where a full undertaking is filed, is to suspend execution on the original judgment in the court below pending the appeal. An undertaking to pay the judgment operates solely as a supersedeas of execution. The judgment remains a valid and binding contract and estoppel of record. The process of the court below for its enforcement is indeed withheld pending the appeal, but that is all, and an action can still be maintained on it, either within the state where it was rendered or in a sister or foreign state. The cases cited supra in this note fully establish these propositions. See also Taylor v. Shew, 39 Cal. 538, where it was held that an action would lie on the judgment of a sister state pending appeal without supersedeas. This was as far as the facts of that case made it necessary to go. The court said: "Whether, by an appeal from a judgment in which appellant had given an undertaking on appeal in form and amount sufficient to stay proceedings for its enforcement, the effect of the record of the judgment as evidence is thereby suspended or nullified, is a question not involved in this case."

"An appeal, where a supersedeas is obtained, stays proceedings on the judgment from which the appeal is prosecuted, but it does not preclude parties from suing on the judgment or from prosecuting collateral or independent proceedings." Line v. State, 131 Ind. 468 [citing Burton v. Burton, 28 Ind. 342; Burton v. Reeds, 20 Ind. 87; Randles v. Randles, 67 Ind. 438;

Child*, 136 Mass. 344; Faber v. Hovey, 117 Mass. 107; Rogers v. Hatch, 8 Nev. 35. These cases by fair implication hold that an action cannot be maintained where the appeal or writ of error operates as a supersedeas. See, for example, Dow v. Blake, 148 Ill. 76, wherein the court said: "Hence, where suit is brought in this state upon a judgment rendered in another state, such judgment will here be given the same force and effect as it has in the state where rendered. If it be shown that, by the law of the state where the judgment was rendered, an appeal has the effect of suspending the judgment appealed from, or of staying the execution thereof, the pendency of such appeal is a material fact to be proven in a suit upon the judgment in this state. But unless it appear that the appeal or writ of error suspends the judgment in the state where it was rendered, its pendency is no bar to an action in another state on the judgment."

shall be determined adversely to the defendant. Piedmont, etc., L. Ins. Co. v. Ray, 75 Va. 821.

Other Remedies.—"Here the action of debt on a foreign judgment is an original and independent action, and no judgment that we may render on it can be affected by any proceedings elsewhere; for those proceedings cannot set aside or confirm what we may do. Our judgment is final, and a writ of error to it does not bring up the proceedings elsewhere on an appeal or writ of error to the first judgment. If, then, we enter judgment, it must be conclusive, unless we leave it to be set aside, or stayed, or enforced at the discretion of the court below, on which proceeding a party has no right of review; or unless we say that on a reversal of the first judgment the defendant shall have a right to audita querela; or, perhaps, to a writ of error coram nobis, to have the court below reverse its own proceedings and award restitution, as the case may require. Both of these forms of proceeding are allowed in our practice, though seldom used, and therefore the parties may resort to them if they do not think proper to abide by the discretion of the court below. Perhaps the new fact might be put upon the record without this form." Merchants' Ins. Co. v. De Wolf, 33 Pa. St. 45.

A judgment rendered and entered in accordance with the laws of the state where it was rendered, and valid there, is valid and enforceable by action in a sister state, although a judgment rendered and entered in the same manner and form under like circumstances in the latter state would be utterly void. Ritter v. Hoffman, 35 Kan. 215; Kitchen v. Bellefontaine Nat. Bank, 53 Kan. 242.

If it be proved that by the law, practice, and usage of the state from which a transcript of a foreign judgment comes it is entitled to the faith and credit of a judgment, the courts of a sister state will give it the same force and effect although it is insufficient to constitute a judgment under the laws and practice of the latter state. Clemmer v. Cooper, 24 Iowa 185.

(2) Service of Process. — An action cannot be maintained upon a judgment when jurisdiction of the person of the judgment debtor was not acquired by proper service or notice in the action wherein the judgment was rendered.¹ This question most frequently arises in actions upon judgments of sister states, and it is held that where the judgment is void in the state where rendered for want of service,² or where the service was by publication merely,³ or even where there has been personal service out of the state,⁴ provided the defendant did not appear,⁵ the action cannot be maintained. If, however, the defendant was properly served, or if he appeared, jurisdiction was obtained, and the judgment will support an action.⁶

Judgments Against Common Right. — Where, however, the law of a foreign or a sister state authorizes a process by which the property of a man can be taken without notice to him to defend against the proceeding, it is opposed to common right, and a judgment founded on such process will not be enforced in other jurisdictions.¹

An action may be maintained in the District of Columbia on a transcript of a judgment rendered in the state of New York against a railroad company, on service of summons on its secretary, found in New York. The debt on which judgment was rendered having been contracted in New York, the court obtained complete jurisdiction by such service, and the judgment is entitled to the same conclusiveness in the District of Columbia as in New York. It is competent for a state legislature to authorize the commencement of suits by service of process upon the president, secretary, or treasurer of a foreign corporation having a place of business or making contracts within the state. Weymouth v. Washington, etc., R. Co., 1 MacArthur (D. C.) 19.

As to effect of appearance, see cases cited in preceding note.

1. Dennison v. Hyde, 6 Conn. 519.

Departure from Common Law. — The judgment of a court in a foreign country has no binding effect in one of the United States as against one of our own citizens where the principles on which it has been obtained constitute a departure from the principles of common law in respect to jurisdiction over persons and subject-matter as recognized by our courts. Anderson v. Haddon, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 435.

Regular Foreign Judgments Not Enforced — Illustrations. — In Ewer v. Coffin, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 23, the plaintiff, a citizen of Rhode Island, commenced an action there against a citizen of Massachusetts, made a nominal attachment of his property there, and under the order of the court made service upon him in Massachusetts by reading a copy of the writ and order of the court thereon; but the defendant never appeared to the action, never was an inhabitant of Rhode Island, nor was he ever in that state during the pendency of the suit. It was held that a judgment by default in Rhode Island, although regular there, could not be enforced in Massachusetts. To the same effect see Kibbe v. Kibbe, Kirby (Conn.) 126.

An action will not lie on a judgment by default on a return of nil upon a sci. fa. to revive a judgment in another state against a defendant who, when the judgment was entered, had ceased to reside in such state. Robb v. Anderson, 43 Ill. App. 575.

Validity as to Resident of Foreign or Sister State. — It seems, however, that where the judgment debtor was domiciled in the state where the judgment was rendered its validity must be determined by the laws of that state. See Huntley v. Baker, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 578; Teel v. Yost, 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 481. In this last case it appeared that the judgment debtor was domiciled in Pennsylvania when the judgment sued on was entered, and that he was not served with process and did not appear, but that the judgment under the local law was entered on a judgment note before maturity, and that it could not be enforced by execution until maturity. It was held that, the judgment being valid under the foreign law, it could be sued on here. Ingraham, J., dissented on the ground that the defendant did not have his debt in court in a foreign state, and cited Shumway v. Stillman, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 453; Kerr v. Kerr, 41 N. Y. 275; Shepard v. Wright, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 514, 113 N. Y. 582. Compare Anderson v. Haddon, 33 Hun (N. Y.) 435.

of the defendant served, will not support an action in a sister state against the defendant not served,¹ nor even against the defendant who was served.² But it has been held that an action on such a judgment may be maintained against all the defendants, provided the record of the judgment is supplemented by other evidence showing a joint liability on the part of the defendant not served.³

g. ERRONEOUS JUDGMENTS. — An action may be maintained upon an erroneous judgment of either a domestic or foreign court, provided such court had jurisdiction,⁴ and the judgment in such

2. "The question presented, therefore, for our determination is whether a judgment of a court of another state, rendered against several defendants jointly, in an action where one of them was not served with process, can be enforced in this state by an action of debt thereon against one of the defendants who in the foreign action was served with process. We think this question must be answered in the negative. From the pleadings in the case, as they now stand, it appears that the New York court rendered judgment against all of said defendants when only two of them had been served with process; and this being so, and no statutory authority being shown for any such proceeding in that state, the record shows that said court was without jurisdiction as to said defendant, Samuel J. Steinau, and that the judgment as to him was a mere nullity. The question, then, arises as to what effect this has on the other defendants who were served with process. While there is some conflict of authority upon this question, yet, we think, the rule which is established by the preponderance of authority is that the plaintiff who sues on a judgment must recover against all of the defendants or none; for, the judgment being an entirety, whatever constitutes a good defense for one of the defendants operates also for the benefit of the others." Watson v. Steinau, (R. I. 1895) 33 Atl. Rep. 4 [citing Hall v. Williams, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 232; Oakley v. Aspinwall, 4 N. Y. 514; Richards v.

3. Duryee v. Hale, 31 Conn. 217.

Argument in Support of Rule. — The court in the case last cited said that the ground on which, consistently with established principles, such a judgment could be held conclusive as to the amount of the indebtedness against the defendant not served with notice was that by reason of the relation existing between them, growing out of the joint character of their contract, the defendant served with notice might be regarded as authorized to act for the other defendant so far as it bound him by his admission of the amount of the debt, and that, therefore, where there is failure to prove, in an action founded on the judgment, the joint liability of the two defendants, the defendant not served with process cannot be regarded as affected to any extent by the judgment.

4. Domestic Judgments. — Debt will lie upon an erroneous domestic judgment until it is reversed on error. Hawes v. Hathaway, 14 Mass. 233. And if the statute of limitation has run against the writ of error the defendant is remediless. Ives v. Finch, 28 Conn. 114.

action cannot be reversed for the error in the former judgment.¹

h. EFFECT OF ISSUANCE OF EXECUTION AND PROCEEDINGS THEREON. — The issuance of an execution upon a judgment does not suspend the common-law right to sue thereon,² and such an action will lie without a return of the execution unsatisfied,³ or even where the execution has not been returned at all.⁴

Levy of Execution. — An action of debt will not lie upon a judgment which appears of record to be satisfied by a levy of execution.⁵

1. Remedy of Judgment Debtor. — "The course to be taken is first to obtain a reversal of the original judgment by writ of error; and the plaintiff in error may then apply for a review of the action in which the Common Pleas rendered the judgment brought before us by this process. There is at present no ground shown on which that judgment can be reversed." Hawes v. Hathaway, 14 Mass. 233.

In Caouette v. Young, (N. H. 1892) 32 Atl. Rep. 157, which was an appeal from a judgment in an action upon an erroneous judgment, the court said: "As the judgment has not been reversed or set aside, it follows that the plaintiff is entitled to recover as the case now stands. Nevertheless we think, upon the facts found at the hearing, that the case should be discharged and remanded to the trial term, and there be continued, to enable either party to have the original action brought forward in the police court for such proceedings in that court as justice may require; or, upon the refusal of that court to take action in the premises, a writ of error or some other process may be issued by this court upon petition and notice."

In debt on a judgment, brought a long time after the judgment was recovered, it is competent for the defendant to show that execution was issued soon after its rendition and placed in the hands of an officer; that the defendant at the time had property sufficient which could be reached on execution; that the officer was dead, and the execution not returned, and not to be found among the papers of the officer. Such facts, unexplained, will warrant a finding for the defendant. Gassner v. Sandford, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 440; Miller v. Smith, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 425.

Chief Justice Bronson, in People v. Hopson, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 574, said: "If the broad ground has not yet been taken, it is time it should be asserted, that a mere levy upon sufficient personal property, without anything more, never amounts to a satisfaction of the judgment. So long as the property remains in legal custody, the other remedies of the creditor will be suspended. He cannot have a new execution against the person or property of the debtor, nor maintain action on the judgment, nor use it for the purpose of becoming a redeeming creditor. * * * The mere levy neither gives anything to the creditor nor takes anything from the debtor. It does not divest a title; it only creates a lien on the property."

In Massachusetts it was formerly held that an action of debt would lie upon a judgment where the execution had been levied upon land not belonging to the debtor, and that the creditor was not obliged to bring a scire facias, as authorized by Stat. 1785, c. 6. Greene v. Hatch, 12 Mass. 195; Gooch v. Atkins, 14 Mass. 378. But this is not now the law. See Rev. Stat., c. 73, §§ 20, 21, construed in Dennis v. Arnold, 12 Met. (Mass.) 449; Perry v. Perry, 2 Gray (Mass.) 326. See also Dewing v. Durant, 10 Gray (Mass.) 31.

Waiver of Levy. — In Grosvenor v. Chesley, 48 Me. 369, it was held under the statutes then existing that where an execution has been levied on real estate, and, before it has been returned and recorded, it is ascertained that the levy is invalid for any reason, the creditor may waive the levy and resort to any other remedy for the satisfaction of his judgment, but that after the execution is returned and recorded, if the levy proves to be invalid, the creditor's only remedy is scire facias to revive the judgment, and an action of debt will not lie. It was held further that such statutes were applicable to levies made before they were enacted, because they related to the remedy and not the right. The court distinguished Ware v. Pike, 12 Me. 303; Greene v. Hatch, 12 Mass. 195; Gooch v. Atkins, 14 Mass. 378.

Effect of Discharge. — In an action on a judgment against several joint defendants, the imprisonment of one of the defendants on the execution, being as to him a satisfaction of the debt so long as the imprisonment continues, is a defense as far as he is concerned and is fatal to the joint action. Chapman v. Hatt, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 41.

Where a judgment debtor is taken in execution and is afterwards discharged with the consent of the creditor no action can be maintained upon such judgment. King v. Goodwin, 16 Mass. 63. See also generally Appleby v.

An Action lies upon a Foreign Judgment notwithstanding the levy of execution upon lands in such foreign jurisdiction.¹

Effect of Bond Taken by Sheriff. — But the action will not lie after a levy of execution where the sheriff has returned the property to the defendant and taken a bond with security for the payment of the debt.²

2. In What Court. — An action upon a judgment is altogether a new action and not a continuation of the former one.³ Accordingly, it may be brought in the same court or in any other court of competent jurisdiction,⁴ which, in the absence of any special statutory regulation, is to be determined by ordinary considerations.⁵ Thus the action may be brought in an inferior court on a judgment obtained in a superior one,⁶ and, conversely, an action lies in a superior court upon a judgment rendered in an inferior one.⁷

3. Form of Action — a. DOMESTIC JUDGMENTS — Debt the Appropriate Action. — An action of debt is the appropriate common-law action on a judgment record.⁸

1. Field v. Sanderson, 34 Mo. 542, holding that the fact that execution had been issued and levied upon the lands of the defendant within the foreign jurisdiction, which were advertised for sale at a future day, did not show any ground of defense to the action on the judgment and did not constitute grounds for a continuance to await the results of such sale.

An action may be brought upon a judgment not dormant, before the same justices and in the same jurisdiction in which the first judgment was rendered. Fox v. Burns, 2 West. L. M. (Ohio) 387.

Federal Courts. — An action may be maintained in a federal court upon a judgment of a sister state. Buchanan County First Nat. Bank v. Duell County, 74 Fed. Rep. 373; Knapp v. Knapp, 59 Fed. Rep. 641.

An assignee of a judgment cannot sue thereon in the federal courts unless the action could have been brought there if the assignment had not been made. Walker v. Powers, 104 U. S. 245.

5. Wherever Jurisdiction of the Parties May Be Obtained an action upon the judgment may be maintained, although none of the parties reside in the state where such action is brought, and although the judgment was rendered in a sister state. Reed v. Chilson, 142 N. Y. 152; Smith v. Kander, 58 Mo. App. 61.

The County of the Defendant's Residence is the proper county in which to bring an action of debt on a judgment. Townsend v. Smith, 20 Tex. 465.

Assumpsit Will Not Lie upon a judgment,¹ although in a few cases the contrary is held.²

Trustee Process. — Debt together with trustee process may be maintained upon a judgment.³

Specific Performance. — An action for the specific performance of a judgment will not lie.⁴

b. SISTER STATE JUDGMENTS. — Debt, and not assumpsit,⁵ is the proper common-law form of action upon a judgment rendered in a sister state.⁶

4. Maple v. Beach, 43 Ind. 51, wherein the court said: "It seems to us that the idea of a complaint for the specific performance of a judgment or decree is novel, to say the least of it. It was sometimes necessary in the former equity practice to file a bill to carry a decree into execution; but this was done when the parties had neglected to proceed upon the decree, their rights under it becoming so embarrassed by subsequent events that it became necessary to have the decree of the court to settle and ascertain them. Mitford Ch. Pl. 95. But the remedy sought in this case is not of this nature."

Reason for Rule. — A judgment rendered in any state of the United States is treated in every other state as a domestic judgment, and under the constitution and laws of the United States it has the same validity and effect in every other state as in the state where rendered. Hence, an action of assumpsit will not lie upon a judgment rendered in a sister state, it being a matter of record. Boston India Rubber Factory v. Hoit, 14 Vt. 92.

Error Cured by Verdict. — If the action is brought in assumpsit instead of debt, the error will be cured after verdict by the statute of jeofails. Bone v. McGinley, 7 How. (Miss.) 671.

An action upon a judgment recovered in another state in an action for tort is an action ex contractu. Johnson v. Butler, 2 Iowa 535; Taylor v. Root, 4 Keyes (N. Y.) 335.

Case. — There is one decision at least to the effect that an action in case will lie upon a judgment of a sister state.¹

c. FOREIGN JUDGMENTS. — Either debt or assumpsit will lie upon a foreign judgment.²

d. COIN JUDGMENTS. — An Action of Debt may be maintained upon a judgment recovered in another state to be paid in United States gold coin.³

4. Parties — a. PARTIES PLAINTIFF — (1) In General. — At Common Law an action upon a judgment must be brought in the name of its legal owner, who is the person in whose name it is rendered.⁴

Debt Lies on a Justice's Judgment rendered in a sister state. Silver Lake Bank v. Harding, 5 Ohio 545; Hoagland v. Rogers, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 501, holding that a sci. fa. to procure the award of an execution on such judgment does not lie.

1. Spencer v. Brockway, 1 Ohio 259, holding that liability or promise to pay and breach must be averred.

2. Buttrick v. Allen, 8 Mass. 273; Garland v. Tucker, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 361; Hazzard v. Nottingham, Tappan (Ohio) 146; Moore v. Adie, 18 Ohio 430; Mellin v. Horlick, 31 Fed. Rep. 865; Grant v. Easton, 13 Q. B. Div. 302; Godard v. Gray, L. R. 6 Q. B. 139; Williams v. Jones, 13 M. & W. 633; Walker v. Wilter, 1 Doug. 1; Sadler v. Robins, 1 Campb. 253; Henley v. Soper, 8 B. & C. 16, 15 E. C. L. 147; Henderson v. Henderson, 6 Q. B. 288; Russell v. Smyth, 9 M. & W. 810; Robinson v. Bland, 2 Burr. 1077; McFarlane v. Derbyshire, 8 U. C. Q. B. 12.

Costs Awarded in a Foreign Judgment may be recovered in either debt or assumpsit. Mellin v. Horlick, 31 Fed. Rep. 867; Russell v. Smyth, 9 M. & W. 810.

An Action of Assumpsit Lies on a foreign judgment, for, as the judgment is only prima facie evidence, the defendant has all the benefits he could be entitled to in an action upon the original cause. Buttrick v. Allen, 8 Mass. 273; Hazzard v. Nottingham, Tappan (Ohio) 146.

The Reason for the Rule that assumpsit would lie upon a foreign judgment, but not upon a domestic or sister state judgment, was founded upon the fact that foreign judgments were only prima facie evidence of the debt, while domestic and sister state judgments were conclusive. Foreign judgments are now very generally held to be equally conclusive, and the reason for a different rule in the two cases would seem to be no longer available. See Andrews v. Montgomery, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 165.

3. Belford v. Woodward, 158 Ill. 122, affirming 55 Ill. App. 307. The court said: "Counsel for plaintiff in error invoke the well-settled rule that debt will not lie on any obligation except one for the payment of a sum specifically certain, and insist that the clause as to payment in United States gold coin does not call for the payment of money or a sum certain, but for the payment of an unliquidated amount to be determined according to the fluctuations of the gold market. Even if the clause in question be regarded as a valid part of the judgment, we are unable to agree with counsel upon this point. We regard an obligation to pay 'in United States gold coin' as an obligation to pay in money, or an agreement to deliver a certain weight of standard gold ascertainable by count of coins made legal tender by statute. A contract for the payment of so many dollars in gold and silver is a contract for the direct payment of money, and the judgment in a suit thereon should be entered for coined dollars and parts of dollars when such is the will of the creditor. Hart v. Flynn, 8 Dana (Ky.) 191; Dewing v. Sears, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 379. We do not regard the case of Mix v. Nettleton, 29 Ill. 245, where it was held that an action of debt would not lie upon a due bill for so many dollars payable in county orders, as having any application here."

4. See infra, XVIII. 4. u. (3) Assignees.

A Judgment in Favor of the United States may be sued upon in the name of the district attorney. Benton v. Woolsey, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 27.

A Sister State having recovered judgment in its own court on proper notice may sue thereon in its own name. Healy v. Root, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 391.

Thus, a judgment in favor of one person by mistake for another cannot be sued upon by the latter.¹ So, also, a judgment recovered by one person to the use of another must be sued upon by the person in whose name it was recovered.²

A Next Friend by whom the plaintiff sued in the original action is neither a necessary nor a proper party in an action upon the judgment.³

A Judgment in Favor of a Partnership cannot be sued upon by one partner.⁴

(2) Executors and Administrators. — Where the plaintiff in a judgment dies, his personal representative may maintain an action of debt against the defendant in the judgment.⁵ So, also, he Allowance to Attorneys in Divorce Proceedings. — Where the defendant in divorce proceedings is ordered to pay the plaintiff's attorneys a certain sum for services, such attorneys may maintain an action against the defendant to recover such allowance after the dismissal of the divorce proceedings. Bowers v. Kauts, 2 Kan. App. 644.

Action by Indorser Who Had Paid Judgment. — A judgment recovered by the last indorsee of a note against the maker and all the indorsers cannot form the basis of an action by an indorser who has paid the judgment against the prior indorser. Jordan v. Ford, 7 Ark. 416.

1. Judgment for Wrong Person by Mistake. — A judgment rendered in favor of B by mistake for A cannot be sued upon by A, even if it is alleged and proved that the judgment was rendered in favor of A by the name of B, and such defect may be taken advantage of under the general issue and need not be pleaded in abatement. Gilbert v. Hanford, 13 Mich. 40. Compare Bennett v. Libhart, 27 Mich. 489, where it is held that "Henry V. Libhart" is not entitled to recover in an action upon a judgment in favor of "H. V. Libhart," without any allegation or proof of his identity with the party in whose favor the judgment was rendered. In this case it was further held that the fact that the judgment was received in evidence by consent did not preclude the defendant from disputing the right to recover on it, as proof of the judgment was only one of the steps necessary to make out a case. See also Thompson v. Manrow, 1 Cal. 428.

2. Judgments to the Use of Another. — Triplett v. Scott, 12 Ill. 137, holding that a judgment in a suit in the name of the equitable assignor of a chose in action brought for the use of the assignee cannot be sued upon in the name of the assignee, the legal title to the judgment being in the nominal plaintiff; and it makes no difference that the debtor has wrongfully paid the amount of the judgment to the assignor, although such payment does not satisfy the judgment.

In Lee v. Gardiner, 26 Miss. 521, it was held that where a suit was brought in the name of A for the use of B, and B died pending the action, but before his death had assigned all his interest to C, a suit brought on the judgment in the name of A for the use of C was properly brought.

Under the Code, the action may be brought by the person for whose use the judgment was recovered. Greene v. Republic F. Ins. Co., 84 N. Y. 572.

Protecting Cestui Que Use. — In an action on a judgment entered "for use," the court will look beyond the mere legal party, in order to protect the interests of the cestui que use. Peterson v. Lothrop, 34 Pa. St. 223.

3. Wygal v. Myers, 76 Tex. 598. Compare Cook v. Thornhill, 13 Tex. 293, wherein it is held that where a judgment is recovered by a lunatic in another state, suing by her next friend, an action on the judgment may be maintained in a sister state by the lunatic suing by the same next friend, and in such action the original judgment is conclusive as to the plaintiff's right to recover in the name and capacity in which she sues.

5. Gardner v. Henry, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 458; Smith v. Pearce, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 127, holding that the plaintiff may sue individually on a judgment recovered by him in his representative capacity,¹ and he may do so even in a state which is foreign to the one from which he received his letters.²

An Administrator De Bonis Non may sue on a judgment recovered by the original executor or administrator.³

(3) Assignees. — At Common Law, the assignee of a judgment cannot maintain an action thereon in his own name,⁴ but the action must be brought in the name of the original plaintiff.⁵ The assignee, however, has an absolute right to sue in the name of his assignor, and free from the latter's control.⁶

In Alabama. — "Sections 2927-8 of the Code of 1886 provide a remedy for assignees of judgments or decrees who seek to enforce them by mesne or final process, issued upon the judgment assigned. These sections have no application to separate or independent suits, brought for the collection of debts evidenced by judgments or decrees. When the effort is made, as it generally may be, to collect by suit a debt due by judgment or decree, different rules prevail. Code, § 2170. If an action at law be resorted to, then the judgment is not such a contract for the payment of money as that the beneficial owner can sue on it in his own name. Smith v. Harrison, 33 Ala. 706; Lovins v. Humphries, 67 Ala. 437. The rule is different in chancery. Whoever has the rightful ownership, whether legal or equitable, is the proper complainant." Moorer v. Moorer, 87 Ala. 545. See also Wolffe v. Eberlein, 74 Ala. 99.

New York. — Ross v. Clussman, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 676.

The assignee may sue in the name of his assignor whenever he may choose to do so, and may control the issuance of final process and recover the money collected. Weir v. Pennington, 11 Ark. 745.

The assignee may use the assignor's name in collecting the judgment, and the fact of the assignment is no defense to an action on the judgment in the name of the assignor. Bardon v. Savage, 1 Mo. 560.

Original Plaintiff a Nominal Party. —

"The bringing of an action for the use of the party in interest, in accordance with the common-law rule that a chose in action is not assignable, is recognized in the decisions. Morton v. Morton, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 107; Welch v. Mandeville, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 233, and note; M'Cullum v. Cox, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 139; Canby v. Ridgway, 1 Binn. (Pa.)

By Statute, in many states, assignees of judgments are authorized to sue thereon in their own names.¹ Thus, where the statute requires actions to be brought in the name of the real party in interest, the equitable owner or assignee of a judgment is the proper party plaintiff,² and, indeed, he is the only party entitled to maintain the action.³

496; Southgate v. Montgomery, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 47. The plaintiff in such an action is merely a nominal party. He has no actual interest in the suit, cannot control it, nor in any way interfere with the rights of the real party; nor is he a trustee in any sense, as he has no authority whatever. The owner alone is the real party, and it is only by reason of the rule referred to, which in this state has been superseded by the code, that the action is brought in this form. The judgment belongs to the owner quite as much as if he was named as the plaintiff, and under the code he alone can sue to recover the same." Greene v. Republic F. Ins. Co., 84 N. Y. 572.

An Assignment of a Foreign Judgment is valid, and enables the assignee to bring an action thereon, although the assignor, a foreign corporation, might not have been able to bring an action thereon against the defendant, another foreign corporation. Nazro v. McCalmont Oil Co., 36 Hun (N. Y.) 296.

2. Edmonds v. Montgomery, 1 Iowa 143; Greene v. Republic F. Ins. Co., 84 N. Y. 572; J. I. Case Threshing Mach. Co. v. Pederson, 6 S. Dak. 140.

Real Party in Interest. — One suing on a foreign judgment may show by parol that he is its true owner and that the nominal plaintiff, who need not be made a party, was but his agent. Lewis v. Wilder, 4 La. Ann. 574.

The transfer of a judgment upon condition that the transferee was to pay for it if he could make anything out of it does not invest him with such property in the judgment as entitles him to recover on it before a justice, nor constitute him the party really interested. Pike v. Bright, 29 Ala. 332.

Recovery by Third Person to Use of Plaintiff. — In Greene v. Republic F.

Ins. Co., 84 N. Y. 572, the action was brought upon a judgment recovered in Mississippi by a third person to the use of the plaintiff. It appeared that the rule of the common law that choses in action are not assignable, and that actions thereon, when assigned, must be brought in the name of the assignor, prevailed in Mississippi. It was held that the plaintiff, to whose use the judgment was recovered, was presumptively the owner thereof, and that the record plaintiff in the former action was merely a nominal party, having no interest in or right to control the judgment, that he was not a trustee in any rightful sense under the code, and that the plaintiff alone could sue upon the judgment.

Who Is Not an Assignee. — Where an officer having an execution in his hands for collection pays over the amount to the creditor out of his own money and retains the execution in his hands until it cannot be renewed, it not being assigned to him, he cannot maintain an action on the judgment in the name of the creditor, for his own benefit, against the debtor. He cannot be considered an assignee either at law or in equity. Whittier v. Heminway, 22 Me. 238.

3. Charles v. Haskins, 11 Iowa 329; Edmonds v. Montgomery, 1 Iowa 143; Clark v. Digges, 5 Gill (Md.) 109; Murphy v. Cochran, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 339; Greene v. Republic F. Ins. Co., 84 N. Y. 572; Andrews v. Kibbee, 12 Mich. 94; Moore v. Smith, 103 Mich. 387; Benne v. Schnecko, 100 Mo. 250; Moore v. Nowell, 94 N. Car. 265.

An action at law may be maintained on a judgment at law in the name of a judgment creditor for the use of an assignee of the judgment, notwithstanding the Act of 1881 (Laws, c. 3241; Rev. Stat., § 981) allowing the real parties to sue in their own name. Sammis v. Wightman, 31 Fla. 10.

Making Assignor a Party. — Where the suit is in equity by the assignee of a judgment, the assignor, though merely a nominal and unnecessary party, is

b. PARTIES DEFENDANT — (1) In General. — The person against whom a judgment is rendered is the proper party defendant to an action thereon.¹ So, also, the assignor² or the legal owner³ has been held to be a necessary party defendant where the action is by an assignee.

Enforcement of Lien. — In a suit to enforce a judgment lien against lands covered by a deed of trust both the trustee and cestui que trust are necessary parties defendant.⁴

(2) Joint Defendants. — In the Absence of Statute, where a judgment has been rendered against several defendants jointly, all such defendants must be joined in a new action upon such judgment.⁵

yet not an improper one, Sammis v. Wightman, 31 Fla. 45; and it was held in Elliott v. Waring, 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 338, 17 Am. Dec. 69, that the assignor should be made a party in equity.

1. Identity of Defendant — Sameness of Name. — Where the name of the judgment debtor in the record of a judgment is identical with that of the defendant in the action on such judgment, it is prima facie proof of identity of person, Ritchie v. Carpenter, 2 Wash. 512; and on a demurrer to the evidence it is sufficient, Hazzard v. Nottingham, Tappan (Ohio) 192.

Judgment Recovered in Wrong Name. — Where a judgment is recovered against a corporation by a wrong name, an action may be brought thereon against the corporation by its correct name, alleging that the judgment was recovered against the defendant by the other name, and evidence is admissible that such name was an erroneous one. Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. (U. S.) 404. To the same effect, see Bloomfield R. Co. v. Burress, 82 Ind. 83; Behrensmeyer v. Kreitz, 135 Ill. 591.

Christian Name Omitted. — A judgment rendered against a defendant omitting his Christian name is not void, and an action may be maintained thereon against such defendant, provided his identity is alleged. Newcomb v. Peck, 17 Vt. 302.

2. In an Action by the Assignee of a judgment against the judgment debtor, the assignor is a necessary party and should be joined as a defendant to answer as to the assignment or his interest in the subject of the action. McCammock v. Clark, 16 Ind. 320.

3. Legal Owner. — In an action to enforce the judgment by one holding not a legal but an equitable title thereto, the one possessing the legal title should be made a party defendant. Starnes v. Underwood, 54 Ind. 48.

In Shirts v. Irons, 54 Ind. 13, it was held that, in an action on a judgment by its equitable owner, if the party holding the legal title must be a party to answer as to his interest (a point not decided), the failure to join him as a party is waived unless objection is made.

Whatever constitutes a good defense for one of the defendants operates for the benefit of the others, because the obligation is joint. Freeman on Judgments, § 439; Pratt v. Dow, 56 Me. 81." Sheehan, etc., Transp. Co. v. Sims, 28 Mo. App. 64.

When a judgment was rendered in one state against two defendants as copartners, and an action on the judgment was brought in the courts of a sister state against one of the defendants only, it was held that, as the petition did not show that both parties were living and within the jurisdiction of the court, the action could not be sustained. Blake v. Burley, 9 Iowa 592.

Where, in a judgment record from another state, it appears that in a joint suit against two defendants a judgment was rendered at different times for the same amount against each defendant, but for the breach of a joint promise, a suit against such two defendants on such record will be sustained. Oyster v. Peavy, 40 N. J. L. 401.

Lies Jointly Against Stayer and Defendant. — "No reason is apparent why the

There are cases, however, in which actions against one of several joint judgment debtors have been sustained.¹

Joint Obligations Made Joint and Several by Statute.— In many states statutes exist providing in effect that all contracts or obligations which would have been joint at common law shall be deemed to be joint and several. Such a statute has been held to apply to judgment obligations and to authorize separate suits thereon against joint judgment debtors.² But the contrary has also been held.³

Under a Statute as to Joint Debtors authorizing judgments against both where one only is served, it seems that in an action on such judgment the debtor not served is not a proper party defendant.⁴

action of debt will not lie against the stayor as well as against the principal defendant in the judgment. The stay of execution is in the nature of a confession of judgment, and the stayor becomes a party to the judgment, and is properly suable as such." Gardner v. Henry, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 458.

A Defendant and His Replevin Bail may be sued jointly. Hansford v. Van Auken, 79 Ind. 157.

1. Judgment on Joint and Several Cause of Action.— An action may be maintained against one of several joint judgment debtors upon a judgment recovered in another state upon a joint and several cause of action. Olson v. Veazie, 9 Wash. 481.

Revival Against One.— Where a plaintiff for any sufficient cause desires to revive a judgment against one or more of several defendants, without joining all, his remedy is by an action of debt on the judgment. Carson v. Moore, 23 Tex. 450, citing Austin v. Reynolds, 13 Tex. 544.

Failure to Serve Joint Defendant.— A justice's judgment, though joint in form, is not in law a joint obligation, binding both defendants alike, if only one was served, and it does not merge the debt so as to preclude suing both over again. The one who was not served is not personally bound, and cannot be until he is sued on the original obligation. The judgment, therefore, may be sued as an individual obligation against the one who was served, and the case may be discontinued as to the other. Holcomb v. Tift, 54 Mich. 647.

2. Roane v. Drummond, 6 Rand. (Va.) 182; Read v. Jeffries, 16 Kan. 534, holding, under Gen. Stat. 1868, c. 20, §§ 1 and 4 (Gen. Stat. 1897, c. 114, §§ 1 and 4), that a personal judgment against two parties is a joint and several obligation, and that an action can be maintained thereon against either one of the defendants separately, and that it can in like manner be used as a set-off against either one.

3. Sheehan, etc., Transp. Co. v. Sims, 28 Mo. App. 64; U. S. v. Cushman, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 310.

Judgments Not Contracts Within Meaning of Statute.— "The fact that a judgment is a contract in one sense does not necessarily make it a contract within the meaning of the statute. * * * The statute making contracts, joint at common law, several in this state has been in force since 1835 at least. It is found in the revision of that year, and has been retained without alteration ever since. The courts have repeatedly decided thereafter that a judgment was an entire thing, and either valid or void as to all, where there are several defendants. Rush v. Rush, 19 Mo. 441; Covenant Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Clover, 36 Mo. 392. And while subsequent decisions have modified the rigor of the rule in cases where the validity of a judgment was drawn in question in collateral proceedings (Lenox v. Clarke, 52 Mo. 117), or where the judgment itself is the subject of review on error or appeal (Crispen v. Hannovan, 86 Mo. 168; Hunt v. Missouri R. Co., 89 Mo. 609), there is no case which denies the general proposition asserted in earlier cases. Not one case can be found that proceeds on the theory that a judgment is a several contract by virtue of the statute. The later cases above cited merely give effect to certain provisions of the statute of jeofails and the statutory powers conferred upon appellate courts to render independent judgments of their own." Sheehan, etc., Transp. Co. v. Sims, 28 Mo. App. 64.

4. Tay v. Hawley, 39 Cal. 93; Spen-

(3) Executors and Administrators. — At Common Law a judgment against several defendants jointly could not be enforced in any mode whatsoever against the personal representative of one of the defendants. The sole remedy was against the surviving judgment debtors.¹

Statutes exist, however, in many states, making the executor or administrator liable upon joint obligations against his decedent in the same manner that he would be liable if such demands were several as well as joint, and under such a statute it has been held that an action upon a judgment against several defendants jointly would lie against the survivors and personal representatives of the deceased jointly.²

Judgments Against Executors and Administrators. — It has been doubted whether debt would lie on a judgment against an executor.³ But it will clearly lie if a devastavit is suggested.⁴ A judgment cer v. Wait, 9 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 93, affirming 2 How. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 117. But see Johnson v. Smith, 23 How. Pr. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 444. In this case it was held that where there has been an action and judgment against one partner or joint debtor, with service of process on him only, the plaintiff may commence an action against the other joint debtor alone for the same indebtedness. And this practice under the code is applicable to justices' courts. The court said: "Whether the defendant Smith could be sued alone after the judgment does not appear to have been considered heretofore, and I believe has not been decided in any reported case. The original indebtedness as to the partner served with process is merged in the judgment, and the proceeding against him is on the judgment rendered. The defendant not served would have the right to interpose any defense of which he could have availed himself in the former action. Carman v. Townsend, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 207. The judgment against him was not conclusive. It was evidence only of the extent of the plaintiff's demand after the defendant's liability should be established by other evidence. Oakley v. Aspinwall, 4 N. Y. 513; 2 Rev. Stat. 377, § 2, vol. 3, 660 (5th ed.). The action would be anomalous in this view of it, because the issues would be different as to each defendant."

1. U. S. v. Cushman, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 310; Roane v. Drummond, 6 Rand. (Va.) 184.

2. Where a joint judgment is obtained against two defendants, and one dies, an action of debt on the judgment lies against the representative of the deceased defendant, the law respecting partitions, joint rights, and obligations, 1 Rev. Code Va. 359, being applicable to judgments. Roane v. Drummond, 6 Rand. (Va.) 182. See also Read v. Jeffries, 16 Kan. 534.

Contra. — In U. S. v. Cushman, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 310, it was held that a statute of New Hampshire providing that the executor or administrator shall be liable for joint demands against the deceased and any other person in the same way and manner as he would be liable if such demands were several as well as joint did not apply to a suit on a joint judgment, whatever might be the case as to a suit on the original contract or demand. See also Sheehan, etc., Transp. Co. v. Sims, 28 Mo. App. 64.

3. Olmsted v. Clark, 30 Conn. 110.

4. Debt Suggesting Devastavit. — "The plaintiff has now brought an action of debt upon the judgment against the defendant as administratrix, suggesting a devastavit. Judgment is sought de bonis propriis. If the defendant has been guilty of waste and mismanagement of the estate and effects of the deceased, she is liable in this form of action. Wheatly v. Lane, 1 Saund. 216; Olmsted v. Clark, 30 Conn. 109." Davis v. Vansands, 45 Conn. 600.

"In England an action of this sort, suggesting a devastavit, will lie; but the leading case in which this was finally established proceeded throughout upon the idea that without such a suggestion it could not be sustained. Wheatly v. Lane, 1 Saund. 216. But against an administrator alone will not support an action against the administrator and heir jointly.¹

Foreign Executors and Administrators. — An action will not lie against an administrator appointed in one state upon a judgment recovered against an administrator appointed under the authority of another state.² A distinction in this regard, however, is drawn between executors and administrators, and it is held that a judgment against an executor in one state will support an action against another executor in another state.³ So it has been held that an action will lie against an administrator with the will annexed in one state on a judgment obtained against the executor in another state.⁴

5. Declaration, Petition, or Complaint — a. IN GENERAL. — In an action upon a judgment the declaration, petition, or complaint must allege the rendition⁵ of a final⁶ personal judgment for the

in the form in which this suit is brought it appears to be a novelty, and there is obviously no necessity for such an action. The judgment must, in substance, be against the assets in the executor's hands, as was the case with the first judgment; and these of course could be reached by the first as easily as by a subsequent judgment, and in the same way. We need not, however, determine whether the action will lie, because we are satisfied that there is another good defense to the suit." Olmsted v. Clark, 30 Conn. 108.

2. Slauter v. Chenoweth, 7 Ind. 211; Creswell v. Slack, 68 Iowa 110; Haynes v. Colvin, 19 Ohio 392, approving Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. (U. S.) 44.

Reason for Rule. — If one has obtained a judgment against an administrator in one state, he cannot institute suit upon this judgment against another administrator of the same succession in a different state. The judgment against the first administrator is res inter alios acta as regards the second administrator and the property confided to his care. Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. (U. S.) 44; McLean v. Meek, 18 How. (U. S.) 16.

3. Turley v. Dreyfus, 33 La. Ann. 885.

Distinction Between Executors and Administrators. — There is no privity between administrators deriving their commissions to act from different political sovereignties; but executors stand upon a different footing, and a judgment against an executor in one state is prima facie evidence of the debt in a suit against another executor of the same testator in a different state. Hill v. Tucker, 13 How. (U. S.) 458.

4. Latine v. Clements, 3 Ga. 427.

5. Sufficiency of Averment of Rendition. — In an action on a foreign judgment an averment that plaintiffs signed final judgment, "which said judgment was then and there duly given, made, and entered," is sufficient as against a demurrer on the ground that the complaint does not aver that the court ever made or gave the judgment. Dore v. Thornburgh, 90 Cal. 64. See also infra, XVIII. 5. c. (2) (b) Statutory Regulation — Averment that Judgment Was "Duly Given."

Entry Pending Action. — The Superior Court has power, under its rules, upon petition of a party to an action pending therein, and after notice to the adverse party, to order the record of a former action between the same parties to be completed, and the judgment therein made up and entered. The judgment, when so recorded, takes effect from the date of the original judgment; and it is within the discretion of the court to allow the plaintiff in the pending action, in whose favor the original judgment was rendered, to file an amended declaration therein, counting upon that judgment. King v. Burnham, 129 Mass. 598. Compare Walton v. McKesson, 64 N. Car. 77.

6. Edwards v. Hellings, 99 Cal. 214, wherein it was held that an allegation that in the prior action the court "adjudged" that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff a certain sum of money, without the use of the word "judgment," was held insufficient to show a cause of action.

Alleging Plaintiff's Ownership. — The complainant must allege that he is the owner of the judgment,² and where the action is by an assignee, the assignment must be alleged.³

Alleging Defendant's Identity. — Where the original judgment was rendered against the defendant by another name, the identity of the defendants in the two actions must be alleged.⁴

1. Lippperd v. Edwards, 39 Ind. 165.

Executors and Administrators. — An executor or administrator suing upon a judgment in his favor need not describe himself in his representative capacity. Biddle v. Wilkins, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 692; Talmage v. Chapel, 16 Mass. 71; Hansford v. Van Auker, 79 Ind. 157.

When Declaration Must Be in Representative Capacity. — "The declaration should allege that which the law requires to be proved, and it need not allege that which is not necessary to be proved. Whenever, therefore, it becomes necessary for the plaintiff to show his representative character, or, in other words, to make proof of his letters testamentary, he should sue in his representative character; but, on the other hand, where this is not necessary there is no reason for requiring the setting up that character in the pleadings. Perhaps there is no better criterion by which to settle this question than this: Is it necessary to prove his letters testamentary? It certainly cannot be, if the former judgment is to have its usual and necessary effect. That judgment is conclusive of the plaintiff's right to recover, and as conclusive of his representative character as of any other fact which was necessary to be proved. The effect of that judgment was to vest the right in him personally; and, at common law, no other person could prosecute or control the judgment." Adams v. Campbell, 4 Vt. 447.

Proof of Letters. — In Biddle v. Wilkins, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 686, it was held that the plaintiff need not make a proof of his letters of administration or name himself as administrator.

Joint Liability of Defendant and His Replevin Bail. — In an action on a judgment against the judgment defendant and his replevin bail, the complaint, on demurrer thereto by the bail for want of sufficient facts, need not show a joint liability; it is enough that it shows a cause of action against him by his becoming a judgment defendant by confession. Hansford v. Van Auker, 79 Ind. 157.

2. Ryan v. Spieth, 18 Mont. 45. Compare Blake v. Burley, 9 Iowa 592.

Sufficiency of Allegation of Ownership. — In Thompson v. Cook, 21 Iowa 472, it was held that an allegation that "said judgment has now become the property of your petitioners" was defective for the reason that it was merely an allegation of a conclusion of law, but that the defect could not be taken advantage of by demurrer. The proper remedy was a motion to compel the plaintiff to state how he became the owner of the judgment.

An allegation that the judgments sued on are the property of the complainant is a sufficient allegation that he is the real party in interest, and therefore entitled, under the Iowa Code, to sue, though it appear that the judgments were originally recovered in his name for the use of another. Postlewait v. Howes, 3 Iowa 365.

3. Hughes v. Brewer, 7 Colo. 583, holding that a denial of such an averment presented a material issue.

Sufficiency of Allegation of Assignment. — In a complaint seeking to set off a judgment held by the plaintiff, as assignee, against one recovered by the defendant against the plaintiff, the time of assignment is stated with sufficient definiteness if it is said that the judgment against the plaintiff was recovered after assignment. Allegation that the third party "assigned, sold, transferred, and set over to the plaintiff the said judgment," sufficiently alleges an absolute assignment, and no consideration for such assignment need be stated. Martin v. Kanouse, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 330.

4. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Yeates, 67 Ala. 164.

Where a party to the record is incorrectly named, he may be connected with the judgment by proper averments, and when such averments are proved the party intended to be named in the judgment will be affected in the

A Demand for payment need not be alleged.¹

Leave to Sue. — Where a statute requires prior leave of court as a condition precedent to the right to sue upon a judgment, it is not clear upon the authorities whether or not such leave must be alleged in the petition.²

Reason for Suing. — Where an action lies upon a judgment as a matter of right, and without any necessity therefor, the declaration need not allege any reason for bringing the suit other than nonpayment of the judgment.³ But where a new action will not lie upon a judgment without any ground of necessity therefor, as has been seen to be the case in a few jurisdictions, the reason for bringing the suit must be alleged.⁴

Bringing Case Within Statutory Exceptions. — Where a statute exists prohibiting actions upon judgments except in certain named cases, the petition in such an action must show that the case falls within some of such exceptions.⁵

Original Cause of Action. — It is of the very essence of debt upon a judgment that the obligation should result from the record itself.⁶ Accordingly, where the judgment sued on is sufficiently described, no description of the cause of action whereon it was founded is necessary,⁷ nor is it necessary to same manner as if his real name were used. Behrensmeyer v. Kreitz, 135 Ill. 591.

Sufficiency of Averment of Identity. — In an action upon a judgment an averment in the complaint that the judgment was rendered against the defendant by another name is sufficient to show that he is bound by the judgment. Bloomfield R. Co. v. Burress, 82 Ind. 83; Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. (U. S.) 404.

1. Masterson v. Matthews, 60 Ala. 260; Moss v. Shannon, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 175; Pennington v. Gibson, 16 How. (U. S.) 65.

An Assignee of a judgment, suing thereon, need not aver a demand of payment by him or a refusal of the debtor to pay. Moss v. Shannon, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 175.

2. In California the petition need not allege that the plaintiff was authorized by an order of court to institute the action. Bronzan v. Drobaz, 93 Cal. 650. Compare Graham v. Scripture, 26 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 501. See also supra, XVIII. 1. a. (1) (c) dd. Objections to Want of Leave.

3. Denison v. Williams, 4 Conn. 402; Ives v. Finch, 28 Conn. 114.

It is unnecessary to aver that an execution has been sued on the judgment and an unsuccessful effort made to collect it. King v. Blood, 41 Cal. 314.

4. Pitzer v. Russel, 4 Oregon 124, holding that where a judgment creditor had neglected for more than one year to file a transcript of his judgment with the county clerk, and had thereby lost his power to levy on real estate, and the complaint contained no explanation of the delay, the complaint did not lay a foundation for an action upon the judgment, as a necessity for suing which is caused by the plaintiff's own fault is not sufficient.

5. Moore v. Coleman, 4 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 21.

6. The record imports absolute and complete verity. It is neither to be increased nor diminished by any averment out of or beyond the record, and must show a still subsisting obligation, perfect in its inception, and still unsatisfied. Dimick v. Brooks, 21 Vt. 569, approved in Pratt v. Jones, 22 Vt. 341.

7. Sims v. Herzfeld, 95 Ala. 145; Omaha First Nat. Bank v. Crosby, 179 Pa. St. 63.

In suing a stockholder on a judgment against the corporation the original liability need not be described. Miller v. White, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 504.

Adding Count on Original Debt by Amendment. — In an action of debt on allege its justness and the consideration therefor.¹

Judgments of Foreign and Sister States. — It has been held that the judgments of courts of sister states must be treated as domestic records in pleadings,² and accordingly it is not necessary to allege or prove that a judgment of a sister state was warranted by the law of such state.³ But in case of a foreign judgment, it seems that the laws and practice of the court should be alleged.⁴

b. DESCRIPTION OF JUDGMENT — (1) Statement of Rule. — As a general rule, judgments should be described with certainty and a foreign judgment with a single count the writ is not amendable by inserting a count on the original cause of indebtedness on which the judgment is founded. Latine v. Cléments, 3 Ga. 426.

Construction of Complaint. — A complaint which avers that the defendant made his note, that the plaintiff commenced an action on the note and obtained judgment, and that no part of the note or judgment has been paid, states a cause of action on the judgment and not on the note, and does not state two causes of action. Anderson v. Mayers, 50 Cal. 525.

Allegations in a complaint, based on a foreign judgment, relating to a covenant on which that judgment was based, are not to be construed as an attempt to set out an independent cause of action on such covenant, where a material averment of such cause of action is wanting and where the allegations, though not necessary, are proper in the action on the judgment. Krower v. Reynolds, 99 N. Y. 245, reversing 19 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 383.

In the following cases the declaration was construed to state a cause of action upon the judgment, and not upon the original cause of action. Teel v. Yost, 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. 456; Sheldon v. Mirick, 70 Hun (N. Y.) 41.

3. Miller v. Leach, 95 N. Car. 229.

Alleging Foreign Law. — In an action on a foreign judgment it will be presumed that the laws of the foreign state in regard to the term at which the judgment should be rendered are the same as the laws of the state where the action is brought. Thurmond v. Georgia Bank, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. Rep. 317.

Where the judgment was rendered by a special judge, it is unnecessary to allege and prove the laws authorizing the appointment of a special judge. Henry v. Allen, 82 Tex. 35.

Judicial Notice. — It seems that in an action upon a judgment of a sister state, authenticated under the Acts of Congress, the court would take judicial notice of the laws of the state in which the judgment was rendered. Under general allegations in an action upon such judgment, the constitution and laws of the sister state would be admissible without being specially pleaded to show the regularity of such judgment. Henry v. Allen, 82 Tex. 35. But see Elliott v. Ray, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 31, wherein it was held, in an action of debt on a decree in chancery in another state, that if the decree has by statute of that state the force and effect of a judgment at law, that fact should be averred and proved, as the statutes of other states are not noticed without proof. To the same effect is Hinson v. Wall, 20 Ala. 298, wherein it was held that if the record of a judgment was insufficient in the state where sued upon, although sufficient in the state where rendered, such fact should be averred in the declaration, and then the laws and practice of such state would be evidence, and under the Act of Congress the judgment would then be given full faith and credit.

4. Wright v. Chapin, 87 Hun (N. Y.) 144, holding that an allegation that under the laws of a foreign country and the rules and practice of its court a judgment has a certain effect is sufficient to authorize the admission of evidence as to such laws, rules, and practice. See also prior report of same case, Wright v. Chapin, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 521.

particularity.¹ A declaration on a judgment is sufficient where it describes the court which rendered the judgment,² the place where the court was held,³ the names of the parties,⁴ the date at which the judgment was entered,⁵ and the amount of the judgment.⁶

1. Lawrence v. Willoughby, 1 Minn. 87; Whitaker v. Bramson, 2 Paine (U. S.) 209.

In pleading or replying a judgment as an estoppel more minuteness must be observed than in declaring upon it. It must appear that precisely the same question was decided in the former action and that the decision was upon the merits. Big. on Estop. (4th ed.) 672; Gilbreath v. Jones, 66 Ala. 129; Krutsinger v. Brown, 72 Ind. 466; Temple v. Williams, 91 N. Car. 82; Fowlkes v. State, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 14. This exactness may be escaped by pleading the general issue, when the judgment would be admissible in evidence under it. See Big. on Estop. (4th ed.) 672. For a sufficient plea of former judgment, see Langmead v. Maple, 18 C. B. N. S. 255, 114 E. C. L. 255; Big. on Estop. (4th ed.) 674. See also article FORMER ADJUDICATION, vol. 9, p. 611.

When a judgment is set up to establish some collateral fact, it must be pleaded more strictly than is necessary when it is pleaded in bar of the action. Aurora City v. West, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 82; Perkins v. Walker, 19 Vt. 144.

Inconsistent Averments in Complaint — One or More Counts. — When the complaint contains but a single count, inconsistent or contradictory averments in the statement or description of the cause of action are grounds of demurrer; but not when the complaint contains two or more counts, varying the descriptive averments. Andrews v. Flack, 88 Ala. 294.

2. Description of Court Rendering Judgment. — Ewing v. Jennings, 15 Nev. 379; Packard v. Hill, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 434; Duyckinck v. Clinton Mut. Ins. Co., 23 N. J. L. 279; Andrews v. Flack, 88 Ala. 294; Memphis Medical College v. Newton, 2 Handy (Ohio) 163; Bement v. Wisner, 1 Code Rep. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 143.

A paper, purporting to be a record of a judgment, which fails to show by what court it was rendered, or when, or for what cause of action, is a nullity and inadmissible. Bevington v. Buck, 18 Ind. 414.

A complaint alleging that on the 16th day of March, 1877, in the Porter Circuit Court, the plaintiff's intestate, naming her, recovered a judgment, etc., sufficiently shows that the judgment was "duly rendered," and when and where. Hansford v. Van Auker, 79 Ind. 157.

3. Place Where Court Was Held. — Ewing v. Jennings, 15 Nev. 379; Packard v. Hill, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 434; Duyckinck v. Clinton Mut. Ins. Co., 23 N. J. L. 279; Andrews v. Flack, 88 Ala. 294. See also American Linen Thread Co. v. Sheldon, 31 N. J. L. 420.

4. Names of Parties. — Ewing v. Jennings, 15 Nev. 379; Packard v. Hill, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 434; Andrews v. Flack, 88 Ala. 294; Memphis Medical College v. Newton, 2 Handy (Ohio) 163.

In Mink v. Shaffer, 124 Pa. St. 280, the declaration alleged that the original plaintiff had assigned the judgment to the plaintiff in the latter action, and referred to the transcript which was annexed to the declaration. The transcript contained the names of the parties and counsel, the date of trial, verdict, and judgment, and the amount of the judgment. This declaration was held sufficient to require an affidavit of defense. Compare Memphis Medical College v. Newton, 2 Handy (Ohio) 163, abstracted in second succeeding note.

5. Date of Judgment. — Ewing v. Jennings, 15 Nev. 379; Packard v. Hill, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 434; Duyckinck v. Clinton Mut. Ins. Co., 23 N. J. L. 279; Andrews v. Flack, 88 Ala. 294; Mink v. Shaffer, 124 Pa. St. 280.

An averment of the date of rendition as being "on or about" is sufficient on demurrer. The proper remedy is by motion to make more definite and certain. Bement v. Wisner, 1 Code Rep. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 143.

It is not a good ground of demurrer, though specially assigned, that the petition misdescribes the date of the judgment sued upon, an exemplification of which is made a part of the petition. Garvin v. St. Clair, 17 Tex. 435.

In declaring on a judgment, where the cause was taken under advisement, the judgment is properly described as of the date of its entry, not of the date of submission for decision. Chase v. De Wolf, 69 Ill. 47.

6. Amount of Judgment. — Ewing v.

In Hæc Verba. — A judgment need not be set out in hæc verba. It is sufficient to set it out according to its legal effect.¹

Judgment Affirmed on Appeal. — A declaration in an action on a judgment affirmed upon appeal may be upon the judgment as rendered by the court below.²

(2) Averment of Amount. — As was seen in the last preceding section, the amount of a judgment must be alleged as an element of its description. Where the complaint consists of two or more counts, the counts may vary the amount alleged to have been recovered.³ A declaration setting forth the recovery of a judgment for a certain sum as damages and another certain sum as costs is sufficient.⁴

Costs need not be averred in describing the judgment, but if averred must be correctly stated.⁵

Jennings, 15 Nev. 379; Andrews v. Flack, 88 Ala. 294; Packard v. Hill, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 434; Duyckinck v. Clinton Mut. Ins. Co., 23 N. J. L. 279; Mink v. Shaffer, 124 Pa. St. 280.

In a suit on a judgment in a court of another state, the petition must show the court in which the judgment was rendered, the term at which it was rendered, the parties, and the sum recovered, as in the old action of debt; and these facts must appear in the body of the petition, without any reference to the transcript of the record, which is only used as evidence. Memphis Medical College v. Newton, 2 Handy (Ohio) 163. Compare Mink v. Shaffer, 124 Pa. St. 280. See also succeeding section, (2) Averment of Amount.

1. Central Bank v. Veasey, 14 Ark. 671.

2. Dow v. Blake, 148 Ill. 76. In this case the court said: "It is not, therefore, necessary to declare upon the foreign judgment as disposed of by the appellate court, but only as rendered by the inferior court; especially where, as is the case here, the judgment of the inferior court does not show upon its face that an appeal from it has been taken. The pendency of an appeal which operates as a stay is a matter to be proven as a defense to, or in suspension of, the action. In the present suit, however, the proof introduced by the defendant shows that the appeal was not pending, but had been disposed of by an affirmance of the judgment by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin."

3. "A complaint which consists of one count only, in which the sum claimed is variant or contradictory, is obnoxious to demurrer; but when it consists of two or more counts, the different counts may vary the descriptive allegations of the cause of action." Andrews v. Flack, 88 Ala. 294.

A less sum than is demanded may be recovered in debt on judgments and specialties, as well as in debt on simple contracts; though a variance between the description of the instrument declared upon, and that offered in evidence, would be fatal. Keyes v. Throop, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 276.

4. O'Neal v. Kittredge, 3 Allen (Mass.) 470.

5. Adair v. Rogers, Wright (Ohio) 428.

Declaration for Damages Omitting Costs. — A justice's judgment is not necessarily invalidated by an excessive allowance of costs, and such judgment may be sued over again for the damages only. Whelpley v. Nash, 46 Mich. 25.

Where the declaration is for the amount of a judgment, and is silent as to costs, it is no variance if the record shows a recovery also of costs. Adair v. Rogers, Wright (Ohio) 428.

Declaration for Costs. — In describing a judgment, the rules of pleading require a succinct and accurate statement of the recovery; and where a judgment for costs is stated, the plaintiff must aver that some certain amount was adjudged for his costs, or, if adjudged generally, aver an amount under a videlicet. Mitchell v. Gibson, 14 Ark. 224.

In Caldwell v. Bell, 3 Ark. 419, it was held that when no specific sum is adjudged to a party for his costs, he should not, in declaring upon such a

Judgment to Be Discharged by Lesser Sum. — Where a judgment is rendered for a certain sum to be discharged by a lesser sum, in describing the judgment the former sum should be averred.¹

(3) Variance. — A party declaring upon a record must show at the trial of the issue, on a plea of nul tiel record, such a record as he has described in his declaration, or there will be a fatal variance,² judgment, describe it as a judgment for costs in numero, but should describe it truly, and then by appropriate averments show the amount of costs to which he is entitled upon and by virtue of the judgment. But it is not necessary that the averment should state the exact amount of costs recovered by such judgment; it will be sufficient to state a sum large enough to cover the amount of costs. Shelton v. Clark, 7 Ark. 194.

1. In an action on the case for not satisfying a judgment for $1,500, entered by confession on a judgment bond with the sum of $789.45 indorsed as the real debt thereof in the margin of it upon the record, if the real debt is alleged in the declaration to be the amount for which the judgment was recovered, instead of $1,500, the variance will be fatal. Lofland v. Cade, 3 Houst. (Del.) 222. See also, to the same effect, Roane v. Drummond, 6 Rand. (Va.) 182, wherein it was further held that if the declaration demands a wrong sum, and no special demurer is filed, the error is cured by the statute of jeofails, there being enough in the declaration to show the true amount of the judgment. But see Carter v. Crews, 2 Port. (Ala.) 81, where it was held not to be error to declare for the lesser sum.

Where the issue of nul tiel record was found for the plaintiff in an action on a judgment rendered for the penalty of a bond, and it appeared to be the practice in the state where the judgment was rendered to issue a feri facias only for the sum actually due, it was held that execution should be awarded for such sum only. Rathbone v. Rathbone, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 1.

2. Butler v. Owen, 7 Ark. 369.

Fatal Variances — Illustrations. — Averment, a recovery in debt; proof, a judgment in partition charging plaintiff's purport with owelty. Davis v. Norris, 8 Pa. St. 122.

Amount of Judgment. — Averment, judgment for twelve and a half cents costs; proof, judgment for forty-seven and a half cents costs. Adair v. Rogers, Wright (Ohio) 428.

Averment, judgment for a sum certain as costs; proof, a judgment for costs taxed at an amount left blank. Noyes v. Newmarch, 1 Allen (Mass.) 51.

Averment, judgment for a specified amount of damages and a specified amount of costs; proof, judgment specifying amount of damages and awarding costs generally. Butler v. Owen, 7 Ark. 369; Lackland v. Pritchett, 12 Mo. 484; Lawrence v. Wiloughby, 1 Minn. 87.

Averment, judgment for a sum certain; proof, judgment for such sum with interest. Thompson v. Jameson, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 282.

Date of Judgment. — Averment, judgment dated August 16, 1799; proof, judgment recovered on August 17, 1799. Gulick v. Loder, 14 N. J. L. 572.

Averment, judgment rendered at December term, 1830; proof, judgment rendered at December term, 1831, nunc pro tunc. Howard v. Cousins, 7 How. (Miss.) 114.

Averment, judgment rendered on the 23d of October; proof, judgment rendered on the 19th of October. Silver Lake Bank v. Hardin, Wright (Ohio) 430.

Parties. — Henry V. Libhart is not entitled to recover in an action upon a judgment in favor of H. V. Libhart, without any allegation or proof of his identity with the party in whose favor the judgment was rendered. The fact that the judgment was received in evidence by consent does not preclude the defendant from disputing the right to recover on it; proof of the judgment was only one of the steps necessary to make out a case. Bennett v. Libhart, 27 Mich. 489.

In an action of debt on a judgment, the plaintiffs averred that the plaintiff called in the judgment S. C. is the same person called in this action Samuel C.; and that the plaintiff called in the judgment Samuel G. is the same person called in this action Andrew it being a well-settled rule that descriptive allegations must

G.; that the plaintiffs herein truly named are the same persons called in the judgment by the names of S. C. and Samuel G; plea, nul tiel record. The judgment when produced was found to answer the description, and the plaintiffs proved their true names as alleged, and their identity with the plaintiffs in the judgment. It was held that there was no variance for which the plaintiffs could be nonsuited; and that the plaintiffs might, under the pleadings, prove that they were in fact the plaintiffs in the judgment misnamed therein. Barry v. Carothers, 6 Rich. (S. Car.) 331.

A judgment entered by default against "A. Schwarz" does not at common law authorize an action upon the judgment in another state against "Anton Schwarz," in the absence of evidence in the record or otherwise showing that the letter "A." was used as an abbreviation for the defendant's name, or that the defendant's name was unknown. Wiehle v. Schwarz, 54 N. Y. Super. Ct. 169, citing Farnham v. Hildreth, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 278; Grant v. Birdsall, 48 N. Y. Super. Ct. 428.

A declaration against Barnard H. is not supported by a record of a judgment against Barent H. Ducommun v. Hysinger, 14 Ill. 249.

Averment, judgment against one person; proof, judgment against two or more persons jointly. Hallum v. Dickinson, 47 Ark. 120; Lawrence v. Willoughby, 1 Minn. 87.

Where an action upon a foreign judgment rendered against two, one of whom was not served with process, is brought against the party as upon a joint judgment, he may show the variance upon a proper plea, and so exclude the record when offered as proof. Smith v. Smith, 17 Ill. 482. See also Dart v. Goss, 24 Mich. 266.

Averment, judgment for damages and costs in solido; proof, judgment for damages and costs separately. Frevert v. Swift, 19 Nev. 400.

Averment of a judgment for a certain amount, saying nothing as to costs; proof, judgment for such amount and also for costs. Adair v. Rogers, Wright (Ohio) 428.

Averment of a judgment for a named sum as costs; proof, a judgment for costs generally, elsewhere taxed at the sum named. Hunt v. Middlesworth, 44 Mich. 448.

In a suit on a judgment where the declaration sets out the amount of the judgment correctly, the circumstance that the sum named in the queritur is less is not material. Harris v. Muskingum Mfg. Co., 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 267.

Date of Judgment. — Where a plaintiff who sues on a judgment states in the petition that the judgment was rendered April 15, 1872, at a term of the court begun and held April 18, 1872, but in these allegations does not attempt to recite the record, the allegations of time are immaterial, and that the plaintiff may, under such allegations, show that the judgment was rendered April 18, 1872. Haynes v. Cowen, 15 Kan. 637. See also, as to variances in date, Lazier v. Westcott, 26 N. Y. 146.

Parties. — An objection that the clerk's certificate to the transcript of the foreign judgment in suit recites a suit against more than one defendant, whereas the suit, originally brought against the defendant and another, was dismissed as to the other before trial, is without merit where the record shows that the plaintiffs and defendant are identical with the plaintiffs and defendant in the foreign suit. Gates v. Newman, (Ind. App. 1897) 46 N. E. Rep. 654.

Averment of a judgment against E

c. AVERMENT OF JURISDICTION — (1) Courts of General Jurisdiction — (a) Domestic. — In an action upon a judgment rendered by a domestic court of general jurisdiction, the facts conferring jurisdiction to render such a judgment need not be alleged, because in such case jurisdiction will be presumed.² A declaration alleging the judgment to have been "duly" given or rendered is sufficient.³ But even the allegation that the judgment was duly rendered is unnecessary,⁴ and it is sufficient to allege merely

In an action against Brenham on a judgment recovered in California, the record showed service on "defendant Brennan" and others personally. It did not appear that any one named Brennan was connected with the action. It was held that the variance did not affect the validity of the judgment. Miller v. Brenham, 68 N. Y. 83.

Averment, judgment in personal capacity; proof, judgment in representative capacity. Barringer v. Boyd, 27 Miss. 473. See also Stewart v. Spaulding, 72 Cal. 264.

1. Butler v. Owen, 7 Ark. 369.

The transcript must correspond to the declaration, or it cannot be read in the evidence. Lawrence v. Wiloughby, 1 Minn. 87.

Substantial Conformity between the judgment described and the judgment shown by the transcript introduced in evidence is sufficient to prevent a fatal variance. Bailey v. Martin, 119 Ind. 103.

"If there is a material variance it will be fatal. But if substantially proved as alleged it will suffice. The averments and proof should be substantially identical, though it is not absolutely essential that the precise words of the record be followed. 'Surplusage, or immaterial omissions not matters of substance,' as the court remarks in Whitaker v. Bramson, 2 Paine (U. S.) 209, 'are attended with no other consequences than in other cases.' " Lancaster v. Richmond, 83 Me. 534.

A count on a judgment of the Marine Court, which is a court of record, alleging that the plaintiff levied his plaint in said court, against the defendant, for a cause arising within the jurisdiction of said court, and such proceedings were thereupon had, that judgment was obtained, etc., is sufficient to show that the court had jurisdiction of the defendant's person. *Bennet v. Sufficiency of Declaration. — The declaration need not allege either the

The declaration on a judgment against a married woman need not allege all the jurisdictional facts, nor allege the law of the sister state on the liability of married women. Thompson v. Owen, 8 Kulp (Pa.) 36.

If the court in fact failed to get jurisdiction to render such judgment, that fact must be pleaded by the defendant, unless it appears positively from the record, in which case objection may be taken to the reading of the record in evidence. Jarvis v. Robinson, 21 Wis. 524.

A judgment of the United States Circuit Court is sufficiently pleaded by alleging that the plaintiffs on, etc., at a Circuit Court of the United States for the district of, etc., by the judgment and consideration of said court, having jurisdiction therein, recovered judgment against the defendants for the sum of, etc., damages and costs, which judgment was duly given by said court, and still stands in full force and effect, not satisfied or annulled, and the plaintiffs say the defendants are indebted, etc. Jurisdiction is intended of the judgments of the United States Circuit Courts. Ex p. Watkins, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 207; Bement v. Wisner, 1 Code Rep. N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 143.

In Kibbe v. Kibbe, Kirby (Conn.) 119, the court said that the jurisdictional facts should appear in the plaintiff's declaration in an action upon a judgment of a sister state. See also Wehrman v. Reakirt, 2 Cinc. Super. Ct. Rep. 29; Ashley v. Laird, 14 Ind. 222.

A Plea of a Foreign Judgment must contain an allegation that the court had jurisdiction, or so much of the proceedings must be spread on the record as will show affirmatively that the court had jurisdiction. Burnham v. Webster, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2178.

5. Connecticut. — Fisher v. Fielding, 67 Conn. 92.

Averment that Court Was One of General Jurisdiction. — An allegation that the court rendering the judgment was a court of record or of general jurisdiction is sufficient to raise a presumption that it had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties.¹ But it seems that it is not even necessary to allege that the court was a court of record or of general jurisdiction.²

At Common Law, in suits on foreign judgments, it does not seem to have been necessary to aver jurisdiction in the court rendering the judgment. Butcher v. Brownsville Bank, 2 Kan. 70, citing 2 Chitty's Plead., p. 414, N. C.; Comyns's Dig., tit. Pleader, 2. W. 12 and E. 18. See also Robertson v. Struth, 5 Q. B. 941, 48 E. C. L. 941; Barber v. Lamb, 8 C. B. N. S. 95, 98 E. C. L. 95; Gunn v. Peakes, 36 Minn. 177; Bruckman v. Taussig, 7 Colo. 561.

An allegation that an English judgment was "duly given, made, and entered" is sufficient as against a general demurrer. Dore v. Thornburgh, 60 Ca. 64.

In Douglas v. Forrest, 4 Bing. 686, 15 E. C. L. 113, the jurisdiction of the foreign court was not alleged except in general terms, but the transcript showed the method of service, and parol evidence was admitted to show the legality of such service by the foreign law.

The same presumptions arise in an action on a judgment of a sister state in favor of the jurisdiction of the person and of the regularity of the proceeding that would arise upon a domestic judgment. Rae v. Hulbert, 17 Ill. 572.

In Karns v. Kunkle, 2 Minn. 313, it was held that judgments of sister states are so far foreign judgments that in actions on them jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the defendant must be alleged. This decision was followed in Smith v. Mulliken, 2 Minn. 319; but in Gunn v. Peakes, 36 Minn. 177, the case of Karns v. Kunkle, 2 Minn. 313 was declared wrong, both in reason and upon authority, and it was held that a judgment of a foreign court (in this case Nova Scotia), complete and regular upon its face, is prima facie valid, and consequently that a complaint upon such judgment need not allege jurisdiction either of the cause or of the parties.

1. Averment of General Jurisdiction Sufficient. — Indiana. — Gates v. Newman, (Ind. App. 1897) 46 N. E. Rep. 654.

Wisconsin. — Kunze v. Kunze, 94 Wis. 54.

United States. — Tenney v. Townsend, 9 Blatchf. (U. S.) 274; Pennington v. Gibson, 16 How. (U. S.) 65.

In an action upon a judgment rendered in another state, if the complaint shows that the court by which the judgment was rendered was one of general jurisdiction, it need not allege any jurisdictional facts. Jarvis v. Robinson, 21 Wis. 523.

Want of jurisdiction is a fact to be set up by answer. Kunze v. Kunze, 94 Wis. 54.

Sufficiency of Averment that Court Was a Court of Record. — Where the declaration on a judgment of a sister state follows the form of debt on a domestic judgment and concludes "as by the record and proceedings thereof remaining in said court fully appears," it is sufficiently alleged that the court was a court of record. Davis v. Lane, 2 Ind. 548.

2. Rae v. Hulbert, 17 Ill. 572; Phelps v. Duffy, 11 Nev. 80.

In McLaughlin v. Nichols, 13 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 244, it was held that a complaint on a judgment of a county Circuit Court of another state must either aver the existence of a general jurisdiction in such court or it must allege a limited jurisdiction which extended to the cause of action for which the judgment was recovered, and that the court had jurisdiction of the person of the defendant. Compare

Judicial Notice of Character of Court. — Where the court rendering the judgment sued on is designated as a Court of Common Pleas,¹ or a Circuit Court,² judicial notice will be taken of the fact that such courts are courts of general jurisdiction.³

Various Forms of Declarations or petitions held sufficiently to aver jurisdiction are set out below in the notes.⁴

Rae v. Hulbert, 17 Ill. 572; Williams v. Preston, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 600; Reid v. Boyd, 13 Tex. 241, in which case it was held that the declaration need not aver jurisdiction, either general or special, of the subject-matter or the person, if the judgment be that of a court of record. The question of jurisdiction of the person is one of evidence at the trial of the action on the judgment.

The court will take notice that there was jurisdiction of the subject-matter. Rae v. Hulbert, 17 Ill. 572.

1. Court of Common Pleas. — In Butcher v. Brownsville Bank, 2 Kan. 70, the petition set out a judgment recovered in the Court of Common Pleas in Pennsylvania, and it was held that the courts of Kansas would take judicial notice of the Constitution of Pennsylvania, and, therefore, that the Court of Common Pleas in Pennsylvania is a common-law court having original and appellate jurisdiction, and that a judgment obtained therein in a regular course of common law is conclusive.

2. Circuit Court. — An allegation in the complaint that the judgment was rendered by "the Circuit Court of Kent county, state of Michigan," was held a sufficient averment that it was rendered by a court of general jurisdiction, such being the general character of the Circuit Courts of the states of this Union. Jarvis v. Robinson, 21 Wis. 524. To the same effect see Specklemeyer v. Dailey, 23 Neb. 101, wherein it was held that the courts of one state would take judicial notice of the fact that the Circuit Courts of sister states are courts of general jurisdiction.

3. Marine Court. — "In Archer v. Romaine, 14 Wis. 375, this court inferred that the Marine Court of the city of New York was a court of special jurisdiction, from the fact that the complaint alleged that the judgment was "duly given" in that court, so as to bring the case within the provisions of section 23, c. 125, Rev. Stat. The jurisdiction of the Marine Court, whether special or general, was not alleged. I think the fact that it was not a court of general jurisdiction was properly assumed from its name." Jarvis v. Robinson, 21 Wis. 524.

4. Sufficient Declarations — Illustrations. — A petition which alleged that "on the 11th day of September, 1882, in the Superior Court of Guinnett county, Ga., being then and there a court of record, with jurisdiction in the premises, plaintiff herein recovered of defendant herein, by the judgment and consideration of said court, a personal judgment for the sum of," etc., was held to be sufficient in Thurmond v. Georgia Bank, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. Rep. 317.

The complaint alleged that at the date named, at Baltimore, in the state of Maryland, the Baltimore City Court, being a court of general jurisdiction, in an action therein pending between the plaintiff and defendant, by its judgment therein duly given and made, adjudged, etc. It was held that this was a sufficient averment of the jurisdiction of the court. Meredith v. Santa Clara Min. Assoc., 56 Cal. 178.

The complaint in an action on a judgment alleged that the judgment was joint as to all the defendants, and several as to the defendant B.; that B. had been personally served with summons in Brooklyn, N. Y.; that he appeared by counsel; that judgment was duly rendered against him; that the City Court of Brooklyn was a court of record; and that, under the constitution and laws of New York, it had jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action. It was held sufficiently to state a cause of action against B. Schenk v. Birdseye, 2 Idaho 130.

"As to the complaint, Code, § 481, provides that the complaint shall set forth 'a plain and concise statement of the facts constituting each cause of action, without unnecessary repetition;' and the plaintiff is only required, under the system of pleading now prevailing in this state, to state concisely those facts which go to make up his cause of action, and which, upon a general denial, he must prove, in order to show himself entitled to a judgment. The complaint alleges the recovery of a judgment against the defendant in a court of Connecticut, and that that court was a court of general jurisdiction, directing the payment to plaintiff of certain specified sums of money. The complaint also alleges personal service upon the defendant of the process of that court, thus giving the court jurisdiction of the person. In fact, the jurisdiction of the court of the subject-matter of the action, of its jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, and of the recovery of the judgment, are admitted by the demurrer, which concedes all the facts stated in the complaint. The demurrer was therefore properly overruled, and the judgment appealed from must be affirmed, with costs to the respondent." Crane v. Crane, (City Ct.) 19 N. Y. Supp. 693. See also Bell v. Good, 22 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. City Ct.) 317, 356.

(2) Courts of Inferior Jurisdiction — (a) In Absence of Statute — Statement of Rule. — In an action on a judgment of an inferior court or court of limited jurisdiction, in the absence of a statute changing the rule, it is necessary to aver in detail all the facts conferring jurisdiction of both the subject-matter and the person of the defendant.¹

"The ultimate facts that the court in which the judgment was rendered was a court of general jurisdiction, and that the summons and a copy of the complaint were duly and personally served upon the defendant, were all that it was necessary to allege in the complaint. The probative facts requisite to prove these ultimate facts were matters of evidence, and were not required to be set out in the complaint. The recitals in the judgment and accompanying affidavits were prima facie evidence, at least, of the facts giving the court jurisdiction. D'Arcy v. Ketchum, 11 How. (U. S.) 165; Lafayette Ins. Co. v. French, 18 How. (U. S.) 404; St. Clair v. Cox, 106 U. S. 350." Gude v. Dakota F. & M. Ins. Co., 7 S. Dak. 644.

Declaration Held Insufficient. — A mere averment that a judgment had been recovered in another state by the assignor of the plaintiff against the defendant, without alleging that it was duly recovered, or proof on the trial of any fact or circumstances indicating that the defendant had been made a party to the former action by the service of process, either actually or constructively, upon him, was held not to establish the plaintiff's right of recovery, notwithstanding the admissions to be derived constructively from the omission to deny the complaint. Horton v. Shepherd, 14 N. Y. W'kly Dig. 453.

See in general article JURISDICTION, vol. 12, p. 114.

There Is No Distinction Between the Declaration and Other Pleadings, according to the better opinion, in respect to the method of pleading jurisdictional facts in alleging a judgment of an inferior court. Turner v. Roby, 3 N. Y. 193; Barnes v. Harris, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 603, 4 N. Y. 375; Lawton v. Erwin, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 233; Cornell v. Barnes, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 35 and note. But see Nicholl v. Mason, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 339. And see cases cited supra, p. 1132.

In Michigan it was held, in Goodsell v. Leonard, 23 Mich. 374, that a declaration on a justice's judgment requires no further allegation in regard to jurisdiction than would be required in a suit upon the judgment of a court of record.

A Mere General Averment of Jurisdiction will not be sufficient, but the facts conferring it must be alleged in detail, so that the court can see that there was in fact jurisdiction.¹

To Show Jurisdiction over the Person, it is necessary to aver either that the party appeared or that process was sued out and duly served on him.²

Jurisdiction of the Subject-matter is sufficiently averred when the facts pleaded as to the amount and nature of the claim show that it is within the provisions of the statute conferring jurisdiction upon the court. It is not necessary to plead such statute, as the court will take judicial notice of it.³

Sufficiency of Averment — Approved Precedents. — In Barnes v. Harris, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 603, Morehouse, J., after stating that it was not necessary to set out the proceedings at large, but that they might be included under a general allegation of taliter processum fuit, said: "Under this general rule another principle of pleading is to be kept in view: that facts are to be stated for the information of the court, not arguments, or inferences, or matters of law. Facts, then, must be shown to give jurisdiction, not a mere averment of jurisdiction; and it must be complete, that is, the court must be shown to have had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the persons affected by the proceeding or judgment. The case of Smith v. Mumford, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 26, furnishes, apparently, an approved precedent of a declaration in debt on a judgment in a justice's court, short of this, in not showing jurisdiction of the person; and so also does Stiles v. Stewart, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 473. The former case was brought before the court upon demurrer to the evidence, and the latter in arrest of judgment. The court do not, however, in either case, advert to the circumstance as affecting the rule. Upon established principles they were good after verdict, though bad before. The case of Cleveland v. Rogers, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 438, lays down what I esteem the true rule on the subject. It is referred to in Stiles v. Stewart, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 473, with the remark that it must be considered as confined to a case of an avowry or other pleading subsequent to the declaration, where greater certainty was required. Lawton v. Erwin, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 233, confirming the rule in 6 Wendell, was not referred to. In Cornell v. Barnes, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 35, the rule as above laid down was reasserted."

2. Cornell v. Barnes, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 35; Nicholl v. Mason, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 339; Turner v. Roby, 3 N. Y. 193.

Must Allege Process or Appearance. — In a note to Cornell v. Barnes, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 39, Mr. Hill says: "The allegations showing jurisdiction of the person will of course vary according to the mode of proceeding prescribed for and adopted by the inferior court; and it is scarcely necessary to mention that the precedents to be found in the English books on pleading are not to be too closely followed in this respect. In setting forth the judgment of a justice of the peace, the pleader should pursue the course indicated by the case reported in the text; that is, begin by alleging the issuing and service of the summons or other process by which the suit was commenced, and then pass to the rendition of the judgment by a taliter processum fuit, etc. See Hoose v. Sherrill, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 33; Cleveland v. Rogers, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 438. If jurisdiction in the case was acquired independently of the process, as by the party appearing and joining issue upon the merits, the pleading should state the matter accordingly. See Cornell v. Barnes, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 39, reported in the text, in connection with Onderdonk v. Ranlett, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 327, and the cases there cited."

3. Masterson v. Matthews, 60 Ala. 260; Stiles v. Stewart, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 473, 27 Am. Dec. 142.

After Verdict, want of allegation of jurisdictional facts will be deemed cured.¹

There Is an Exception to the General Rule of pleading here stated. Where, on nonsuit or otherwise, judgment is rendered in favor of the defendant for costs in a suit on such judgment, the facts conferring jurisdiction need not be averred.²

Judgment of Sister State.—These general rules apply in full force to actions on judgments of justices of the peace of sister states, and in such case the jurisdictional facts must be alleged.³ It seems, however, that the statute conferring jurisdiction upon the justice must be pleaded.⁴ This is because at common-law justices of the peace had no civil jurisdiction, and the courts of one state will not take judicial notice of the laws of another state.⁵

1. Stiles v. Stewart, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 473, 27 Am. Dec. 142; Turner v. Roby, 3 N. Y. 193; Barnes v. Harris, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 603; Groff v. Griswold, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 432; Bentley v. Donnelly, 8 T. R. 127; Bull v. Steward, 1 Wils. 255.

2. Turner v. Roby, 3 N. Y. 193.

Reason for Exception.—"When the plaintiff in an inferior court suffers a judgment of nonsuit, and an action is brought against him on the judgment to recover the costs which were adjudged to the defendant, the pleader need not aver that a plaintiff was levied in the inferior court for a cause of action arising within its jurisdiction; for although the plaintiff had no cause of action, and was nonsuited for that reason, he must pay the defendant's costs. Murray v. Wilson, 1 Wils. 316. And the same principle will apply in declaring upon any judgment for the defendant in an inferior court, where the only object is to recover the costs which were adjudged to the defendant in that action. But the rule is different where, as in this case, the plaintiff had judgment in the inferior court, and the judgment is pleaded in bar of another action; for if the inferior court had no jurisdiction, the judgment is void, and cannot be enforced by execution; and if the plaintiff cannot sue on the original cause of action, he is without remedy. In such a case the pleader should follow the general rule, and show that the inferior court had jurisdiction to give a judgment which would bar another action. And the principle must be the same in all cases where the former recovery is set up as a bar to another action." Turner v. Roby, 3 N. Y. 193.

In Murray v. Wilson, 1 Wils. 316, it was held that a declaration on a judgment of nonsuit in an inferior court need not show that a plaintiff was levied for a cause of action arising within the jurisdiction of the court, for, as the court there said, the plaintiff's process may be illegal from beginning to end, and yet the defendant may be nevertheless entitled to his costs.

(b) Statutory Regulation — Averment that Judgment Was "Duly Given" — Statement of Rule. — By statute in most of the states it is no longer necessary to plead the jurisdictional facts in an action upon a judgment of an inferior court,¹ but it is sufficient to allege that such judgment was "duly given or made."² Under these statutory provisions the allegation that a judgment of an inferior court was duly given or made is equivalent to and is a substitute for the averments of jurisdictional facts required at common law, and dispenses with the necessity for any such averments.³

cided by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in Ohio v. Hinchman, 27 Pa. St. 479, that in suits upon judgment records of other states than that in which the suit is brought, the court should take notice of the laws of the state in which the judgment was rendered — this being necessary under the constitutional requirement to give full faith, etc., to judgments of the several states."

1. Typical Statute. — "In pleading a judgment, or other determination, of a court or officer of special jurisdiction, it shall not be necessary to state the facts conferring jurisdiction; but such judgment or determination may be stated to have been duly given or made. If such allegation be controverted, the party pleading shall be bound to establish, on the trial, the facts conferring jurisdiction." N. Y. Code Pro., § 161 (now Code Civ. Pro., § 532).

This statute is enacted in almost identical terms in nearly all of the states and territories of the United States.

Oregon. — Cougill v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 25 Oregon 360.

Object of Statute. — Section 161 of the code was expressly intended to alter the former rule (and it is abrogated in terms) that in pleading a judgment or determination of a court of inferior and limited jurisdiction, the facts conferring the jurisdiction must be specially pleaded. Now, in pleading any determination of a court of limited jurisdiction, it is not necessary to state the facts conferring jurisdiction, but such judgment or determination may simply be alleged to have been duly given or made. If that be denied, jurisdiction and all jurisdictional facts must be proved. Wheeler v. Dakin, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 537.

Justices' Judgment. — Such a statute applies to a judgment of a justice of the peace condemning land for reservoir area for a railroad. Musick v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 124 Mo. 544.

A Judgment of the Probate Court may be stated to have been duly rendered without pleading the facts conferring jurisdiction. Beans v. Emanuelli, 36 Cal. 117. Therefore a complaint by an executor or administrator sufficiently alleges his appointment if it avers by what court or officer it was made and that it was duly made. Wheeler v. Dakin, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 537.

In Oregon, under such a statute, it was held that an allegation that a judgment was duly rendered was sufficient. Toby v. Ferguson, 3 Oregon 28. But see Dick v. Wilson, 10 Oregon 490, where, without reference to any statute, it was held that the jurisdictional facts must be alleged.

3. California. — Hanscom v. Tower, 17 Cal. 518; Beans v. Emanuelli, 36 Cal. 117.

Indiana. — Willey v. Strickland, 8 Ind. 453; Crake v. Crake, 18 Ind. 156; Snyder v. Snyder, 25 Ind. 399; Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. McNulty, 34 Ind. 531.

Mississippi. — State v. Bowen, 45 Miss. 347.

Nevada. — Keys v. Grannis, 3 Nev. 548.

But the Statutory Mode of Allegation Is Not Exclusive, and the pleader may at his option allege either the jurisdictional facts or that the judgment was duly given or made, and either form will be sufficient.¹

Sufficiency of Declaration under Statute. — Where the statutory mode of declaring is adopted, either the words of the statutes or words of exactly similar import must be used.² Hence, an allegation that the plaintiff "recovered a judgment,"³ or that a judgment was "entered in said action,"⁴ without averring that it was "duly" entered, is not sufficient.⁵

New York. — Stiles v. Stewart, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 473, 27 Am. Dec. 142; Tuttle v. Robinson, 91 Hun (N. Y.) 187.

In Snyder v. Snyder, 25 Ind. 399, the suit was upon a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace in the state of Ohio. The transcript contained the following return to the summons: "Served on the 21st by leaving a copy at place of residence with Daniel Snyder." It was held that the service was insufficient at common law, and that the complaint was bad on demurrer for want of averments that the justice had jurisdiction of the subject-matter and that the service was sufficient by the law of Ohio, or the equivalent averment, made sufficient by statute, "that the judgment or decision was duly given or made."

Where There Is No Allegation that the Judgment Was Duly Given or made, and no equivalent allegation, then the facts necessary to confer jurisdiction must be averred as at common law. Crake v. Crake, 18 Ind. 156; Himmelman v. Danos, 35 Cal. 441; Tuttle v. Robinson, 91 Hun (N. Y.) 187; Shockney v. Smiley, 13 Ind. App. 181.

4. Necessity of Using Term "Duly." — Hunt v. Dutcher, 13 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 538. In this case the court said, referring to N. Y. Code Pro., § 161 (now Code Civ. Pro., § 532): "The plaintiff has not used the language of this section. He says, in the complaint, that such proceedings were had before the justice that 'judgment was entered in said action.' This is clearly not equivalent to the words that such judgment has been or was 'duly given or made.' It may not be necessary, and probably is not, to use in the pleading the precise language of the statute, but words to the same effect and substance must be used. Boyce v. Brown, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 84. To say that a judgment is entered is merely to allege the single fact of the entry of the judgment, without including an averment that it was properly or lawfully done. All this is embraced in the language of the code, that the judgment was 'duly given or made.' The word entered, or perfected, may be equivalent to the word made, or given. But the word duly is most essential. It can hardly be dispensed with and satisfy the terms of the statute. I can imagine no single word that will supply its place. The allegation that the judgment was entered would be proved by simple evidence of the actual rendition of a judgment. But the allegation that the judgment was 'duly given or made' could only be proved by establishing on the trial the facts conferring jurisdiction upon the justice, and showing that the judgment was, in all respects, lawfully and regularly obtained or rendered. The statute gives a short and simple form of pleading a judgment; and it is safest, if not indispensable, that the statute language be adopted and used when the party seeks to avail himself of this provision of the code, instead of following the common-law forms in such cases. The demurrer is well taken, and judgment must be given for the defendant thereon, with leave to the plaintiff to amend, on payment of costs."

5. Illustrations of Averments Held Sufficient. — An allegation that a judgment

Application to Courts of Record. — It seems that the statutes under discussion have no application to judgments rendered in courts of record or of general jurisdiction.¹ They have, however, sometimes been applied in actions upon judgments of superior courts of foreign or sister states.²

was "duly made by and entered in" a certain court is sufficient. Lee v. Terbell, 33 Fed. Rep. 850.

The statute is substantially complied with by an allegation that the plaintiff "recovered a judgment" against the defendant, and that "said judgment was duly docketed." Pierstoff v. Jorges, 86 Wis. 128.

An allegation that a judgment was obtained "in due course of procedure" is sufficient under Mansf. Ark. Dig., § 5067. Lazarus v. Freidheim, 51 Ark. 371.

See also, for averments held equivalent to that provided by statute, Willis v. Havemeyer, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 447.

Averment Held Insufficient. — The officer making the adjudication must be designated; therefore, a plea that certain premises were "duly sold" for the nonpayment of a tax "duly imposed," without stating by whom it was imposed, is insufficient under the New York Code, § 161 (now Code Civ. Pro., § 532). Carter v. Koezley, 9 Bosw. (N. Y.) 583, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 147.

2. Foreign Superior Courts. — "The complaint, instead of averring jurisdiction in the Pennsylvania court, follows the language of section 161 of the Code [now Code Civ. Pro., § 532], and avers that the judgment was duly recovered, etc. To this complaint a demurrer was interposed that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer presents the single question whether, in pleading the judgment of a court of record of a sister state, the provision of section 161 of the code applies. A decision upon this precise point is nowhere reported, to my knowledge. Justice Allen, in Hollister v. Hollister, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 532, said: 'It appears to be conceded that section 161 of the code does not apply to foreign judgments;' and from that inferred that 'a general averment of jurisdiction would not be sufficient,' citing Barnes v. Harris, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 603; but that case hardly sustains the learned judge in his assertion. Ayres v. Covill, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 260, also is sometimes cited as an authority to the point here under consideration, but has no bearing thereon. I can see no good reason why the same rules should not prevail in pleading the judgments of a court of record of a sister state as in pleading the judgments of such courts of our own state. Judgments of the courts of the several states have the like effect in all the states which they have in the states where rendered, and, when pleaded in an action, the same rules should govern as in pleading our own judgments; and if the allegations of the complaint be controverted, the plaintiff will then be required to establish on the trial the facts showing jurisdiction, in the court rendering the judgment, over the subject-matter and over the person of the defendant." Halstead v. Black, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 227. See also Phelps v. Duffy, 11 Nev. 80; De Nobele v. Lee, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 372.

In an action upon a judgment of a court of a foreign country, it is unnecessary for the plaintiff specifically to allege that such court had jurisdiction of the parties and subject-matter, that the defendant had reasonable notice of the institution of the suit and a fair opportunity to be heard, or that any hearing on trial was had. These facts are the indispensable conditions of the due adjudication of the foreign court, and are necessarily implied in the averment (authorized by the Practice Book, Form 169) that the court "duly adjudged" that the defendant should pay, etc. Fisher v. Fielding, 67 Conn. 91.

In Dore v. Thornburgh, 90 Cal. 64, and Stephens v. Roby, 27 Miss. 744, an averment that a foreign judgment

In Hollister v. Hollister, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 539, it was said that section 161 of the New York Code (now Code Civ. Pro., § 532), did not apply to foreign judgments, and therefore did not change the common-law rule as to pleading judgments of inferior courts in a sister state, but the statement was merely an obiter dictum. In Halstead v. Black, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 227, it was directly decided, on the other hand, that section 161 of the New York Code did apply to the judgment of a sister state, which could therefore be pleaded as having been duly given or made. The judgment involved in this case, however, was rendered by a superior court. If the statute applies at all to foreign judgments, it must apply to those of courts of inferior jurisdiction. See also De Nobele v. Lee, 47 N. Y. Super. Ct. 372.

In Karns v. Kunkle, 2 Minn. 313, followed in Smith v. Mulliken, 2 Minn. 319, it was held, citing Hollister v. Hollister, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 539, that a statute authorizing judgments of inferior courts to be pleaded as having been duly given or made did not apply to judgments of courts in foreign or sister states, either superior or inferior. These cases were overruled in so far as they held that jurisdictional facts must be alleged where the court was one of general jurisdiction, in Gunn v. Peakes, 36 Minn. 178; but this was on general principles, and the effect of the statute was neither raised nor decided. In Memphis Medical College v. Newton, 2 Handy (Ohio) 165, it was held generally that statutes of this class did not apply to judgments of domestic courts of superior jurisdiction or to judgments of courts of sister states.

3. Harlow v. Beekle, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 237; Walton v. McKesson, 64 N. Car. 77.

Justices' Judgments. — In debt upon a domestic judgment rendered by a justice of the peace, profert of the original papers or an exemplification is not required. Gardner v. Henry, 5 Coldw. (Tenn.) 458.

Judgments of Sister States. — In an action on a judgment of a Circuit Court of another state, profert of the record is not necessary. Stephenson v. McNary, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 360; Capp v. Gilman, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 45.

Profert in Replication. — A former judgment is not pleaded with a profert, but a profert is tendered in reply to the plea or replication of nul tiel record. Burnham v. Webster, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2178.

4. The Prout Patet per Recordum is sufficient even on special demurrer. Stephenson v. McNary, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 360; Capp v. Gilman, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 45.

Destruction of Record. — In Walton v. McKesson, 64 N. Car. 77, the plaintiff declared upon a judgment the record of which had been destroyed, and alleged such destruction as an excuse for not making profert; the defendant demurred, and the demurrer was sustained. The court said: "The plaintiff's remedy in this case was, upon notice to the defendants, a motion in the original suit, to have a record made of the judg-

Demurrer. — Where a profert is in fact made, however, it does not bring the judgment into the record so as to enable the defendant to demur for defects therein,¹ though it has been held that where profert is made and oyer granted a demurrer lies if the judgment is void on its face.²

e. SETTING OUT PROCEEDINGS. — In declaring on a judgment, it is not necessary to set forth the whole proceedings in the suit.³

ment in place of that which was destroyed, and then to offer the record in evidence in this suit. It was neither necessary nor proper to make profert of the judgment, but to refer to it as of record, prout patet per recordum; but instead of such reference, it is stated in the complaint as an excuse for not making profert that the record had been destroyed. It is not desirable that the merits of a cause should be prejudiced by technicalities, and the courts are liberal in allowing amendments to reach substantial justice. If, upon the coming in of the demurrer, the plaintiff had obtained leave to amend his complaint, so as to refer to the judgment as 'remaining of record,' and upon motion in the original cause had made a record, it might have been offered on the trial, but as the plaintiff joined in the demurrer, we are obliged to say that it ought to have been sustained. There is error."

The Omission of the Prout Patet per Recordum cannot be objected to except on such demurrer. Harlow v. Becktle, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 237.

1. Deem v. Crume, 46 Ill. 69; Hall v. Harrison, 21 Mo. 227.

"The declaration was sufficient, prima facie, to sustain the action. Could the defendant then crave oyer of the transcript on file and demur? Such a course would completely exclude the plaintiff's testimony, and in most cases work the greatest injustice. Oyer at common law is only demandable of specialties. Our statute has probably extended the rule, but clearly limits the right to demand oyer of instruments signed by the party, and cannot apply to actions founded on judgments." Giles v. Shaw, 1 Ill. 219.

2. Cone v. Cotton, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 82. This case was debt on a judgment of a justice of a sister state. The court said: "The plaintiff made profert of an authenticated transcript of said judgment. The defendants craved oyer of the transcript, which was granted. And in this it is said by the plaintiff that the Circuit Court erred. But it should be remembered that, although oyer of record is not properly demandable, yet if profert is made and oyer granted, no error is committed. So as it respects the transcript of this judgment. It is not a record; but as both parties have treated it as a record, we see no reason that either has to complain."

"The defendant may crave oyer of the record and have it set forth in terms as part of the pleading, and if it do not sustain, and fully sustain the declaration, may demur." Per Redfield, J., in Dimick v. Brooks, 21 Vt. 578, quoted with approval in Miller v. Dungan, 35 N. J. L. 391.

3. Denison v. Williams, 4 Conn. 402; Johnson v. Butler, 2 Iowa 535; Caldwell v. Richards, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 331; Springsteene v. Gillett, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 260; Downer v. Dana, 22 Vt. 337.

A deficiency judgment in foreclosure may be alleged in general language, under Code Civ. Pro., § 532, without setting forth the proceeding. Springsteene v. Gillett, 30 Hun (N. Y.) 260.

The petition on which a former judgment was based need not be set out. Davis v. Davis, 65 Fed. Rep. 380. Compare Ashley v. Laird, 14 Ind. 222.

Enough of the Previous Proceedings should be recited or stated to show that the parties were properly in court, and that the general nature of the subject-matter came within the cognizance of the court. Downer v. Dana, 22 Vt. 337.

In Dimmick v. Wyoming Mfg. Co., 2 Lack. Leg. N. (Pa.) 171, it was held that where the action was on a judgment rendered in another county, the record of such judgment must be set forth in full. Compare Johnson v. Butler, 2 Iowa 535, where it was held that the plaintiff may bring his action upon a transcript of a judgment only, or upon so much of the record as shows that the court had jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter; that the judgment was rendered; but that the defendant, by his plea of nullius in terra, want of jurisdiction, no service or ap-

This rule applies to judgments both of inferior¹ and of foreign courts.²

Summarizing Proceedings. — It is sufficient, after alleging the required jurisdictional facts, to summarize the intermediate proceedings leading up to the rendition of the judgment by a general averment that "such proceedings were thereupon had" (superinde taliter processum fuit)³ that afterwards, by the consideration and judgment of the court, the plaintiff recovered the sum mentioned.⁴

pearance, or that the judgment was obtained by fraud, may render it necessary for the plaintiff to produce the whole record, or at least enough to prove a valid judgment.

1. Inferior Courts. — Barnes v. Harris, 4 N. Y. 375; Cornell v. Barnes, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 37; Dakin v. Hudson, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 221; Bowman v. Russ, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 234; Mackarith v. Pollard, 1 Ld. Raym. 80; Rowland v. Veale, 1 Cowp. 18; Higginson v. Martin, 2 Mod. 195; Doe v. Parmiter, 2 Lev. 81; Pitt v. Knight, 1 Saund. 92, note.

"It was settled in our own courts, before Chitty wrote, that in setting forth the proceedings of an inferior court, after stating enough to give it jurisdiction, it was sufficient to add taliter processum fuit, such an act was done by the court." Barnes v. Harris, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 606 [citing Service v. Heermance, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 91; Peebles v. Kittle, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 363; Dakin v. Hudson, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 221].

Former Rule. — It was formerly held necessary to set out the proceedings at large. Turner v. Roby, 3 N. Y. 193; Rowland v. Veale, 1 Cowp. 18; Dennis v. Rows, 2 Lutw. 918; Mackarith v. Pollard, 1 Ld. Raym. 80.

Thus in Pinager v. Gale, 2 Vent. 100, the defendant undertook to justify an alleged trespass in the taking of the plaintiff's goods under a judgment of the County Court, and pleaded that "J. S. levied plaint in the County Court in a plea of debt of thirty-nine shillings and eleven pence, against the now plaintiff, and superinde taliter processum fuit that he recovered the said debt." On demurrer it was adjudged for the plaintiff because, among other things, "when a judgment is pleaded in an inferior court, especially in a court not of record, the proceedings should be set forth at large, and not to say taliter processum fuit."

At the present day this plea would be deemed good. See cases cited in second succeeding note.

2. In an Action upon a Foreign Judgment, an allegation in the complaint is sufficient if it states the name of the court in which such judgment was obtained, and that the same was a court of competent jurisdiction, without alleging the actions and proceedings thereof. Martin v. Moore, 1 Wyoming 22.

The plaintiff in an action on a foreign judgment need only set out so much of the judgment as to show that the court had jurisdiction of the person and subject-matter, and that the judgment was rendered. It may become necessary to introduce the judgment record in evidence, but it cannot be required that it be set out in the pleadings. Johnson v. Butler, 2 Iowa 535.

3. Turner v. Roby, 3 N. Y. 193; Cornell v. Barnes, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 39, note; Hoose v. Sherrill, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 33; Cleveland v. Rogers, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 438; Barnes v. Harris, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 603, affirmed in 4 N. Y. 375; Dakin v. Hudson, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 221; Bowman v. Russ, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 234; Downer v. Dana, 22 Vt. 337; Pitt v. Knight, 1 Saund. 92; Mackarith v. Pollard, 1 Ld. Raym. 80; Rowland v. Veale, 1 Cowp. 18; Doe v. Parmiter, 2 Lev. 81; Higginson v. Martin, 2 Mod. 195.

The Form of a Declaration upon a judgment setting forth the whole proceedings will be found in Pitt v. Knight, 1 Saund. 86, and the modern abbreviated form in note 2 to that case, p. 92. The latter is as follows: "At a certain court, etc., held at, etc., A B levied his certain plaint against C D in a certain plea of trespass on the case, or debt, etc. (as the case may be), for a cause of action arising within the jurisdiction of the court, and thereupon such proceedings were had that afterwards, etc., it was considered by the said court that the said A B should recover against the said C D, etc."

4. Burnes v. Simpson, 9 Kan. 658; Biddle v. Wilkins, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 686.

Omission of the Allegation that "such proceedings were had," etc., must be taken advantage of by special demurrer and is cured by verdict.¹

f. EXHIBITS — Record of Judgment. — In the absence of statute, where the declaration properly describes the judgment a copy of the record need not be attached as an exhibit.²

A Judgment Is Not a Written Instrument within the meaning of a statute requiring such instruments to be filed as exhibits when they constitute the foundation of a pleading,³ although a few cases hold the contrary.⁴

1. Barnes v. Harris, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 603. But see the same case affirmed in 4 N. Y. 374, where the court said that this allegation was not omitted.

2. Hall v. Mackay, 78 Tex. 248. See also Johnson v. Butler, 2 Iowa 538.

3. Collins v. Fraiser, 27 Ind. 477; Hinkle v. Reid, 43 Ind. 390; Richardson v. Jones, 58 Ind. 240; Lytle v. Lytle, 37 Ind. 281; Campbell v. Cross, 39 Ind. 155; Becknell v. Becknell, 110 Ind. 42; Wilson v. Vance, 55 Ind. 584; Ryan v. Curran, 64 Ind. 345; Logansport v. La Rose, 99 Ind. 117.

The earlier cases in Indiana took a contrary view. See Brady v. Murphy, 19 Ind. 258; Reasor v. Raney, 14 Ind. 441; State v. Pierce, 22 Ind. 116; Robbins v. Dishon, 19 Ind. 204. But these cases were expressly overruled in Lytle v. Lytle, 37 Ind. 281.

In Ohio it has been held that a foreign judgment is not a written instrument of indebtedness a copy of which must be filed with the petition under the code, § 117 (Cox v. Farley, 2 West L. M. (Ohio) 315), and that it is not proper to insert a copy of the transcript sued on or annex a copy as an exhibit. Renniman v. Dean, 2 Wkly. L. Gaz. (Ohio) 2. If it is included in or attached as an exhibit to the petition, it will be stricken out on motion. Judd v. Dean, 2 Disney (Ohio) 210. But in Wehrman v. Reakirt, 2 Cinc. Super. Ct. Rep. 29, it was said that a copy of the judgment need not be exhibited as a part of the petition, and cannot properly be so exhibited, but a copy ought to be filed with the petition, under the code, § 117, and in Dougherty v. Longmore, 2 Cinc. Super. Ct. Rep. 134, it was held that unless a copy of the judgment sued on is attached to and filed with the petition, or a statement of the reason of its absence given, a demurrer will lie.

In Fordyce v. Marks, 1 Am. L. Rec. (Ohio) 257, affirmed in 2 Am. L. Rec. (Ohio) 392, it is held that in an action on a judgment of a sister state the petition must aver facts sufficient to enable the plaintiff to recover, since the record cannot be made part of the petition under the code, § 122, although it should be filed with or attached to it under section 117, which applies to such written instruments as are mere evidences and by such filing do not become part of the record.

In Memphis Medical College v. Newton, 2 Handy (Ohio) 163, it is said that the transcript of the record is not "an instrument of writing for the unconditional payment [of money] only," and cannot therefore be made an exhibit under the code, § 122, but that it seems that such transcript is "a written instrument as evidence of indebtedness" under section 117 of the code, the court saying that "section 117 was intended as a substitute for oyer under the former practice, and perhaps as a requisition on a plaintiff to give in advance those copies of written instruments on which the action might be founded, which he might have been required to give, on an application for that purpose, under the former practice act. Swan's Stat. 670."

4. Burnes v. Simpson, 9 Kan. 658; Jefferson v. Alexander, 84 Ill. 278, followed by Lambert v. Jonte, 28 Ill. App. 591. See also Ohio cases cited in preceding note.

Remedy for Failure to File Transcript. — In Burnes v. Simpson, 9 Kan. 658, the court said: "We think this was such an instrument as the code requires to be filed with the pleadings; but the defect was one to be corrected on motion, not by demurrer. In states like Indiana, where the code makes the instrument or account on which the pleading is founded a part of the Exhibit as a Part of the Pleadings. — A copy of the transcript filed as an exhibit constitutes no part of the pleadings, and therefore will not aid a defective declaration; nor, on the other hand, will defects apparent in the record set out render a declaration demurrable that is otherwise good.¹

Authentication of Exhibit. — The exhibit filed need not be authenticated.²

Note Sued On Originally. — In an action on a foreign judgment it is not necessary to file a copy of the note on which the judgment was obtained.³

record, the not filing it may well be taken advantage of by demurrer; but in a code like ours such a practice is not logical, and ought not to be enforced." But see Indiana cases cited in next succeeding note.

1. McLaughlin v. Nichols, 13 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 244; Wharton v. Wilson, 60 Ind. 591; Wilson v. Vance, 55 Ind. 584; Knight v. Flatrock, etc., Turnpike Co., 45 Ind. 134; Noble v. McGinnis, 55 Ind. 528; Pollard v. Bowen, 57 Ind. 232; Wyant v. Wyant, 38 Ind. 48; Brooks v. Harris, 41 Ind. 390; Kokomo v. State, 57 Ind. 152; Lytle v. Lytle, 37 Ind. 281, overruling Reasor v. Raney, 14 Ind. 441; Norris v. Amos, 15 Ind. 365, and other cases following these decisions. See also Deem v. Crume, 46 Ill. 69.

Illustrations. — In Becknell v. Becknell, 110 Ind. 42, the action was brought upon a decree for alimony. A copy of the decree filed with the petition showed that the amount sued for was not yet due. The defendant, therefore, demurred, but the demurrer was overruled. The court said: "In construing these provisions of the code, we have uniformly held that a judgment was not a written instrument, within the meaning of the statute, and that the filing of a copy thereof with a pleading would not make the judgment a 'part of the record.' Wilson v. Vance, 55 Ind. 584; Ryan v. Curran, 64 Ind. 345; Logansport v. La Rose, 99 Ind. 117." But see Ault v. Zehering, 38 Ind. 429, where a demurrer for defects in the transcript set out was considered without reference to the question whether or not a demurrer was proper at all. In several earlier cases in Indiana it has been held that a demurrer would lie for defects in the transcript set out, as where it shows insufficient service or the like, upon the theory that such transcript constitutes part of the pleading. See Ashley v. Laird, 14 Ind. 222;

Snyder v. Snyder, 25 Ind. 399. But see Lytle v. Lytle, 37 Ind. 281, repudiating this theory and overruling earlier cases. In Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. McNulty, 34 Ind. 531, it was held that where the copy of the judgment filed shows upon its face that the judgment is invalid, a demurrer to the pleading is properly sustained, unless the allegations of the pleading are such as to warrant the introduction of extrinsic evidence which would render the judgment valid.

2. White v. Treon, 25 Kan. 484, holding that a failure to have the transcript authenticated is not ground for demurrer.

Affidavit of Defense. — "It is also argued that the judgment was not certified according to the Act of Congress, and therefore no judgment can be entered for want of an affidavit of defense. But while the insufficiency of the certificate must be conceded, and while this would have constituted a valid objection to its admission in evidence on the trial, it has been well decided by this court that it is unavailing in an affidavit of defense. Moore v. Fields, 42 Pa. St. 467, and Wetherill v. Stillman, 65 Pa. St. 105. In the latter case Thompson, C. J., said: 'No doubt a well-founded objection of this kind would prevent it being evidence in a trial at law; but that is quite another thing from the purpose it serves as the foundation of the plaintiff's claim under the affidavit-of-defense law or rule of court.' We think the learned court below was right in entering judgment for want of an affidavit of defense, and therefore the judgment is affirmed." Mink v. Shaffer, 124 Pa. St. 280.

Neither Placita nor Authentication is necessary in a copy of a judgment filed with the complaint thereon. Snyder v. Snyder, 25 Ind. 399.

3. Hogg v. Charlton, 25 Pa. St. 200.

Assignment to Plaintiff. — Where the plaintiff claims as assignee a copy of the assignment need not be filed.¹

g. AVERMENT THAT JUDGMENT REMAINS IN FORCE, UNSATISFIED — Statement of Rule. — In pleading a judgment it is usual to aver that "it remains in full force and virtue, and in no wise set aside, reversed, or held for naught;" but the better opinion seems to be that such an averment is not a substantial one, and being only a matter of form its omission will not render the declaration demurrable.²

Demurrer. — Where, however, the declaration shows on its face that the judgment does not remain in full force and virtue, it is demurrable.³ Thus a complaint on a judgment is demurrable which shows on its face that no execution has been issued for twenty years, unless the complaint states facts which rebut the presumption of payment.⁴

1. Love v. Fairfield, 10 Ill. 303, holding that where a suit is brought upon a judgment in the name of A for the use of B, it is not necessary to file with the declaration a copy of the assignment.

It is sufficient to allege that the amount claimed is due thereon. Blake v. Burley, 9 Iowa 592.

3. Gilpin v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co., (C. Pl.) 17 N. Y. Supp. 520.

Demurrable Complaints. — A complaint in an action on a foreign judgment, alleging that the plaintiff recovered a judgment against the defendant in the Superior Court of another state, no part of which has been paid; that the same remains in force and effect; that on motion of the defendant the judgment was vacated, annulled, and set aside by such court; that by writ of certiorari the entire proceedings were referred to the Supreme Court, where a judgment against the defendant and in favor of the plaintiff was rendered, adjudging that the order of the Superior Court vacating the judgment be set aside, and that the plaintiff recover her costs; but failing to allege any remittitur from the Supreme Court to the Superior Court, does not state a cause of action. Cougill v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 25 Oregon 360.

Where the complaint alleges that the judgment sued on was "for damages sustained by plaintiff by reason of the fraud and deceit of defendant, alleged in the complaint," such allegation is not absolute, but is limited to the fraud and deceit alleged in the complaint in the former action, and even a failure to deny such averment will not operate as an admission that the former judgment was based on fraud so as to show that the judgment was not discharged in bankruptcy, unless such fraud was the gravamen of the former action. Thomas v. Snyder, 77 Hun (N. Y.) 365.

4. Rebutting Presumption of Payment. — "But a presumption of payment from lapse of time may be raised by demurrer when shown by the facts stated in the complaint, as was done in Olden v. Hubbard, 34 N. J. Eq. 85. And to repel such presumption any existing circumstances which would have that effect should be alleged. In Solomon v. Solomon, 81 Ala. 507, it was held that the presumption of payment arising from the lapse of time may be taken by demurrer when shown by the facts stated, but that it is a matter of defense and must be claimed, the court saying: 'While the defense of staleness may be made by demurrer when the facts out of which it springs appear on the face of the bill (Story's Eq. Pl., §§ 404, 503, 751), still it is defensive and must be claimed.' Maury v. Mason, 8 Port. (Ala.) 211; Solomon v. Solomon, 83 Ala. 395. Taking the objections by demurrer is in analogy to the rule applied to the statute of limitations, as indicated in Olden v. Hubbard, 34 N. J. Eq. 85, so that to avoid the presumption and render the complaint invulnerable to a demurrer the plaintiff is

Negating Appeal. — The declaration need not allege that no appeal has been taken.¹

Averment of Nonsatisfaction. — It is necessary, however, to aver that the judgment is unsatisfied.²

h. AD DAMNUM CLAUSE. — Where the amount of a judgment is truly described, a declaration for a balance due thereon is not demurrable for failure to state the amount sought to be recovered required to allege in his complaint the facts and circumstances on which he relies to rebut such presumption." Beekman v. Hamlin, 20 Oregon 352.

Avoiding Statute of Limitations. — An action on a foreign judgment is not barred because not commenced within six years after it was rendered, if the complaint alleges, and it is not denied in the answer, that the defendant was out of and absent from the state where the action was brought, at the time said judgment was rendered, "and did not come into or return" to said state thereafter "until less than six years prior to the commencement" of the action, because the complaint brings the case within section 123 of the Code of Procedure, which provides that if a cause of action accrues against a person who is out of the state, it may be commenced within the time limited after his "return" into the state. Lake v. Steinbach, 5 Wash. 659. And see Marx v. Sanders, 98 Ala. 500. See also article LIMITATIONS, STATUTES OF.

1. Chaquette v. Ortet, 60 Cal. 594; Bronzan v. Drobaz, 93 Cal. 647.

2. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 43 Ill. 199; Dimick v. Brooks, 21 Vt. 569.

A Correct Declaration in Debt on judgment always alleges that the judgment is not satisfied. This is so essential that if omitted the declaration would be ruled insufficient on demurrer. Dewey v. Bradbury, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 201.

It is sufficient to state that the amount of the judgment is unpaid. Blake v. Burley, 9 Iowa 592.

Alleging Debet and Detinet. — A declaration in debt upon a judgment was held bad on special demurrer for lack of the debet and detinet in Adams v. Campbell, 4 Vt. 447.

Liability and Breach must be averred in an action on the case brought on a judgment from a sister state. Spencer v. Brockway, 1 Ohio 259.

Sufficiency of Averments that Judgment Remains Unsatisfied. — An allegation that the judgment remains in full force and unpaid or unsatisfied is sufficient.

Chaquette v. Ortet, 60 Cal. 594; O'Neal v. Kittredge, 3 Allen (Mass.) 470.

An allegation that the judgment remains valid and in full force is equivalent to an allegation that the judgment is unpaid. Wise v. Loring, 54 Mo. App. 258.

An averment in an action of debt on a judgment that the judgment has not been paid or satisfied is equivalent to an allegation that it has not been settled. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Miller, 43 Ill. 199.

In declaring on a judgment for several sums of money, each of which sums the judgment adjudges shall bear interest from a date prior to the rendering of the judgment, and some at a higher rate than six per cent. per annum, the payment of the interest accruing must be specially negated in the breach. Louisiana Bank v. Watson, 4 Ark. 518.

"The declaration sets out a judgment, and avers that the same remains in full force, not reversed, annulled, or satisfied; which is substantially good, without setting out the doings of the officer upon the execution. And if this were not so, the defect must be considered a formal one, and would be cured by pleading over, the supposed deficiency in this case being supplied by the defendant's first plea, in which he alleges a commitment under the execution." Dunning v. Owen, 14 Mass. 157.

An averment that the defendant in a judgment is insolvent, that the execution has been returned "no property found," and that the judgment has been drawing interest from the date of its rendition, amounting to a sum specified, is a sufficient averment that the judgment remains in force and unsatisfied. Simpson v. Huston, 14 Tex. 476.

Where the defendant introduced the execution returned in support of his plea of payment and satisfaction, it was held that a general averment in the plaintiff's petition that the judgment or the amount due on the judgment.¹ The usual ad damnum clause is a sufficient allegation of damages to entitle the plaintiff to recover interest.²

6. Plea or Answer — a. SCOPE OF INQUIRY. — This section treats solely of the manner of pleading defenses to actions upon judgments. The sufficiency of facts to constitute a defense is a question of substantive law, and as such is beyond the scope of this article.³

Res Judicata. — Thus it is a general rule that no defense is available which was or might have been urged in defense of the original action.⁴ The reason for this is that such matters are res judicata. This subject is fully considered elsewhere.⁵

Equitable Defenses. — In some states equitable defenses are available in actions at law.⁶ Wherever this practice prevails, equitable remained unsatisfied and not discharged was not a sufficient foundation for the introduction of testimony contradicting the return. O'Conner v. Silver, 26 Tex. 606.

A declaration which sets forth the recovery of the judgment, an issue of execution, and an acknowledgment of satisfaction by receipt of a note for the amount thereof, that the note was by mistake written for a smaller sum than the amount of the execution, and that the judgment to that extent is unsatisfied, shows a good cause for action for the unsatisfied part of the judgment. Canfield v. Miller, 13 Gray (Mass.) 274.

1. O'Neal v. Kittredge, 3 Allen (Mass.) 470, wherein Bigelow, C. J., said: "We can see no defect in this declaration. The plaintiff was not bound to set out the precise sum which he might be entitled to recover upon the judgment declared on. That would depend on the state of the evidence at the trial. The cause of action, to wit, the judgment, is described with substantial certainty and precision. Strictly speaking, if any payment had been made which reduced the amount due on the judgment, it was matter in defense, which the defendant was bound to aver and prove. Therefore he has no reason to complain that the plaintiff has declared only for a balance, instead of setting out a claim for the whole amount for which the judgment was originally rendered."

defenses may be set up in actions upon judgments.¹ Equitable relief in an independent suit in chancery is treated in another chapter of this article.²

Want of Jurisdiction is not always available as a defense to an action upon a judgment. Whether it is or is not available must be determined under rules elsewhere fully discussed.³

b. GENERAL RULES — Denials. — Where the defense consists merely of a denial of a material averment in the declaration or petition the denial must be direct and certain.⁴ A denial of legal conclusions is insufficient.⁵

Pleading New Matter. — Where the defendant seeks to set up new matter as an affirmative defense, he must plead the facts constituting such defense.⁶

3. See the article JURISDICTION, vol. 12, p. 114. See also the titles Judgments and Jurisdiction, Am. and Eng. Encyc. of Law.

4. Denial on Information and Belief. — In Vassault v. Austin, 32 Cal. 597, it was held that the recovery of a judgment is not presumptively within the knowledge of the defendants, and therefore if the complaint avers the recovery of a judgment against one of several defendants, the court in which it was recovered, and the date and amount of the judgment, such facts may be denied in the answer upon information and belief. Compare Roblin v. Long, 60 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 200, holding, in an action on a foreign judgment in which the defendant had appeared and answered, that the answer, denying knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief, is a sham.

Denial under Oath. — Under Iowa Laws of 1853, c. 108, § 1, in an action by an assignee on a judgment rendered in a sister state where the plaintiff properly avers the assignment to him, it must be denied by the defendant under oath in order to make it necessary for the plaintiff to prove the assignment. Edmonds v. Montgomery, 1 Iowa 143.

Denial of Immaterial Averment. — Where the declaration alleges an assignment of the cause of action to the beneficiary for a valuable consideration, a plea that the legal owner did not assign for a valuable consideration is demurrable, as the existence of a consideration is immaterial. Sammis v. Wightman, 31 Fla. 10.

5. See article LEGAL CONCLUSIONS.

Denial of Legal Conclusions — Illustrations. — If the complaint contains averments of the rendition of a judgment against the defendant by a court of competent jurisdiction, and states the character of the judgment, an answer denying that the defendant became or was lawfully bound by the judgment is only a denial of a conclusion of law, and does not raise an issue of fact. If the judgment can be attacked collaterally the answer must specify the points of its invalidity. People v. San Francisco, 27 Cal. 655.

Allegations in a plea that a defendant, sued in one state on a judgment obtained in a court of a sister state, did not have his day in the latter court, or that the latter court did not have jurisdiction of him, are mere conclusions of law, and bad in substance, even though they have the basis of an accompanying allegation that there was no service of summons in the action in which the judgment sued on was rendered. Sammis v. Wightman, 31 Fla. 10.

6. "Even if the plea of failure of consideration was available in an action on a judgment, the plea to that effect in this case was defective in failing to state the facts showing the substance of the matter relied on as a defense. Carmelich v. Mims, 88 Ala. 335. There was no consent to accept the pleas in short." Sims v. Herzfeld, 95 Ala. 145.

Sufficiency of Answer Denying Plaintiff's Title. — An answer alleging that the judgment sued on does not belong to the plaintiff, but is the property of another named person, sufficiently apprises the plaintiff of the nature of the

It is Harmless Error to sustain a demurrer to a plea where the defendant has had the full benefit in another plea of the defense sought to be set up in such plea.¹

c. NUL TIEL RECORD — (1) When Proper — Courts of Record. — Nul tiel record is the proper form of the general issue in an action upon a domestic judgment² or upon a judgment rendered in a defense relied on, and is therefore sufficient although the particulars of the assignment are not averred; it was therefore error to strike out the answer as not stating facts, but merely a conclusion. Holcombe v. Tracy, 2 Minn. 241.

Objection that Plaintiff Is Not Real Party in Interest. — Where the plaintiff in an action on a judgment is the legal owner, the objection that he is not the real party in interest must be raised by answer. Ford v. Provident Sav. L. Assur. Soc., 9 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 306.

Sufficiency of Objection that Leave Was Necessary. — See Lyon v. Manly, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 51, 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 337, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 267.

Vacation of Judgment. — In Carpenter v. Goodwin, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 89, it was held that the vacation of the judgment sued on subsequent to its entry could not be shown under a general denial, but must be specially pleaded as matter in avoidance. It was further held that where an order vacating the judgment was put in evidence under a general denial, and no application was made to the trial court to amend the pleadings, the judgment would, on appeal, be reversed, and the appellate court would refuse to disregard the defect or to order the amendment to be made nunc pro tunc. Compare Kinsey v. Ford, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 195, wherein the complaint alleged a regular, valid, and legal judgment, and the answer put in issue the existence of such a judgment. It was held that any evidence tending to show the judgment illegal or void would be competent on the part of the defendant, and that, therefore, a copy of the record showing that since issue joined the judgment had been vacated was admissible.

In an action on a justice's judgment a plea that an appeal had been taken which by law vacated the justice's judgment was held not bad for want of an averment that a bond or recognizance was given on appeal, as this fact was necessarily implied in the allowance of the appeal. Curtiss v. Beardsley, 15 Conn. 518.

Alleging Law of Sister State. — A plea that the note on which a judgment of a court of a sister state was recovered was not produced or filed in the cause in which such judgment was obtained is bad on demurrer, for, in the absence of an allegation in the plea that the law of the state where the judgment sued on was rendered required the stated filing of the note, and made the judgment void for noncompliance, the demurrer does not admit that the law of that state required such filing. The same propositions are true of allegations to the effect that the judgment sued on was procured on proof by affidavit of the service of the summons, and on a complaint verified by a stated affidavit. Sammis v. Wightman, 31 Fla. 10.

Plea that Execution Is Available. — An answer to a complaint on a judgment averring that the defendant has ample property to satisfy the judgment, but has never been called on for property or money, and that an execution issued on the judgment was returned unsatisfied by order of the plaintiff, but containing no averment that any lien was lost thereby, or that the defendant was prejudiced in any way, is insufficient on demurrer. Hansford v. Van Auker, 79 Ind. 157.

court of record of a sister state,¹ such judgments being regarded, under the Constitution and Acts of Congress as to full faith and credit, etc., as domestic judgments. But, as will be seen in succeeding sections, nul tiel record is not the only plea available in an action upon a judgment of a sister state.²

Courts Not of Record. — Nul tiel record is not a proper plea to an action on a judgment of a court not of record.³

Presumption that Court Was One of Record. — Where the proceedings and judgment of a court in a sister state are certified by the clerk and attested by the judge, and the proceedings are in form like those of a court of record, and the declaration such as is usual in such case, it will be intended, on a plea of nul tiel record, without further proof, that the judgment was rendered by a court of record. *Hughes v. Proper Form of Plea. — In Evans v. Tatem, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 252, it was held, in an action upon a decree in chancery of a court of a sister state, that neither nil debet nor nul tiel record was a proper plea, and that if the defendant wished to deny the existence of the decree he should frame his plea so as to meet the averment in the declaration, and the tender of issue should conclude to the country.

existence of the judgment sued on, or desires to take advantage of a variance between the judgment rendered and that described in the declaration, and as a general rule these are the only questions raised by the plea.¹ But where, under a plea of nul tiel record, the record produced shows upon its face that the judgment is void as against the defendant, the plaintiff cannot recover.²

In Code Practice a general denial is equivalent to the common-law general issue of nul tiel record, and it is sufficient to require the plaintiff to prove the record sued upon. Clarion First Nat. Bank v. Hamor, 47 Fed. Rep. 36.

Illustrations. — Where the plaintiff sets out, by way of inducement, a judgment of a sister state, and an affirmance thereof on error in the appellate court, and the defendant pleads nul tiel record to the judgment mentioned, without specifying which one, an exemplification of the judgment of the appellate court which recites the record of the judgment below is sufficient. Phipps v. Nye, 34 Miss. 330.

In an action upon a judgment, with an averment that four executions had been issued thereon, issue was joined upon the plea of nul tiel record. It was held that the plea only denied and put in issue the judgment, and that the plaintiff was not bound, under this issue, to produce or prove the executions. Stevens v. Hewitt, 30 Vt. 262.

Estoppel to Deny Judgment. — For general purposes nul tiel record is the general issue in debt upon a judgment; and under it the plaintiff may prove matter which estops the defendant from denying that there is such a judgment. Wilbur v. Abbott, 59 N. H. 132.

Where an Alternative Judgment in Replevin is declared on as an absolute judgment for money, a plea of nul tiel record must be sustained. Thorner v. Batory, 41 Md. 593.

Variance in Names of Parties. — A judgment rendered in favor of B by mistake for A cannot be sued on by A, even if it is averred and proved that the judgment was rendered in favor of A by the name of B; and the defect may be taken advantage of under the general issue and need not be pleaded in abatement. Gilbert v. Hanford, 13 Mich. 40.

Pendency of Appeal Will Not Sustain Plea. — Suydam v. Hoyt, 25 N. J. L. 230.

In Dow v. Blake, 148 Ill. 76, the plaintiff in error took the position that when the continuation of the record was produced, showing that the judgment sued upon had been repealed, it affirmatively appeared that there was no such record as that counted upon, and that, therefore, the plea of nul tiel record was supported. But the contention was not sustained.

In McCall v. Crousillat, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 7, it was held that where the proceedings had been confirmed in the appellate court on error, and the record ordered to be sent back, it was to be considered as out of the appellate court, whether actually sent back or not; but that even if still in the appellate court, the issue on nul tiel record would be with the plaintiff, where the declaration did not state it to be in the court below, but only that judgment was given in the court below.

2. Bruce v. Cloutman, 45 N. H. 37; Caouette v. Young, (N. H. 1892) 32 Atl. Rep. 157; Stevens v. Fisher, 30 Vt. 200.

But he may recover if the judgment, though erroneous, is merely voidable and not void, and has not been set aside or reversed. Bruce v. Cloutman, 45 N. H. 37. See also supra, XVIII. 1. g. Erroneous judgments.

Accordingly, want of jurisdiction is available under a plea of nul tiel record where it affirmatively appears on the face of the record.¹ It seems that in determining whether the record shows a judgment valid where rendered the court should take judicial cognizance of the law of a sister state.² So, also, the record produced must show a judgment apparently unsatisfied.³ Extrinsic evidence, however, is inadmissible under a plea of nul tiel record to show any defense which does not appear upon the face of the record.⁴ On the other hand, it has been held that if the Valid Where Rendered.—In Hunt v. Mayfield, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 124, the court said: "This recovery appears to have been authorized by the law of that state, and in the form pursued. Then should the plea of nul tiel record have been sustained to the suit brought on this recovery? or must not the defendant, if he could avail himself of the want of jurisdiction in the court, or other extrinsic matter of defense, have resorted to a special plea in bar? Under an issue of nul tiel record, the court can only inspect the record of recovery, and unless the want of jurisdiction, or some other insufficiency, appear, which would destroy the force and effect of the judgment in the state in which it was rendered, judgment must be given for the plaintiff. On this important subject it would be impossible to reconcile the decisions of the Supreme Court of the Union with those of the highest tribunals of some of the states; yet it must be admitted that as the question involves the construction of the federal Constitution, the decisions of the federal tribunal, having authority to control all others, must prevail."

United States.—Thompson v. Emmer, 4 McLean (U. S.) 96; Berger v. Williams, 4 McLean (U. S.) 125.

"The plea of nul tiel record properly raises the question of the existence of the record sued on, and this plea is triable by the court; and when, on inspection of the record, it appears that the party sued in this state was not before the court at the trial, and that the court never had jurisdiction of his person, he having had no notice of the suit or opportunity to defend it, it is in fact no record as to him, and he is not bound by the judgment therein rendered." Barrett v. Oppenheimer, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 298.

A judgment against a defendant named in the writ, but not made a party either by service, public notice, or attaching his estate, is merely void, and should be disregarded when produced on nul tiel record. Armstrong v. Harshaw, 1 Dev. L. (N. Car.) 187.

2. The reason is that in such case the court acts under the constitution and laws of the United States, which require that the judgment shall have in every state the same faith and credit as in the state where it was rendered, which faith and credit must therefore be passed upon by the court, and depend upon the laws of the sister state. And as the Supreme Court of the United States, where the case is ultimately cognizable, will take judicial cognizance of the law of the state where the judgment was rendered, the state court in which the suit on the judgment is brought must likewise do so, in order to be guided by the same rule which is to determine the appellate court on a writ of error. See Barrett v. Oppenheimer, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 298, and note; Paine v. Schenectady Ins. Co., 11 R. I. 411; Ohio v. Hinchman, 27 Pa. St. 479; Baxley v. Linah, 16 Pa. St. 241; *Rae v. record fails to show jurisdiction, it cannot be aided by other evidence.¹

(b) Defenses Not Available. — A plea of nul tiel record raises no issue as to the validity of the declaration,² nor as to the justice of the original judgment,³ nor as to its payment⁴ or satisfaction.⁵ The assignment to the plaintiff of the judgment sued on is not put in issue by nul tiel record,⁶ nor can fraud in procuring the judgment⁷ or clerical error in taxing costs⁸ be shown under such a plea.

(3) Trial by Inspection by the Court. — The issue upon a plea of nul tiel record is to be tried by the court upon an inspection of the record produced, and not by the jury;⁹ and for this purpose the record or a copy thereof must be produced to the court.¹⁰

In Fritz v. Fisher, 5 Clark (Pa.) 350, in speaking of the defense of want of jurisdiction, the court said: "The defendant may indeed negative the presumption by pleading and proof; he may show that the court which has assumed to bind him had no authority over his person, and he may do this not only when the record is silent, but in opposition to its explicit entries or allegations; but if, instead of adopting this course, he confine himself to a plea of nul tiel record, and thus shut the plaintiff out from sustaining the record by extrinsic evidence, the judgment itself should be sufficient proof of its own invalidity."

(4) Conclusion by Verification or to the Country.—A plea of nul tiel record should conclude with a verification, and not to the country, as such plea is tried by the court and not by the jury.² An error in this regard, however, being a matter of form, and subject formerly to a special demurrer, is amendable under the present practice.³

d. NIL DEBET — Domestic Judgment.—Nil debet is not a good plea in an action of debt upon a judgment of a domestic court of record.⁴ So in an action in a federal court upon a judgment rendered in a federal court of another circuit,⁵ or upon a been destroyed, the first step towards obtaining a remedy is by proceeding in the court where it was given to the end that the record may be supplied. Walton v. McKesson, 64 N. Car. 77, wherein Reade, J., says: "In an action on a former judgment, the record of the judgment is the proper evidence thereof. Its production cannot be dispensed with, or supplied by any other evidence. The reason is that upon plea of nul tiel record the court decides upon the inspection of the record itself."

1. Rathbone v. Rathbone, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 1.

Upon an issue of nul tiel record upon a judgment of the Common Pleas, the Supreme Court does not direct the original record to be sent up, but receives copies attested by the clerk. Ladd v. Blunt, 4 Mass. 402.

"Upon the issue of nul tiel record, you must exhibit a record that we can receive—one either authenticated according to the Act of Congress or an examined copy." Silver Lake Bank v. Hardin, Wright (Ohio) 430.

2. Hall v. Williams, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 232; Cannon v. Cooper, 39 Miss. 784; Wittemore v. Malcomson, 28 Fed. Rep. 605; Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 481.

The plea concludes with a verification, although it is a direct denial of the allegation in the declaration that there is such a record. Wilbur v. Abbott, 59 N. H. 132. Compare Wright v. Weisinger, 5 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 210, wherein it is said: "The rule is that in a plea of nul tiel record a verification is unnecessary, because the plea is in the negative. 1 Ch. Pl. 556; Fanshaw v. Morrison, 2 Salk. 520; 3 Ch. Pl. 994. An unnecessary averment may be rejected as surplusage, and does not vitiate. Thrasher v. Ely, 2 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 149."

3. Wittemore v. Malcomson, 28 Fed. Rep. 605

Where the declaration is on a domestic judgment rendered in a court of record, the plea of nul tiel record should conclude with a verification to the court only; otherwise where the record is of a foreign judgment, or if the court which rendered the judgment is not a court of record; then the plea should conclude to the country. But this is defect of form only and may be amended. Thornton v. Lane, 11 Ga. 459, citing Dyson v. Wood, 3 B. & C. 449, 10 E. C. L. 149.

Reason for Rule.—Nil debet is a bad plea in an action on a domestic judgment for the reason that the merits cannot be re-examined. Tappan v. Heath, 16 N. H. 34.

Justice of the Peace.—In some states, justices' courts are regarded as courts of record, and where this is true nil debet is a bad plea in an action upon a justice's judgment. Adair v. Rogers, Wright (Ohio) 428.

In Stevens v. Fisher, 30 Vt. 202, the court said: "Justices' courts, with us, have always been regarded as courts of record, and in an action of debt on a justice judgment nul tiel record is the proper plea, and not nil debet." Ordinarily, justices' courts are not courts of record, and where this is true nil debet is a good plea in an action upon a justice's judgment. See infra, p. 1158.

judgment rendered in a state court of record,¹ nil debet is a bad plea.

Judgments of Sister States. — Under the Constitution and Acts of Congress the judgment of a court of record in one state is entitled to full faith and credit in every other state; therefore it is held that nul tiel record is the only proper form of the general issue in an action upon a judgment of a court of record of a sister state, and a plea of nil debet is bad because the judgment is regarded as a record, and such plea would permit a re-examination of the merits.² Inasmuch, however, as judgments of courts of sister Waiver of Objections to Plea — Proving Record. — "The question is, whether, under the plea of nil debet, the record of the judgment in Pennsylvania ought to have been proved. 1. If the plea of nil debet had any effect or operation, I think it was incumbent on the plaintiff to prove the record. It is the general issue, which admits nothing, and is a total and general denial of the plaintiff's right of action. 2. The question whether the plea was proper arises on the face of the record, and if improper it ought to have been answered by demurrer, or not to have been answered at all, and treated as a nullity. By taking issue upon it the plaintiff has treated it as a regular and competent plea. Having done this, he cannot afterwards consider it as a nullity, and on that ground dispense with proof which would otherwise be required. It is unnecessary here to determine whether nil debet or nul tiel record is the proper plea to an action of debt on a judgment given in another state." Rush v. Cobbett, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 257.

Debt with Common Counts. — In an states are not absolutely conclusive, but are subject to impeachment for want of jurisdiction, and perhaps for fraud, it is held in some states that nil debet is a good plea to an action upon such a judgment;¹ but the plea is not allowed to have its full effect in action of debt upon a judgment of a sister state it seems that nil debet is a good plea to the common counts. Thus in an action against two defendants, where the common counts alleged that both defendants were in debt to the plaintiffs, and the plea averred as a traverse that one of the defendants, that is the one who pleaded, "does not owe," etc., the court said: "This is irregular, and the plea would, it may be, have been struck out on motion. Nevertheless, it is an argumentative denial of the truth of the counts to which it relates. If this defendant does not owe this money, it follows, as a necessary conclusion, that the two defendants do not. The vice of argumentativeness is not fatal on general demurrer." Mackay v. Gordon, 34 N. J. L. 286.

District of Columbia. — In Draper v. Gorman, 8 Leigh (Va.) 628, it was held, in an elaborately reasoned opinion, that a judgment of the District of Columbia must be regarded as a foreign judgment in an action on which nil debet would be a good plea. This was on the ground that the full faith and credit clause of the Constitution and Acts of Congress did not apply to the District of Columbia, but only to states. Compare Hughes v. Davis, 8 Md. 271, where a directly opposite conclusion was reached.

But see Com. v. Green, 17 Mass. 515, where the court bowed to the rule thought to be laid down in Mills v.

Duryee, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 481, and Hampton v. McConnel, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 234, and said that nil debet was not a good plea, thus overruling the opinion of Chief Justice Parsons in Bissell v. Briggs, 9 Mass. 462. This was in a criminal case, however, and may be regarded as obiter dictum. See Hall v. Williams, 6 Pick. (Mass.) 246.

Argument in Support of Rule — Mills v. Duryee Considered. — "The decision in Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 481, so far as it seems to apply to the case of a judgment rendered without notice or appearance, was extrajudicial. No question of that kind arose in the case. The judgment there in suit was one in which, in the language of the judge who delivered the opinion, 'the defendant had full notice of the suit, for he was arrested and gave bail, and it is beyond all doubt that the judgment of the Supreme Court of New York was conclusive upon the parties in that state. It must, therefore, be conclusive here also.' The decision, if understood as it should be, with reference to the case before the court, has no application to a case where it did not appear that the defendant had notice. The marginal note, if corrected, should be that nil debet is not a good plea to an action founded on a judgment of another state, where it appears that the defendant had full notice of the action by being arrested and giving bail. This is clearly all that was decided, and the broad terms used are to be regarded, as to all beyond this, as loose flourishes or obiter dicta of a single judge. Thus limited, the decision is not in conflict with Thurber v. Blackburne, 1 N. H. 242, and other decisions of state courts. Gleason v. Dodd, 4 Met. (Mass.) 337. * * * But if the Supreme Court of the United States had, in terms, decided that the plea of nil debet was not good when pleaded in the state court to an action of debt on a judgment rendered in another state, their decision has not the weight of authority when cited in a state court. * * * The question what is the proper mode of pleading in a given case is a matter of remedy merely, as to which the local law al-opening up the merits of the case, but only the jurisdiction of the court, fraud, or matters in discharge of the judgment can be inquired into. Even in those jurisdictions where nil debet is not regarded as a good plea on demurrer, it is held that such plea is good after verdict.¹

ways governs. M'Elmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 312. Congress, by their act, prescribed what was the faith and credit to be given in one state to judgments rendered in another; or, as is said in some cases, what was the effect and operation of such judgments; but they were not authorized, and did not assume, to direct anything as to the course of proceedings or the forms of pleadings in the courts of the states. And in order to settle what was the effect of a judgment of another state, or the faith and credit to be given to it, it was not necessary to interfere with the rules of pleading. Those rules were matters of purely municipal regulation, to be governed in each state by its own laws. It would surely be a great stretch of construction to hold that, by the statute of the United States relating to the authentication of judgments of other states, and to the faith and credit to be given to them, the state of New York was debarred from abolishing special pleading, or that the state of Louisiana, where special pleading was never admitted, should be compelled to allow the plea of nil tiel record. * * * All these decisions, and every decision which holds that the want of jurisdiction, as to the parties, may be shown under any form of pleading whatever, strike at the foundation of the early decisions in the United States court that nil debet is not a sufficient plea." Judkins v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co., 37 N. H. 470.

In Thompson v. Whitman, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 462, Bradley, J., said: "It has been supposed that this act, in connection with the constitutional provision which it was intended to carry out, had the effect of rendering the judgments of each state equivalent to domestic judgments in every other state, or at least of giving to them in every other state the same effect, in all respects, which they have in the state where they are rendered. And the language of this court in Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 484, seemed to give countenance to this idea. The court in that case held that the act gave to the judgments of each state the same conclusive effect, as records, in all the states, as they had at home; and that nil debet could not be pleaded to an action brought thereon in another state. This decision has never been departed from in relation to the general effect of such judgments where the questions raised were not questions of jurisdiction. But where the jurisdiction of the court which rendered the judgment has been assailed, quite a different view has prevailed." Further on the learned justice quotes with approval the following language of Chancellor Kent: "'The doctrine in Mills v. Duryee, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 484,' says he, 'is to be taken with the qualification that in all instances the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment may be inquired into, and the plea of nil debet will allow the defendant to show that the court had no jurisdiction over his person. It is only when the jurisdiction of the court in another state is not impeached, either as to the subject-matter or the person, that the record of the judgment is entitled to full faith and credit.'" See also Williams v. Preston, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 606.

In Starbuck v. Murray, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 158, it was remarked by the court that "so long as the question of jurisdiction is in issue, the judgment of a court of another state is, in its effect, like a foreign judgment; it is prima facie evidence; but for all the purposes of sustaining that issue, it is examinable into to the same extent as a judgment rendered by a foreign court. If the jurisdiction of the court is not impeached, it has the character of a record, and for all purposes should receive full faith and credit." This seems to be the necessary result of the course of decision on this subject. Warren v. Flagg, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 448.

In Beale v. Berryman, 30 N. J. L. 216, it was held under a statute that it is regular in an action upon a judgment of a sister state to plead nil debet and give notice of the facts relied upon to show want of jurisdiction.

Judgments of Justices in Other States. — Nil debet is a proper plea in an action of debt on a judgment recovered before a justice of the peace of a sister state.¹

Foreign Judgments. — Nil debet is a good plea to an action of debt on a foreign judgment.²

Nil Debet and Nul Tiel Record have been held to be inconsistent pleas,³ but nevertheless they have often been pleaded together without question,⁴ and it has been held that where nul tiel record and nil debet are both pleaded, it is error for the court to render final judgment on the plea of nul tiel record while the plea of nil debet remains undisposed of.⁵

Variance. — Advantage may be taken of a variance, under a plea of nil debet, where such plea is proper.⁶

Issue of Fact. — Nil debet raises an issue of fact to be tried by a jury.⁷

In Silver Lake Bank v. Harding, 5 Ohio 545, it was held, in an action of debt in Ohio upon a judgment of a justice of the peace in Pennsylvania, that nil debet was not a good plea, a justice's court in Pennsylvania not being a court of record within the meaning of the constitution and laws of the United States. Compare Adair v. Rogers, Wright (Ohio) 428, which was an action of debt upon a judgment of a domestic justice. It was held that nil debet was not a good plea in such case, because "justices' courts in Ohio are regarded as courts of record. In Silver Lake Bank v. Harding, 5 Ohio 545, it was expressly approved.

5. "The main question presented by the argument and record in this case is: Did the court err in rendering judgment on the plea of nul tiel record while the plea of nil debet, verified by affidavit, remained on the file and undisposed of? * * * While the court were right in trying the issue upon the plea of nul tiel record, yet they should not have rendered judgment upon the merits of the case on that issue while another issue was pending which could only have been tried by the jury, except by the defendant to submit it to the court." *Hindman v. In such case the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense.¹

f. WANT OF JURISDICTION — (1) Right to Plead. — The right to impeach a judgment for want of jurisdiction has been elsewhere considered.² A summary statement of the rule is that in the majority of states want of jurisdiction cannot be set up as a defense against a domestic judgment.³ In a few states, however, want of jurisdiction may be pleaded in an action upon a domestic judgment.⁴ But where the judgment sued on is one of a foreign or a sister state, the jurisdiction of the court to render the judgment is always open to inquiry.⁵

(2) How Pleaded — (a) Special Plea. — Where want of jurisdiction is an available defense, it is usually held that such defense must be specially pleaded, and is not available under the general issue of nul tiel record or a general denial.⁶

The absence from the statement of the plaintiff in an action on a foreign judgment of some of the jurisdictional facts is not alone sufficient to prevent judgment for want of sufficient affidavit of defense, where an affidavit filed does not deny the existence of such jurisdictional facts. Omaha First Nat. Bank v. Crosby, 179 Pa. St. 63.

Sufficiency of Affidavit — Appeal With Supersedeas. — "The affidavit asserts that the appeal from the New Jersey judgment operated as a supersedeas, but this averment is of a legal conclusion; and the facts upon which the correctness of that conclusion depends are not alleged. It is not stated that the security required to suspend execution was entered. Moreover, even if it appeared that the appeal superseded the judgment, it is, to say the least, extremely doubtful whether the rule which was unqualifiedly laid down in Union Trust Co. v. Rochester, etc., R. Co., 29 Fed. Rep. 609, would not still be applicable. The rule for judgment is made absolute." Woodbridge, etc., Engineering Co. v. Ritter, 70 Fed. Rep. 677.

judgment such as the court has competency to pronounce cannot, in an action thereon in the same jurisdiction, be impeached by citizen or foreigner by averment and proof that the court had not jurisdiction of the person of the defendant. There is no maxim of natural justice or principle of comity which requires the court to allow a nonresident to aver a fact contrary to the record while the same privilege is denied to resident citizens. Miller v. Dungan, 35 N. J. L. 390. And a plea of such facts will be stricken out on motion. McCahill v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc., 26 N. J. Eq. 531.

Reason for Rule. — The question came up squarely in Hill v. Mendenhall, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 453, and the court (at page 455), said: "Nul tiel record puts in issue only the fact of the existence of the record, and is met by the production of the record itself, valid upon its face, or an exemplification duly authenticated under the Act of Congress. A defense requiring evidence to contradict the record must necessarily admit that the record exists as a matter of fact, and seek relief by avoiding its effect. It should, therefore, be formally pleaded, in order that the facts upon which it is predicated may be admitted or put in issue. Under the common-law system of pleading this would be done by a special plea. The equivalent of such a plea is required under any system. The precise form in which the statement should be made will depend upon the practice of the court in which it is used, but it must be made in some form. Defects appearing on the face of the record may be taken advantage of upon its production under a plea of nul tiel record, but those which require extrinsic evidence to make them apparent must be formally alleged before they can be proven. This we believe to be in accordance with the practice of all courts in which such defenses have been allowed, and it is certainly the logical deduction from the elementary principles of pleading."

In Hoffheimer v. Stiefel, 17 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 236, it was held that in order to make proof admissible, in an action on a judgment of a sister state, that such judgment was rendered without jurisdiction of the person, the defendants were bound to plead the facts upon which they relied in order to impeach the judgment, in order that the plaintiff might be prepared to meet the issue tendered, and that such facts could not be shown under a general denial. It seems from the opinion in this case that the reason why the facts could not be shown under a general denial is that a general or specific denial in the answer controverts only material allegations, or such facts as the plaintiff is compelled to prove in order to establish his cause of action. In this case, under a general denial in the defendants' answer, the defendants were not bound to prove service of process in the Missouri action otherwise than by a production of the record properly authenticated, and the affirmative was then cast upon the defendants of impeaching the record (Ferguson v. Crawford, 86 N. Y. 609), and this could not be done except by an affirmative plea setting up this defense. In other words, a general denial puts in issue nothing more than a plea of nul tiel record would put in issue. See, as to this last proposition, Hill v. Mendenhall, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 453; Brown v. Balde, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 283.

In Brown v. Balde, 3 Lans. (N. Y.) 283, it is held that under the code a general denial to a complaint found upon a record puts in issue nothing more than a plea of nul tiel record, and if the defendant seeks to impeach the record he must give notice setting forth the facts specially. Cited in Hoffheimer v. Stiefel, 17 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 236.

In New Jersey, by statute, the general issue with notice of the subject-matter to be pleaded takes the place of a able intendment the facts alleged in the plea can exist and the court rendering the judgment could still have had jurisdiction, the plea is bad.¹ Pleas of this character must present strong special plea. Beale v. Berryman, 30 N. J. L. 216, holding, however, that the general issue in the case of an action upon the judgment of a sister state is nul debet.

In Sammis v. Wightman, 31 Fla. 10, it was held that a plea to an action on a judgment obtained in a sister state which sets up that there was no service of summons on the defendant in the action resulting in such judgment is bad, as it does not exclude the possibility that he may have appeared in that action, but that this is not the case where the declaration shows that the court which rendered the judgment sued on obtained jurisdiction solely by service of summons.

In Home Friendly Soc. v. Tyler, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 693, it was held insufficient to aver that an attorney who appeared for the defendant did so without the defendant's authority, knowledge, or consent, but it must also be averred that such attorney was not the defendant's regularly retained attorney. But see Wright v. Weisinger, 13 Miss. 210, where it is held that it is a good plea for the defendant to aver that he had no notice of the proceedings in the former suit, without negating the fact that he appeared, as in such case, if the plaintiff designs to rely on the appearance of the defendant as an answer to the want of notice, he should plead that fact in a reply.

Illustrations of Sufficient Pleas. — A plea that the defendant was not a citizen of the state where the judgment was rendered; that he was not there at any time pending the suit; that he was not notified of its pendency by service of process or otherwise, and that he did not appear or defend the same, either personally or by attorney, is good and sufficient. Puckett v. Pope, 3 Ala. 552; Bigger v. Hutchings, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 445; Welch v. Sykes, 8 Ill. 197; Shufeldt v. Buckley, 45 Ill. 223; Price v. Ward, 25 N. J. L. 225; Aultman v. Mills, 9 Wash. 68.

In Barkman v. Hopkins, 11 Ark. 168, speaking of a plea substantially as above, the court said: "We know of no other means by which the court could have acquired jurisdiction of the person."

prima facie defenses. In a plea to the jurisdiction of a court of general jurisdiction, facts showing that the court did not have

Illustrations of Insufficient Pleas. — In a suit on a judgment obtained in another state, it is not a good plea by a domestic corporation to allege that process was not served on any one authorized to act for it in the suit, for it may have had an office and transacted business in such foreign state, and made the contract there, and the process may have been served on its president or other officer while in such state. Moulin v. Trenton Mut. L., etc., Ins. Co., 24 N. J. L. 223.

It is not sufficient, in an action upon a sister state judgment, for a plea to the jurisdiction of the court rendering the judgment to aver that the defendant was not a resident of the state; it must also be shown that he was not in the state. Wilson v. Jackson, 10 Mo. 330.

For an illustration of a plea held, upon a very strict construction, insufficient to show want of jurisdiction of the person, see Cowan v. Braidwood, 1 M. & G. 882, 39 E. C. L. 604.

Jurisdictional Facts Alleged but Not Denied Are Admitted. — If the complaint avers fully all the facts upon which the jurisdiction of the court rendering it depended, and the answer does not deny them, all questions as to the defendant's liability are at rest, and his liability for the damages in the judgment cannot be disputed. Pringle v. Woolworth, 12 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 554.

Sufficiency of Plea of Want of Jurisdiction of the Person. — See generally Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Harmless, 124 Ind. 25; Stevenson v. Flournoy, 89 Ky. 561; Cannon v. Cooper, 39 Miss. 784; Mackay v. Gordon, 34 N. J. L. 286; Price v. Ward, 25 N. J. L. 225; Cassidy v. Leitch, 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 315; Evans v. Instine, 6 Ohio 117; Waddams v. Burnham, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 233.

Sufficiency of Plea to Jurisdiction of Subject-matter. — A plea that the court which rendered the judgment sued on had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit is bad, unless it is alleged that the plaintiff was not served and did not appear. The reason for this is that if the court acquired jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, the question of jurisdiction of the subject-matter was one fit and proper to be tried and determined in the previous action, and therefore it is res judicata.

Hensley v. Force, 12 Ark. 756. See also Wilson v. Mount Pleasant Bank, 6 Leigh (Va.) 570.

Exhibits in Aid of Answer. — A copy of the summons and indorsement of service thereon in the former action cannot be considered in aid of an answer setting up want of jurisdiction of the person, since only those written instruments which constitute the foundation of the defense can be made exhibits to the answer, and it is only such exhibits as are properly parts of the answer that aid or strengthen it. Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Harmless, 124 Ind. 25.

Pleading Want of Jurisdiction Over Codefendant. — In an action against several joint defendants on a joint judgment of a sister state, one of such defendants can plead a want of jurisdiction in the foreign court over his codefendant. Mackay v. Gordon, 34 N. J. L. 286. Compare Bacon v. McBean, 3 U. C. Q. B. 305, where it was held, in assumpsit on a foreign judgment against two defendants, that a plea that one of them had never been served with process, and that he had no notice of the proceedings in a foreign court, was bad as setting up a defense for both which applied to one only.

Harmless Error. — Sustaining a demurrer to a plea to the jurisdiction is harmless error where the record produced shows that the court had jurisdiction. Wright v. Weisinger, 5 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 210.

Duplicity in Plea. — In Waddams v. Burnham, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 233, the plea alleged that the defendant at the time of the service of the writs in the former suit was not an inhabitant of the state of Connecticut, where the judgment was rendered, and it also alleged that the property attached in the former suit was not his property. The plaintiff demurred for duplicity, but the demurrer was overruled. "In this case the two facts set forth in the plea in bar go to show that the court in Connecticut had no jurisdiction of the causes in which the several judgments declared upon were rendered; and this is one entire defense, and no duplicity in pleading."

In Wilson v. Mount Pleasant Bank, 6 Leigh (Va.) 570, the defendants jurisdiction must be alleged with absolute certainty in every particular.¹

The Plea Need Not State a Defense to the cause of action on which the judgment is founded.²

Waiver of Right to Bring Error. — Appearing in a suit upon a judgment and pleading want of jurisdiction do not constitute a waiver of the right to bring a writ of error in the original judgment.³

Question for Jury. — Where the issue on a plea of want of jurisdiction is as to the authority of an attorney to appear for the defendant, the question is for the jury.⁴

(b) General Denial or General Issue. — In some states it is held that pleaded that they never executed the power of attorney under which the judgment sued on was confessed, and that they had no notice of the commencement or pendency of the suit in the state where the judgment was rendered. The court held that an objection to the plea on the ground of duplicity was not sustainable.

A plea of want of jurisdiction in the court which rendered the judgment sued on must set forth the facts showing that the action was coram non iudice. Storms v. Storms, 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 586.

Averments of Legal Conclusions. — Averments in an answer to an action upon a foreign judgment, that it was "an irregular and void judgment," and "without any jurisdiction or authority on the part of the court to enter such a judgment upon the facts and upon the pleadings," are mere averments of legal conclusions, and are insufficient to impeach the judgment without specifying the grounds upon which it is supposed to be irregular and void or without jurisdiction or authority. Ritchie v. McMullen, 159 U. S. 235.

"An averment that a party was not within the jurisdiction of a court is a mere expression of opinion as to the effect in law of such party's situation or privilege. If the statement had been, as in the case of Price v. Ward, 25 N. J. L. 225, that this defendant was not served with process; that he did not appear; that he was not a resident or present within the jurisdiction of the court at any time pending the suit, or when the judgment was rendered, this court could see from such facts an apparent absence of jurisdiction in the court rendering the judgment; but the defect of the plea is that it states no facts, but in lieu of them instructs the court with an opinion." Mackay v. Gordon, 34 N. J. L. 286. An averment similar to this was discarded by Judge Marcy, in Starbuck v. Murray, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 148.

An affidavit of defense in an action on a foreign judgment which avers want of jurisdiction in that "no process was legally served" must also state ground of such defense, i. e., wherein the service was insufficient, especially where the record shows that the defendants were summoned. Motter v. Welty, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 82, 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 39.

Answer Showing Error but Not Want of Jurisdiction. — In an action on a judgment of a sister state, an answer alleging error in the exercise of jurisdiction, but not want of jurisdiction, is demurrable; and therefore an answer alleging that the judgment sued on was rendered on a complaint stating no cause of action is demurrable. Williams v. Renwick, 52 Ark. 160.

want of jurisdiction to render the judgment sued on may be taken advantage of under a general denial,¹ or under the general issue of nil debet.² Indeed, it has been seen, the one case in which nil debet is a good plea in an action upon a judgment of a court of record of a sister state is where it is sought to impeach such judgment for want of jurisdiction.³

(c) Other Methods. — In many states, by statute, a denial that the judgment sued on was “duly given or made” is sufficient to put the jurisdiction in issue.⁴ A denial of the jurisdiction alleged in the complaint necessitates its proof.⁵ In an action upon a judgment of a sister state the jurisdiction will be inquired into, whether pleaded or not, when the facts appear on the face of the record.⁶

g. DISCHARGE, PAYMENT, AND SATISFACTION. — Matters in discharge of a judgment sued on must be specially pleaded.⁷

“We hold, then, that the jurisdiction of the Illinois court, rendering the judgment in suit, of the person of the defendant was put in issue by the general denial. And this is in accordance with reason, for the defendant, by proving that the court rendering the judgment against him had no jurisdiction of his person, would establish the fact that there was no judgment as alleged in the petition. The petition alleges a judgment. Such proof would establish that there was no judgment.” Crone v. Dawson, 19 Mo. App. 214, citing Greenway v. James, 34 Mo. 326.

Where the Record Does Not Show Jurisdiction. — Ordinarily, in debt on a foreign judgment, a plea averring that the defendant was without the jurisdiction of the court and had no notice should also allege that he did not, either in person or by attorney, appear to the action; but this rule only applies to cases in which the record shows that the court had jurisdiction of the person, and where this does not appear the defendant may, under the general issue, show that the court had no jurisdiction. Foster v. Glazener, 27 Ala. 391.

Discharge in Insolvency. — In an action on a foreign judgment, a plea of a discharge in insolvency under the law of the country in which the judgment was rendered should set out the law,

Thus, payment or satisfaction is a good defense, but it must be specially pleaded and cannot be proved under the plea of nul tiel record.¹

Nul Tiel Record and Payment Inconsistent. — Indeed, it has been held that nul tiel record and payment are inconsistent pleas, and that while a defendant may plead either, he cannot plead both.²

A Plea of Accord and Satisfaction is a good plea to debt on a judgment.³

so that it can be seen whether the discharge was from the indebtedness or from imprisonment for the debt. Baker v. Palmer, 83 Ill. 568.

"To an action on a record, a plea of payment was not good at common law. But if a judgment of record had been paid, the defendant had a right to demand a warrant to some attorney of the court, authorizing him to enter up satisfaction on the roll. 1 Archb. Pr. 325; 2 Saund. Pr. Cas. 713. But by the statute of 4 Anne, c. 16, § 12, payment may be pleaded to an action on a judgment, if the whole judgment be satisfied. 1 Chitty's Pl. 426." Briley v. Sugg, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 366, 30 Am. Dec. 172.

Partial Payment. — In debt on a judgment, under a plea of payment the defendant cannot properly be allowed the benefit of a partial payment. A plea of payment is one in bar, and should go to the entire amount of the judgment. Where, however, under such a plea, evidence of a partial payment was given without objection, and the jury allowed it, the Court of Appeals refused to set aside the verdict and order a new trial. Colclough v. Rhodus, 2 Rich. L. (S. Car.) 76. In this case the court said that the most approved and regular course of proceeding to obtain credit for a partial payment was by a rule to show cause.

Plea of Arrest and Imprisonment. — To an action of debt upon a judgment it is a good plea in bar that execution issued upon the judgment declared upon, and the defendant, by virtue thereof, was arrested and committed to prison, without averring that the defendant remained in prison until the commencement of the present action. Any facts which show that the debtor has been discharged from imprisonment without satisfaction of the judgment should be replied by the plaintiff.

Issue on Plea of Satisfaction by Levy. — Where the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had caused the amount of the judgment and all interest, costs, and charges to be levied and fully satisfied of the lands and estate of the defendant, and this plea was traversed and the issues joined, it was held that the only issue was whether the execution appeared to be satisfied by a levy regular upon its face, and that no question as to the validity of the levy was raised by the plea. Pratt v. Jones, 22 Vt. 341.

Under a Plea of Nul Tiel Record the plaintiff must produce a judgment that does not appear to be satisfied. Blair v. Caldwell, 3 Mo. 353.

2. Riley v. Riley, 20 N. J. L. 114. Compare Stevens v. Fisher, 30 Vt. 200, where nul tiel record and payment were both pleaded without any question as to the propriety of so doing.

3. Hardwick v. King, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 312.

Insufficient Accord and Satisfaction. — Under a plea that the judgment sued on has been compromised and discharged by the payment of a sum named to the judgment plaintiffs jointly, it is not competent to show an accord and satisfaction as to a part of the judgment under an agreement with one or both of such parties. To constitute a complete bar or defense the accord must have been fully executed. Jackson v. Olmstead, 87 Ind. 92.

Sufficiency of Plea. — To an action on judgment, the defendant pleaded that in consideration that the defendant would make and deliver at his shop, by a time named, certain winnowing mills, the plaintiff promised to receive the same in full payment and discharge of the judgment: and averred that, relying on such promise, the defendant did make said mills by the time named, and had them ready

h. FRAUD. — Fraud as a defense to an action on a judgment must be specially pleaded.¹ The facts constituting the fraud must be distinctly averred in the plea.²

7. Replication. — To a plea of nul tiel record in an action of debt on a judgment, the replication must state that there is such a record and conclude prout patet per recordum, with a prayer that it may be inspected by the court.³ To a special plea setting up want of jurisdiction to render the judgment sued upon, a replication is necessary.⁴ Where the defendant pleads payment, and at his shop for delivery to the plaintiff. This was held a good plea in bar of the action. Downer v. Sinclair, 15 Vt. 495.

Allegations that no legal judgment has been rendered, and charging fraud, without stating facts evidencing fraud, are mere conclusions of law, and demurrable. Sammis v. Wightman, 31 Fla. 10.

A plea of fraud in an action of debt on a judgment is insufficient, even on demurrer, unless it sets out the facts in which the fraud consists. Hopkins v. Woodward, 75 Ill. 62.

3. Bone v. McGinley, 7 How. (Miss.) 671; Pearl v. Wellman, 8 Ill. 311.

The omission of such conclusion is cured by verdict, and will not affect the judgment. Pearl v. Wellman, 8 Ill. 311.

Similiter Unnecessary. — The plea of nul tiel record does not present new matter, and the absence of a similiter to it is not ground for setting aside a verdict or arresting judgment. Sammis v. Wightman, 31 Fla. 10.

Estoppel to Plead Nul Tiel Record. — Special replication of matter estopping the defendant to deny that there was such a judgment as the one sued on will be rejected on motion, because the plaintiff can prove such matters upon the issue of nul tiel record without such special replication. Wilbur v. Abbott, 59 N. H. 132. Compare Puckett v. Pope, 3 Ala. 552.

Sufficiency of Replication. — Where a plea consists solely of matter of record, as, for example, "There is no such judgment," in a scire facias post annum et diem, the replication should reassert the record and conclude by praying that it may be inspected by the court; if it conclude to the contrary, it is error. "The second plea of the plaintiff in error, the defendant below, was nul tiel record, informally and shortly drawn up. In practice, it is not usual to conclude pleas either to the court or country, but if a plaintiff requires it the court will direct them to be put in a legal form. If this had been required, the defendant would have concluded this plea to the court, and the plaintiff below should have replied by reasserting his record, and concluded with a prayer that it might be viewed and inspected by the court and a day given to the parties. 1 Chitty's Pl. 480, 571; 2 Chitty's Pl. 625; 3 Black. Com. 330, 331." Share v. Becker, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 239.

4. In Zepp v. Hager, 70 Ill. 223, it was held that the replication to a plea setting up want of jurisdiction of the court of a sister state over the defendant's person should properly reply that the record shows a personal service, and that the issue should be determined simply by an inspection of the record. See also Lapham v. Briggs, 27 Vt. 26. And as to sufficiency of replication to plea of no jurisdiction, see Long v. Long, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 597; Buchanan v. Port, 5 Ind. 264.

Replication of Appearance. — In Wright v. Weisinger, 5 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 210, it was held to be a good plea to an action of debt founded upon a judgment rendered in another state, that the defendant had no notice of the proceedings in the suit in which the judgment was rendered; and if, in such case, the

the plaintiff neglects to reply thereto, the defendant is entitled to judgment.¹

8. Judgment. — The judgment in an action upon a judgment is governed by ordinary principles.² The judgment is quod recuperet, and not a mere award of execution.³

9. Costs. — In an action upon a judgment, costs are in the main governed by ordinary principles,⁴ although, as has been seen, in plaintiff relies on the appearance of the defendant as an answer to the want of notice, he should plead that fact in reply. But to the effect that a plea of want of jurisdiction must negative appearance, see supra, p. 1159.

Where the defendant pleads residence out of the state and no submission to the jurisdiction, and the record shows an appearance by attorney, such appearance is matter for a replication; and want of authority in the attorney is matter for a rejoinder. Welch v. Sykes, 8 Ill. 197.

Estoppel to Plead Want of Jurisdiction.

— In Puckett v. Pope, 3 Ala. 552, a plea setting up want of jurisdiction over the person of the defendant was held sufficient on demurrer, and it was further held that if there was anything in the record which would estop the defendant from interposing such a plea, the plaintiff should set it up in a reply.

Replication of Foreign Law. — Where, in an action on a foreign judgment, in reply to a plea of lack of jurisdiction, the plaintiff avers the foreign court to be possessed of powers which it did not have at common law, the plaintiff must set forth the statute conferring such powers. Kohn v. Haas, 95 Ala. 478.

1. Pearl v. Wellman, 8 Ill. 311.

2. Necessity of Re-entering. — In Lander v. Rounsaville, 12 Tex. 195, it was held that where an application was made in the District Court to enforce a judgment of the District Court against any special property or right in property, the judgment need not be re-entered; but that where the application was upon judgments before a magistrate, and especially where a portion of a claim still existed in contract, then a judgment should be rendered in form for the amount of the claim, with specific directions to meet the prayer of the petition and the exigencies of the case.

Conformity to Former Judgment. — In Sanguinetti v. Roche, (Supreme Ct.) 15 N. Y. Supp. 185, the action was upon an English judgment against a married woman, which judgment contained a provision limiting its execution to her separate estate. It was held to be error in a suit thereon in New York to render a general judgment in personam without adding a limitation imposed by the English judgment. The court said: "A party may ask to have a foreign judgment enforced, but the enforcement must be in accordance with its precise terms. He may be entitled to have it enforced as written, but he can be entitled to nothing more. If it be replied that there is no such judgment in personam known to our laws as the judgment here sought to be enforced, that, surely, is no reason why the plaintiff should be granted another and a different judgment, merely because the latter is known to our laws. He must stand or fall upon the exact terms of his foreign judgment."

Judgment by Default. — In Sturtevant v. Milwaukee, etc., R. Co., 11 Wis. 63, it was held that a default in an action upon a judgment admitted the existence of the judgment sued upon, and was conclusive although the first judgment was afterwards reversed. See also generally, as to judgments by default, Mabry v. Erwin, 78 N. Car. 45. And see article DEFAULTS, vol. 6, p. 1.

Findings. — In an action upon a judgment and upon promissory notes the court found that no part of the judgment had ever been appealed from, set aside, or paid, and that the balance of the notes, after deducting certain payments, remained unpaid. It was held that these findings were equivalent to a specific finding that the amount of the judgment and of the balance of the notes was due. Turner v. Mahoney, 56 Cal. 215.

10. Joinder of Actions. — Causes of action on several judgments cannot be united in one action, unless all the debtors in the judgments are the same and are made defendants.²

XXI. EQUITABLE RELIEF AGAINST JUDGMENTS — 1. History of the Remedy. — The common law of an early day had no practical machinery by which a litigant might be relieved from unconscionable and false judgments. There were no appellate courts where a case might be reviewed, and the only escape was by an attain of the assize, whereby a verdict was declared false and another substituted.⁴ This was attended with much difficulty, and soon judgment for costs therein by parol evidence, though he might have had a taxation of the costs by a motion therefor in the original action. Palmer v. Glover, 73 Ind. 529.

An action upon a judgment for the damages and costs recovered therein is not a suit on a fee bill. Palmer v. Glover, 73 Ind. 529.

In Missouri, where the costs of an action go to the clerk, the plaintiff in an action upon a judgment who seeks to recover the costs incurred in obtaining such judgment must show that he or his assignor has paid such costs. Meyer v. Mehrhoff, 19 Mo. App. 682.

Cost of Transcript. — The cost of the transcript of the record of a judgment is properly recoverable as damages in a suit on the judgment; but if not embraced in the verdict, it will be no ground for setting aside the judgment that the cost is embraced in it. Stephens v. Roby, 27 Miss. 744.

The Costs of a Fruitless Execution upon a judgment may be recovered in a subsequent action upon such judgment. Miller v. Miller, 5 N. J. L. 586.

1. See supra, XVIII. 1. a. (1) (c) Leave of Court to Sue.

In Whelpley v. Nash, 46 Mich. 25, it was held that where a justice awards excessive and illegal costs, the plaintiff may remit such costs and sue upon such judgment for the damages, and in such case he has "good cause" for so doing and recovery by How. Stat. Mich., § 6941, and is therefore entitled to recover the costs of the second action.

Misjoinder of Actions. — Where the cause of action on a promissory note against one maker has already, and prior to the commencement of an action against the other makers, been merged in a judgment in a court of competent jurisdiction of the state, it is a misjoinder of actions to unite with an action upon the note against the makers not before sued an action against the party upon the judgment rendered. Lindh v. Crowley, 26 Kan. 47.

In a scire facias in favor of one who has only a partial interest in the judgment, judgment should be entered only for the amount of his interest, if the defendant may have a defense against the equitable owners of the residue. Peterson v. Lothrop, 34 Pa. St. 223.

fell into disuse.¹ The absence of legal remedies forced litigants to seek relief from the chancellor. The authority of chancery, acting in personam, to enjoin that which would be inequitable, or against conscience, was generally well established. But in this class of cases the indirect effect was to annul the solemn decisions of the common-law courts; and it was not permitted without a bitter contest had in the time of Lord Coke. The jurisdiction of chancery was, however, finally sustained.² The antagonism of the law courts, though unsuccessful, made chancery cautious in interfering against the operation of judgments. That a bill may be entertained, it must present a strong case.³

"It has always been the theory of the English and American chancery that the court does not, by injunction, interfere with the common-law courts or their judges, but that its restraining power is exercised upon the suitor, who is within the jurisdiction of the court of equity. This theory has not always accomplished its purpose. It has not served at all times to avert strife and collision between the two judicial systems. It is well known that a flagrant quarrel raged in the reign of James I. between the Lord Chancellor Ellesmere and Chief Justice Coke, growing out of the issuing of injunctions by the chancellor to restrain certain suitors from proceeding with their causes in the Court of King's Bench. This controversy grew to such violence that it was carried before the king in council, where it was settled in favor of the chancellor's jurisdiction." Wagner v. Drake, 31 Fed. Rep. 849. Bills for New Trial. — Bills in equity of this character are commonly denominated bills for a new trial.¹ For some time after the jurisdiction of chancery to interfere was established they were in constant use. It would seem from some cases that anciently bills brought for slight grounds, as errors and irregularities of a technical nature, were sustained.² But by the better

"The early English cases which have been brought to our notice, and which we have before had occasion to examine, and some of the American cases, and especially the case of Colyer v. Langford, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 237, seem to go upon the ground that a bill will be entertained for a new trial, in an action determined at law, upon very much the same grounds that new trials are granted at law, where the courts of law have no means of granting a new trial in the case, either for defect of powers or from lapse of time." Burton v. Wiley, 26 Vt. 430.

"The history of this branch of equity jurisdiction is briefly this: The first instance to be met with in any book of legal authority, of a new trial with reference to the merits of the case on the evidence, is in the year 1665, temp. Charles II. (Style's R. 462, 466). It is supposed to be owing to the fact that motions were not reported before that time. For many years afterwards new trials were grudgingly granted at common law; and for that very reason courts of equity were liberal in granting relief against common-law judgments, and the Court of Chancery was induced to take to itself the decision of legal questions in many cases which now appear to have been beyond the legitimate bounds of its jurisdiction. For it is now universally admitted that trials by jury, in civil cases, could not subsist without a power residing somewhere to grant new trials. Misconduct, mistake, surprise, and prejudice, and the other grounds of failure which are now provided against by this expedient, must have operated in ancient times equally as now." Taylor v. Sutton, 15 Ga. 103.

opinion, established grounds for relief were necessary in this as in other equitable actions.¹ Eventually courts of law began to grant new trials more freely;² and in modern times the amalgamation of law and equity in code states and the universal addition to the defenses available at law have unsettled relations theretofore existing. Many equitable defenses may be made at law; while for relief after judgment, on equitable grounds, a remedy is provided by motion or direct action.³ The effect of this change upon the power of courts of equity to give relief has been variously estimated.⁴ When there is no remedy at law, or when all remedy has been lost, without fault or negligence, equitable jurisdiction to give relief is unquestioned. But when a remedy at law on the equitable grounds disclosed is open, there is a decided difference of opinion. The jurisdiction, however, remains important, and the cases in which it is exercised are numerous, as will more fully appear hereafter.⁵

1. "Anciently, courts of equity exercised a familiar jurisdiction over trials at law, and compelled the successful party to submit to a new trial, or to be perpetually enjoined from proceeding on his verdict. This relief was not granted unless the application was founded upon some clear case of fraud or injustice, or upon newly discovered evidence which could not possibly have been made use of upon the first trial." Floyd v. Jayne, 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 479. See also Doubleday v. Makepeace, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 10; Simpson v. Hart, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 91; Goss v. McClaren, 17 Tex. 107; Vardeman v. Edwards, 21 Tex. 737; Plummer v. Power, 29 Tex. 6; Metzger v. Wendler, 35 Tex. 378.

2. See Bright v. Eynon, 1 Burr. 390; Powers v. Butler, 4 N. J. Eq. 465.

3. "Many of the strong barriers which separated the two jurisdictions of law and equity in the march of liberal ideas have been swept away; and law tribunals are now clothed by statute with many of the powers to grant new trials and to set aside hard judgments, which formerly belonged to the courts of chancery. At no very remote period the want of such a power in law courts sent the suitor to another tribunal, only to multiply actions and increase his costs." Wells v. Wall, 1 Oregon 295. See also cases cited in the next note.

4. "Applications to a court of chancery for a new trial, after a trial at law, are in our time very rare. The practice, except in cases the most extraordinary, has long since gone out of use, because courts of law are now competent to grant new trials, and are in the constant exercise of that right to a most liberal extent." Doubleday v. Makepeace, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 10. "One reason of this jurisdiction going out of use, particularly in the American courts, was, as it may be reasonably supposed, that the verdict and judgment were rendered in the same court, and a very short time usually intervened between the verdict and the judgment, whereas in the English courts it was different." Taylor v. Fore, 42 Tex. 258.

In Larabie v. Brown, 1 De G. & J. 204, decided in 1857, Turner, L. J., said: "This bill is in the nature of a bill for a new trial. Such bills appear to have been filed in former times; but I believe that no such attempt has been made for the last two or three hundred years."

5. "Formerly bills in equity were constantly filed to obtain new trials in actions at law, a practice which still obtains in Kentucky, and perhaps in some other jurisdictions; but the firmly settled practice by which courts of law entertain motions for new trial, and the dislike of one court unnecessarily to interfere with proceedings in an-

2. General Limitations. — Generally speaking, equity will prevent enforcement of a judgment where the complainant has a good defense to the action of which he could not have availed himself at law, or of which, through fraud, accident, or mistake, unmixed with negligence or fault on his part, he did not avail himself.¹

3. Parties — a. PARTIES PLAINTIFF — Judgment Debtor or Privies. — A bill for equitable relief against judgments, as thus defined, can only be brought by the judgment debtor or his privies,² even though those not parties to the judgment have an interest in the result of the litigation.³

EQUITABLE DEFENSES*³ — (1) Not Available at Law — In General. — Notwithstanding the encroachment of law courts upon those of equity, there are many rights which can only be litigated in equity. And when a bill which exhibits such a right is proved, a judgment obtained because it could not be set up as a defense at law will be enjoined to make the relief complete. The only allegations tailed and refused to comply with the conditions of their purchase, Swan v. Thompson, 36 Mo. App. 155.

Separate Judgment Plaintiffs — Multifariousness. — Where several separate judgment plaintiffs were joined as defendants in a suit to enjoin the judgments, it was held that the bill was not multifarious. The court said: "The judgments against plaintiffs originated in the same transaction. The questions with regard to their validity and interpretation are the same. The executions were levied upon the same property, and the question upon which it is sought to restrain them was common to all the cases, and substantially affected them all alike; and, in addition to that, the litigation has heretofore been conducted as if the different proceedings were but one cause." Wills Point Bank v. Bates, 76 Tex. 329. See also Quick v. Van Auker, 3 Penny. (Pa.) 469; and generally article MULTIFARIOUSNESS.

"The bill distinctly charges that they participated in the alleged fraud in obtaining the judgment, and therefore they are necessary and proper parties defendants." Hill v. Reifsnider, 39 Md. 429.

"The process of injunction, in a proper case for staying judgment, goes against the parties, and not against the tribunal or its judges." Western R. Co. v. Nolan, 48 N. Y. 513.

When Officers Are Necessary Parties. — Officials interested in the proceeds of a judgment levying a fine, and not the state, are necessary parties defendant. Smith v. State, 26 Tex. App. 49. See also Bramlett v. McVey, 91 Ky. 151; Harris v. Beaven, 11 Bush (Ky.) 254.

Under the Ohio Rev. Stat., § 5015, the sheriff holding an execution is not a necessary party to an action for equitable relief against the judgment, except where the creditor is a nonresident of the state, or has left it to avoid service, or so conceals himself that process cannot be served upon him. Howard v. Levering, 8 Ohio Cir. Ct. Rep. 614.

Fraud. — "It is a common practice, in some parts of the state, to make a sheriff who has in his hands an execution a party defendant to a bill to enjoin the judgment upon which execution was issued; and there can be no doubt that this, as a general rule, is entirely wrong. A sheriff is an officer of the law. He is in no shape interested in the judgment upon which the execution has been issued. But still, if the sheriff unlawfully combines with the creditor, unnecessarily to oppress and harass the debtor, he may with propriety be made a defendant. In the case before the court Medill is charged with being the active agent in the commission of the fraud. He was, therefore, with propriety made a defendant." Allen v. Medill, 14 Ohio 445.

necessary in such cases are those which suffice in equity to set out the particular equitable ground taken, with a showing of the existence of the judgment.¹ Since the ground relied upon could not have been set up as a defense at law, no excuse for failure to

1. Actions for Specific Performance, or Rescission of Contract. — Mason v. Jones, 7 D. C. 247; Oldham v. Woods, 3 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 47; Walker v. Ogden, 1 Dana (Ky.) 253; Thompson v. Tilton, 34 N. J. Eq. 306; Cox v. Jerman, 6 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 526; Lewis v. Brooks, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 167; Page v. Winston, 2 Munf. (Va.) 298. See also Bomeisler v. Forster, 154 N. Y. 229; Prout v. Gibson, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 389; Edwards v. Morris, 1 Ohio 524.

"As to the idea that a court of equity will never interfere after the vendee has exercised his privilege of electing damages at law, this, we have seen, is not so. Even in executory contracts, the authorities are numerous where the vendee has been compelled to give up damages recovered upon a rescission of the contract in a suit at law, and accept performance in lieu thereof. This is usually done, and indeed always done, where time is not of the essence of the contract, and the lapse of time has not arisen from any default of the vendor, and the situation and value of the property has not materially changed. And if this will be done in executory contracts, there is much more reason why the power should be exercised where the contract has been executed." Reese v. Smith, 12 Mo. 344.

Where the bill shows that the complainant was the first party to break an agreement, he cannot be relieved from the judgment because thereafter the judgment creditor put it out of his power to perform his covenants. Tiffany v. Norris, 28 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 97. Contra, Galena, etc., R. Co. v. Ennor, 116 Ill. 55.

"In all cases like this the course of this court is to restrain proceedings at law while a suit here involving the same question is depending and the equity of the bill is not sufficiently denied by the answer. * * * The injunction to prevent suits and trials at law, in such cases, is a measure of course in the practice of courts of equity." Apthorpe v. Comstock, Hopk.

(N. Y.) 143, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 482, affirmed in 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 386.

Marshaling Assets. — Harding v. Fiske, 25 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 348; Varnum v. Hart, 119 N. Y. 101; Barhorst v. Armstrong, 42 Fed. Rep. 2.

Trusts. — Fairfax v. Hopkins, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 134; Wilson v. Cheshire, 1 M'Cord Eq. (S. Car.) 235.

A bill for the determination of trust matters will be entertained though all the debts are paid, and, by statute, under such circumstances the defense could have been made at law, since the equitable relief is more effectual. Justice v. Scott, 4 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 108; Henderson v. Hoke, 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. Car.) 119. See also Harwood v. Jones, 10 Gill & J. (Md.) 404.

Accounts and Accounting. — Franklin Mill Co. v. Schmidt, 50 Ill. 208; Gregg v. Brower, 67 Ill. 525; Jones v. Slubey, 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 372; Billups v. Sears, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 31.

"It is not like the case of a judgment which concludes the parties and which cannot be collaterally inquired into. It is in the predicament of one which has been obtained because certain equities, cognizable in a court of equity, could not be availed of in a court of law. In all such cases a court of equity will enjoin the execution of the judgment at law until right and justice be done between the parties." Young v. Reynolds, 4 Md. 375.

Ejectment. — Johnson v. Christian, 128 U. S. 374; Wildy v. Bonney, 35 Miss. 77; Nibert v. Baghurst, 47 N. J. Eq. 201; Noland v. Cromwell, 4 Munf. (Va.) 155.

Federal Not Controlled by State Practice. — Rev. Stat. U. S., § 914, which provides that the practice, pleading, etc., in the Circuit and District Courts of the United States shall conform as nearly as may be to the practice, pleading, etc., in the state courts, does not authorize the federal courts to disregard the established distinctions between law and equity, nor to permit equitable defenses in actions at law, although the state statutes permit such defenses to be made in the state courts. Davis v. Hargrave, 30 U. S. App. 723.

prevent the judgment need be alleged.¹ Where, however, the complainant purchased land, for the price of which a judgment has been rendered against him, relying on a warranty of title, to entitle him to equitable relief the insolvency of the warrantor must appear.² Under the peculiar practice existing in Pennsylvania every equitable defense may be set up in an action at law, and there can be no relief in equity against the judgment except on the ground that the complainant was unavoidably prevented from making the defense at law.³

Doubtful or Inadequate Remedy at Law. — A ground for relief which as yet remains exclusively within the control of courts of equity is the inadequate or imperfect nature of the remedy at law available in the particular case. Therefore, where the facts make out a Particular Instances where Relief Has Been Granted. — Where the bill shows an equitable right in a wife to redeem her husband's property from a tax sale, under a statutory provision, and the defense could not have been pleaded at law, equity will grant an injunction at her suit against a judgment in ejectment for possession against her husband, based on the tax title. Sperry v. Gibson, 3 W. Va. 522.

Where it appeared that pending gar-nishment proceedings in another state, the debtor prosecuted his demand against the garnishee to judgment, and that a judgment was afterwards rendered in the other state against the garnishee, which judgment was paid, it was held that equity would enjoin the collection of the judgment recovered by the debtor, there being no remedy whatever at law. Allen v. Watt, 79 Ill. 284.

Where a bill for an injunction against a judgment has been dismissed, and a judgment obtained upon the injunction bond, such judgment will be enjoined where relief is finally granted against the original judgment upon another bill brought for that purpose. Weaver v. Poyer, 79 Ill. 417.

3. In Wistar v. McManes, 54 Pa. St. 318, the contrary view was taken by the court, which said: "Opening a judgment in a court of law is always ex gratia. Restraining a plaintiff from proceeding upon it, if the defendant has an equitable defense, and has not been guilty of laches by failing to set it up when he had an opportunity, is demandable of right." This case was followed by Hetzell v. Bentz, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 261, and Cheyney v. Wright, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 431. But these decisions were overruled by Wilson v. Buchanan, 170 Pa. St. 14, the court saying: "The decision in Wistar v. McManes, 54 Pa. St. 318, is in harmony with the doctrine that a purely equitable defense, which could not be considered in a legal forum, although made and overruled at law, is ground for an injunction, but it overlooks the fact that in this state a court of law can consider every equity set up." To the same effect see Gordinier's Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 528.

case from which it appears doubtful whether there is any remedy at law, or show an existing remedy to be inadequate to do complete justice, the issues will be re-examined and the judgment enjoined.¹ In such cases, failure to make defense at law, or failure to defend successfully, need not be excused.²

Judgment on False Return of Service. — A wide difference of opinion exists as to the sufficiency of a bill asking relief against a judgment obtained on a return of service which is false. In some states this is considered to be a valid ground, the courts holding that the remedy at law by motion, or in damages for false return, is adequate.³ Facts showing that the enforcement of the judgment would be against conscience should, however, be alleged; as that an existing valid defense was kept out by the false return.⁴

1. Carter v. Bennett, 6 Fla. 214; Hill v. Crosby, 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 545; Newborn v. Glass, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 520; Drew v. Clarke, Cooke (Tenn.) 374; Richardson v. Williams, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 116; Dobbin v. Wybrants, 3 Tex. 457.

"Now I do not say that the County Court, sitting as a court of law, could not upon motion, in a summary way, try these questions; but I do say that in that mode it would not have afforded as safe or as convenient a tribunal for the trial of them as a court of equity upon regular pleadings and proofs. And this consideration, it will be recollected, forms one of the grounds in equity for assuming jurisdiction. But there is another, perhaps a stronger ground. The indorsement of the execution for Crawford's benefit gave him nothing but an equitable right, which could have no weight in a court of law, belonged exclusively to equity, and must finally have brought the cause there for decision." Crawford v. Thurmond, 3 Leigh (Va.) 85.

"We do not wish to limit or question the remedy or writ of error, coram nobis, as far as it has been adopted and applied in this state; nor do we hold that the bill of equity is a concurrent remedy with it in those cases. But we hold that in the case of such a judgment as this, as we have described it, upon its grounds and its facts, the equitable jurisdiction is free from doubt, although it may be possible that the writ of error coram nobis might have availed to revoke the judgment; yet in this case that remedy is not free, unembarrassed, and adequate." Isler v. Turner, 7 Humph. (Tenn.) 116.

Necessary Allegation. — "It is further to be observed, that as to the complexity of the case and the difficulty of defending themselves at law they have not made that fact an allegation in their bill, and that they should have done so appears to have been necessary." Dilly v. Barnard, 8 Gill & J. (Md.) 171.

Usury. — The principles stated in the text were applied where relief against a judgment was sought on the ground of usury. Buchanan v. Nolin, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 63; Frierson v. Moody, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 561; McKoin v. Cooley, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 559; Lindsay v. James, 3 Coldw. (Tenn.) 477.

3. Hauswirth v. Sullivan, 6 Mont. 203; Truett v. Wainwright, 9 Ill. 418.

"We may conclude, then, that in the circumstances of this case there is no remedy at law against the judgment in question. The action for a false return is an inadequate remedy for such an injury; for it might be that after a ruinous sacrifice suffered in the payment of a judgment so recovered, and the delay and expense of litigation with the officer who made the false return, he might be unable to make the proper indemnity, or succeed in evading his liability. The fact that there is no remedy, or no sufficient remedy at law, for this admitted injury, is a strong reason why there should be remedy in equity." Ridgeway v. State Bank, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 523; Kempner v. Jordan, 7 Tex. Civ. App. 275.

In Kentucky, by Gen. Stat., c. 81, § 17, an allegation of fraud on the part of the person benefited by a false return, or of mistake on the part of the officer, states a good ground for relief. Bramlett v. McVey, 91 Ky. 151.

4. Raisin Fertilizer Co. v. McKenna,

In many jurisdictions the remedy at law is considered adequate and precludes equitable relief.¹

Judgment on Unauthorized Appearance of Attorney. — The same difference of opinion exists as to the propriety of granting relief against a judgment obtained on appearance by an attorney acting wholly without authority.² Where the judgment is considered as absolutely void, no other showing need be made in the bill.³ Elsewhere facts must be alleged which show not only a just defense to the cause of action, but also the absence or inadequacy of legal remedies.⁴

(2) Available Either at Law or in Equity — (a) In General. — In former times, when defenses which could be made at law were confined within very strict limits, equity had exclusive cognizance over many which to-day, generally by virtue of statutory provisions, are litigated at law. Whether such jurisdiction at law is exclusive, or only concurrent with that of equity, is a matter about which the authorities differ. In many states the jurisdiction is looked upon as concurrent, and the complainant is entitled to make an election. Therefore, if the bill shows such a defense, and, in addition, that the complainant wholly refrained from making any contest at law, he is entitled to relief against the judgment.⁵ But in others the complainant must make defense

"In cases of false returns affecting the defendant, where the plaintiff at law is not in fault, redress can only be had in the court of law where the record was made; and if relief cannot be had there, the party injured must seek his remedy against the marshal." Walker v. Robbins, 14 How. (U. S.) 584.

Fraud. — Where the allegations in the bill make out fraudulent collusion between the plaintiff and the officer of the law, a good ground for relief is shown. Hamblen v. Knight, 60 Tex. 36.

5. "It is true that where courts of law and equity have concurrent jurisdiction, a party may take his election as to the tribunal in which he will at law, when suit is brought against him, and can have no relief on the simple ground that it was originally a defense cognizable only in equity.¹

bring forward his defense. If he prefers submitting it to a court of chancery he must neither make nor attempt a defense at law, because the tribunal to which he first submits himself must of necessity determine the matter conclusively between the parties." Conway v. Ellison, 14 Ark. 361.

"Although a party may set up an equitable defense to an action at law, his remedy is not confined to that proceeding. He may let the judgment go at law, and file his bill in equity for relief. Our practice, while it enlarges the field of remedy, does not take away pre-existing remedies by implication." Lorraine v. Long, 6 Cal. 452.

"When the remedy is complete at law there never can be relief in chancery, unless the chancellor has concurrent jurisdiction, or satisfactory reasons for not appealing to law are furnished." Thomas v. Ferqueran, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 28. See also Saunders v. Jennings, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 513.

"The inability of a defendant to avail himself in a court of law, of matters which the chancellor regarded as a sufficient equitable defense to the demand asserted against him, constitutes the foundation upon which a considerable part of the jurisdiction of a court of equity has been erected. But the rule is well established, that when a court of equity has thus acquired jurisdiction it still retains it, notwithstanding the subsequent exercise of jurisdiction in similar cases, by a legal tribunal, either by its own assumption of power, or by the authority of legislative enactments. The fact, then, that the code authorizes equitable defenses to be made in actions upon legal demands, does not of itself deprive a party of the right to waive this privilege and resort to an equitable action for relief; and as the exercise of this right is not expressly or by implication prohibited by anything contained in the code, but on the contrary is sustained by some of its provisions, the conclusion seems to be inevitable that the right still exists." Dorsey v. Reese, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 127. The doctrine of this case was changed shortly after in Kentucky by a statute which provided that "a judgment obtained in an action by ordinary proceedings shall not be annulled or modified by any order in an action by equitable proceedings, except for a defense which has arisen or been discovered since the judgment was rendered." See Chinn v. Mitchell, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 92.

(b) Fraud, Accident, and Mistake — aa. IN GENERAL. — Where a judgment has been obtained by the use of fraud or through unavoidable accident or mistake, a ground for equitable relief is presented which has been deemed one of the most important. Fraud, accident, or mistake, under this head is unconnected in any way with fraud, accident, or mistake as a defense to the cause of action, but consists in acts or circumstances interfering from without to fasten upon a party an unjust judgment.¹

bb. OF THE ALLEGATIONS — In Cases of Fraud — General Allegations. — The fraudulent acts and circumstances must be positively and specifically alleged in the bill. General charges and insinuations of fraud and statements or conclusions on belief are, in every case,

The proposition that a separate action may, under our present system, be maintained to restrain by injunction the proceedings in another suit, in the same or in another court, between the same parties, where the relief sought in the later suit may be obtained by a proper defense to the former one, has long since been exploded, or if not, should be without delay." Savage v. Allen, 54 N. Y. 458. See also Curtis v. Cisna, 1 Ohio 430; Smith v. M'Iver, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 532; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Bangs, 103 U. S. 780.

By Statute. — Chinn v. Mitchell, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 92.

1. "The petition in this case assails the judgment on none of the grounds contemplated by said statute. It is predicated of the fraud alleged to have been perpetrated by defendant in procuring the false recitals in the entries. It is essentially a proceeding on the equity side of the court, and invokes that especial branch of equity jurisprudence which constitutes its 'most ancient foundation,' the undoing of judgments of courts of record obtained contrary to good morals and conscience, and affected with fraud in their procurement." Hyatt v. Wolfe, 22 Mo. App. 191.

"The acts for which a court of equity will, on account of fraud, set aside or annul the judgment or decree between the same parties, rendered by a court of competent jurisdiction, have relation to frauds extrinsic or collateral to the matter tried by the first court, and not to a fraud in the matter on which the decree was rendered." U. S. v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61. To the same point see Matter of Griffith, 84 Cal. 107; Irvine v. Leyh, 102 Mo. 200; Link v. Link, 48 Mo. App. 345.

"The fraud which will justify equitable interference in setting aside judgments and decrees must be actual and positive, and not merely constructive. It must be that which occurs in the very concoction or procuring of the judgment or decree, and something not known to the opposite party at the time, and for not knowing which he is not chargeable with negligence." *Ross v. insufficient.¹ Where the fraud charged consists in acts of third persons, it must appear from the bill that the judgment creditor was a party to it.²

Acts and Representations. — Acts and representations of the creditor or his attorney, whereby the debtor is persuaded not to make any defense, or only a perfunctory one, constitute such fraud.³ But where it appears that negligence in not defending at law was responsible for the judgment rather than the fraudulent acts or representations of the creditor, the bill exhibits no ground for relief.¹ That a defense was prevented by acts or remarks of the court, is not generally a good allegation, unless a fraudulent intent is charged.²

Breach of Agreements. — As of acts and representations of the judgment creditor, so of agreements between the parties. Where the plaintiff at law has prevented a contest and obtained judgment by breaking such agreements, a court of equity will grant relief on the ground of fraud.³ It must appear from the bill that the fense in consequence of the promise of the attorney in the suit to continue the cause on a replevin bond would, if true, be sufficient ground for a court of equity to grant relief." Beams v. Denham, 3 Ill. 58.

complainant relied upon the agreement and acted in accordance with its terms;¹ and where it was made with an attorney, it must be shown to have been within his general authority, or to have received the sanction of the judgment creditor.² Allegations that the plaintiff at law is insolvent and unable to respond in damages are unnecessary.³ Where the agreement is a mutual obligation entered into in consideration of the judgment, a breach is actionable at law, and the case does not present elements of fraud.⁴

Perjury. — As a general rule, a bill for relief based on perjured testimony given at the law trial, or on false or forged documentary evidence introduced there, will not be entertained;⁵ and the allegation that the complainant was surprised by the perjury or forged evidence does not change the rule.⁶ But where the bill sets out a good ground for relief because of newly discovered evidence, its sufficiency will not be destroyed by the fact that the

It is a rule at law, on the subject of new trials, that a party going voluntarily to trial goes at his peril, and he cannot have a new trial merely to give him an opportunity of impeaching the testimony of a witness of whom he was apprised beforehand, and of the very purpose for which he was to be called. He must, at least, show that he had since discovered testimony of which he had no knowledge before the trial. Woodworth v. Van Buskerk, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 432. See also Gott v. Carr, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 309.

"The mischief of retrying every case in which the judgment or decree rendered on false testimony, given by perjured witnesses, or on contracts or documents whose genuineness or validity was in issue, and which are afterwards ascertained to be forged or fraudulent, would be greater, by reason of the endless nature of the strife, than any compensation arising from doing justice in individual cases." *U. evidence will impeach the testimony given at the trial at law.¹ Where a judgment thus obtained will be set aside in equity, the bill must allege in detail all the facts and circumstances of the fraud;² and it must be charged that the judgment creditor knew that the evidence was false or perjured.³

In Cases of Accident and Mistake.—Cases where equity has granted relief on the ground of accident or mistake are not common. In order that a bill may be entertained on such ground it must generally show an unusual combination of circumstances, resulting in an unjust judgment.⁴

1. McGehee v. Gold, 68 Ill. 215; Peagram v. King, 2 Hawks (N. Car.) 295; Marshall v. Holmes, 141 U. S. 589.

"So it is agreed that to set aside the verdict on the ground of its being obtained by perjury, there must be an allegation that the party who used the testimony knew it to be false. So there must not only be newly discovered evidence, but such evidence must bear directly upon the merits of the case, and must be decisive of it, and not tend simply to impeach the testimony of a witness at a former trial, or to add cumulative evidence as to a matter before controverted." Burgess v. Lovengood, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 457.

2. "It is not enough that a party asking the aid of a court of chancery to set aside a judgment shall show that it is unjust, but he must show, if he could have had a fair trial at law, he would have had a verdict. In this case that would be difficult, if not impossible, for appellant does not state he has witnesses to prove the testimony of appellee to have been false. The case, if tried by a jury, would be tried on the testimony of the parties. In such case it would be idle to charge the winning party with perjury." Ames v. Snider, 55 Ill. 498.

"The complainant's case upon this bill is defective in two respects. (1) The allegation is not of any facts or circumstances showing, or even tending to show, perjury. It amounts only to the complainant's suspicion, based upon the circumstance that the damages as laid in the narr. were increased by amendment at the trial term. This is a circumstance wholly inconclusive. To lay a sufficient ground of relief against perjury and surprise, the bill should name the witnesses, and wherein they swore falsely, and set forth facts tending to show that their testimony was false. But (2) were the allegations sufficient in this respect, still it does not appear that on the ground of perjury and surprise relief might not have been had at law. It is not alleged that perjury was discovered too late to enable the complainant to move for a new trial. On the contrary, the amendment of the narr., which is the only alleged ground to suspect it, occurred before the trial." Kersey v. Rash, 3 Del. Ch. 342. See also Ross v. Wood, 70 N. Y. 8, affirming 8 Hun (N. Y.) 185, 51 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 196.

Where it appears from a bill that the judgment could have been rendered without taking into consideration the evidence claimed to have been false, no ground for relief is shown. Nelson v. Killingley First Nat. Bank, 70 Fed. Rep. 526.

3. Burgess v. Lovengood, 2 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 457.

An allegation that the plaintiff at law "knew, or ought to have known," that the evidence was false is insufficient to charge either subornation of perjury or knowledge of the falsity. Camp v. Ward, 69 Vt. 286.

"Mere accident or mistake on his own part is rather to be accounted his misfortune than imputed as a wrong to the other party; and it must be a strong case when this alone can be made the ground of equitable interference at so late a stage." Fletcher v. Warren, 18 Vt. 45; Ratliff v. Stretch, 130 Ind. 282.

Accident or Surprise.—For allegations held sufficient, see Leigh v. Armor, 35 Ark. 123; Saunders v. Jennings, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 513; Myers v. Daniels, 6 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 1; Bell v. Cunningham, 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 89.

Allegations Common to All Cases. — The difference of opinion as to the right to relief in equity against a judgment procured through fraud, accident, or mistake, where the law provides a statutory remedy, is marked. Equitable jurisdiction on these grounds is said to be coeval with the existence of chancery;¹ and courts of equity are slow to recognize an exclusive jurisdiction in the courts of law as the result of legislation. In many states it is held that the jurisdiction is concurrent, and the complainant may elect to proceed in equity. In such states it is unnecessary to negative in the bill the existence of a statutory remedy at law.² And afterwards, during the term, appear on such calendar of another judge of the same court, and be tried without the knowledge of the defendants, equity will relieve on the ground of surprise. Gudgeon v. Casey, 62 Ill. App. 599.

Allegations Held Insufficient. — Averments of accident or surprise in the course of the trial resulting from conditions which might have been reasonably anticipated. *Ex p. In some cases it has been held that ignorance of the unconstitutionality of an act is excusable, and mistake caused by proceeding under such a law is a ground for relief. *Stetson v. Mistake of Fact. — It is good ground for relief that a judgment, rendered on an agreed statement of facts, included more land than was intended by the parties, and that the mistake was discovered too late to obtain a review at law. Currier v. Esty, 110 Mass. 536.

"Under the system of procedure which obtains in this state, where the various kinds of relief are administered by the same tribunal, and where there is but one form of civil action for the enforcement or protection of civil rights (Code Civ. Pro., § 307), a party who presents a complaint showing his right to the relief asked is not to be denied that relief because he might have sought it under a different form of action." Merriman v. Walton, 105 Cal. 403.

"Fraud is one of the broadest grounds of equity recognized by the courts, and relief may be obtained against a judgment at law although the party might find a remedy in the court of law. It is the fraud which gives jurisdiction to this court, and the aggrieved party is not obliged to resort to another tribunal, possessed of less power and appliances to ascertain the truth, and grant the requisite remedy, although the other tribunal may have jurisdiction." Nelson v. Rockwell, 14 Ill. 375.

"In our opinion this statutory remedy is merely cumulative. It is not disputed that courts of equity, there are cases where it has been held that relief will be given though it appears that the remedy at law has been unsuccessfully invoked.¹ In other states a bill will not be entertained unless the facts alleged show that no relief could have been had at law by prompt use of legal remedies.² Facts must be set out which constitute a valid defense to the indebtedness sued upon.³

b. LEGAL DEFENSES — (1) Of the Allegations — (a) In General — Laches. — The complainant must be prompt in asking relief against prior to the statute, had jurisdiction to impeach judgments for fraud, and enjoin proceedings thereon. It is a fundamental principle that when such courts have once been legitimately vested with jurisdiction they retain it, notwithstanding courts of law subsequently acquire jurisdiction by statute or otherwise, unless the legislature abolish or restrict it." *Darst v. 1. So held in Stanton v. Embry, 46 Conn. 65, 595; but this case was reversed in the Supreme Court of the United States sub nom. Embry v. Palmer, 107 U. S. 3, on the ground that the judgment creditor was enabled to perpetrate the fraud because of the negligence of the complainants in defending the suit. In a case where the remedy invoked was by way of motion, after judgment, for a new trial, the court said, in Metcalf v. Williams, 104 U. S. 93: "When a party has been deprived of his right by fraud, accident, or mistake, and has no remedy at law, a court of equity will grant relief. Perhaps, in view of the equitable control over their own judgments which courts of law have assumed in modern times, the judgment might have been set aside, on motion, for the cause set forth in the bill; but if this were true, the remedy in equity would still be open; and the fact that the court declined to exercise the power upon motion rendered the resort to a bill necessary and proper." "If the judgment was fraudulently obtained, and Sanderson had a good defense in the replevin suit and was prevented from making it either by the fraud of Voelcker or his attorney, he has a right to invoke the aid of chancery for his protection. It is his only adequate remedy." Sanderson v. Voelcker, 51 Mo. App. 328.

"It is claimed by the counsel for the respondent that this right to go into the court which rendered the judgment and ask for a new trial, a remedy which it is claimed is open to the petitioners under the laws of the District of Columbia, is an adequate legal remedy, and that this court cannot assume equitable jurisdiction over the matter while the petitioners have this remedy. But no legal remedy can be considered as adequate which a party is compelled to go into a foreign jurisdiction to avail himself of. It must be a remedy which our own courts can apply." *Stanton v. Where neglect and delay in prosecuting a claim appear from the bill, a judgment in favor of an insolvent will not be restrained to allow time for the claim to reach judgment and be in a position to be used as a set-off. Boley v. Griswold, 2 Mont. 447.

"Whatever is essential to the rights of the complainant and within his knowledge ought to be alleged with such a degree of certainty as to give the defendant full information of the case he is called on to answer; or on his failure to appear and defend, that the court may decree on the face of the bill in favor of the complainant. * * * The same precision of statement is neither required or attainable in equity as in pleadings at law, but the meaning of the rule is that the substantial grounds of relief must be stated with such general certainty and precision as to apprise the defendant of the true nature of the case, and the points to which testimony should be applied; and justice demands that in all cases the rule should be observed." Conway v. Ellison, 14 Ark. 361.

"The petition for injunction should state all, and negative all, which is necessary to establish a right, and to show diligence. Carter v. Griffin, 32 Tex. 212; Bryan v. Knight, 1 Tex. 180. The rule of pleading that the statements of a party are to be taken most strongly against himself is reinforced in injunction suits by the further requirement that the material and essential elements which entitle him to relief shall be sufficiently certain to negative every reasonable inference arising upon the facts so stated, from which it might be deduced that he might not, under other supposable facts connected with the subject, thus be entitled to relief." Harrison v. Crumb, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas., § 991. See also Marshall v. Shueber, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas., § 370.

"It is insisted that as the appellant has obtained a judgment at law, and the appellee comes into equity for relief, he is as much bound to negative facts which would entitle the plaintiff at law to recover as to affirm those which it is necessary for himself to prove. This would be against all the rules of pleading in chancery, and would be imposing on the plaintiff an impracticable duty. He may not be cognizant of the facts upon which the plaintiff at law relies to entitle himself to recover, notwithstanding the matter relied upon by the party seeking relief in equity might, if standing alone, make out a proper case for the interposition of that court. The appellee had a right to rest his case upon the averment of such fraud as vitiates the contract; and of the fact that the security so fraudulently procured had come to the possession of the holder by assignment. If the circumstances under which the holder acquired the paper are such as still entitle him to recover from the maker, they must be shown in his answer, and, not being responsive to any allegation in the bill, in setting up either a valid legal defense¹ or matter in excuse for not defending at law.²

Setting Out Proceedings at Law. — Whenever it is necessary for the court to consider what was done at law, in determining the suffimust be proved." Vathir v. Zane, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 246.

"It is said that the plaintiff has a defense to the action, but no facts are stated showing in what the alleged defense consists. This is necessary in order that the facts may be put in issue, and a mere statement of a conclusion is not sufficient to authorize the granting of an injunction." Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Manning, 23 Neb. 552.

"It should appear how the defense arises, so that the court may see that the complainant has been deprived of a substantial right without any fault on his own part." Bohrer v. Fay, 3 MacArthur (D. C.) 145.

Sufficiency of Averment. — Where the debt was to be paid out of the proceeds of the goods for which it was contracted, the bill must show that all these conditions have been fulfilled, or the defense is not made out. Mellendy v. Austin, 69 Ill. 15.

An averment that at the time of the entry of the judgment no cause of action existed against the complainant in favor of the judgment creditor is a sufficient averment of a valid defense. Harnish v. Bramer, 71 Cal. 155.

In Davis v. Tilston, 6 How. (U. S.) 114, general allegations were held good as against a demurrer.

"It is not averred that the party did not know of the judgment rendered against him until after the term. That inference may be deduced argumentatively from the averment that he understood that the cause was to be continued. It ought to have been distinctly averred, and not left to inference merely." Caperton v. Wanslow, 18 Tex. 125.

"A bill such as this, to be sufficient, must not rest on the simple averment that there was a valid defense, of which defendant had no knowledge until after judgment. Suitors must be diligent; and to make a case for relief, it must appear in the averred facts that the complainant was prevented from making his defense by fraud, accident, or the act of the opposite party, unmixed with fault or neglect on his part." Headly v. Bell, 84 Ala. 346. See also Ewing v. Nickle, 45 Md. 413; Buntain v. Blackburn, 27 Ill. 406; Bateman v. Willoe, 1 Sch. & Lef. 204.

An allegation that the complainant went to California "on important business," and was taken sick and detained "a long time," is too general to excuse a failure to procure evidence and make defense at law. Fisher v. Greene, 5 Colo. 541.

So strict a showing of diligence in defending at law is not required to obtain relief against a judgment obtained upon a gambling contract as in other cases. White v. Washington, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 645.

Inconsistent Averments. — "General averments in a pleading are of no avail when inconsistent with facts specially averred in the same pleading." Stein v. Benedict, 83 Wis. 603. To the same point see Celina v. Eastport Sav. Bank, 37 U. S. App. 164; Norwegian Plow Co. v. Bollman, 47 Neb. 186; Boley v. Griswold, 2 Mont. 447, where the court said: "The complaint also alleges that Griswold is the sole and exclusive owner of the judgment recovered by Mrs. Griswold, that Mrs. Griswold died and owed no debts, that Griswold has paid all the demands against her estate, and that the sheriff, Bullock, will pay to Griswold the amount of this judgment and the costs, if he is not enjoined by the court. It appears that the amount of the judgment, costs, and interest exceeds $7,500. Can the appellants aver that Griswold is 'utterly insolvent,' when they pray that he may be restrained from collecting over $7,500 on which there is no incumbrance? A court canciency of the ground alleged, the proceedings must either be pleaded in the bill or attached as an exhibit.¹

Relief Against Part Only of a Judgment. — Where relief is asked against a portion of the judgment, the bill must state specifically the amount claimed to be unjust, and contain an offer to pay the balance.²

not tolerate this conduct by the parties that are seeking equitable relief. Under the authorities which have been cited we must disregard the allegations of the appellants that Griswold is 'utterly insolvent,' and deny the prayer for any relief which could be granted on this ground."

Levy*, 63 Tex. 278. See also Bias v. Vickers, 27 W. Va. 456; Saunders v. Pike, 6 Oregon 312, where the court said: "The bill prays the annulling of this judgment and stay of execution, but does not set out the matters in controversy in the justice's court in a manner and form that would enable the court, after annulling this judgment, to proceed and adjust the rights of the parties in the action in which the judgment was rendered. A court of equity will not annul a judgment and open up matters that were settled by it, and leave the parties with their rights unadjusted; for the court sets aside the judgment, if at all, for the purpose of searching after and settling the rights of the parties which were wrongfully adjusted by the judgment." But compare Collins v. Fraiser, 27 Ind. 477; Gum-Elastic Roofing Co. v. Mexico Pub. Co., 140 Ind. 158.

In Johnson v. Templeton, 60 Tex. 238, the court said: "The injustice of the judgment sought to be enjoined is not made clearly manifest. The nature and character of the original proceeding in which the judgment sought to be enjoined was obtained are not set out in the pleadings of the plaintiff in error with sufficient fulness. It is stated, in the most general terms, that there was in that suit no cause of action set up against the plaintiffs in error, and that no sum of money was stated in the pleadings to be due or owing, but it is also averred in the same connection that there were in the original petition certain averments as to various items of indebtedness set up, or attempted to be set up, as due by the plaintiffs in error to the defendant in error, in her representative capacity. The contents or substance of the pleadings in the original suit are not sufficiently set out or disclosed to enable the court to determine with reasonable certainty what was really there the issuable matter in controversy on which the plaintiffs in error relied to make out their defense. Neither the dates, the amounts, nor the character of the items of indebtedness charged against them are given. All the averments on this subject, as well as those relating to the grounds of defense relied on, are manifestly insufficient in a proceeding of this kind, addressed to the court sitting as a court of equity. They are at last nothing more than the conclusions of the pleader. They do not set out with the requisite fulness and clearness the particulars of the original suit, nor fully and satisfactorily disclose the nature of the defense relied on. Nor do the allegations sufficiently connect the plaintiffs in error with the alleged fraud. Nor do the averments that there was collusion between the attorneys of the plaintiffs and defendant in error sufficiently set out the facts in that behalf. It does not appear clearly that these matters did not originate before the attorneys became associated in business. Nor does it appear clearly that the attorneys on either side sought in any manner to deceive or mislead the defendants in error. They seem, according to their own statement of the matter in their pleadings, to have trusted too fully in their codefendant, Leftwich."

"In cases of this kind there should be specific and definite statements to satisfy the court that injury and injustice have been done, especially where knowledge of the subject-matter can scarcely be supposed to be in its possession. That this is indefinite, it is only necessary to say that the denial of these statements presents no issue, and their ascertainment brings us no nearer to a conclusion as to the merits of the contest than without it. The merits of the case depend upon this position, for if the judgment is not for too large an amount then complainant is not injured." Gamble v. Campbell, 6 Fla. 347.

"Although the plaintiff concedes that more than five-sixths of the judgment rendered against him is justly due he does not offer in his petition to pay the amount thus due, nor did he make any tender of the amount conceded to be due. He who seeks equity must do equity." Herwick v. Koken Barber Supply Co., 61 Mo. App. 454.

A bill which asks an injunction against the whole of a judgment exhibits no ground for relief when the allegations show a defense to a part only. Baggett v. Watson, 70 Miss. 64.

Whether Payment into Court Necessary, Query. — "When a bill like the present one admits an indebtedness past due, promised and incurred in compromise of a larger claim, is a simple offer to pay enough to authorize a restraining order, enjoining the collection of an execution in the hands of the sheriff. Should not the sum admitted to be due have been paid into court? The Roebbling Sons Co. was clearly entitled to the $805, less the costs of the suit; and as to that sum there is no pretense of a defense." Roebbling Sons Co. v. Stevens Electric Co., 93 Ala. 39.

Where Usury Is the Alleged Defense. — Hill v. Reifsnider, 39 Md. 429; Neurath v. Hecht, 62 Md. 221; Reeves v. Cooper, 12 N. J. Eq. 223; Campbell v. Morrison, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 157; Williams v. Lockwood, Clarke Ch. (N. Y.) 172; Shelton v. Gill, 11 Ohio 417. See also Brockway v. Clark, 6 Ohio 45.

"But the bill itself does not, by its allegations, present a case to entitle the complainants to an injunction to restrain the execution of the judgment. It does not allege, with any exactness, the amount of the usury, over and above the principal sum advanced, with legal interest thereon, or the real amount due, principal and interest, after deducting the usury retained. Even at law, every plea of usury is required to state the sum of money or the value of the goods and chattels lent or advanced, with the time at which the same was so lent or advanced (Code, art. 95, § 5), and there is no reason why less strictness and certainty in this respect should be allowed in equity pleading than at law, especially after a recovery at law, for otherwise the requirement of the statute might be easily evaded." Neurath v. Hecht, 62 Md. 221.

even though responsible for the judgment, as the remedy at law by appeal or writ of error is adequate.¹

In an action on a note, after a finding against a defense set up by a surety, the plaintiff dismissed. Pending an appeal by the surety, suit was brought on the note in another county and a recovery had. The appeal terminated in a reversal of the case and judgment in favor of the surety. It was held that there was a sufficient ground for injunction against the judgment obtained in the other county, notwithstanding it appeared that the surety did not defend the second suit nor ask that it be stayed pending the appeal. Walker v. Heller, 90 Ind. 198. See also Moore v. Cohen, 70 Ill. App. 160.

the part of his attorney or agent, the acts and omissions of whom are no more a ground for excuse than his own.¹ It is no sufficient excuse that the complainant relied upon statements made Wisconsin. — Nye v. Sochor, 92 Wis. 40.

"The bill fails to allege that complainant took any steps to prosecute his replevin suit, beyond the employment of an attorney. He did not attend the court; he did not cause his witnesses, if he had any, to attend; he did not have them subpoenaed, or furnish their names to his attorney, that he might have taken the necessary steps to procure their attendance. It fails to allege that any fraud was practiced upon him by the opposite party, or that he was prevented by any accident from obtaining a full and fair trial at law. There is a total failure to show diligence in the prosecution of his suit." Albro v. Dayton, 28 Ill. 325.

Where it appears from the bill that the complainant was sued at law in a county other than that of his residence, facts must be alleged which show that he took prompt measures to defend himself by interposing a plea, and intrusting his defense to counsel, or by his attendance at court in person or by an agent informed as to the grounds upon which a recovery was to be resisted. The court of equity will not grant relief against a judgment at law merely because it is inequitable. Stinnett v. Branch of State Bank, 9 Ala. 120.

Plaintiff's Deafness. — It is no excuse that because of his deafness the complainant was ignorant that a fact material to his defense had not been presented, where he was present at the trial with counsel. Stone v. Moody, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 31.

Threats of Violence. — Allegations that the complainant was prevented from making his defense by threats of personal violence are insufficient, unless it appears from the bill that they were made by the judgment creditor or some one acting in his behalf. Powell v. Cyfers, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 526.

Fraud of Agent, etc. — Allegations from which it appears that the complainant is an aged and infirm woman, and that the judgment creditor was her agent and confidential adviser when he fraudulently procured from her the evidence of the indebtedness and obtained judgment thereon, show a sufficient excuse.

Insolvency of Negligent Counsel. — "It is apprehended it can make no difference, in principle, whether the attorney is solvent or insolvent. The cases are decided on the theory the party is himself guilty of laches in relying on the diligence of his attorney, and that he is not excusable for failing to make his defense at law simply because he employed counsel to do it for him. Indeed, the combined diligence of both is required. Otherwise, the party has not availed himself of all the means the law has placed in his hands to en-by officers of the court, where such statements were unofficial.¹ Where the matters of excuse alleged might have been remedied by obtaining more time pending the trial at law, and no continuance was asked, the bill shows insufficient ground for relief.² Sickness of the complainant is generally an insufficient excuse;³ otherwise when he was totally incapacitated thereby, and his assistance to establish the defense was necessary.⁴

able him to make his defense. This he must do before he can invoke the aid of a court of chancery." Kern v. Strausberger, 71 Ill. 413.

Neglect of Codefendant. — In Robins v. Mount, 3 Ga. 74, the court said: "The allegation amounts to this, stripped of all the drapery thrown around it by the draughtsman of the bill, that the other defendants intrusted Sutlive, their codefendant, to enter the appeal, and he, being ignorant of the necessity of entering an appeal in the case, though sent for that purpose, failed and neglected to do so. Whose fault was it that the appeal was not entered? Can it be said that the failure to enter an appeal was unmixed with negligence or fault on the part of the defendants to the judgment at law? We apprehend not, and therefore the judgment of the court below must be reversed."

In Collins v. Jones, 6 Leigh (Va.) 530, the court said: "He [the plaintiff] does not even say why his material witness was absent. Did he use due diligence in summoning that witness to appear at the court? If he did, why did he not apply for a continuance of the cause? If he did apply for it, and he was overruled, why did he not except to the opinion of the court, and apply to the appellate tribunal, on the law side, for redress?" See also Chapman v. Scott, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 302; French v. Garner, 7 Port. (Ala.) 549.

Sufficiency of Averments. — A bill alleging that the defendant received a message from his attorney saying that the latter was sick, and that the case would be continued, without alleging the truth of the message, does not contain a sufficient excuse. Sasser v. Olliff, 91 Ga. 84.

An allegation which states that the complainant had formulated a sufficient affidavit for a continuance and forwarded it to the place where the court was sitting is insufficient where it does not also show that the affidavit was presented and passed upon by the court. Smith v. Allen, 63 Ill. 474.

Omission to Move for Stay. — Where it appears that there existed a remedy by motion in the original suit, to stay the action until a final decision had been reached in another case, and no use was made of it, there is no ground for relief. Van Vleck v. Clark, 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 316.

Queen*, 4 Neb. 108, 5 Neb. 472.

Insanity at the Time of the Trial is a Failure to Make Direct Attack on Judgment. — The complainant must not only excuse his failure to make a legal defense, but also his failure to attack the judgment at law by any method provided by statute which may be applicable. And this is so whether the statutory grounds are legal or equitable in their nature.¹

sufficient excuse. Lee v. Heuman, 10 Tex. Civ. App. 666.

In Burem v. Foster, 6 Heisk. (Tenn.) 333, where the grounds alleged were held sufficient, the court said: "The grounds on which he prayed for a new trial were that no summons was ever served on him, or if it was, that it was served when he was so enfeebled by disease, both in body and mind, as to be incapable of comprehending the nature of the service and of giving to the suit any attention. He alleged that he knew nothing of the pendency of the suit until after the judgment was rendered; that he was not present personally or by counsel, and that the imbecility of his mind continued after the judgment, and hence that advantage was taken of his weakness and incompetency. He states that the judgment was wholly unjust; that he had no connection with nor knowledge of the trespasses and injuries for which the judgment was rendered, and that he was in no way responsible therefor."

That by agreement of the parties the cause was to be tried by another judge, or a change of venue allowed, instead of which judgment was rendered in the complainant's absence, is no excuse, where the complainant did not look after his case, to see what action had been taken at the term, until the time for appeal had gone by. *Renfro v. (2) Newly Discovered Evidence — In General. — The bill must set out the newly discovered evidence in detail, and it must appear therefrom that the evidence is not merely cumulative, but that it is competent evidence and of sufficient weight to support a judgment for the plaintiff.¹ It must also appear that the evidence was discovered after judgment, and too late to take any action in the law case.² The injustice of the judgment thus appearing, the bill must allege other facts which show that the complainant could not, by the use of all the means at his command, have dis-

United States.—Trefz v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co., 8 Fed. Rep. 177.

"Before the question could fairly arise it would be necessary to allege: 1st, that the newly discovered matter had not only come to the knowledge of the party after the close of the proceeding sought to be impeached, and too late to be used in connection with it, but also that it could not have been ascertained in time by proper care and diligence; 2d, that it is of such a character as to be used upon another investigation; and 3d, that it is a new substantive fact, and not merely new evidence, cumulative in character, in support or denial of some fact already passed upon and decided." Ford v. Ford, 2 Coldw. (Tenn.) 74. See also Hatchett v. Conner, 30 Tex. 104.

The bill should show by distinct and positive averments what the defense is, how and by whom it can be proven, and that the failure to acquire the knowledge of it before the trial at law was wholly unmixed with any negligence on the part of the plaintiff, or any want of attention to the means of information within the reach of a man of ordinary prudence and discretion. Hill v. Harris, 42 Ga. 412.

"The complainant should have shown clearly and distinctly that he sought the information earnestly and in good faith from all the sources where it was likely to be obtained, and that he sought this information before the judgment at law, and failed to obtain it." Greenfield v. Frierson, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 633. See also Slack v. Wood, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 40.

"The bill should state particularly the facts to be proved, the names of the witnesses, and show the bearing and relevancy of the proposed proofs. It should also show when and how the facts discovered came to the knowledge of the plaintiffs, and why no motion for a new trial was made in the court trying the case, and before the lapse of the term." Mulford v. Cohn, 18 Cal. 42.

Diligence of Administrator.—In Hewlett v. Hewlett, 4 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 7, it was held that an administrator who had failed to plead, because advised that his plea would not avail, was entitled to relief on facts discovered afterwards which made his plea good, on the ground that he was one of those persons who are obliged from the nature of their office to rely upon the information of others.

Newly Discovered Parties.—It seems that a judgment creditor may never have relief in equity against his judgment on the ground that it has since been discovered that other parties jointly liable were not brought in or that the real party in interest was not sued. Penny v. Martin, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 566, where the court said: "The demand is on a contract to which it is alleged they were parties, as being dormant partners with R. and M. The omission to make them parties in the action at law arose, according to the allegation in the bill, from ignorance of the fact that they were such partners. Is that ignorance a sufficient ground for transferring to this court jurisdiction of a matter properly, if not exclusively, cognizable at law? The ignorance might have been removed by due vigilance and inquiry, and perhaps by the assistance of a bill of discovery here. The plaintiffs have no particular equity entitling them to relief." See also Brown v. Calumet River R. Co., 37 Ill. App. 113; Robertson v. Smith, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 459; Yellow Pine Lumber Co. v. Carroll, (Tex. Civ. App. 1892) 21 S. W. Rep. 1002; Willings v. Consequa, Pet. (C. C.) 301.

no ground for relief is shown.¹ The fact that the existence of the defense was suspected, and it was unsuccessfully set up at law, will not preclude relief, where there was no lack of diligence in making the discovery.²

Evidence Obtainable by Bill of Discovery.—In jurisdictions where a discovery of evidence may be made in equity in aid of a defense at law, if it appears that the evidence detailed in the bill might have been thus obtained a failure to ask such discovery will prevent any relief against the judgment.³

c. VOID JUDGMENTS.—A Distinction Between Void and Voidable Judgments for purposes of equitable relief is drawn by many of the cases.⁴ A bill which alleges matters amounting only to errors

2. Pearce v. Chastain, 3 Ga. 226; Trefz v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co., 8 Fed. Rep. 177.

In Ocean Ins. Co. v. Fields, 2 Story (U. S.) 59, the court said: "But the parties admit, for the sake of the argument, that the point of fraud was made at the trial, but that it was in effect founded upon circumstances of suspicion, not sustained by any clear and satisfactory proofs, and that the boring of the holes was not known or suspected at the trial, and that it was not and could not therefore then be a matter of controversy. Now I agree that mere cumulative evidence to the fact of fraud or any other leading fact not discovered since the trial will not ordinarily constitute any just ground for the interference of a court of equity to grant relief, for the solid reason that it is for the public interest and policy to make an end to litigation, or, as was pointedly said by a great jurist, that suits may not be immortal while men are mortal. But I do not know that it has ever been decided that in an assignable case, where the defense has been imperfectly made out at the trial from the defect of real and substantial proofs, although there were some circumstances of a doubtful character or some presumptions of a loose and indeterminable bearing before the jury, and afterwards newly discovered evidence has come out, full and direct and positive, to the very gist of the controversy, a court of equity will not interfere to grant relief and to sustain a bill to bring forth and try the force and validity of the new evidence. My recollection does not furnish me with any case where a doctrine so strict and so binding has been positively upheld and pronounced."

As to when a bill of discovery will lie, see article DISCOVERY, PRODUCTION AND INSPECTION, vol. 6, p. 728.

Statutory Changes.—Witnesses whose evidence under the old practice could only be discovered by application to equity are now generally made competent by statute. That they have been made competent since the judgment was rendered is no ground for relief, presumably because prior to the statute discovery in equity might have been had. Briggs v. Smith, 5 R. I. 213; Greenfield v. Frierson, 7 Heisk. (Tenn.) 633.

4. "In some states a distinction has and irregularities in obtaining jurisdiction does not state a ground for relief. On the other hand, where it appears from the bill that the judgment is wholly void for want of jurisdiction over person or subject-matter, or for other reasons, a good cause of action exists in some states on that ground alone.¹ In these states allegations which show a defense to the indebtedness, and which negative the existence of a remedy at law, are immaterial.²

The Contrary Doctrine, however, seems more in accord with the nature of equitable jurisprudence, which takes cognizance of the acts of the person rather than of the defects in a law judgment.

been drawn between void and voidable judgments, the line of distinction being that as to void judgments equity will enjoin, but not if the judgment is merely irregular or erroneous; and this rule has had more extended application in connection with judgments that are void by reason of want of service of process." *Texas-Mexican R. In Cain v. Goda, 84 Ind. 209, the court said: "We are not willing to hold that a void judgment can only be set aside upon a bill of review, for such a judgment may be attacked in any of the methods recognized by law, as, for instance, by a complaint for an injunction, or by an action to have it vacated. It is, indeed, not even necessary that the attack should be a direct one, for a void judgment may be collaterally impeached."

In Connell v. Stelson, 33 Iowa 147, the court said: "Whether he [the plaintiff] has attempted to correct, by appeal, the erroneous decision in the certiorari proceeding here referred to, does not appear. Whether he has or not, the chancery courts of this state would not permit the void judgment to be enforced against him. The judgment being void, he might also, in a legal way, have resisted the enforcement of the execution. But such a remedy is not adequate. Chancery will interfere to grant speedy and adequate relief." See also Arnold v. Hawley, 67 Iowa 313.

In Follansbee v. Scottish-American Mortg. Co., 7 Ill. App. 486, the court said: "It is a well-established principle that a judgment rendered without jurisdiction is void, and may be attacked collaterally in any proceeding in which its validity may be called in question. This principle is in no way affected by the fact that the defendant has a right to have such void judgment reversed on appeal or error. It is clearly within the jurisdiction of courts of equity to vacate or enjoin judgments at law which, by reason of fraud, want of jurisdiction in the court before which they were rendered, or any other circumstance, it would be inequitable and against conscience to have enforced."

Where it obtains, a bill grounded only on the invalidity does not state a cause of action, but the complainant is left to his remedy at law.¹ That a bill may be sufficient, additional facts must be alleged from which it appears that the complainant has a meritorious defense to the action and is without legal remedy through no negligence or fault on his part.² It must void for want of jurisdiction, the result would be the same. Courts of equity will not enjoin a judgment at law merely for want of jurisdiction in the court in which the judgment is rendered; and where a party can say nothing against the justice of the judgment equity will not interfere, but leave him to contend against it at law as best he can." *John V. But where the contract only, and not the judgment, is void at law, equity will not interfere, except on equitable grounds recognized generally. Owens v. Van Winkle Gin, etc., Co., 96 Ga. 408; Young v. Beardsley, 11 Paige (N. Y.) 93.

Averments of Legal Conclusions. — To show the invalidity of the judgment, the bill must set out in detail facts from which it is apparent that under no circumstances could the law court have had jurisdiction to render it. General allegations of want of jurisdiction and of invalidity are mere conclusions of law and insufficient.¹

5. Bills for Injunction Only. — Relief against a judgment is sometimes granted because of matters arising subsequent to rendition which make its enforcement inequitable and unjust. So in some jurisdictions allegations of fact from which it appears that a judgment has been paid, or that it has been discharged by subsequent agreements or transactions between the parties, will support an action for equitable relief.² The agreements or transactions by

"No relief can be had against a void contract when the defense ought to have been made at law; but if the judgment itself be void, it is a different question. Hence, on gaming contracts, chancery will give relief, because the judgment is void, although the defense might have been made at law. If the contract be void and the party fails to make his defense at law, the judgment is valid and chancery will not interfere with it. But this judgment was void by the common law and also by statute. It derives no validity from the failure to make the defense on the trial of the right of property." *Humphries v. "An injunction will only be granted in a clear case, and upon an unequivocal statement of the facts constituting the grounds therefor. The allegation of the insufficiency of the affidavit for publication of summons — if of any importance, when other statements in the complaint are considered — is defective, since it is for the court and not the pleader to say that the affidavit is insufficient. The facts showing the insufficiency must be set out." Ladd v. Ramsby, 10 Oregon 207.

A bill which does not negative an appearance and waiver of service of summons, and does show a stay taken subsequent to judgment, does not state a cause of action. Carter v. Griffin, 32 Tex. 212.

Where damages for which a judgment has been recovered are allowed as a set-off in another action at law, collection of the former judgment may be restrained on the ground that it is satisfied. King v. Bradley, 44 Ill. 342.

Where a bill alleges certain payments to have been made upon a judgment, whereas execution has been issued for the full amount, it states a good cause which the judgment is settled must be detailed in the bill, that the court may judge of their sufficiency.¹ Where the action is permissible on such grounds the existence of a remedy at law, by motion or otherwise, would seem to be immaterial.² It is more generally held, however, that a bill grounded only on payment or satisfaction of a judgment is insufficient, there being an adequate remedy at law.³ In Texas it has been held that a bill setting up an attempt to enforce a dormant judgment exhibits good ground for relief.⁴

6. Relief — a. NATURE. — Some of the terminology in use in actions for equitable relief against judgments is unfortunate by reason of its being identical with that in use at law in direct attacks upon them. As has been stated, bills in equity were originally called bills for a new trial.⁵ Such expressions as bills to set aside, to vacate, to cancel, to annul, are, in modern times, used interchangeably therewith. But whatever term may be used, the relief granted does not run against the judgment directly nor pretend to exert any control over the court which rendered it.⁶ So the independent law tribunal need take no of action although it is not alleged that the payments have not been credited on the execution. Williams v. Bradbury, 9 Tex. 487.

Tender in Replevin. — A bill which shows that a tender of a return of the property after a judgment in replevin, reasonable under the circumstances, was made and refused, states a ground for injunction against the enforcement of the alternative judgment for money. McClellan v. Marshall, 19 Iowa 561. See also Putnam v. Webb, 15 Oregon 440; Bowman v. McGregor, 6 Wash. 118.

Discharge in Bankruptcy. — A bill which alleges a discharge in bankruptcy after the rendition of a judgment states a good ground for relief. Easley v. Bledsoe, 59 Tex. 488; Peatross v. M'Laughlin, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 64. Contra, Imlay v. Carpentier, 14 Cal. 173; Green v. Thomas, 17 Cal. 86.

1. Plunkett v. Black, 117 Ind. 14, where the court said: "There should have been such a description of the contract in the complaint as to make known its character, and whether or not it imported a consideration, and if not, a consideration should have been averred." To the same point see Howard v. Eddy, 56 Kan. 498.

2. "The remedy by injunction was proper in this case, even conceding that the court in which the judgment was rendered might have the power to grant the same relief upon motion to stay the execution." Thompson v. Laughlin, 91 Cal. 313. See also Humphreys v. Leggett, 9 How. (U. S.) 297.

3. Perrine v. Carlisle, 19 Ala. 686; Harding v. Hawkins, 141 Ill. 572 [reversing 37 Ill. App. 564]; Plunkett v. Black, 117 Ind. 14; Huston v. Ditto, 20 Md. 305; Lansing v. Eddy, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 50; Albert v. March, 7 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 502; Beckley v. Palmer, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 625; Howell v. Thomson, 34 W. Va. 794; Hall v. Taylor, 18 W. Va. 544.

A bill states no ground for a relief against a satisfied judgment where it shows that the payment was made to a person unauthorized to receive it. Akin v. Denny, 37 Md. 81; Chinn v. Mitchell, 2 Metc. (Ky.) 92.

4. Gabel v. McMahan, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas., § 717; Seymour v. Hill, 67 Tex. 385; North v. Swing, 24 Tex. 193. See also Cheek v. Taylor, 22 Ga. 127.

The bill must state facts showing that the judgment has not been kept alive by the due issuance of execution according to law. Jordan v. Corley, 42 Tex. 285.

Such relief is no bar to a suit on the judgment or to a proceeding at law to revive it. Watson v. Newsham, 17 Tex. 437.

5. See supra, XXI. 1. History of the Remedy.

6. Equity acts only in personam. Its jurisdiction, derived from its ancient character as a court of conscience, is cognizance of decrees in chancery which thus affect their judgments; and at first their attitude was one of bitter hostility.¹ In modern times a greater comity exists between courts whose sole object is speedily and finally to put an end to the litigation. Law courts will therefore lend what assistance they can, within the limits of their jurisdiction, to render decrees in equity effective.² But should the plaintiff at law proceed in disregard thereof, his obedience is enforced and contempt punished only by the court which laid the command upon him.³ Such being acquired to prevent the use of an inequitable or unjust advantage. Having the plaintiff at law amenable to its authority, it will enjoin him from enforcing his judgment, where such enforcement would be unjust according to established equitable doctrines, and where such action is necessary to do complete justice will re-examine the issues and itself decree the rights of the parties. "The court, it will be remembered, according to its original constitution, operated upon the conscience of the person, not upon the property, or in rem, and now the primary decree is always against the person. All that is necessary, in order to enable the court to exercise its primary authority, is that the person should be amenable to its jurisdiction." 2 Spence's Eq. Jur. (Phila. 1846) 6.

"In strictness there is no such thing as an injunction to a judgment, because the court of chancery does not act upon the law court, and neither reverses, rescinds, nor annuls the judgment." Beckley v. Palmer, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 625. See also Camp v. Ward, 69 Vt. 286.

"At the hearing the court annulled the judgment, set aside the verdict of the jury, and ordered a new trial in the action at law. A court of chancery, under our system of jurisprudence, is invested with no such power as this. It may act on the parties, but not directly on the judgment, nor on the court which rendered it. Such judgment by a court having jurisdiction to render it can be vacated only by some direct proceeding at law, either in the court in which the judgment was recovered or some other court having appellate jurisdiction." Wynne v. Newman, 75 Va. 811. To the same effect see Kansas, etc., R. Co. v. Fitzhugh, 61 Ark. 341; Jackson v. Woodruff, 57 Ark. 599; Pelham v. Moreland, 11 Ark. 442; Reagan v. Fitzgerald, 75 Cal. 230; Gainty v. Russell, 40 Conn.

Engelmann, 86 Mo. 551; Herbert v. Herbert, 47 N. J. Eq. 11; Boulton v. Scott, 3 N. J. Eq. 231; Darst v. Phillips, 41 Ohio St. 514; Hetzell v. Bentz, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 261; Brown v. Parker, 28 Wis. 21.

1. See supra, XXI. 1. History of the Remedy.

2. In Engels v. Lubeck, 4 Cal. 31, the court said: "This ought certainly to be considered a good reason even for granting a continuance. But we think that the propriety of the observance of the injunction by the court to whose notice it is brought may be properly placed on higher grounds. The comity which one court owes to another of concurrent jurisdiction should always prevent the one from lending itself as an instrument in permitting a contempt of the process of the other." See also Platt v. Woodruff, 61 N. Y. 378, where the court said: "A judge at circuit would, doubtless, if the existence of such an order should be properly brought to his knowledge; heed it, and would not, unless under very extraordinary circumstances, permit a party to disregard it."

"That the plaintiffs have proceeded contrary to the order of the court of chancery is not a reason for vacating the judgments; they may be published by that court for their contumacy. Such orders have been regarded as matter of excuse. We never compel a party to proceed when restrained by chancery, nor make him pay costs; but no case has been cited to show that we have power to deprive him of any legal advantage he may gain by such proceeding. The court of chancery has sufficient power to vindicate its authority." Grazebrook v. M'Creddie, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 438.

3. "We cannot take notice of your

the general nature of equitable relief against judgments, the jurisdiction of a court of equity did not originally depend on the locality or character of the law court, but only on the presence of equitable grounds and personal jurisdiction acquired over the parties.¹

Foreign Judgments. — So the enforcement of a judgment rendered in a foreign country or in a sister state may be enjoined.²

chancery injunctions." Booth v. Booth, 6 Mod. 288, 1 Salk. 322.

"It acts upon the party only, restrains him from enforcing the judgment by execution, and punishes him as for a contempt for any violation of its mandate." Beckley v. Palmer, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 625. See also Nichols v. Campbell, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 560.

Proceeding in Disregard of Injunction.

—"It is believed that when a court of equity enjoins a proceeding at law, and the latter-named court disregards the injunction and proceeds with the case, its action will not, for that reason, be void. But in such a case the parties restrained by the injunction would be liable to punishment for violating the order of the chancellor." Taylor v. Hopkins, 40 Ill. 442. See also Kelley v. Cowing, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 266; Burt v. Mapes, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 649.

In an early case in Indiana it was held that a judgment obtained in violation of an injunction was void, and could be enjoined on that ground. Collins v. Fraiser, 27 Ind. 477.

1. Tomkins v. Tomkins, 11 N. J. Eq. 512; Boulton v. Scott, 3 N. J. Eq. 231, quoting from Burtis v. Hopkins, not reported.

Pendency of Writ of Error. — The bill will be entertained regardless of the status of the proceedings subsequent to the judgment, as during the pendency of a writ of error therefrom. Johnson v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 141 U. S. 610; Platt v. Threadgill, 80 Fed. Rep. 192.

"The rule is pretty well settled in a case of this kind that the judgment of the lower court stands in the same position that it did before the writ of error was allowed, and may be attacked by an original bill in equity, and vacated and set aside, on the ground that it was obtained by fraud or perjury, or through accident or mistake, or for any good and sufficient equitable reasons." Nelson v. Killingley First Nat. Bank, 70 Fed. Rep. 526.

Effect of Affirmance of Judgment. — The fact that judgment was obtained in another court, and has been affirmed by the court of last resort, does not prevent a court of equity from taking jurisdiction, where equitable grounds exist. Kohn v. Lovett, 43 Ga. 179; State Bank v. Hancock, 6 Dana (Ky.) 284; Wilson v. Montgomery, 14 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 205; State v. Engelmann, 86 Mo. 551.

The bill "may be brought before the commencement of a suit at law, pending such suit, or after its decision by the highest law tribunal. The bill is an original bill, and may be filed although an injunction should not be awarded. The injunction arrests proceedings at law, and may be dissolved or continued without making any final decree in the case. The condition of the suit at law may be a reason for imposing terms on the party who applies for an injunction, but can be no reason for refusing it. The subpoena and injunction act on the person to whom they are directed, not on the record, and it can be of no consequence where the record is." Parker v. Judges, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 561.

2. Stanton v. Embry, 46 Conn. 65, 595, sub nom. Embry v. Palmer, 107 U. S. 3; Pearce v. Olney, 20 Conn. 544, sub nom. Dobson v. Pearce, 12 N. Y. 156; Litchfield's Appeal, 28 Conn. 127; Engel v. Scheuerman, 40 Ga. 206; Allen v. Watt, 79 Ill. 284; Davis v. Headley, 22 N. J. Eq. 115; Barry v. Brune, 71 N. Y. 261, affirming 8 Hun (N. Y.) 395, 49 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 504; Winchester v. Jackson, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 306; Turley v. Taylor, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 376, 394; Wilson v. Robertson, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 266; Brown v. Parker, 28 Wis. 21.

A bill which shows that a judgment rendered in another state has been reversed, and that the case is still pending there, shows a ground for staying proceedings to collect a judgment rendered upon it elsewhere until its final adjudication abroad. Huntington v. Metzger, 58 Ill. App. 372.

State and Federal Court Judgments. — Statutes or constitutional provisions which prohibit federal and state courts from interfering with one another's proceedings by injunction do not preclude relief against the judgment upon an original bill for that purpose.¹

Criminal Prosecutions and Sentences — Extraordinary Legal Remedies. — No relief may be granted in equity against judgments or proceedings other than those in civil causes. The jurisdiction of chancery does not extend to relief against criminal or quasi-criminal prosecutions or sentences, actions for mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto, and the like.²

Where the ground for relief stated in a bill is a good defense at law, equity will not interfere. Lucas v. Darien Bank, 2 Stew. (Ala.) 280.

"These authorities would seem to place beyond question the jurisdiction of the Circuit Court to take cognizance of the present suit, which is none the less an original, independent suit because it relates to judgments obtained in the court of another jurisdiction. While it cannot require the state court itself to set aside or vacate the judgments in question, it may, as between the parties before it, if the facts justify such relief, adjudge that Mayer shall not enjoy the inequitable advantage obtained by his judgments. A decree to that effect would operate directly upon him, and would not contravene that provision of the statute prohibiting a court of the United States from granting a writ of injunction to stay proceedings in a state court. It would simply take from him the benefit of judgments obtained by fraud." Marshall v. Holmes, 141 U. S. 589. See also Barrow v. Hunton, 99 U. S. 80; Remer v. Mackay, 35 Fed. Rep. 86.

But see exceptions: M. Schandler Bottling Co. v. Welch, 42 Fed. Rep. 561; Atlanta v. Gate City Gas Light Co., 71 Ga. 106.

"And Holt, C. J., said, Surely chancery will not grant an injunction in a criminal matter under examination in this court; and that if they did this court would break it, and protect any that would proceed in contempt of it." Holderstaffe v. Saunders, 6 Mod. 16.

No reasons are given in the precedents for this limitation, but grounds exist which would seem to be sufficient. The granting of injunctions against the execution of criminal sentences, or to stop the proceedings, would be exercising direct control over the state and its agencies, instead of being a mere intervention in personam to prevent injustice. Criminal prosecutions are matters of public concern. See Atty.-Gen. v. Cleaver, 18 Ves. Jr. 211; Spink v. Francis, 19 Fed. Rep. 670, 20 Fed. Rep. 567; Coast Line R. Co. v. Cohen, 50 Ga. 451.

Statutory Changes. — In many states a distinct and independent relation between law and equity has ceased to exist, and the same court may sit to dispense either, as the case may be. This change has not destroyed actions by original bill for relief on equitable grounds.² But in some states it is held to have abridged the original jurisdiction, where the judgment attacked is a domestic one, and, if the court rendering it has equitable jurisdiction as well, the action can only be brought in that court. The locality of the judgment is the test.³ This doctrine is made the law of and the like, see Montague v. Dunman, 2 Ves. 397, where the court said: "This court has no jurisdiction to grant an injunction to stay proceedings on a mandamus, nor to an indictment, nor to any information, nor to a writ of prohibition, that I know of. The reason is that a mandamus is not a writ remedial, but mandatory. It is vested in the King's Superior Court of common law to compel inferior courts to do something relative to the public. That court has great latitude and discretion in cases of that kind, can judge of all the circumstances, and is not bound by such strict rules as in cases of private rights."

"The District Court, sitting as a court of chancery, has power to grant relief in a proper case of this character. This is an ancient jurisdiction of a court of chancery, and there is nothing in our statutes which abrogates such jurisdiction. The fact that such a court has both common-law and chancery jurisdiction in no way changes or obliterates its equitable jurisdiction in the absence of express legislative restriction." Bailey v. Stevens, 11 Utah 175.

In Indiana, etc., R. Co. v. Williams, 22 Ind. 198, the court said: "The judgment which the complaint describes was rendered in the Hendricks Circuit Court, and hence it is insisted that the Common Pleas had no power to enjoin or otherwise control the process of that court. Anterior to the revision of 1852 the jurisdiction, in cases of this sort, was vested in the court of equity. But the statutes now in force abolish all distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity, and in reference to proceedings for injunctions, enact that injunctions may be granted by the Circuit Court and Court of Common Pleas in their respective counties. 2 Rev. Stat., G. & H., pp. 23, 131, §§ 1, 136. This provision simply confers jurisdiction, but does not, even impliedly, allow one of these courts to enjoin the proceedings or process of the other. Nor does it seem consistent with any correct rule of procedure that a party who has instituted an action, recovered a judgment, and obtained final process in one court, should be compelled to litigate matters connected therewith before a different tribunal."

some states by express statutory provision, no regard being had for the personal character of equitable relief.¹ Judgments which are absolutely void are sometimes excepted from the operation

It may be noted that the cases relied on to support this doctrine are cases where one chancery court refused to interfere with the decrees of another, which raises a somewhat different question. See Grant v. Quick, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 612; Smith v. American L. Ins., etc., Co., Clarke Ch. (N. Y.) 307; Lane v. Clark, Clarke Ch. (N. Y.) 309; Dyckman v. Kernochan, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 26; Schell v. Erie R. Co., 51 Barb. (N. Y.) 368; Riddle v. Baker, 13 Cal. 296. But in Erie R. Co. v. Ramsey, 45 N. Y. 637, the distinction made by the code, as stated in the text, is clearly drawn. And in a case in Wisconsin, the court said in part: "It was argued in this case that because the action in the Winnebago Circuit Court was at law, the rule of the above cases is not applicable. We think otherwise. The Circuit Court of Winnebago county has full equitable as well as legal jurisdiction. It can grant equitable relief against a judgment at law rendered by it, as fully and amply as any other court can grant such relief. The whole reasoning of the court in support of the above rule applies with as much force to a proceeding or judgment at law as to one in equity. No satisfactory reason has been suggested why any distinction should be made between the two cases; in this state, at least, where the distinction between actions at law and suits in equity is abolished. Rev. Stat., § 2600." Orient Ins. Co. v. Sloan, 70 Wis. 611.

The following cases, which it was held should have been brought in the courts where the judgments were rendered, were rather actions in the nature of appellate proceedings than original bills in equity. Gregory v. Perdue, 29 Ind. 66; Coleman v. Barnes, 33 Ind. 93; Wiley v. Pavey, 61 Ind. 457; MacLean v. Wayne Circuit Judge, 52 Mich. 257; Emporia First Nat. Bank v. Geneseo Town Co., 51 Kan. 215.

One court has no jurisdiction to enjoin a judgment rendered by another although the judgment has been transcribed to the court where the action is brought and execution may be issued upon it therefrom. Neeters v. Clements, 12 Bush (Ky.) 359; McConnell v. Raive, (Ky. 1886) 1 S. W. Rep. 582; Coon v. Seymour, 71 Wis. 340.

A good statement of the general nature of equitable relief against judgments is the following: "If this question depended on principle and analogy only, we should feel no difficulty in maintaining the power of the chancellor in Clarke or in Montgomery, to enjoin the judgment of the Fayette Circuit Court. The cause of action was transitory. The judgment, therefore, is for most purposes ambulatory. It is not essentially local in its character or effects. It may be enforced by action of debt, wherever the obligor or his representatives may be, either in or out of the state. It is personal and will follow them. If the judgment might be enforced out of Fayette county, we perceive no reason why its enforcement might not be enjoined out of Fayette county. Either the person or subject-matter must give jurisdiction. When the thing is personal or the remedy transitory, the person of the defendant gives jurisdiction to the chancellor as well as to the common-law judge. An injunction does not operate directly on the judgment, nor on the judge who rendered it. Its action is on the person of the judgment creditors. It acts in personam. And the judgment is enjoined by the action of the chancellor on the creditor, so as to prevent him from enforcing his judgment by execution. In enjoining a judgment the chancellor does not assert or assume any supremacy over the judge who rendered it. The judgment is not reversed or corrected. It is admitted to be right in law, but as its enforcement is deemed inconsistent with equity, the chancellor, by acting, not on it or the judge who gave it, but on the person of its holder, enjoins it;

of such laws;¹ and it is quite generally held that a party may attack a judgment in the court of his domicil when an execution has been issued against him from another county.² Such laws and therefore, according to the principles of the common law, the person of the defendant in such a case will give jurisdiction. See Billings v. Flight, 1 Madd. 228. Upon principle, the chancellor sitting in Fayette should have no more power over a judgment of the common-law judge of Fayette than the chancellor sitting in any other county might possess. The powers of a court of general jurisdiction will not be restricted except by positive law or by the nature and purposes of its institution. And we are clear that the chancellor had power to enjoin the judgment in this case perpetually, unless his jurisdiction has been curtailed by express statute." Mason v. Chambers, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 401.

It may be questioned whether the limitations placed on the jurisdiction by statutes and judicial decisions just discussed really operate to further the ends of justice. The anomalous conditions to which they might give rise are illustrated in the case of Cocke v. Pollok, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 499, in which the court said: "The record, exhibits the singular case of two chancellors in different districts disclaiming jurisdiction of a case brought before them by a bill of injunction to a judgment rendered in the District Court of Charlottesville. The chancellor of the Richmond district, it is alleged in the bill, refused to grant the injunction, although the defendants all resided within his jurisdiction, because the court whose judgment was sought to be enjoined was not within his jurisdiction. The chancellor of the Staunton district granted the injunction, but dismissed the bill afterwards, because, although the court which rendered the judgment sought to be enjoined was within his district, yet none of the defendants resided therein."

In Virginia, by the Code of 1873, c. 175, § 6, the judge of the County Court has authority to issue an injunction upon a bill addressed to the Circuit Court, whether the judgment sought to be enjoined is one of a "superior or inferior court of his county or district, or the party against whose act or proceeding the injunction be asked resides in or out of the same; provided such act or proceeding is apprehended, or is to be done, or is doing, in his county or district." Rosenberger v. Bowen, 84 Va. 660.

By statute only the Circuit Court of Richmond can enjoin or affect a judgment in behalf of the commonwealth of Virginia. Com. v. Latham, 85 Va. 632.

In Iowa, under the code, § 3396, which provides that a suit to enjoin a judgment must be brought in the county and court in which it was obtained, the District Court cannot restrain proceedings on a judgment of the Supreme Court. Oberholtzer v. Hazen, (Iowa 1897) 70 N. W. Rep. 207.

"The action may be maintained in any county in which an attempt is made (to the injury of the party seeking the relief) to put such judgment in force, although such judgment may have been rendered in another county." Chambers v. King Wrought-Iron Bridge Manufactory, 16 Kan. 270.

"One question suggested by appellant's learned counsel is that the St. Joseph Circuit Court has no jurisdiction to restrain the process of the Elkhart Circuit Court. The jurisdiction here exercised is in enjoining the officer of St. Joseph county and a citizen of St. Joseph county from enforcing against a citizen of St. Joseph county a judgment debt which has been satisfied. That this may be done is not in doubt. In our opinion there is no available error in the record, and the judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed." Ashcraft v. Knoblock, 146 Ind. 169.

"If, before the clerk of the law court receives notice that an injunction is awarded, he has, in fact, divested himself of his power by actually issuing the execution into another district bewill not be applicable where the relief against the judgment is merely incidental to an adjudication of matters which are cognizable only in equity.¹

b. EXTENT — In General. — Relief against the judgment prevents any proceedings to enforce it, whether taken at law or in equity.² The amount of the judgment was originally considered by the court called upon to grant relief against it. Unless it was large enough to be worth the expense of a suit in equity, the bill would not be entertained;³ and this rule of law has been declared by statute in some jurisdictions.⁴ In some states equitable relief is confined to grounds for a new trial at law, as enumerated by the statutory provisions.⁵

yond the limits of the chancery court, I am not at present prepared to say whether the process of the court may not pursue the execution, on the general principle that where a jurisdiction exists, every necessary power shall be implied to carry it into complete effect." Cocke v. Pollok, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 516.

In Missouri an original suit to set aside a judgment of partition and sale thereunder must be brought in the county where the land lies though the suit in partition was determined elsewhere. Keyte v. Plemmons, 28 Mo. 104.

Stevens*, 29 Ill. 155, where the court said: "The next objection is that this is a bill to restrain the collection of a judgment rendered in the Circuit Court of Cook county. If this were the primary object of the bill, it would undoubtedly be fatal to the jurisdiction of the court, but it is not so where the principal object of the bill is for other relief, and the stay of the collection of the judgment is incidental or auxiliary, and for the purpose of making the relief complete for which the bill is filed; and for the purpose of determining these questions, even on such a plea as this, we must look into the bill itself."

2. Little v. Price, 1 Md. Ch. 182.

Relief from a judgment against an acceptor on a bill of exchange does not go to the extent of preventing suits against other parties to the bill. Bohannon v. Combs, 12 B. Mon. (Ky.) 563.

4. In Illinois, by statute, relief cannot be had where a judgment, or the balance due thereon, is less than $20 exclusive of costs. Breckenridge v. McCormick, 43 Ill. 491; York v. Kile, 67 Ill. 233.

Except Where Provided by Statute, the amount of the judgment seems, however, not to be generally regarded; and relief may be had against judgments rendered by justices of the peace which are not appealable by reason of the small amount involved. Greenwaldt v. May, 127 Ind. 511; Gulf, etc., R. Co. v. King, 80 Tex. 681; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Ware, 74 Tex. 47; Jennings v. Shiner, (Tex. Civ. App. 1897) 43 S. W. Rep. 276.

In Magin v. Lamb, 43 Minn. 80, the court said: "But the reasons for any distinction in respect to the conditions upon which relief is to be granted in an action to restrain or vacate a judgment, and in a motion for the same purpose, have disappeared with the uniting of equitable and legal jurisdictions in the same court. If now a defendant, upon motion to the court rendering the judgment, may have it set aside merely because no action was ever commenced against him, there is no longer any reason why, if he prosecutes an action in the same court, for the same purpose, any different grounds for relief should be required."

"The chancellor may direct a new trial at law (whenever a case is presented in which the common-law judge would grant it) provided satisfactory reasons are shown for failing to make the application at law." Hunt v. Boyier, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 484; Colyer v. Langford, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 237.

Relief Against Portion Inequitable. — Relief may be granted against part only of a judgment and the remainder left subject to enforce-such applications must show sufficient matter to have entitled the party to a new trial if applied for at the term, and a sufficient legal excuse for not having then made his application." *Bryorly v. Contra. — In Nealis v. Dicks, 72 Ind. 374, the court said: "It will not do to hold that courts possess no power to annul judgments except upon the grounds and in the mode expressly specified and prescribed by statute. If courts were restricted to the exercise of mere statutory powers, they would make but a lame and halting progress in the administration of justice. The statute concerning the review of judgments does not mean that judgments shall only be vacated upon the grounds therein designated, or only in the mode there prescribed, to the exclusion of all other causes and all other modes. Neither the letter nor the spirit of the act warrants the conclusion that the legislature intended to so narrow the power of courts of general jurisdiction to relieve against judgments as to limit and confine them to the causes and modes expressly prescribed by statute. Where the statute does prescribe the causes for which a judgment may be set aside, and does provide a mode of procedure, then, of course, the statute controls, and is to be followed and obeyed."

No Action for Money Had and Received

Is Permissible to recover money collected on a judgment. The only remedy is in equity or in the original case where time for action has not passed. Ryle v. Howlett, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 348.

In North Carolina, under Gen. Stat. 1878, c. 66, § 285, in addition to equitable relief against the judgment, damages caused by proceedings to enforce it may be awarded. *Baker v. Statutes sometimes provide for the rendition of such a judgment. But these are inapplicable when the bill is dismissed, not for lack of merit, but because it appears that the remedy is at law. Kanawha, etc., R. Co. v. Ryan, 31 W. Va. 364; Howell v. Thomason, 34 W. Va. 794. Nor can any damages for interference be assessed in such case. ment at law.¹ Relief will generally be granted to the extent of credits, or unjust amounts, admitted by the judgment creditor, though the bill makes out no case for equitable relief.² The injunction must not run against more than the amount decreed as unjust.³ Where necessary to determine the inequitable amount the court will reinvestigate the issues between the parties for that purpose.⁴ That part of the judgment which is justly due must be paid, or the amount deposited in court, before relief will be given; on the principle that equity, having obtained jurisdiction, will do complete justice between the parties, and that he who seeks equity must do equity.⁵

7. Hearing and Final Decree.—The practice upon trial of an action for equitable relief against a judgment is not uniform. A final decree in favor of the complainant, on a bill for a new trial, cannot control or direct the action of the court of law, but runs only against the judgment creditor. Where the bill is brought to enforce an equitable right which could not have been litigated at law, and relief against the judgment is collateral only to the general relief asked, no new trial is ordered. The hearing in such a case is an original hearing in equity.¹ On the other hand, when the ground for relief is a defense valid at law, the bill is strictly one for a new trial; and it seems that originally final relief consisted in perpetually enjoining the judgment and leaving the creditor to consent to open the law case and try it anew.² In more recent cases, however, the rehearing is generally had before the court of equity, and according to its practice and procedure; exact justice between the parties. While, therefore, for the reasons suggested, it would restrain the enforcement of the judgment, it would require the payment by the judgment debtor of the debt justly due from him to the creditor." Litchfield's Appeal, 28 Conn. 127.

"It is a settled principle that he who seeks equity must do equity; and if the borrower comes into this court for relief against his usurious contract, he must do what is right as between the parties, by bringing into court the money actually advanced, with the legal interest, and then the court will lend him its aid as against the usurious excess." Rogers v. Rathbun, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 367.

In Tarver v. McKay, 15 Ga. 550, a decree which wrongfully dissolved an injunction was affirmed on condition that the judgment creditor remit and release the unjust part of the judgment.

In Trefz v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co., 8 Fed. Rep. 177, the court said: "The specific prayer undoubtedly is that the judgment be set aside on the ground that it was obtained by fraud. But there is also a prayer for an injunction and for general relief; and under these it has been the practice in equity, unless the case disclosed some defense peculiar to courts of equity and which would be unavailable at law, to decline to go further than to set aside the judgment and leave the parties to a new trial in the original forum. This is especially so when the prayer of the bill is for an injunction; bills of which sort, says Judge Story, are usually called bills for a new trial."

"A court of chancery has no jurisdiction to direct a court of law what it shall do. It can act only upon the party, and then generally only by way of prevention. If a judgment has been entered which equitably ought not to be enforced, the defendant may, upon terms, have an injunction upon the plaintiff against enforcing it, and by thus coercing the plaintiff induce him to consent to a new trial." Mechanics Nat. Bank v. Colehour, 44 Ill. App. 470.

A decree that a new trial shall be had at law is a final disposition of a bill for a new trial against a judgment; and if a new trial at law is thereafter had, such judgment cannot be again set aside by action in the original case in equity. Bush v. Craig, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 168.

if favorable to the complainant the rights of the parties are decreed and a perpetual injunction awarded against the judgment. This involves a trial of the preliminary question whether the case is one which calls for equitable interference, the decision upon which is not a final order from which an appeal will lie.¹ It having been determined that equitable interference is proper, a new trial of the legal issues is had in equity in the manner ordered in the particular case.² Where the judgment attacked is absolutely

"There are cases in which the court has required the defendant in chancery to submit to a new trial in the action at law, and restrained him from enforcing the judgment complained of. But the regular course would seem to be for the chancery court to order such issue or issues as may be proper, and to base its decree on the finding of the jury at the hearing, either dissolving or perpetuating the injunction, in whole or in part, according to circumstances. Such was the course pursued by this court in Knifong v. Hendricks, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 213. In the present case, if a new trial was proper, the court should have ordered an issue, the same as in the action at law, to be tried as other issues out of chancery are tried, the verdict of the jury, if the trial was in the law court, to be certified to the chancery court, and in the meantime continue the injunction till the hearing of the cause; and if the finding was for the defendant and affirmed, dissolve the injunction; if for the plaintiff, perpetuate the injunction and decree for the complainant according to the verdict." Wynne v. Newman, 75 Va. 811. See also Jackson v. Woodruff, 57 Ark. 599; Carrington v. Holabird, 17 Conn. 531, 19 Conn. 84; *Austin v. After enjoining a judgment and directing issues to be tried by a jury, the court may afterwards, although no verdict has been certified, set aside the order and dissolve the injunction if it becomes satisfied that a new trial ought not to be had. Vass v. Magee, 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 2.

Blevins*, 1 Overt. (Tenn.) 36; Hord v. Dishman, 5 Call (Va.) 283; Nelson v. Armstrong, 5 Gratt. (Va.) 354.

Effect of Verdict of Jury. — Where the court orders a trial to be had before a jury the verdict probably has no greater effect than in any other case where a reference is made for the information of the chancellor. In Quick v. Van Auker, 3 Penny. (Pa.) 476, however, it was held that "the question presented by the issue was one of fact, exclusively for the jury, and their verdict should not be disturbed unless manifest error intervened during the course of the trial." See also Wynne v. Newman, 75 Va. 811, and generally article ISSUES TO THE JURY, ante, p. 599.

Consent of Judgment Creditor. — It seems that the judgment creditor will not be compelled to submit to a new trial where it takes place in equity. But, as in the case where he is asked to consent to a new trial at law, in the event of a refusal the final decree will be a perpetual injunction against enforcing the judgment. Isaac v. Humpage, 1 Ves. Jr. 427.

void, the relief may extend to a new trial of the issues, or, since the original cause is not merged, may be limited to a perpetual injunction.¹

8. Injunction Bonds.² — That a court of equity may not be called upon to interfere with a law judgment except in a clear case, special statutory provisions commonly exist regulating the issuance of the restraining order. In some states it is necessary to pay the amount of the judgment and costs into court, and give security for damages which may be sustained,³ or as an alternative within the discretion of the court, to give a bond conditioned to pay the amount of the judgment, damages, and costs.⁴ A common provision is one which requires a bond conditioned to pay the judgment and any damages which may result.⁵ In Maryland there

"It is true that the finding of the District Court is that the appellant had made out a prima facie defense. This was all the District Court was required to, and probably all he should have, found on the subject. It was not his duty to go into the merits of the alleged defense of the insurance company any further than to ascertain that the appellant had made out a prima facie valid defense, and that it was urging the same in good faith." Bankers' L. Ins. Co. v. Robbins, (Neb. 1897) 73 N. W. Rep. 269.

Where Judgment Is Satisfied. — When the ground for relief is payment of the judgment and the like, there is, of course, no rehearing of the original issues. But as in all cases, whatever is necessary to do complete justice will be done. Mechanics Bank v. Lynn, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 376, where the court said: "When the judgment debtor comes into the court asking protection on the ground that he has satisfied the judgment, the door is fully open for the court to modify or grant his prayer, on such conditions as justice demands." It seems that when the amount of the judgment is paid into court the injunction will not be dissolved on motion, but will be retained until the final hearing. Manchester v. Dey, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 295.

A judgment entered by confession upon a bond with warrant of attorney is within the provisions of the statute which requires a money deposit or the giving of a bond before an injunction against a judgment in a personal action shall issue. *Marlatt v. are no statutory provisions requiring either a bond or a deposit of the amount.¹ Where an injunction is obtained without complying with such statutes, the defendant is entitled to summary relief, and is not put upon his motion to dissolve.² In some states a judgment creditor must give a refunding bond on obtaining a dissolution of the injunction pending the final hearing.³

9. Release of Errors. — Where the action for equitable relief is of the character here discussed it seems that the plaintiff at law should never be enjoined from proceeding with the trial, but only prevented from enforcing the judgment obtained, on the theory that he should not be harassed and delayed by different suits for the same cause. So where the complainant comes into a court of equity pending the trial at law, he must permit judgment to go against him and rely on his right to equitable relief.⁴ For the same reason the practice exists of requiring the complainant to give a release of all errors at law.⁵ It has been held that the Shank*, 59 Md. 313.

2. Marlatt v. Perrine, 17 N. J. Eq. 49; Christie v. Bogardus, 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 167; Jenkins v. Wilde, 2 Paige (N. Y.) 395; Cook v. Dickerson, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 691. See also Gamble v. Campbell, 6 Fla. 347.

3. Robertson v. Walker, 51 Ala. 484; Rice v. Tobias, 83 Ala. 348; Coleman v. Goyne, 37 Tex. 552. See also Barnard v. Davis, 54 Ala. 565.

4. "Unless in aid of a suit at law, no injunction should be granted where the applicant for it does not submit to a judgment at law, or, as it is technically termed, confess judgment. Mathews v. Douglass, Cooke (Tenn.) 136; Nelson v. Owen, 3 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 178. The reason is that if he does not succeed in equity, he might still go on and defend at law, prosecute a writ of error, or take an appeal, and thus unreasonably delay his adversary in the obtaining of his rights. Billing v. Flight, 1 Madd. 228; Anonymous, 1 Vern. 120." Conway v. Ellison, 14 Ark. 361. See also Warwick v. Norvell, 1 Leigh (Va.) 96.

5. "The course as to injunctions in this court is that if the motion is made before declaration, you get an injunction to stay everything; if after declaration, the injunction stays execution only, not trial." Garlick v. Pearson, 10 Ves. Jr. 450. See also Bullen v. Ovey, 16 Ves. Jr. 141; Earnshaw v. Thornhill, 18 Ves. Jr. 485; Franco v. Franco, 2 Cox 420.

"And even courts of equity themselves admit that the plaintiff at law may proceed so far as that he may be at liberty eo instante that the injunction is dissolved, to take out execution." Epes v. Dudley, 4 Leigh (Va.) 146. See also Morrice v. Hankey, 3 P. Wms 146.

So an execution may be sued out on the judgment at law before a decree refusing equitable relief against it has been entered up in the court of chancery, Epes v. Dudley, 4 Leigh (Va.) 145; or any action may be taken which is necessary to enable the creditor to issue execution on the judgment as soon as equitable relief is denied, as that may be revived on the ground of the death of a party. Richardson v. Prince George County, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 190.

5. Branch v. Burnley, 1 Call (Va.) 147, where the court said: "There is no hardship in confining a party to one jurisdiction. It is a general principle of equity that a man shall not be permitted to sue both in law and equity for the same thing; this principle has given rise to the practice of requiring a release of errors at law on obtaining injunctions to judgments. It is bot-tomed on a principle that a man may waive any particular right or benefit, and on the evident justice of preventing a party from being vexed and harassed in various courts for the same injunction operates per se as such release.¹ But generally errors are not considered as released unless a statute or an order of the court requires such release to be made.² No release of errors is required where the relief asked does not amount to a perpetual stay of proceedings on the judgment.³

10. Dissolution of the Injunction.— Upon the dissolution of an injunction, statutes usually permit damages sustained by the interference to be assessed by the court against the complainant and his sureties.⁴

cause, but that he shall stand or fall by the election he has made.”

1. Price v. Johnson County, 15 Mo. 434; Mathews v. Douglass, Cooke (Tenn.) 136; Ashby v. Kiger, Gilmer (Va.) 153.

In those states where decrees in equity for the payment of money and judgments at law are placed on the same footing with respect to relief by injunction, there is no such thing as a release of errors on injunction against a decree. San Juan, etc., Min., etc., Co. v. Finch, 6 Colo. 214.

2. McConnel v. Ayres, 4 Ill. 210; Addleman v. Mormon, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 31; Dickerson v. Ripley County, 6 Ind. 128; Gano v. White, 3 Ohio 20. See also Nelson v. Owen, 3 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 175; Anonymous, 1 Vern. 120.

So it is not ground for dismissing a writ of error at law, that the plaintiff in error, since the issuance of the writ, has obtained an injunction, where no release of errors was actually given. Prodor v. McCaleb, 24 Miss. 169; Vick v. Maulding, 1 How. (Miss.) 217.

Effect of Dismissal of Bill.— The release continues operative though the complainant afterwards dismisses his bill. Henly v. Robertson, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 172.

Failure to File Release.— Where a release is required but none is filed the injunction may be dissolved on that ground, but the bill cannot be dismissed. Paulding v. Watson, 21 Ala. 279.

Omission to Require Release.— That no release was granted is error without prejudice where the bill was sustained and the judgment perpetually enjoined. Bradley v. Lamb, Hard. (Ky.) 536.

3. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Todd, 40 Ill. 89; Burge v. Burns, 1 Morr. (Iowa) 288; Sevier v. Ross, Freem. (Miss.) 519. See also McConnel v. Ayres, 4 Ill. 210.

4. M'Grew v. Tombeckbee Bank, 5 Port. (Ala.) 547; Roberts v. Fahs, 36 Ill. 268; Stirlen v. Nuestadt, 50 Ill. App. 378; Higgins v. Bullock, 73 Ill. 205; Minor v. Stone, 1 La. Ann. 283; Hall v. Carroll, 10 La. Ann. 412; Lee v. Hubbell, 20 La. Ann. 551; Western v. Woods, 1 Tex. 1; Cook v. De la Garza, 13 Tex. 432; Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Ware, 74 Tex. 47.

Payment of the judgment cannot be decreed upon a bond which is only conditioned to pay all damages which may be adjudged by reason of the issuance of the injunction. Grove v. Bush, 86 Iowa 94.
